By the Treaty of Monterey, signed at the Mexican city of that name on October 26, 1891, by G. W. Tyler, Grand Master of Texas and Porfirio Diaz, Grand Master of Mexico, each recognized the other as the only supreme and exclusive Masonic power in their several districts respectively, conditionally on the treaty being submitted to the members of the two contracting Grand bodies and it was agreed that, upon ratification, representatives would be exchanged. Such approval was immediately forthcoming, though afterwards regretted. Protests against the formation and recognition of the Gran Dieta were published by the Mexican National Rite, formed in 1825, of which Francisco P. Gochicoa, Postmaster-General, was the head, the members of which were nearly all officials in the post-office; the Reformed Scottish Rite, instituted in 1871, of which Joaquin Peña was the Sovereign Grand Commander; and the Grand Lodge of the Federal District, of which Benito Juarez, son of the great Juarez, Mexican president, was Grand Master.

Richard E. Chism, who was Master of the Toltec Lodge, to which reference has already been made, at the time of the formation of the Gran Dieta, published a pamphlet entitled An Inside View of Mexican Masonry, in which he stated that the organization of the Gran Dieta was not the outcome of any Convocation or Convention of Masons, but was brought into being by the Supreme Council of the A. and A. Rite and, therefore, could not claim jurisdiction over Masonic units belonging to the York Rite. Immediately upon its formation, however, the Gran Dieta had claimed jurisdiction over everything which called itself Masonic, even to the Rite of Memphis. Toltec Lodge stood aloof from the Gran Dieta, but was afterwards compelled to join it, in consequence of the action of the Grand Lodge of Missouri, to which it owed allegiance, which coerced it into the action by withdrawing its Charter as it "considered it unwise to continue the exercise of Masonic authority in Mexico." Toltec Lodge is now No. 1 on the roster of the York Grand Lodge, to be mentioned later.

With three exceptions all the Lodges transferred their allegiance to the Gran Dieta, which was constituted by 122 out of the 125 Lodges in the republic. One of the first acts of the Gran Dieta was to provide for the initiation of women and to issue Charters for female Lodges, but, in the Report on Foreign Correspondence by T. S. Parvin in the Proceedings of the Grand Lodge of Iowa for 1896, it was stated that the Gran Dieta had repealed the law under which women were authorized to be made Freemasons and the Charters of women Lodges were withdrawn under pressure from American Freemasons. This step was taken at a session of the Gran Dieta Simbolica held on August 24, 1895, when it was decreed that all Charters for these Lodges should be withdrawn, that no recognition of women as Freemasons should be continued and that the Holy Bible and the Square and Compasses should be placed on all Masonic altars of the Symbolical Lodges in the republic of Mexico. This step was hastened by the formation on June 24, 1895, of the Grand Lodge Valle de Mexico, No. 1 of the Federal District of Mexico, in the presence of several women, said to be members of female Masonic Lodges. This action caused the withdrawal of Anahuac Lodge, No. 141, which made a protest to the Gran Dieta, which, accordingly, suspended the Grand Lodge Valle de Mexico, along with several members who had committed the irregularities.

The Gran Dieta, however, was not received generally with favour in the Grand Lodges of the United States of America and its recognition by the Grand Lodges of New York and Texas was very generally condemned by the Reporters on Correspondence in several American jurisdictions. In 1894, Dr. Joseph Robbins, Past Grand Master, making his Correspondence Report to the Grand Lodge of Illinois, said :

The most startling event of the year is the recognition by the Grand Lodge of New York of the Gran Dieta Simbolica of Mexico, in the face of disclosures as to what passes for Masonry in that republic, that, to say the least, have yet far from having been wholly discredited by proof and which, if true, ought to ensure the repudiation of the body or congregation of which they are found to be true, not only by the Grand Lodge of New York, but even by the most careless and least informed Grand Lodges. In our review of New York we called attention to one of these disclosures only—the admission of women to the Lodges owing allegiance to one of the constituents of the Mexican Gran Dieta, the Grand Lodge Valle de Mexico. We there referred to “Clio,” the Master of Lodge No. 27, who, Brother Chism says (to the Grand Secretary of Missouri) is in private life Dr. Matilda Montoya, the only female physician ever accredited by a Mexican college.

The other two women appointed to office in that Grand Lodge were “Caliope,” who was Mrs. De Kleinhaus, mother-in-law of Emilio G. Canton, the Grand Secretary of the Gran Dieta and “Amonia,” who was the wife of the Grand Secretary.

The York Grand Lodge of Mexico, which is the only Mexican Masonic body in fraternal communications with the Grand Lodge of England, originated in October 1823, also as the Grand Lodge Valle de Mexico. It started as a York Rite Grand body, but afterwards changed into Scottish Rite. In 1911 it reverted to the York Rite and the name was then changed to the York Grand Lodge of Mexico. There were a few members who objected to the change and they remained behind and formed an independent Grand Lodge, retaining the old name. According to the latest returns, the York Grand Lodge of Mexico consists of thirteen Lodges with 907 members. A document sent out in June 1934 announces the formation of the Mexican Masonic Council, with member Grand Lodges as follows:

Of these there are several concerning which but little is known. Requests for information produced the following:

The Grand Lodge of Coahuila, "Benito Juarez," was founded in Saltillo, Coahuila, in 1890, under the auspices and Jurisdiction of the "Gran Dieta Simbólica" of the United States of Mexico.

In 1896, Worshipful Brother Dr. Lorenzo Cantú was elected Grand Master and the residence of the Grand Lodge was transferred to Ciudad Porfirio Diaz, Coahuila. It worked with regularity as an integral part of the "Gran Dieta Simbólica" until July 1, 1901, when, upon the receipt of a circular announcing the dissolution of that Grand Body, it assumed its independence and sovereignty in the State of Coahuila, pledging itself to uphold the Ancient Charges and Landmarks as laid down by Dr. Anderson, in 1721, and acknowledging the complete independence of the Symbolic Degrees.

Grand Lodge La Oriental Peninsular of the State of Yucatan was formed from three Lodges working under the Jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge Unida Mexicana of Vera Cruz, in the year 1913. It was organised to exercise Jurisdiction over the State of Yucatan, Campeche and Quitana Roo. It is the only Grand Lodge operating in this territory. It has adopted the British standards. Its statement is as follows:

II. Since the date of its Constitution this Grand Lodge has been the only Governing Masonic Body in the territory that was granted to her, and her authority has not been nor is at present divided with any other Grand Lodge or Supreme Council.

III. That the Laws of this Grand Lodge are formed in strict compliance of the Ancient uses of the Fraternity approved at Stationers Hall, London, England, on June 24, 1721, the main parts being:

- a. Acknowledgement of a belief in God.
- b. That it makes Masons of men only.
- c. Secrecy.
- d. The Symbolism of Operative Masonry.
- e. The division of Symbolic Masonry in three Degrees, universally known.
- f. The legend of the Third Degree and ways of recognition, which are unchangeable.
- g. Controversial politics and sectarian religion strictly excluded from all activities under its auspices.
- h. The Book of the Sacred Law shall always be open while a Lodge is working.
- i. That it will not try to interfere in the territory of another Grand Body.

Grand Lodge El Potosi of the State of San Luis Potosi was established in the year 1896. It covers the territory of the State of San Luis Potosi and had its headquarters in the city of San Luis Potosi.

The Grand Lodge El Potosi works strictly in conformity with the standards of the Grand Lodge of North Carolina. Like many of its sister Mexican Grand Lodges, it has felt that the Masonry of the United States frowns upon things Mexican, and for that reason it has refrained from begging any American Grand Lodge to extend recognition; the Spanish-speaking Masonic world has been driven to a self-contained isolation to a great extent by the attitude of the English-speaking Grand Lodges, who neither cared anything about them nor knew anything about them.

Bro. Juarez tells us then when his Grand Lodge received a copy of Past Grand Master Peter T. Wilson's address to the Conference of Grand Masters, in Spanish, the document created widespread interest and seemed to mark the beginning of a new era of good feeling. It is desired that he shall express to our Grand Lodge the sincere thanks of the Grand Lodge El Potosi in us, and the hope that this may be the beginning of the best of fraternal relations.

This Grand Lodge Works the three Degrees, using the Ritual of the Scottish Rite which is the same that is used in practically all of Latin-America; it requires the Volume of the Sacred Law on its Altars and a profession of faith in a Deity. It is sovereign and independent and shares its Jurisdiction with none other.

The following is from the report of the Committee on the Grand Lodge Del Pacifico:

The chairman made a trip to Mexico for the particular purpose of examining into the merits of the application for recognition of the Grand Lodge of the Pacific and visited several of the cities where are located subordinate Lodges of that Grand Lodge. He had the privilege of inspecting several Lodge rooms and of meeting officers and members of a majority of the Lodges. He also conferred with the Grand Master Octavio A. Serrano, Past Grand Master R. H. Fernando F. Dworak, and other officers of the Grand Lodge. His impression was most favourable. He found those Masons with whom he came in contact to be mostly men of prominence and standing in their respective communities and his inquiries and observations induced him to believe that they were good Masons and that they were loyal to the tenets of our profession and were doing a splendid work in their jurisdictions. At Nogales, Hermosillo, Mazatlan, Los Machis, Navajoa, Culiacan and Ciudad Obregon he found Americans who had been raised in the United States and had cast their lot with the Masons of the Grand Lodge of the Pacific and without exception the expressions of these Masons were commendatory of the work and the spirit of their Mexican brethren and their lodges. There is a strong American spirit on the west coast of Mexico and the influence of the American Masons there is evident.

The Grand Lodge of the Pacific confines its authority to the states of Sonora and Sinaloa and the central district of Lower California. It exercises its right and authority over the three degrees of symbolic Masonry only. It requires of its initiates a belief in God and the immortality of the soul and displays the Great Light upon its altars. In 1923 the Grand Master Dworak represented to this Grand Lodge that the then newly created Grand Lodge of the Pacific had no treaty or other connection with the Supreme Council of Mexico, nor any other Masonic body, but that it was sovereign and absolutely independent. The application for recognition has been before us from that time until this and the same representations have been repeatedly made to us.

We find that the Grand Lodge of the Pacific has 14 Lodges with more than 1400 members, and that all of the Lodges in its territory are of its obedience except a Lodge at Cananea, which is a subordinate of the York Grand Lodge of Mexico. Recognition of the Grand Lodge of the Pacific has been deferred until this time because the York Grand Lodge of Mexico, with which we are in amity and concord, claims exclusive jurisdiction throughout the Republic of Mexico and we were not disposed to take any action that might be objectionable to that Grand Lodge. It appeared to your committee that the only reason for denying the application for recognition would be an objection from the York Grand Lodge and that otherwise the Grand Lodge of the Pacific was justly entitled to our fraternal regard and recognition. With this in mind, we asked the Grand Master of the York Grand Lodge to give us a frank statement of his disposition in this matter, assuring him of our desire to work in full harmony and accord with the York Grand Lodge of Mexico and its members. We have now a reply to our inquiry made by the Grand Master through Bro. M. A. Loeb, Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the York Grand Lodge, in which we are advised that it cannot and will not embarrass or hurt York Grand Lodge for the Grand Lodge of California to enter into fraternal relationship with the Grand Lodge of the Pacific.

In 1926, the United Grand Lodge of Mexico at Vera Cruz sent out a request for recognition in which the following history, description and declarations occur:

We have at all times and places tried to render obedience to those ideals notwithstanding the numerous difficulties and obstacles we have met with from the year 1883 in which our Masonic life began, as a body named "Gran Logia Simbólica Independiente" (Symbolic and Independent Grand Lodge of Vera-cruz), with a regular jurisdiction upon the whole territory of the Mexican Republic and adjacent islands in both oceans, according to the cession made in our favour of the said territory by the Very Respectful Grand Lodge of Colon and that of Cuba; and at the same time, by the resignation of the Supreme Council in the city of Mexico to its pretensions to govern all the Masonic Lodges in this country.

In order you may have a clear and wide knowledge as to the origin, organisation and rights concerning our Grand Lodge we beg to send you herewith two enclosures or copies, one of the recognition granted to us as far as legitimacy and regularity correspond, by the Grand Lodge of Cuba, and another of the treaty by means of which the Supreme Council in Mexico resigned what they called their rights, recognised and agreed to cultivate and maintain a perpetual friendship with our Grand Lodge, being this also recognised by the Grand Lodges of the States of Alabama, Arizona, Iowa, Louisiana, Nebraska and District of Columbia in the United States of America, and by those of Edinburgh (Scotland), Manitoba and Nova Scotia (Canada), New South Wales and Victoria (Australia) and some more English and Spanish speaking lodges.

It is our duty to clear up that, notwithstanding that the jurisdiction of this Grand Lodge embraced the territorial extension mentioned above, it willingly engaged itself, as it has done, to grant the territory of the various federal states of this country to the Grand Lodges which might be established in a regular form and transmitting them the necessary jurisdiction, so they could practise there complete authority as sovereign powers in their respective territories, with the reservation for this Grand Lodge of the right to recover its whole personality upon the granted territories whenever one of those Grand Lodges might abdicate or divide its sovereignty in favour of another power.

The Gran Logia Unida Mexicana admits within its circle only free and honourable men (this is why it emphatically rejects as an irregular body any lodge which accepts women within itself).

We do recognise the existence of God, and our doors are completely closed for those who do not keep the same thought in their mind; and all the lodges pertaining to our control are instructed to keep open upon the altar the Sacred Book of the Divine Law. It exercises the secret, the Symbolism of the Operative Masonry, the division of the Symbolic Masonry into three degrees and the custom of reading the third one. Its aims are charities and the intellectual and moral education without accepting, at any rate, whatever sectarian controversy either political or religious.

Mr. Oliver Day Street in 1922 reported to the Grand Lodge of Alabama as follows:

Early in January 1882, the Grand Lodge of Colon and the Island of Cuba chartered three Symbolic Lodges at Vera Cruz. On January 28, 1883, these three lodges formed a Grand Lodge at Vera Cruz under the name of the Independent Symbolic Mexican Grand Lodge, claiming jurisdiction over Symbolic Masonry throughout the Republic. So far as we can ascertain its organisation was in strict accord with the rules for the erection of an independent Grand Lodge of Ancient Craft Masonry.

CHAPTER III

FREEMASONRY IN CENTRAL AMERICA

BRITISH HONDURAS

THE Lodge of Amity—No. 309—St. George's Quay, Bay of Honduras, was also warranted in 1763 by the Grand Lodge of England and, like the earlier Lodge on the Mosquito Shore, continued to appear on the Lists until the Union. Subsequent English Warrants were granted in 1820 to the British Constitutional Lodge No. 723, Bay of Honduras; and, in 1831, to the Royal Sussex, No. 860, Belize. Both these Lodges, however, were erased June 4, 1862.

COSTA RICA

A Lodge was chartered at San José by the Grand Orient of New Granada, about the year 1867; and, according to the Masonic Calendars, a Grand Orient and Supreme Council 33° for Central America was established at the same town in 1870. Dr. Francisco Calvo was at the head of both bodies and appears to have been succeeded in 1879, or shortly before, by Carlos Urien.

To-day there are 7 Lodges and 316 members. One Lodge, La Luz, No. 3, is composed chiefly of American Brethren.

The Grand Lodge of Costa Rica is recognised as regular by all American and Canadian Grand Lodges except Illinois, Missouri, Colorado, Georgia, Maine, Maryland, Minnesota, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Wisconsin, Alberta, Nova Scotia, and Prince Edward Island. It is possible that some of the above may have entered into fraternal relations with it since this information was gathered.

GUATEMALA

A Lodge—Constance—was established in this republic in 1881, by the Grand Orient of Colombia at Carthagená. In 1886 the members divided themselves among three new Lodges: Igualdad, Libertad and Fraternidad—Nos. 21-23 on the roll of the Grand Orient of Central America (Costa Rica), "installed" May 22, 1886, which adhere to the Ancient and Accepted Rite—and Union—of uncertain parentage—which is alleged to work in accordance with the York Rite. The last-named Lodge probably received an American or German Charter, as a large number of its members were composed of these nationalities.

Owing to difficult circumstances, the Grand Master in 1929 called a series of conferences of the Lodges to discuss ways and means for improving conditions.

Entrance to the Masonic Temple at Port Lemon.

Four conclusions were agreed upon: the formulation of a definite programme of Masonic studies to be participated in by all the Brethren (1) for a clear understanding of the meaning of the Symbolic Degrees; (2) the desirability or undesirability of continuing or reducing the number of Lodges in the Capital and at Quezaltenango; (3) the reorganization of the finances of the Craft in Guatemala. Much good is expected to result from an intensive discussion of the three problems. Two Lodges—Garibaldi, No. 12, at Retalhuleu and Progreso, No. 14, at Coatepeque—were deprived of their Charters because of internal difficulties.

A new Lodge was instituted (U. S. D. S.) at San Felipe under the title of Ideal Orientacion and is working most satisfactorily. The Lodge Estralla de Oriente (Star of the East) was constituted in December 1928, at Asunción Mita, in the Department of Jutiapa and is reported to be working under favourable auspices and excellent condition, thanks to the enthusiasm of its members and their determination to adhere strictly to the laws of the Craft. Tenidas blancas (public meetings) were held by the several Lodges in a spirit of broad toleration and with carefully prepared programmes of entertainment and information to let the cultured public get a clearer conception of the character and altruistic purposes of the Fraternity. Grand Lodge organized three similar meetings: One in celebration of the annual patriotic festival on September 15—la Fiesta de la Patria; the second in celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the establishment of the Grand Lodge of Guatemala, the third in memory of the Brethren who have “travelled to the Eternal East, . . . preceding us in the completion of human destiny.” These meetings, too, have been of inestimable value as a means for dispelling doubts and misconceptions and diffusing the principles of Freemasonry for the good of the country and the world at large.

With reference to the Fiesta de la Patria the Grand Master issued a decree calling upon the Lodges to arrange annually, on either the fourteenth or fifteenth of September, a dignified celebration of the anniversary of the Independence of Central America, so as to record and exalt the patriotism of the Masons of Guatemala, demonstrating their love of their country and their constant solicitude for her prosperity.

The Grand Lodge of Guatemala is recognised as regular by an impressive list of British and American Grand Lodges.

HONDURAS

There is in Honduras a Grand Lodge, recognized by several of the American Jurisdictions, which, according to the latest return, has six Lodges, composed in membership of native Hondurians, almost every Lodge having among its members some of the best minds of the Republic. There are also in Honduras four Lodges chartered by the Grand Lodge of Scotland, viz. Tela, No. 1196, at Tela; Ceiba, No. 1266, at La Ceiba; Puerta Castilla, No. 1293, at Puerto Castilla; and Cortes, No. 1315, at Puerto Cortes.

On May 15, 1922, representatives of the three Lodges in Honduras then existing—Iqualidad, No. 1, at Tegucigalpa; Eureka, No. 2, at San Pedro Sula; and Augustin Disdier, No. 3, at La Ceiba—all then subordinate to the Supreme Council of Central America at Guatemala, met in consultation at Tegucigalpa to take preliminary steps towards the formation of an Independent Grand Lodge of Symbolic Masonry. It was resolved to found such a body and Fredrico C. Canales was appointed Grand Master and Ernesto Fiallos V as Grand Secretary. Notice was given the Supreme Council of the resolution thus passed and that body rendered the necessary assistance by releasing the three Lodges from all obedience to it. On July 9 of the same year the Sovereign Symbolic Grand Lodge of the State of Honduras of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite was duly formed and constituted. This body demands a declaration of belief in the Supreme Being and the Bible is displayed on the altars of the Lodges.

The Lodges under the jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of Scotland are composed entirely of English-speaking people, most of whom are Americans. The Lodges under the Grand Lodge of Honduras work in the language of the country.

Its standards are substantially those of the Grand Lodges of New York, North Carolina, Massachusetts, and others. It is recognised by Alabama, Arkansas, California, Kansas, New Jersey, North Carolina, Cuba, Costa Rica, Panama.

PANAMA

A very good historical account of Freemasonry in what is now the Republic of Panama, presented by Judge Oliver D. Street to the Grand Lodge of Alabama in 1922, is reproduced herewith:

This republic was a part of Colombia until November 3, 1903, when it declared its independence and set up a government of its own. It was promptly recognised by the leading nations of the world, due no doubt to the chaotic conditions in Colombia and the desire of the world to see the Panama Canal constructed. The republic is 430 miles long and 118 miles at its widest point, its area being 32,380 square miles. The population is about one-half million and exhibits various degrees of admixture of Indian, Negro and Spanish blood. Of course, the relatively small pure white element is the predominating influence.

Apparently the first Masonic Lodge in Panama was "Union Lodge," at Panama City, founded by the Grand Lodge of Texas in 1850. It probably became dormant about 1852. In 1866, Massachusetts established at Panama "Isthmus Lodge" which continued to work till 1880 when it surrendered its charter. It is probable that these two Lodges left little impress upon the people of Panama as their membership consisted chiefly of sojourners.

There is little doubt that the present Masonry of Panama owes its existence in the first instance to the Supreme Council of Colombia (formerly New Granada, at Cartagena), though by 1903, it had become completely disorganized. When about 1907 the process of reorganization began it was necessary on account of the unfriendly political relations then existing between Panama and Colombia for the Masons of Panama to apply to the Supreme Council of Venezuela, at Caracas, for a charter. Between 1907 and 1913, six Lodges were chartered by Venezuela in Panama.

The Grand Lodge of Panama was formed by these six Lodges and one Lodge chartered by the Supreme Council of Colombia, at Cartagena, on August 19, 1916. Its jurisdiction extends throughout the Republic with the exception of the Canal Zone. It may not establish Lodges in this Zone but may receive the petitions of citizens of the Republic of Panama residing or doing business in the Zone. It has been recognized by the Masonic powers of the world generally. Latest statistics (1920) credit it with 6 Lodges and 500 members.

NICARAGUA

In 1932 the Grand Lodge of Nicaragua sent out the following account of itself, signed by T. F. Guliener, Grand Master, and Antonio Ortega B., Grand Secretary:

With the object of having our foreign relation as completely as possible to fulfil the purposes of our Great Fraternity we hereby apply for official recognition from your Grand Lodge.

For your guidance we are submitting you the following information:

1. The Grand Lodge of Nicaragua occupies exclusively its territorial jurisdiction and was lawfully formed on 27th November, 1907, by the following Lodges:
Progreso, No. 1, Managua. Luz, No. 2, Leon. Estrella Meridional, No. 3, Rivas.
Furthermore the following lodges have been Chartered:
Isis, No. 4, Matagalpa. Veteranos, No. 5, Managua. Diriangen, No. 6, Leon.
2. It is a responsible independent self-governing organization with sole undisputed and exclusive authority over all symbolic Lodges in Nicaragua. Is not in any sense subject to nor dividing its authority with any Supreme Council nor any other Power claiming ritualistic or other supervision or control. Its legal standing has been recognized by the Nicaraguan Government.
3. Its membership is composed of men exclusively and do not entertain any Masonic relation with mixed lodges or bodies admitting women into their fellowship.
4. It adheres in principle to the Ancient Landmarks, traditions, customs and usages of the Craft, as set forth in the Constitutions adopted by the Grand Lodge of England in 1723.
5. The Grand Lodge of Nicaragua meet in particular the following essentials:
 1. Acknowledgement of a belief in God the father of all men.
 2. Belief in immortality.
 3. Presence of the Three Great Lights of Masonry in the lodges while at work, chief among them the Sacred Book of the Divine Law.

SAN SALVADOR

Masonry obtained a footing and the Craft flourished for a time in this State, but in 1882 the Lodges were closed and the members dispersed. In that year, however, some zealous Masons, supported by the then President of the Republic—Rafael Zaldivar—succeeded in reuniting the scattered Brethren and founding a Lodge. Excelsior, No. 17, was established by Charter of the Grand Orient of Central America (Costa Rica), at San Salvador, the capital, March 5, 1882 and, a little later, another Lodge—No. 18, Caridad y Constanca—under the same sanction, at Tecla, a neighbouring town.

SPANISH HONDURAS

We obtain from the report prepared for the Grand Lodge of Alabama in 1922 by Hon. Oliver D. Street, the following account of Freemasonry in the Republic of Honduras:

This state is only a little smaller than Guatemala, but its population is only about one-fourth as large. Those of pure European blood are very small in number, the mestizos (mixed Indian and Spanish) and the full-blooded Indians constituting the great bulk of the population. As a rule the people are industrious.

Of course the prevailing religion is Roman Catholicism but no religion is supported by the state and religious freedom is secured by the constitution.

As late as June 10, 1922, there were only three Lodges of Masons in Honduras, namely, "Igualdad" No. 1 at Tegucigalpa; "Eureka" No. 2, at San Pedro Sula; and "Augustin Disdier" No. 3, at La Ceiba, all subordinates of the Supreme Council of Central America at Guatemala. On May 15, 1922, representatives of the Lodges met in convention at Tegucigalpa to take preliminary steps towards forming an independent Grand Lodge of Symbolic Masonry. It was at once resolved to found such body and the election of officers was proceeded with, resulting in the election of Fredrico C. Canales as Grand Master and Ernesto Fiallos V. as Grand Secretary. Notice was at once communicated to the Supreme Council of Central America of their action, and on the 10th day of June that supreme body released these Lodges from all allegiance to it in order to facilitate them in their plans.

On July 9, 1922, the "Sovereign Symbolic Grand Lodge of the State of Honduras of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite" was solemnly constituted.

We have been furnished with a full set of documents relating to the formation of this Grand Lodge. From them we learn that all official connection between the Lodges of Symbolic Masonry and the "higher" bodies of the Scottish Rite is completely severed; that this Grand Lodge is an independent, self-governing body owing no allegiance to any other body or system; that this Grand Lodge practices and controls only the first three degrees and that the Supreme Council of Central America has surrendered claim over these degrees within the Republic of Honduras; that all the Lodges in Honduras participated in the formation of this Grand Lodge and that it is formed 'in conformity' to the laws which govern our Institution."

We are unable to detect irregularity whatever in the formation of this Grand Lodge except (if it be an irregularity) that it is Scottish Rite origin. A declaration of a belief in Deity is exacted and the Bible is displayed on the altar of the Lodges.

CHAPTER IV

FREEMASONRY IN THE WEST INDIES

BY the expression West Indies is understood the large group of islands lying east of Central and north of South America. Of these the northernmost are the Bahamas or Lucayos—a long archipelago. South-west of them stretches the vast island of Cuba, the most important of the whole group as well as the principal member of the Greater Antilles, within which are also comprised Jamaica, Hayti, Porto Rico and several smaller islands.

East of Porto Rico begin the Lesser Antilles, also known as the Caribbee Islands, by navigators again subdivided into the two groups of the Windward (or South Caribbees) and Leeward (or North Caribbees) Islands, so-called in accordance with the direction in which they lie with regard to the prevailing easterly trade wind. With a single important exception all these islands belong to European nations, being shared between Great Britain, Holland, Sweden, Denmark, France and Spain. The solitary exception is Hayti, which is divided into two independent native states. Some few also of the Leeward group belong to the South American Republic of Venezuela.

Much confusion has arisen from the same name being given to different islands and from the same island having different names. Thus, there are Barbadoes and Barbudo, whilst the Saintes (three of the Caribbee Islands) were at one time called Barbata. St. Christopher is commonly termed St. Kitts; Porto Rico was formerly known as San Juan—the proximity of the latter to St. John naturally introducing a new element of uncertainty. Then we have Cariacou, one of the Grenadines and Curaçoa. The Bahamas were likewise the Lucayos. Hispaniola, San Domingo and Hayti are all appellations for one island, while San Domingo is also the name of the principal city in the Spanish part of it. Two islands are called Anguila; there is a New as well as an Old Providence—and the latter was also known as St. Catherine. The island of Samana occasionally comes in conflict with the peninsula of the same name in Hispaniola. Three islands in the West Indies were called Santa Cruz and the same name is borne by a group in the South Pacific and by the capital of the Canaries. There is Tortuga and the Tortugas and the following very puzzling names of towns: Basseterre, the capital both of Guadeloupe and St. Kitts; St. Pierre, a town in Martinique, also in Réunion (or Bourbon); St. Louis, common to Guadeloupe and Senegal; St. Denis, a town in France, as well as the capital of Réunion; Port Louis, a seaport of France and the capital of the Mauritius; St. George, the name of towns in Grenada and Bermuda; and, lastly, Santiago, the most familiar title of all, which occurs not only in Old and New Spain (Hispaniola), the Cape Verde Islands, Cuba and Jamaica, but is also met with both in Central and South America.

It will be seen, therefore, that a study of the Masonic history of the West Indies is beset with a new class of difficulties, differing materially from those which have been already encountered in the previous researches. A great part of the information is contained in old Calendars where the name of a town or an island is, as often as not, given without any real approach to exactitude. Less uncertainty prevails, as we gradually sail down the river of time, but even when approaching our own times, the references to Lodges in foreign parts (en pays étrangers) under Continental Jurisdictions, by the most discursive of writers, are, in too many instances, both vague and misleading.

CUBA

Le Temple des Vertus Theologiques, or Las Virtudes Teologales, No. 103—with the notorious Joseph Cerneau as first Master—was chartered at Havana by the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, December 17, 1804. During the progress of the Negro Revolution, three Lodges originally constituted in Hispaniola—Réunion des Cœurs (French), Concorde and Persévérance (Pennsylvanian)—were reorganized at Santiago de Cuba in 1805-6. Again dispersed in 1808, many of the members removed to New Orleans in 1809, where—October 7, 1810—the two Lodges first named amalgamated, as No. 117 (Concord), under the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, by which body a Charter—No. 118, Perseverance—was also granted the same day to certain petitioners, “chiefly refugees from San Domingo and Cuba.” Other Lodges were erected under the same sanction—Nos. 157, 161 in 1818; 166, 167 in 1819; and (at Santiago de Cuba) 175 in 1820 and 181 in 1822. All, however, but the last two had died out by 1822 and, in 1826, the Charters of Nos. 175 and 181 were revoked, because the Lodges had failed to meet for more than a year. The privilege of warranting Lodges on the island was next assumed by the Grand Lodges of Louisiana and South Carolina, under the former of which bodies sprang up Nos. 7, 1815, 11 and 14, 1818; and, under the latter, Nos. 50—La Constancia, 1818 and 52—La Amenidad, 1819. Then followed the Grand Orient of France with a Lodge and consistory (32°), 1819; and two further Lodges—La Constante Sophie and L’Humanité (at Saint Yago, ? Santiago de Cuba), 1821. In the year last named a circular was received by the Grand Lodge of South Carolina from the Grand Lodge of Ancient Freemasons in Havana, stating that a Grand Lodge had been organized there, to which Lodge La Amenidad requested permission to transfer its allegiance. A favourable answer was of course returned, but the Grand Lodge of South Carolina retained on its roll La Constancia for a few years, when the Warrant was surrendered by the members “in consequence of the religious and political persecutions to which they were subjected.”

practising their rites in secret, but not daring to indulge in any overt acts, which might entail not only expulsion from the country, but also confiscation of their property. At length, however, a faint revival set in and a Warrant was granted, November 17, 1859, by the Grand Lodge of South Carolina to St. Andrew's Lodge, No. 93, "for the purpose of establishing, with two other Lodges (Albert Pike and Josiah H. Drummond concur in the belief that these were Spanish Lodges, i.e. holding Warrants from some Peninsula authority) already existing on the island, a Grand Lodge," which was accomplished on December 5 of the same year.

An independent Grand Lodge of Colon was thus established at Santiago de Cuba and—December 27, 1859—a Supreme Council of the Ancient and Accepted Rite 33° was founded in the same city by Andrés Cassard, under the sanction of the Supreme Council for the Southern Jurisdiction of the U.S.A., "for the Masonic Jurisdiction of Cuba and other unoccupied West India Islands."

At this time, it must be recollected, the practice of assembling as Freemasons was forbidden by the Spanish laws, which laws, moreover, though destined to become—after the dethronement of Queen Isabella (1868)—innocuous in the Peninsula, remained for a long time in full force in Cuba.

Several, indeed, of the Captains General and other officers who ruled the island were Masons and, therefore, from time to time the Craft was tolerated, but its members being always compelled to work to a great extent in the dark, found it necessary to observe the most inviolable secrecy, even to shield themselves under "Masonic names," lest by the discovery of their own, they might incur the most grievous penalties. Among the names given in an official report dated August 6, 1873, of the officers of the Supreme Council of Colon are "Bismark" and "Josaphat," but a paragraph states—"the real names of the officers you will find in the enclosed slip, they are not stated here, to prevent their being divulged should this communication come to print" (New England Freemason, February 1874, p. 80). For the same reason the Supreme Council and the Grand Lodge, which soon after united in forming a Grand Orient, found a convenient title for the amalgamated body in the name of Colon—the Spanish for Columbus—it being desired above all things to conceal from the public ken the seat of the "Grand East" of the Society.

At the formation of the Grand Orient of Colon, a Constitution published at Naples in 1820, was adopted as that of the new organization. By this the Supreme Council necessarily became a section of the Grand Orient. In 1865 a new Constitution was promulgated. The Sovereign Grand Commander of the Supreme Council became—ex officio—Grand Master of the Grand Orient, but the Grand Master of the Grand Lodge was still required to submit himself for election. All Charters for Lodges were issued by the Grand Lodge, but had to be confirmed and viséd by the Supreme Council. According to Lecerff, however—"in Naples a Grand Orient was founded, which in 1830 [not 1820] enacted its Constitution and By-laws, entitling the book General Statutes of the Scottish Rite; these came to America and happened to come to hand of (sic) Brother Andrés Cassard, the propagator of Masonry in South and Central America ; in establishing Masonry in those countries, he gave the General Statutes as the universal laws of Masonry and the Grand Orient system with the allegiance of all to the thirty-third Degree was provided for therein" (Proceedings Grand Lodge of Cuba, 1879).

In 1867 the Grand Lodge promulgated a Constitution of its own, in which, while recognizing its continued membership of the Grand Orient, it claimed the exclusive power to enact its own By-laws, issue Charters, constitute and regulate Lodges. Their right to do this was denied by the Supreme Council. In 1868—September 30—the Grand Lodge suspended its Constitution until a meeting took place of the Grand Orient, convoked for November 30. But before that time the revolution broke out and Freemasons, being regarded by the Spanish government as revolutionists, the Grand Orient could not meet. The Grand Lodge, so far as it was possible, resumed labour. But the times were unpropitious. In the winter of 1869, at Santiago de Cuba, by order of Gonzales Bret, an officer of the government, eighteen persons were seized without warrant and immediately shot, without a trial, for being Freemasons—one of them the Grand Master of Colon—and many others were arrested and committed to prison for the same offence.

The number of Cuban Lodges, which, in 1868, was about thirty, had fallen in 1870 to about seven and, in the latter year, the Supreme Council organized a Provincial Mother Lodge at Havana, against which the Grand Lodge very naturally protested. The Warrant to this Mother Lodge was soon after recalled, but the dispute between the Supreme Council and the Grand Lodge continued. In 1873—April 11—the Grand Lodge resumed work openly and, in the following year, entered into a compact with the Supreme Council, whereby it was agreed that the former should have exclusive jurisdiction over Symbolic Masonry, with the sole right of chartering Lodges and that it should establish a Provincial Mother Lodge (instituted in April and dissolved in July 1875) in the western section of the island to govern the Lodges there, but in submission to the laws of the Grand Lodge. After this compact it is contended that the Grand Lodge, though still nominally a section in the Grand Orient, had full jurisdiction over Symbolical Masonry. Nevertheless, it is quite clear that there was a divided authority and, apparently, great Masonic confusion on the island.

The Grand Lodge of Colon held five meetings in August 1876, on the last of which—August 26—it declared itself free from all other authority, a sovereign body, with full and unlimited powers over its subordinates.

This action, however, was accelerated by an event which had taken place on August 1, when the representatives of nine chartered Lodges (six chartered before and three after 1865), together with four under dispensation from the two Provincial Mother Lodges, met at Havana and formed the Grand Lodge of Cuba. This body from the very first kept itself free from the blighting influence of the (so-called) High Degrees, which it willingly consented—December 31, 1876—should be ruled in Cuba by the Grand Orient of Spain. In a circular of September 4, 1876, the Grand Lodge of Colon claimed to have on its register 36 Lodges and 8,000 members; whilst its newly formed rival, the Grand Lodge of Cuba, in 1877, possessed an apparent following of 17 Lodges. In the latter year—June 3—a second Grand Lodge of Colon (or Columbus) at Havana was added to the two existing Craft Grand bodies.

Thus we find three organizations, each claiming to be the regular Grand Lodge. From a circular of the Grand Lodge of Cuba, we learn that, in 1879, the three Lodges which formed the Grand Lodge of Colon at Santiago de Cuba in 1859 and four others, adhered to that body; but that the remaining Lodges—excepting those under the Grand Lodge of Cuba—were subject to the control of the Grand Lodge of Colon at Havana. To local jealousies must be attributed this multiplication of Grand Lodges. The representatives of some of the Havana Lodges seceded from the old (or original) Grand Lodge of Colon at Santiago de Cuba, met as the Grand Lodge and decreed its removal to Havana.

Eventually, however, the Grand Lodges of Colon (at Havana) and Cuba formally united, and—March 28, 1880—the Grand Master of one body became Grand Master and the Grand Master of the other body Deputy Grand Master. The title assumed by the new organization was the United Grand Lodge of Colon and the Island of Cuba and it entered upon its career with a roll of 57 Lodges and between 5,000 and 6,000 Masons. The Lodges under the original Grand Lodge of Colon at Santiago de Cuba remained true to their allegiance.

In 1885, the number of Lodges under the United Grand Lodge had apparently increased to 82, with Provincial Grand Lodges at Santiago de Cuba and Porto Rico; but from the official List of 1886, there were then only 58 Lodges in all upon the roll. Of these, 30 were at the capital, or in its vicinity, and 28 in other parts. It is possible that further schisms may have disturbed the peace of Cuban Masonry; and it is somewhat remarkable that the Provincial Grand Lodge of Porto Rico—with the 14 subordinate Lodges on that island, shown in sundry Calendars for 1886—wholly disappeared in the later official List.

To-day there are in Cuba 186 Lodges with 13,178 members, a net gain during the year of 349. Order has been brought into quarters where temporary differences had produced dissension. Honesty and business-like administration of finances is insisted on and a special commission appointed to look after this matter and supply standard models for book-keeping transactions and the keeping of Minutes. Discipline is upheld with a firm hand. The Grand Master (Antonio Iraizoz de Villar) holds that it is better to have fewer Lodges and fewer members than men who cannot or will not submit to Masonic law and co-operate to maintain the high reputation which Cuban Masonry has won after years of struggle against attacks and misinterpretations by opponents outside of the Lodges. A Commission is to be created to act as a Supreme Court of Masonic Justice; this will be composed of magistrates of established prestige and authority.

During 1929 a number of new Temples were dedicated and a uniformed National Masonic Band was formed. The Government has conceded to Grand Lodge a valuable piece of property in the city of Havana, in recognition of its help in providing a school for children and a public library. A Masonic Temple (Palacio de la Masoneria) will be built on this property, which will be the headquarters of Grand Lodge. The property was obtained through the influence of Dr. Antonio Bosch, who is not a Mason.

One Lodge helps to maintain a dental dispensary for children in the city of Camagüey. Another gave an ambulance to a hospital. £687 were sent to Porto Rico for relief in the devastated regions there; 16,171 pairs of shoes were given to an equal number of children, enabling them to attend school. This undertaking is known as El Zapato Escolar. It was founded on January 6, 1920, the day which commemorates the visit of the Magi to Bethlehem. La Misericordia (the National Masonic Home) has, at present, 180 residents.

This Grand Lodge appears to be recognised practically universally among Masonic Grand Lodges, the Grand Lodge of South Australia being the only one whose statement of fraternal relations with it appears not to have been found.

HAYTI AND SANTO DOMINGO

This island is divided into the republics of Hayti in the west and San (or Santo) Domingo in the east. It was originally a Spanish possession, but the western portion was ceded in 1697 to the French, under whom it prospered rapidly and, in 1789, contained 793 sugar plantations, 3,117 coffee plantations, 789 cotton plantations and 182 establishments for making rum, besides other minor factories and workshops.

But the conflicting diversity of race and monopoly of political power by the whites, led to a rupture on the outbreak of the Revolution in the mother country. After fierce revolts of the mulattoes and negroes and inroads of the English and Spanish, all the inhabitants of the colony were declared free and equal in 1793, the command of the army being given to Toussaint l'Ouverture, who expelled the hostile intruders and restored peace to the island.

English troops arrived in Hayti from Jamaica in 1793 and, afterwards, were poured into the country; but they came to die. The 82nd Foot, numbering 880 men, lost all but 50 in ten weeks. Another regiment, in the same time, lost 700 men out of 1,000; and it is stated that the 96th Foot perished to a man (Bryan Edwards, History of the West Indies, vol. iii, p. 411). Major-General Sir Adam Williamson (Provincial Grand Master for Jamaica under the Grand Lodge of England—Moderns—1793–8), who succeeded the Earl of Effingham (Acting Grand Master of England, under the Duke of Cumberland, 1782–9) as Governor of Jamaica, ultimately followed the troops sent from that island, with the title of Governor-General of San Domingo. At the close of 1798, however, when the colony was evacuated, millions of treasure had been wasted, twenty thousand soldiers and sailors had perished, whilst there never had been any reasonable prospect of conquering the island. The loss of the English has been estimated at 45,000 men and twenty millions sterling.

The Spanish territory was ceded to France in 1795, but Napoleon attempted to re-establish slavery in 1801 and the inhabitants shook off the French yoke in 1803, San Domingo in that year declaring itself an independent republic. A period of confusion then ensued, there being no fewer than five distinctive governments upon the island in 1810. The whole of it passed again under a single republic, that of Hayti, in 1822, but, in 1844, the Dominicans reasserted their independency and the two districts have since remained separate. The territory comprised within the republic of San Domingo was ceded to Spain in 1861, but again declared free by an act of the Cortes, March 3, 1865.

Of the later condition of San Domingo, Hazard, a traveller, gave a deplorable account. The fertile plains were untilled; the rich mines unworked. There was not a plough in the whole island; and the only steam engine ever set up was destroyed by the Spaniards in 1865.

In the republic of Hayti, on the western side of this beautiful island, the state of things was even worse than in the eastern or Dominican part. All traces of the old French civilization vanished. There were no manufactures and the government was bankrupt; the towns were in ruins and the men spent their time in idleness, living on the industry of the women.

Two Lodges—St. Jean de Jérusalem Écossaise and Concorde—were formed on the island, under the Grande Loge Anglaise de France in 1749. Others soon followed—Frères Réunis, 1763; Amitié Indissoluble, 1765; Verité, 1767; Frères Choisis, 1772; and a Provincial Grand Lodge—under the Grand Orient—October 1, 1778. These were doubtless established on French territory, in the district now known as Hayti, though the term San Domingo is alone used in the lists.

The remaining Lodges, constituted under French authority prior to the Revolution were—L'Unanimité, Petit Goave, 1774; Les Frères Zélés, Cavaillon, 1775; Raison Perfectionnée, Petit Tron, 1779; Réunion Désirée, Port au Prince, 1783; Choix des Hommes, Jacmel, 1784 and Frères Discrets, Cayes, 1785 (Nos. 292, 291, 456, 466, 521 and 591).

Besides the Degrees of the Craft, the Rite of Perfection had been introduced into the island by Stephen Morin in 1761 and, doubtless, continued to be worked until swept away—like all other vestiges of French domination—by the great political cataclysm, in which that remarkable personage is himself believed to have perished. We have seen that during the closing years of the eighteenth century Hispaniola had become the headquarters of the newly invented American Rite, called—but without any valid reason—the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite 33° and that, on the expulsion of the French colonists, the Rite in question had been introduced into France. Both De Grasse-Tilly and Hacquet—who so far anticipated him as to be first in the field with the revived Rite of Perfection—the former a planter, the latter a notary, were residents in the French (or western) side of San Domingo, i.e. on the part now known as Hayti.

The Dominican, or to speak with precision, the Haytian Lodges, which had served as the basis of the Rite, in most cases closed their doors during the political troubles and Freemasonry, which was strictly confined to the white inhabitants, became almost, if not quite, extinct.

A Warrant was granted from Pennsylvania, in 1786, on the application of "a Lodge held at Cape François, directed to General Washington as Grand Master of all America." A second Lodge, under the same Jurisdiction, was established at Port au Prince in 1789, which continued to meet regularly throughout the political convulsions of 1791 and, at the close of 1798 (as related in the Proceedings of the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania), "after having been obliged by reason of the disturbances in the island, their Lodge being burnt, etc., to suspend their Masonic operations, had again begun and were carrying on their works."

In 1793—December 4—sundry French Brethren, "driven from the island of San Domingo," were granted a dispensation by the Grand Lodge of New York to meet as a Lodge in that city for the period of six months. This, which was named La Tendre Amitié Franco-Américaine, surrendered its acting Warrant, June 4, 1794; but the money and papers of the Lodge were delivered—by order of the Grand Lodge—to L'Unité Américaine, which took its place, May 19, 1795. The latter received a regular Charter in 1797, becoming No. 12 on the roll and, in the same year, was concerned in a series of irregularities which are not without interest in the present inquiry. From internal bickerings dissensions had arisen in the Lodge, it decided to return the New York Warrant and revert "to the authority of their natural Grand Lodge of France." Accordingly, a French Lodge L'Union Française was established in New York, December 6, by Huet Lachelle, a Deputy Grand Master under the jurisdiction of the Grand Orient of France and Provincial Grand Master for San Domingo. L'Unité Américaine after this made submission, was accorded grace, but split into two parts, one remaining the old Lodge, the other becoming L'Union Française, No. 14 on the roll of New York. With the subsequent history of these bodies we are not concerned; it will suffice to have learnt from authority that a large number of Haytian Brethren found an asylum in New York; also, that the Provincial Grand Master of San Domingo and four of his Grand Officers were included in the number of these refugees.

In 1802, owing to the arrival of 30,000 veteran French troops, the negro forces of Toussaint l'Ouverture were compelled to retire to the mountains and the survivors of the colonists who had fled to different countries returned in great numbers, but in 1803 were for the second time expelled. Meanwhile, however, the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania had extended its jurisdiction in Hayti. Several Lodges were erected as follows: Nos. 46, Cape François, February 3, 1786; 47, Union of Franco-American Hearts, Port au Prince, December 18, 1789; 87, Frères Réunis, the Cape, December 15, 1800; 88, Concorde, St. Marc, May 4, 1801—reinstated September 15, 1806—surrendered September 4, 1809; 89, Frères Sincèrement Réunis, Cayes, May 4, 1801; 95, Humilité, Lusé à Veau, December 6, 1802; 97, Parfaite Harmonie, San Domingo, September 5, 1803; 98, Persévérance, Abricots, September 5, 1803—reinstated March 21, 1808—finally vacated October 27, 1810; 99, Temple du Bonheur, Arcapaye, December 5, 1803. All the above, except No. 46 (extinct in 1790), were erased (or "vacated") April 7, 1806 and those only reinstated which are specifically mentioned. Nos. 95 and 97-9 were established in the first instance by the Provincial Grand Lodge of San Domingo.

A Provincial Grand Lodge of San Domingo was established January 9, 1802. This was vacated (apparently in error) April 7, but reinstated September 15, 1806 and the jurisdiction extended to the island of Cuba—whither, with two of his Lodges, the Provincial Grand Master had retired.

In 1806, in the portion of Hayti ruled by President Pèthion, some of the French Lodges revived and negotiations were set on foot by one Trichet, which resulted in the erection of two Lodges under the (older) Grand Lodge of England in 1809, La Loge de l'Amitié des Frères, Réunis and La Loge de l'Heureuse Réunion. This was followed up by the appointment of a Provincial Grand Master—John Goff—in 1811 and by the formation of two further English Lodges in 1817, Loge La Réunion des Cœurs and Loge Parfaite Sincérité des Cœurs Réunis. All four were erased in 1824. Meanwhile the efforts of the Grand Orient of France to obtain the upper hand were frustrated by the action of the Government.

About the same time—1810—in that part of the island under the sway of the Emperor Henry I, there was also a revival and a vast number of so-called Degrees, with pompous and unmeaning titles, were introduced by a charlatan named D'Obernay, which were accepted with avidity at the Imperial Court. After this came a pause, owing to the political convulsions which disturbed the peace of the island. In both of the existing Republics—mulatto and black—one revolution seems to have followed another, the only variation being the wars that from time to time broke out between the two States. But, after the establishment of a single Government (1822), the English Provincial Grand Lodge was transformed—May 23, 1823—into an independent Grand Lodge of Hayti, with President Boyer as patron, with his Prime Minister, General Ingignac, as Grand Master. The Constitutions were settled January 24, 1824 and the Grand Lodge was established on precisely the same basis as the United Grand Lodge of England. For many years the Craft prospered and pursued the even tenor of its way, until about 1830, when a certain St. Lambert, an envoy of the Supreme Council of France, began to stir up strife by again attempting to propagate the High Degrees.

Five Lodges in all were erected under the authority of the Ancient and Accepted Rite; whilst the rival French Jurisdiction, that of the Grand Orient, has only warranted a single Lodge on the island during the last century. This, Les Mages du Tropique, was established at Cayes in 1831 and has long since disappeared from the roll of the Grand Orient, though as an Areopagus distinguished by an identical title, meeting at the same place, was shown in the Tableau Des Ateliers, Supreme Council of France, from which it is natural to suppose that there must have been a transfer of allegiance.

In 1836 the Grand Lodge, with a view to terminating the confusion which prevailed, transformed itself into a Grand Orient. This alteration, of course, involved the institution of a Supreme Council 33°, which duly claimed the allegiance of all fluctuating bodies under the obedience of any branch of the Ancient and Accepted Rite.

In 1843, owing to an insurrection of the blacks, Boyer—the mulatto President—was displaced. A few years of turmoil then ensued and the Craft once more languished. In 1845 a new envoy of the French Supreme Council, Fresnel, having obtained the protection of President Santana, almost overthrew the National Grand Orient, but was himself ultimately expelled for political intrigue. After his departure the Grand Orient of Hayti revived, entered into a compact with the Grand Orient of France and, in 1851, ruled over no fewer than thirty-one Lodges, besides forty-nine associations of Masons which met under varied titles for the communication of the so-called High Degrees.

In 1844—February 27—total separation from Hayti was declared by the Dominicans and the eastern (or Spanish) portion of the island formed itself into the republic of San Domingo. In 1861, as already related, it once more placed itself under the government of Spain. A revolt, however, broke out in 1863 and Spain finally relinquished its changeful child.

A Grand Orient of San Domingo was organized at the capital of the same name December 11, 1858. The Lodges taking part in this proceeding were originally warranted, 1830-4, by the Grand Orient of Hayti (Port au Prince), at the time when the whole island was under an undivided rule. Falling, however, into a state of somnolency during the wars, 1844-7, they were suppressed, or erased, in 1849. The Grand Orient of San Domingo, thus formed by these resuscitated Lodges, appears never to have had more than some half-dozen daughters on its roll.

During the reunion with Spain, 1861-5, Masonry either died out or was practised in secret, but a Grand Lodge of the Dominican Republic was organized—January 26, 1865—under Benito Perez as Grand Master. This was followed—October 22—by a Supreme Council for the High Degrees and the two bodies united—January 1, 1866—in re-establishing a National Grand Orient.

In January 1867 Thomas Bobadilla presided over the Grand Orient, with Castro as Deputy Grand Master; whilst the Lodges were ten in number, with a total membership of about 2,000. In 1928, the Dominican National Grand Lodge sent out the following:

This, our Great Lodge, was established the year 1858, and actually cultivates good friendly relations with a great majority of the Great Lodges of the world.

The lodges under our obedience are eighteen, distributed in the principal cities of this country, working regularly and according to our rules. They practice the Scottish Rite and our legislation is as progressive as that of other Grand Lodges.

Our Grand Lodge in its decisions is independent from the High Philosophic Bodies, with which we hold brotherly relations. We take heed not to admit in our relationship any Lodge or Masonic Body that may not have been acknowledged as regular, and in order to admit Brothers from foreign countries, we require the presentation of documents that may prove that they are Masons in good standing.

We only initiate in our lodges free men, with at least an average education, good habits and religious feelings, being an indispensable condition, belief in God, Great Architect of the Universe and regulator of all things.

Our by-laws are severe in their provisions for punishment, and whenever judging a Brother, we want justice to shine, making punishment certain when necessary, the only way to keep the prestige and good reputation of our Order.

We have before us many documents of different sorts concerning the Grand Orient of Hayti. First is an article in the Bulletin of the International Office for Masonic Intercourse, for January 1907. The article is by Dathan de St. Cyr, Grand Representative of Hayti to the Grand Orient of France. He states that Freemasonry was started in Hayti at the time of the proclamation of the independence of Hayti in 1804, but made only slow progress. It seems at almost all times to have been closely associated with the political powers. Thus it is stated that the approval of the President of the Republic of Hayti, Alexandre Petion, was given to a project to have Haytian Masonry obtain "the patronage of the Grand Lodge of England" through a man who was going on a mission "to the Cabinet of St. James"; and that he "succeeded in obtaining the favour." Soon afterwards two more Lodges were Constituted, and an "English Provincial Grand Lodge for Hayti" was created.

Then came the wars between Napoleon and England. Communication with England was very slow and difficult. Masonry in Hayti was not flourishing. The principal members resolved to issue a Masonic Declaration of Independence in Hayti, it is stated, which was done on January 25, 1824. The Grand Orient was thus formed. This Grand Orient was accompanied by the Degrees of Past Master, Royal Arch, "R. C.," whatever that means, and of the "Templ. Kadosch." This was called the Haytian Rite, and lasted about ten years. Then there is in the Record the statement that to end the schism, the Grand Orient of Hayti "resolved to concentrate within its bosom the regular exercise of the Scottish Rite." A Supreme Council was formed in 1835-36, and continued with little incident that we can discover until 1886, doing good work.

It was in 1886 that the next schism took place. There was the Grand Orient of Hayti and there was the National Grand Orient of Hayti. Good Masons lost interest, and it is stated that the Institution "was, perhaps, about to disappear," when a fusion occurred, and a single organisation for all was effected on July 9, 1899, with "the very illustrious Bro. F. R. Luxembourg Cauvin as Grand Master."

The documents agree that the "Head of the State is ex officio the grand protector of Haytian Masonry."

For more than a decade after the fusion, the Grand Orient grew after its own way, with some elements of weakness which it could not control. The Foreign Correspondence Report of New York for 1927 states that "there has been considerable confusion during the past two or three years. Many complaints reached the office of our Committee." This same book tells of the election of J. Lelio Joseph as Grand Master and Grand Commander for a three-year period beginning in January 1927. He is described as "a young man who has been very active in Masonic affairs—and has won the respect of the Grand Lodge and of American Masons in Hayti.

The Report has this to say about Haytian Masonry in the 1928 report of his Grand Lodge:

19 Lodges. About 2,000 members.

Since M.:W.:Bro. J. Lelio Joseph became Grand Master remarkable progress has been made towards the elimination of elements that have been detrimental to the Craft for many years. The younger element has come to follow the Grand Master as an effective leader who will abolish abuses and enforce Masonic discipline fearlessly. As a result of the change there has been more or less confusion, caused by disreputable elements seeking to get back into power by spreading dissatisfaction with the existing régime. All of this was brought out at the Annual meeting of July and August, without any mincing of words. All through the report is recognizable the strong hand at the helm of the Craft. The fundamental principles of Masonry are firmly insisted upon. Violation of the laws of morality and honest dealings are severely arraigned.

The Grand Master in reporting on the work of the year 1926-27, in his address at the Communication, reviews briefly the history of the difficulties which had been accumulating. He says that for more than a quarter of a century the vital principles of Freemasonry had been disregarded more or less and certainly had not been applied as they should be to the detailed affairs. As a result Haytian National Masonry of these latter times presented a disheartening spectacle. He traces the origin of the trouble back to the schism of 1886-1889, when the Lodges were invaded by men incapable of ever comprehending the mysteries of Masonry, ever being an easy prey to intriguing and concupiscent self-seekers. These men worked their way into official positions to the disgust of the better element who lost interest, withdrew or at least took no further active interest in the affairs of the Craft. Merchandising of all sorts of side degrees added another difficulty. "The Temple of Masonry was made a trafficking and recruiting centre," the Grand Master declares. Men were made Masons without any regard to law and procedure. Anyone who paid the price could find someone to initiate him and enter him as a member of a Lodge. The condition was limited to the capital City, and there the disorder produced anarchy. The Lodges outside adhered firmly to the laws and the best traditions.

After this very severe arraignment, the Grand Master goes on to point out how a new condition was worked out at last. He says that a new generation has come to the fore. Young men, inspired by the ideas of Masonry which they had heard exhibited in oratory and then seen trodden down in practice, began to look into the history of the Craft and learned of what the Craft was doing elsewhere. They began to dream of a re-establishment of sound discipline and a renewal of the splendor which once hung around the name of Masonry in the Island. They saw the standard of the Craft in the hands of indifferent guides; they decided to see it in more worthy keeping. So, on December 12, 1926, they appeared in force at Grand Lodge and seized the government. Since then they have been working together with the Grand Master for the renewal and progress of Masonry. The moral reform was pushed with the same determination as the improvement of the material conditions. "We proceeded with kindness," says the Grand Master, "but when the case required it we did not hesitate to take disciplinary measures, even the most severe." That this was needed is evident from the general change of atmosphere in the Masonic life of the jurisdiction.

JAMAICA

No documentary evidence has yet been found to show that Freemasonry existed in Jamaica, in a regularly organized condition, before April 14, 1739, when the Mother Lodge of Kingston was warranted as No. 182 by the Grand Lodge of England. It did not adopt that name until 1766 and it ceased to meet in 1796, although it was retained on the register until the union of the two Grand Lodges in 1813. It, however, paid no dues to Grand Lodge after 1791. The island of Antigua appears to have had the precedence of Jamaica by more than two years, but no other colony in the West Indies can claim priority of introduction, whilst Jamaica received the light of Freemasonry before Switzerland, Frankfort, Denmark, Rotterdam, or Amsterdam. In 1742 the Port Royal Lodge, No. 193, was established at Port Royal and continued working until 1770, being erased in 1772. It is probable that the number of Freemasons in Jamaica at that period was much larger than might be inferred from these particulars, as there were 10,000 white people resident on the island in 1741, while, in the same year, the harbour of Port Royal was crowded with twenty-nine line of battleships and a large number of frigates, sloops and transports, containing in all 15,000 sailors and 12,000 soldiers. On a previous expedition sent out under Admiral Hozier it is related that within a couple of years two admirals, ten captains, fifty lieutenants and four thousand men had perished.

According to the Constitutions of 1756 (p. 333), between 1742 and 1744 Ballard Beckford, George Hynde and Alexander Marriott Crawford were appointed Provincial Grand Masters for Jamaica, but there are no means of determining the exact dates of their appointments. The Masonic Year Book gives the year 1742 for each.

On April 29, 1746, a Lodge, No. 208, was constituted at St. Iago de la Vega (now Spanish Town), but it did not appear in the Lists until 1751 and it was erased in 1773. St. Mary's Lodge, No. 219, was established at Port Maria on February 17, 1757. It was off the List from 1773 to 1778, but reappeared in 1779, for the first time with its name. It made its last payment to Grand Lodge in 1900 and was erased at the Union in 1813. In October 1771 four Lodges appear to have been established at Kingston: the first, known as the Junior Lodge, No. 418, ceased to meet in 1796; the second, the Lodge of Harmony, was erased in 1813; the third, the Lodge of St. James, received a Warrant of Confirmation on November 23, 1808, but also was erased in 1813; and the fourth, the Lodge of Union, No. 421, met at St. James and was struck off the register at the same time. On April 23, 1773, two Lodges were established at Kingston; one, the Union, the other, the Beaufort, both being erased on November 20, 1782. Green Island Lodge and the Lodge of Lucea, the latter bearing the number 485, were founded in 1775; both were erased in 1813. The latter also bore the name of Hanover Lodge. The Sociable Lodge, No. 486 and the Union Lodge, No. 487, which met at Savanna-la-Mar, were also founded at the same time, the first being erased on November 20, 1782, and the second in 1813. Apparently in those days the custom was to issue certificates in manuscripts for each of the three Degrees. In The Freemason of August 20, 1881, W. F. Lamonby reproduced a copy of one of such certificates, which he had seen. It was written on a half-sheet of foolscap, at the head of which were pen-and-ink sketches of the square and compasses in the centre, with a plumb rule and level on either side. The certificate read as follows:

From the East, where shines ye Great Light.
Lux ex Tenebris.

These are to certify that Simon Miller was made an Enter'd Apprentice in the Union Lodge, at Savannah La Mar, in the Island of Jamaica. We, therefore, pray all respectable Brethren to receive our dear Brother Simon Miller in his respectable Qualitys and to entertain him in everything relative to them. We promise to have the same regard to those who shall present themselves to our Lodge, furnished with proper and Authentic Titles. To which we have subscribed our names and affixed our seal, this 19th day of the month Sevan of the year 7775, of the Restoration 2305, and of the Vulgar Era the 17th day of June, 1775.

WILLIAM HENRY RICKETTS, MR.
JOSEPH WILLIAMS, SENIOR WN.
JAS. ROB. TOMLINSON, JUNIOR WN.
JAMES BAIN, P.MR.

(Seal)

Lamonby adds that the second certificate, recording the Second and Third Degrees, is also very interesting, but it so happens that those stages were acquired in another part of the globe and at a long interval of twenty-eight years.

La Loge les Freres Reunis, No. 638, was founded in 1813 and continued in the Lists until 1832.

In succession to A. M. Crawford, the following Provincial Grand Masters appear to have been appointed by the Grand Lodge of England—Thomas M. Perkins (appointed "for the Mosquito Shore"), 1761; William Winter, 1770;

Masonic Temple at Kingston, Jamaica, British West Indies.

Jasper Hall, 1772; Sir Peter Parker, 1778; and Adam Williamson, 1793.

The Atholl Grand Lodge was not unrepresented in Jamaica. On October 1, 1763, it issued a Warrant for a Lodge to meet at Old Harbour, which was numbered 121. This is all that is known of it and Lane, in Masonic Records, thinks that probably it did not pay for its Constitution, as there is a note "Six Guineas was due to Dermott, G.S." It was, however, retained in each of the Lists in Abiman Rezon, for 1804, 1807 and 1813, as "Old Harbour, Kingston, Jamaica." On October 22, 1772, the Atholl Masons also established a Lodge at Green Island, numbered 177, of which there are no records after November 1773, although it is continued in Abiman Rezon for 1804, 1807, and 1813. At neither of these places had any Lodge been established by the original Grand Lodge, but in 1775 it established the Green Island Lodge, No. 483, which the Atholl Masons looked upon as an invasion of their jurisdiction. They, therefore, regarded themselves as being at liberty to constitute Lodges where others already existed under the original Grand Lodge, which they had not done heretofore. Accordingly, on February 7, 1786, an Atholl Warrant was issued for a Lodge to meet at Kingston, numbered 233, which dropped off the Jamaica Roll before 1795, although it was mentioned in Abiman Rezon for 1804, 1807, and 1813. Another Lodge—also called Union—was founded in 1789 as No. 257, which ceased to meet about 1816. The Artillery Lodge, No. 262, was formed on August 28, 1790, in connexion with the Royal Train of Artillery at Port Royal, which lapsed about 1805; and, on May 10, 1794, the Antients warranted the Royal Lodge, No. 283, at Kingston, which is still in existence under the same name, as No. 207. In February 1795, also the Lodge of Amity, No. 288, was warranted by the Atholl Masons to meet at Kingston. On December 12, 1797, the Friendly Lodge, an offshoot of the Union Lodge, No. 257, was constituted under the Atholl Grand Lodge. It now bears the number 239, given to it in 1863. Returns and other documents showing the existence of the Friendly Lodge before the date of its Engraved Warrant of 1809—to which reference is made below—were discovered by E. X. Leon in the Grand Secretary's Office in June 1889.

In 1806 the Atholl Masons, finding themselves sufficiently numerous, petitioned their Grand Master, John, fourth Duke of Atholl, for a Provincial Grand Master and, in response to their petition, Dr. (afterwards Sir) Michael Benignus Clare was duly appointed. So soon as this Provincial Grand Lodge was formed, many of the Lodges under the mother Grand Lodge ceased to work, whilst others accepted Provincial numbers under it. Sir Michael Clare continued his office after the Union, receiving his patent of confirmation in 1816. He retained the office until 1831, when he resigned and returned to England, where he passed away in the following year. At the time of the Union it was discovered that almost all, if not, indeed, all of the Lodges chartered by the original Grand Lodge, had fallen into abeyance, whilst the Atholl Lodges were nearly all in working order. At least nineteen Lodges were ranged under the Provincial banner within a few years of 1806. The first Lodge to be warranted after the establishment of the Provincial Grand Lodge was the Friendly, No. 342, Kingston, the Warrant being dated January 31, 1809. This is still in existence as No. 239. It was followed by nine others, which were quickly established in various parts of the island.

In 1760 the Lodge of St. Andrew, No. 102, was chartered by the Grand Lodge of Scotland, which Lodge remained on the Roll until 1816, though it was probably inactive for a great number of years prior to that date. Jamaica is first mentioned in the records of the Grand Lodge of Scotland, when a Provincial Grand Master appears to have been appointed by that body.

With regard to Ireland, Crossle and Lepper, in their History of the Grand Lodge of Ireland (vol. i, p. 243), state :

Jamaica was responsible for the issue of four Warrants : No. 456 (1767) ; No. 699 (1789) ; No. 733 (1791) ; No. 738 (1791). Barbadoes had No. 622 in 1783 and No. 649 in 1800. Martinique was granted No. 690 in 1801. The fact may be recalled that in those days the town of Cork was the usual last port of call for British vessels bound to the West Indies and it was only natural that one or two Irish Warrants should find their way across the Atlantic together with the salted beef and whiskey which, from the days of Raleigh onwards, had formed no inconsiderable portion of the cargo of ships outward bound from our southern forts.

At the present time the jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of Ireland is unrepresented on the island of Jamaica.

In 1782, of all our former possessions in the West Indies, Jamaica, Barbadoes and Antigua alone remained. Jamaica would next have fallen had it not been for the victory of Lord Rodney over the Count de Grasse on April 12 of that year. In that case the later Masonic history of Jamaica would have formed a part of that of the Grand Orient of France. The whole of the battering cannon and artillery intended for the attack on the island was on board the ships then captured. Thomas, third Earl of Effingham, Pro or Acting Grand Master of England from 1782 to 1789, resigned that appointment when given the office of Governor of Jamaica. He arrived in the colony in 1790, but died on November 19 of the same year. The mortality among all ranks at that time was very heavy. From Commissary Sayer's regimental returns we learn that, of 19,675 soldiers sent by England to the West Indies in 1796, before March 1802 no fewer than 17,173 died of complaints incidental to the climate.

In 1817 the Grand Orient of France issued Charters to the French refugees in Kingston to erect three Chapters or Consistories. The first was called the Sublime Lodge and conferred the so-called "Ineffable Degrees" ; the second was a Council of Princes of Jerusalem, and the third was a Grand Council of the 33°. But, says H. J. Burger, in the Handbook of Jamaica, issued in 1881 :

the members of these bodies soon wearied of these diversions and, becoming desirous of working legitimate Masonry, applied, in 1818, to the United Grand Lodge of England for a warrant to open La Loge La Bénignité. The result was that the so-called High Degrees rapidly declined, yet, as no more refugees arrived from Haiti and La Bénignité worked always in French, this Lodge lingered out a questionable existence till 1829, when it finally collapsed.

There is no mention of a Lodge of this name in Lane's Masonic Records.

On December 9, 1818, according to the Proceedings of the United Grand Lodge of England, the Board of General Purposes, as the result of letters received from the Grand Lodge of Ireland and from the Provincial Grand Master for Jamaica relative to some proceedings in that island, recommended that a deputation from the two Grand Lodges should be appointed to confer on the subject, i.e. that certain regulations common to the Grand Lodges of England and Ireland should be established for the government of the Lodges abroad and in military corps; and that the Grand Lodge of Scotland should be invited to join in the conference. On March 3, 1819, the Board reported the receipt of a letter from the Grand Lodge of Ireland and the matter was left in the hands of the Grand Master, the Duke of Sussex.

The year 1833 witnessed the passing of the Act for the Abolition of Slavery, which, says H. J. Burger (op. cit.), affected very considerably the progress of Freemasonry.

Active members who entertained the opinion that a terrible financial catastrophe had overtaken both the agricultural and commercial interests of the country, hastened away to other fields of enterprise and left the Lodges there to languish. Few or no new Lodges were constituted, whilst several old ones, such as the Seville, Concord, St. Elizabeth, Cornwall and Union, of Falmouth, closed their doors; nor did any reaction set in until about the end of 1844, when a number of Colombian patriots, who had taken refuge in Kingston, opened a Lodge under a Charter from the Grand Lodge of Carthagenia to work Symbolic Masonry in that city. As this proceeding was, however, in violation of Masonic international law, those Brethren were informed that they and their initiates would not be recognized in the island and they were advised to apply for a Warrant from England to legalize their work. On this advice they acted and, as they were recommended by the other Lodges in Kingston, a Warrant was obtained from the United Grand Lodge for the Union et Concordia Lodge, No. 754.

This Lodge, which was warranted on May 20, 1845 and consecrated on July 28 of the same year, continued working until 1868, although it was not erased until September 21, 1885.

In 1843 the Rev. W. P. Burton was appointed Provincial Grand Master for Jamaica by the Grand Lodge of Scotland, but, as in the parallel cases of Colonel Young in the West Indies and Dr. Burnes in the East Indies, he at first held the office in partibus infidelium. To-day there are five Lodges in the Scottish Provincial Grand Lodge of Jamaica. The zeal of Scottish Masons, says Burger, provoked a laudable spirit of emulation amongst the English Freemasons, and this new-born zeal was first manifested by a desire to work the Higher Degrees. The old Royal Lodge began by reopening their long-dormant Royal Arch Chapter and this was the signal for the other English Lodges in Kingston to do the same, if they possessed Charters and, if not, to apply for them.

The appointment by the Grand Lodge of Scotland of a Provincial Grand Master led the English Brethren to emulate them and seek to revive their dormant Provincial (or District) Grand Lodge. They petitioned for the appointment of the Hon. Robert Hamilton, M.D., in that capacity. He was a wealthy landed proprietor and a very zealous member of the Craft. On November 5, 1858, he was appointed District Grand Master for East Jamaica and the Lodges north of Kingston, who had declined to subscribe to the petition because of their distance from Kingston, were permitted to continue in direct communication with the United Grand Lodge in London. Dr. Hamilton passed away in 1880, but his successor, Lieutenant-Colonel John Charles Macglashan, was not appointed until 1886. His successors have been Sir Henry Arthur Blake, Surgeon-General the Hon. Charles Benjamin Mosse, William Duff, the Hon. Sir John Pringle and the Hon. Henry Isaac Close Brown. At the present time the English District of Jamaica has thirteen Lodges and four Royal Arch Chapters.

PORTO RICO

The chief authority for statements regarding Porto Rico is Fred D. Flagle, who has made a close study of the conditions in that country and contributed an article to the Freemason's Chronicle on the subject in September 1922.

The early history of Freemasonry in Porto Rico is closely connected with similar movements in Cuba and it is known that the first Lodge in Cuba was organized in 1804, under the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania.

In 1751, Ferdinand VI had placed the death penalty on Freemasons, because he considered them dangerous to the government. Joseph Buonaparte re-established Masonry, but Ferdinand VII again prohibited it and, in 1824, death was made the penalty of belonging to a Masonic Lodge.

The oldest-known Masonic document in Porto Rico is a letter constituting a Chapter of Rose Croix, under the name of Minerva, in San German, dated April 10, 1824. This Chapter was established under the auspices of the Southern Jurisdiction of the United States, located at Charleston, which, later, chartered the Grand Lodge of Cuba, in 1859. The establishment of this Chapter indicates that there were members of similar Chapters in Porto Rico before this date, but exact data in regard to these Chapters is lacking.

The decree of Ferdinand VII, in 1824, doubtless stopped Masonic work in Porto Rico, as it did in Cuba. It was not until 1858 or 1859 that Masonry was revived. At about that time the Grand National Orient of the Republic of Venezuela created a Lodge in Pueblo Viejo, which, afterwards, was transferred to San Juan. All the members were Master Masons and the Master was a member of the eighteenth Degree. This Lodge was named Borinquen and held its meetings in a building which was located in front of the Cathedral of San Juan. It was fronted by two columns and from this it has been asserted that it was built for Masonic purposes. At the same time other Lodges were working in the island under letters from the Grand Lodge of Cuba but, as the Masonic records date back only to 1884, when the Grand Lodge of Porto Rico was established, at Mayaguez, it is impossible to say how many there were. There is still in existence one Lodge, Estrella de Luquillo, which was active at that time, having been chartered March 21, 1867.

Suspicion was directed toward the Masons at the time of the Revolution of Lares and, though it was never proved that they had any part in that affair, persecution continued to follow them. Don Jose Perez Moris, writing of the revolution of Lares, has the following to say regarding the Masons:

Although the revolutionary bands have been represented as being Masons, we have no knowledge that there is any reasonable connexion between them. However, as it is difficult for the profane to distinguish between them, it would be wise not to permit Masonic Lodges to work in the West Indies, especially since the signs used by both the conspirators and the Masons in making themselves known to each other are very similar.

In 1871, the Spanish Masonic authorities decided to introduce Masonry into Porto Rico, though, as already shown, it had previously existed there since the beginning of the century. As a matter of fact, Senor Coll y Toste affirms that Lodges existed there as early as 1805. This agrees with the idea previously expressed that, in order to establish a Chapter of Rose Croix in San German, in 1824, Symbolic Lodges must previously have existed on the island.

In the Ritual of the Master Mason, which was approved by the Supreme Council of the 33° of the Grand Orient of Spain, occurs the following:

Various Porto Rican Brethren, who had been initiated in Madrid, in the Lodge Puritanos, under the jurisdiction of the Grand Orient of Spain, introduced Masonry into the island of Porto Rico in 1871.

As a matter of fact, in that year, under the direction of Don Manuel de Mendoza, the Grand Delegate of the National Orient of Spain, various Lodges were established in the island, one of these being the Aurora Lodge of Ponce, which suspended its labours in 1874 and, later, reorganized, incorporating under the United Grand Lodge of Cuba, which had legal Masonic authority in Porto Rico at the time, since the Lodges founded under other auspices had disappeared.

The Freemasons of the Spanish Orient have argued much over their jurisdiction in Porto Rico, but their own documents show that, when the National Grand Orient of Spain (at that time the Grand Orient of Spain did not exist), founded Lodges in Porto Rico, it was in 1871 and that Masonic Lodges had already existed there for more than fifty years.

Coll y Toste, in the work already cited, states :

Masonry gave good services in Porto Rico in 1852, also in 1850.

Although he does not state the nature of those services, it is known that the Lodges, at that time, as well as later, helped to unite men who had become separated on account of political opinions and provided means of defence and protection for those who were being persecuted by the government, who would have fallen into the hands of the authorities and died in prison if it had not been for this assistance.

Although the fact that the Grand Orient National of Spain had instituted Lodges in Porto Rico and that a large number of Spaniards had joined, should have removed the cloud of suspicion on the part of the government, this was not the case, for persecutions increased from day to day ; the Freemasons in the island could not work openly, but had to hold their Lodge meetings in secret places, generally in the country ; even thus, they did not escape entirely the persecutions of the authorities.

At that time there existed a Lodge in Mayaguez, named Conciliation, which worked under the Grand Orient of Spain. The meetings of this body were held in the house of Don Pedro Tolosa, a man whom no one could accuse of conspiring against the government. Among the members who were accustomed to gather there were Don Antonio Aramburn, a man of progressive and liberal ideas, who was Master of the Lodge ; Dr. Claudio Frederico Block, of Danish lineage, an enthusiastic Mason and a strong supporter of the Spanish government ; and others. One night, on leaving the Lodge, they found the chief of police and twenty-five men stationed around the place. The fact that a majority of them were Spanish and above suspicion, saved the situation, because the police did not dare to arrest anyone. In San German a Lodge named Prudencia, No. 28, was in session in April 1874, in a private house. It was the moment for the initiation of the candidate in the mysteries of Masonry, when a knocking was heard at the door, the civil guard entered and arrested those present, who were sentenced to terms of imprisonment. Some of the prominent Freemasons of the island undertook the defence of their Brethren and their pleas were published later in the Paris newspaper, Le Courrier de l'Europe, though no newspaper in Porto Rico dared to print them. This Paris publication began a campaign in favour of the imprisoned Freemasons and interested English Freemasons in the matter. No fewer than 1,700 English Lodges sent petitions to Lord Beaconsfield, who, using his influence and that of English Masons, succeeded in having the prisoners set free. As a sign of their gratitude, the Freemasons presented the editor of Le Courrier with a gold watch suitably inscribed.

In the meantime Lodges were also established in other parts of the island which had more or less the same experiences and difficulties as those already mentioned.

One of the best-known Freemasons of that period was Don Aristides Simon Pietri, of Ponce, who was several times elected Master of Aurora Lodge and reorganized that Lodge under the Grand Lodge of Cuba. He was the first to publish any Masonic literature in Porto Rico; in 1873, he published a work covering the first three Degrees, together with the funeral and baptismal ceremonies and the explanation of the origin of the symbols of those Degrees. He also published, in 1885, a book entitled Historical Résumé of Ancient and Modern Freemasonry.

By 1868, several other Lodges had been organized and were working. The attitude of the government had changed somewhat by this time and it is said that Lodges had even met in the governor's palace. The political changes of 1874-5, however, caused the suspension of all Masonic work in the island.

On October 11, 1884, on the initiative of Santiago R. Palmer, the Provisional Grand Lodge of Porto Rico was established by authorization of the Grand Lodge of Cuba, ten Lodges joining in the formation. In the following year it became a sovereign Grand Lodge, mainly through the efforts of Palmer, in the face of tremendous difficulties. It was strongly opposed by the Roman Catholic Church and the civil authorities. The members were said to have revolutionary tendencies and were refused Christian burial at death. Eventually Palmer was arrested and imprisoned in El Morro and it was not until the Prince of Wales (afterwards Edward VII) and other prominent European Masons interested themselves that tranquillity was restored and the Freemasons could meet without danger of arrest. In 1888 the Ley de Asociaciones was published, when the various Masonic Lodges registered themselves as legal societies. This law, however, gave the mayors of the various towns the right to attend the meetings of any of these societies thus registered, Masonic Lodges included and, although advantage was not generally taken of the permission—notwithstanding it was emphasized by a government order—except by Mayors who were Freemasons, many of the Lodges closed their doors in consequence. A general stoppage of Masonic work was ordered by the Grand Lodge on December 27, 1896, until April 2, 1899, when work was resumed and Palmer was re-elected Grand Master for the fifth time and remained in office until 1906, when he passed away and Antonio Cordero was appointed in his stead. Since that date Freemasonry in Porto Rico has gone from strength to strength and the latest return states that there are nearly forty Lodges on the island. A belief in God is demanded from all candidates and the Bible is displayed on the altars.

THE VIRGIN ISLANDS

This name is given to an extensive group of small islands lying between Porto Rico and the Lesser Antilles—Tortola, Virgin Gorda, St. Thomas, St. John,

Santa Cruz (or Sainte Croix), and Culebra—which has an area of only ten square miles. The islands changed hands very frequently up to 1815, when their political position was defined.

TORTOLA AND VIRGIN GORDA.—Lodges were established in these islands by the Antients in 1760 and 1763 and by the original or legitimate Grand Lodge of England—in 1765. Each of the three Lodges was continued in the Lists until the Union (1813), when they one and all disappeared.

SANTA CRUZ, or ST. CROIX.—A Lodge on this island, dating from 1756, obtained a temporary footing on the English roll in the Engraved List for 1758, as No. 224 and, ten years later, was advanced to a higher niche corresponding with its actual seniority, as No. 216. This was afterwards (in 1781) described as the Lodge of St. George and is shown in the Lists until 1814, but it apparently became subject to Danish Jurisdiction in 1776 and died out in 1788. John Ryan was appointed Provincial Grand Master under England in 1777, but no English Charter has since been granted to the Masons in Santa Cruz, though a Scottish Lodge—Eureka, No. 605—was erected at Christianstadt in 1877, but has since been erased.

ST. THOMAS.—A dispensation “to hold a Lodge for six months” was granted for this island, by the Grand Master of Pennsylvania, in 1792. Next comes La Concorde, borne on the register of the Grand Lodge of Denmark, 1798–1823, but whether of Danish or English origin there is no evidence to show. The Harmonic Lodge, No. 708, still in existence as No. 356, was founded by the Grand Lodge of England in 1818. After this, in the year 1855, came Les Cœurs Sincères, No. 141, under the Supreme Council for France. Not content, however, with these two Jurisdictions, some Masons on the island requested Andrew Cassard of New York to procure them a Warrant from the Supreme Council for the United States, Southern Jurisdiction, but, at his suggestion, they eventually applied to the Grand Lodge of Colon—at Santiago de Cuba—and were constituted as a Lodge—Star in the East—under the authority of that body by Cassard in 1871. But the Supreme Council for Colon claimed that as the Grand Orient had not met, the Grand Lodge was still “in recess” and, in 1872, passed a formal decree censuring Cassard for his action at St. Thomas. In the same year the members of Star in the East applied, though without success, to the Grand Master of South Carolina for a Dispensation to enable them to continue their labours, alleging that the other Lodges on the island would not recognize them, on the pretext that the Grand Lodge of Colon was not known to be in existence. In 1873, however, they were more fortunate, as a Charter and not merely a temporary Dispensation was granted them by the Grand Lodge of Louisiana—from which body the circumstance of a prior application having been made to the Grand Master of South Carolina had been carefully withheld. But the petitioners were in no better position than before, for they were neither recognized nor allowed to visit by the other Lodges of St. Thomas and the Warrant which had been so imprudently granted by the Grand Lodge of Louisiana was at once withdrawn when the actual circumstances of the case were brought to the notice of that body.

THE LESSER ANTILLES, OR CARIBBEE ISLANDS

ANTIGUA.—The earliest Lodges in the West Indies were established in this island, which is the most important of the Leeward group. No fewer than three holding English Warrants were in existence in 1739 and a fourth is said to have been established in the previous year by the authority of the Provincial Grand Master for New England. A little later the Freemasons in the colony built a large hall for their meetings and applied to the Grand Lodge of England for permission to style one of their Lodges (No. 192), the Great Lodge at St. John's in Antigua, which favour was granted to them in April 1744.

The Leeward Islands were constituted a Province under England in 1738 and, under Scotland, in 1769. The first Scottish Lodge in the Lesser Antilles was erected in the latter year at St. Kitts, by which name the Province was designated in 1786. But in 1792, the old title—Leeward Caribbee Islands—was restored, again altered in 1837 on the appointment of Dr. Stephenson of Grenada, to be Provincial Grand Master of the Province comprehending the Caribbee Islands. Lieut.-General James Adolphus Oughton was appointed Lieut.-Governor of Antigua, December 18, 1772, but the presence on the island of a former Grand Master of Scotland was destitute of any Masonic result, as the earliest Scottish Lodge in the colony was not established until 1787. The only Lodges since erected are the two now existing, both of which are on the roll of the Grand Lodge of England, No. 492, St. John's and No. 2829, Caribbee.

The following extract from a long-forgotten work will show the exceptional difficulties against which the European residents in the West Indies had to contend and may serve to excite surprise—not that more Lodges were not constituted, but that any survived at all in the pestilential climate where the Lodge work had to be carried on. According to this authority :

The 68th regiment was sent to Antigua in 1805, with its ranks sadly reduced by the climate. It had arrived in the West Indies about five years before, with two battalions each 1,200 strong ; and I have understood from their officers that they had buried in those five years 2,400 men and 68 officers—the regiment had, of course, received repeated drafts of men from England during that period (Lieut.-Colonel J. Leech, Rough Sketches of the Life of an Old Soldier, 1831, p. 18).

BARBADOES.—Masonry was early established in this the chief of the Windward Islands and the residence of the Governor-General of the group. It was constituted a Masonic Province in 1740 and, in the same year, the first of a long series of Lodges under the Grand Lodge of England came into existence. None of these, however, was carried forward on the Union roll in 1814, though one—No. 186, St. Michael's Lodge—was, a few years later, restored to the List, but again left out at the next change of numbers (1832), to be a second time restored (1841) and finally erased, March 5, 1862. It is singular that the first five Lodges established in Barbadoes bore saintly appellatives.

Three Lodges were warranted in the colony by the Grand Lodge of Ireland in the eighteenth century and there was a Provincial Grand Lodge in existence in 1804, but this having become a lapsed Jurisdiction, its further consideration may be dispensed with.

The Atholl or Antient Masons obtained a footing on the island in 1790 and a Lodge constituted in that year still exists. Three others were afterwards erected but, though carried forward at the Union, were dropped out at the change of numbers in 1832.

The Grand Lodge of Scotland is now represented in the colony by three Lodges, the first—Scotia, No. 340—chartered in 1799; the others being Thistle, No. 1014 and St. John's, 1062.

CURAÇOA.—Lodges under the Grand Lodge of Holland appear to have been established on the island in 1757, 1773 and 1787—L'Amitié, L'Union and De Vergenoeging. In 1807 it was taken by the English, but restored to the Dutch in 1815. During the British occupation, Nos. 346, Union and 627, Content and British Union, were warranted in 1810 and 1811 by the Atholl and Original Grand Lodges of England respectively. Both were carried forward at the Union, but are now extinct, the latter not surviving the closing up of numbers in 1832, the former being struck off the roll, March 5, 1862. The close resemblance between the names of the early Dutch and English Lodges might almost suggest that in some instances there was a divided or dual allegiance.

DOMINICA.—The Lodge of Good Friends was formed at Roseau by the Grand Lodge of England in 1773. In the same year a Warrant was granted (though not issued) for the Colony by the Atholl Masons and, in 1785, a second, under which a Lodge was constituted, also at the capital, Roseau. But neither of the bodies thus established survived the union of the two societies, which is not to be wondered at when it is remembered that the island was captured by the French in 1778, restored to England in 1783, again surrendered to France in 1802 and finally received back as a British possession in 1814. A revival took place in 1823, when the Lodge of Chosen Friends, No. 777, was established, which remained on the roll until swept away—in company with eighty-eight other foreign or colonial Lodges—by order of the Grand Lodge of England, March 5, 1862.

GRENADA.—In 1763—October 8—Brigadier-General Robert Melville was appointed Governor of Dominica. Grenada, the Grenadines, St. Vincent and Tobago were included in his government—a new one—which was styled that of Grenada. This officer received three patents as Provincial Grand Master—(1) for Guadeloupe—when Lieutenant-Governor of Fort Royal on that island, Lieut.-Colonel 38th Foot, 1759–62; (2) for the Caribbee and Windward Islands, 1764; and (3) for Grenada, 1780. The year following Melville's appointment to this new government, Lodges were formed on the island by the Grand Lodges of England and France. Three in all were constituted under the former, two under the latter Jurisdiction in the last century; whilst the Atholl Masons, who were five years later in obtaining a footing in the colony, chartered one military and two stationary Lodges within the same period.

Masonic Temple, Bridgetown, Barbados.

Home of Albion Lodge, organized 1790, the oldest lodge in the West Indies.

None of the English Lodges was carried forward at the Union and the next evidence of Masonic activity is presented by the erection of an Irish Lodge—No. 252—in 1819, which, however, surrendered its Warrant in 1825, another of later constitution—No. 224, formed 1848—has also ceased to work.

Scotland was next in the field (1820) and four Lodges have been warranted under that Jurisdiction, the three latest of which are in existence at this day. A year later (1821) the Masonry of England was again represented and, shortly afterwards, by a second Lodge, but both the bodies thus constituted are now extinct, G. G. Munro was appointed Provincial Grand Master under the same sanction in 1825 and Felix Palmer in 1831.

The latest foreign Jurisdiction by which the colony was invaded would appear to have been that of the Grand Orient of France, if by Grenade we are to understand Grenada, where a Lodge—La Bienfaisance—was established December 21, 1828.

GUADELOUPE.—In this, the chief West Indian possession of France and its dependency Marie-Galante, the following Lodges are shown in the lists as having been constituted by the Grand Lodge or Grand Orient of France: Antigua, 1766; La Vraie Fraternité (Marie-Galante) and St. Jean d'Ecosse, 1768; La Bonne Amitié and L'Humanité, 1770; St. Louis de la Concorde, 1772; La Paix, 1784; Les Philalèthes [under a Warrant from the Mother Lodge of the Scots Philosophic Rite], 1806; L'Amenité, 1807; La Fraternité (Marie-Galante), 1829; Les Disciples d'Hiram, 1835; and Les Elus D'Occident, 1862. The Lodges still existing are shown in italics, the two of earliest date being at Pointe-à-Pitre, the remaining one at Basse-Terre.

Although Guadeloupe was in the hands of the English, 1759–63, again occupied by them in 1813 and 1815 this—as already related—was attended by no other Masonic result than the grant of a Provincial Patent to Lieut.-Colonel Melville, one of the officers of the British garrison, 1759–62.

MARTINIQUE.—Masonry, in this magnificent island, appears to have been introduced almost as early as in France itself. Thus, by the Grand Orient, or by the several Grand Bodies which preceded it, we find there were chartered—La Parfaite Union, 1738; St. Pierre des Frères Unis, 1760; La Tendre Fraternité, 1765; La Sincérité des Cœurs, 1777; Les Frères Choisis, 1781; Le Zèle et la Bienfaisance, La Parfaite Amitié and La Paix (au Marin), 1786.

From 1794 to 1802 and, again, 1809–15, the island was in the possession of the English. During the first period a Lodge was established under the Grand Lodge of Ireland—No. 690, in 1801; and, during the second, another under the Antients—No. 359, Lodge of Chosen Friends, 1813. The former of these was transferred to Trinidad, 1811 and cancelled 1858. The latter, which bore the last number issued by the Antients, was carried forward on the Union roll, but died out before the year 1832.

The later Lodges constituted by the Grand Orient of France were L'Harmonie, 1803; Les Frères Choisis, 1814; La Concorde, 1820; and La Bienfaisance, 1821.

MONTSERRAT AND NEVIS.—Although the earliest Lodges in the West Indies sprang up with a luxuriant growth in Antigua, to Montserrat belongs the distinction of having been constituted the first Masonic Province either in the Greater or the Lesser Antilles. This occurred in 1737 during the administration of the Earl of Darnley; and, thirty years later, December 2, 1767, a Provincial Grand Lodge for Montserrat and Nevis—No. 151—was set up by the Atholl (or Antient) Masons. Up to this time, however, there appears to have been no Lodge on either island; but in 1777 one was erected—No. 507—at Nevis by the original Grand Lodge of England; whilst the Evangelists' Lodge, established at Antigua in 1753, shifted its place of meeting to Montserrat shortly before 1780. These two Lodges were continued in the Lists of the older Society until the Union, when they disappeared and, apparently, no others have since been in existence in either island.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW.—A Lodge—Sudermania—under the Grand Lodge of Sweden, existed on this island from 1797 to 1820.

ST. CHRISTOPHER, or ST. KITTS.—Four Lodges were warranted in this colony by the Grand Lodge of England in the eighteenth century. The first in 1739, the last in 1768. The latter did not survive the change of numbers in 1770, but all the other Lodges were carried forward until the Union and one—the Clarence, originally No. 206—only disappeared at the renumbering in 1832, though a Lodge of the same name was warranted on the island in the following year—which lived until 1865—and may have been a revival. A Provincial Grand Master was appointed, January 27, 1798, a second, the Hon. John Garnett, November 23, 1808.

A Scottish Lodge was erected on the island in 1769, others in 1786 and 1791. These are now extinct; also a fourth, No. 407, Mount of Olives, 1835. During the years 1786–92 the island was the seat of the Scottish West Indian Province.

ST. EUSTATIUS.—Masonry in this island appears to have increased pari passu with its material prosperity. Three English and four Dutch Lodges were at work during the eighteenth century, the earliest of the former having been erected in 1747, of the latter in 1757. Edward Galliard was appointed Provincial Grand Master of St. Eustatius and the Dutch Caribbee islands by the Grand Lodge of England in 1754–5; and R. H. de Plessis held a similar commission—extending over St. Eustatius, Saba and St. Martin—under the Grand Lodge of Holland in 1777.

The settlement was taken by the British, February 3, 1781. All the merchandise and stores were confiscated, the naval and military commanders—Admiral Rodney and General Vaughan—considering it their duty “to seize for the public use, all the effects of an island inhabited by rebellious Americans and their agents, disaffected British factors, who, for base and lucrative motives, were the great supporters of the American rebellion.” At that time, except for warlike stores, St. Eustatius had become one of the greatest auctions that ever was opened in the universe. “Invitation was given,” says Southey “and protection offered to purchasers of all nations and of all sorts” (History of the West Indies, vol. ii, pp. 484, 492).

The English Lodges continued to appear in the Lists until the Union, but were probably extinct for many years before that period. In 1813, it must be added, a Lodge—No. 30—was established in the settlement by the Atholl Grand Lodge, but this, like the others, failed to secure a place on the Union roll.

At the general peace the island was finally ceded to Holland and some of the Dutch Lodges survived until within recent memory. It is possible, also, that others may have been established, of which no record has been preserved. At present there are no Lodges on the island.

ST. LUCIA.—Two Lodges, Le Choix Réuni and L'Harmonie Fraternelle, were established by the Grand Orient of France in 1784. In 1814 the island was ceded to England, under whose sanction a Lodge—No. 762—was formed in 1845 and erased in 1862.

ST. MARTIN.—There are at present no Lodges either in the settlements of the French or the Dutch, between whom the island is divided; but one was formerly in existence—Unie, No. 3, under the Grand Lodge of the Netherlands—constituted in 1800.

ST. VINCENT.—An Irish Warrant—No. 733—was granted to some Brethren in this dependency in 1806, which was surrendered in 1824. Two Lodges were afterwards established by the Grand Lodge of England, but are now extinct.

TOBAGO.—A Scottish Lodge—No. 488—was erected at Scarborough, the capital, in 1868.

TRINIDAD.—A Charter was granted—No. 77, Les Frères Unis—by the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania in 1798, to some Brethren at Port D'Espagne, who had formerly been members of a Lodge at St. Lucia, under a Warrant from France. After this, in 1811, No. 690, under the Grand Lodge of Ireland, was transferred from Martinique to Trinidad, but passed out of existence in 1858. Scottish Masonry obtained a footing in 1813 and there are now five Lodges in all under that Jurisdiction, which form the present Province. The first English Lodge on the island had its origin in 1831. This was followed by four other Warrants from the oldest of Grand Bodies and four Lodges are in existence at this day, viz. Royal Philanthropic, No. 405, that founded in 1831; Royal Prince of Wales, No. 867, founded in 1861; Royal Connaught, No. 3266, founded in 1907; and St. Andrew, No. 3963, founded in 1919. In 1923 a handsome Masonic Temple was built in Alexandra Street, St. Clair, Port of Spain, for the Royal Prince of Wales Lodge, on a site presented by George Frederick Huggins, Master of the Lodge in 1902 and again in 1923. There are no English Royal Arch Chapters in Trinidad, but there are three under the Scottish Constitution. The first Royal Chapter in Trinidad was warranted in 1804 by the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, which then exercised powers over Royal Arch Masonry. The second Chapter was founded in 1814, by the Royal Grand Conclave of Scotland, under H.R.H. the Duke of Kent. The third was started in 1822 and was known as the Jerusalem Royal Arch Chapter. It was working in 1836, but there are no records of movements later than this. The previous foundations have also ceased to exist. There was formerly a Chapter attached to the Royal Philanthropic Lodge, No. 405, under the English Constitution, but it had ceased functioning in 1876. Another was formed in connexion with the Royal Prince of Wales's Lodge. No. 867, in 1875, was dormant for thirteen years, revived in 1896 and finally ceased to function in 1904. The Chapters at work to-day under the Scottish Constitution are Trinidad Kilwinning, No. 126, established in 1868, dormant twice, for seven and twelve years respectively, but revived in 1906, since which time it has been in active operation; Harmony, No. 184, established in 1880, which also was dormant for eight years in three periods; the King's, No. 314, is the largest numerically and the most vigorous and active Chapter in the island; and Unity, No. 610, which is in a large measure identified with the Brethren of Lodge Arima, No. 899, Scottish Constitution.

Trinidad became a Province under the Grand Lodge of England in 1860, but ceased to be one in 1876.

THE LUCAYAS, OR BAHAMA ISLANDS

The Masonic history of this group begins with the appointment of Governor John Tinkler as Provincial Grand Master in 1752, who was succeeded by James Bradford in 1759. But they had apparently no Lodges to control, neither do we hear of any having been established either before or after under the Jurisdiction of which they were the representatives, viz. the Grand Lodge of England.

In 1785, however, a Warrant for the Bahamas—No. 228—was issued by the Atholl Grand Lodge of England. The Lodge thus established died out before the Union, but a second—No. 242—under the same Jurisdiction, established at Nassau, New Providence, in 1787, survived the closing up of numbers in 1814, though its vitality was exhausted before the repetition of that process in 1832.

A Scottish Lodge was erected at Turk's Island in 1803, now extinct, but others were formed in New Providence and Inagua in 1809 and 1856 respectively.

Lodges under the United Grand Lodge of England were established at Nassau, 1837 (still in existence as the Royal Victoria, No. 443); at Grand Turk, 1855 (now Turk's Island Fort, No. 647); and at Harbour Island in 1869, no longer in existence. The first and last of these formed part of the District of the Bahamas and places adjacent, formed in 1752, but this District is no longer in working and the first two Lodges are responsible directly to the United Grand Lodge of England.

THE BERMUDAS, OR SOMERS ISLANDS

This group, like the Bahamas, was provided with a Provincial Grand Master long before there were Lodges for him to supervise. Alured Popple received a patent as such from Lord Strathmore in 1744 and William Popple was similarly commissioned during the administration of the Earl of Aberdour (1758-62). The first Lodge under the older (English) sanction was formed in 1761 and the second in 1792. Five years later (1797) the Antients gained a footing and, in 1801, possessed like their rivals, two Lodges. At the Union, however, the former succumbed to destiny, whilst the latter were carried forward and still survive. The Lodge founded in 1797, is known now as the Atlantic Phœnix, No. 224—it has a Royal Arch Chapter attached; that founded in 1801, also under the Antients, is working as the Prince Alfred, No. 233. In 1819, Loyalty Lodge, No. 712 (now 358) was founded and, in 1880, Broad Arrow, No. 1890, thus making a total of four, which report direct to the Grand Lodge of England, as the succession of Provincial Grand Masters ceased with the appointment of William Popple in 1758–62. In 1928, however, a Grand Inspector was appointed, so that in all probability Bermuda may, again, become a District.

Lodge St. George—No. 266 (now No. 200)—under the Grand Lodge of Scotland was erected in 1797 and the Bermudas became a Scottish Province in 1803. This was followed, however, by no increase of Lodges until 1885, when a Warrant was issued to No. 726 (Lodge Civil and Military), which, with St. George, forms the thirty-fourth Province on the roll of Scotland, though there is now no Provincial or District Grand Master.

Three Irish Lodges have been established at St. George's Island: No. 220 in 1856 (Warrant surrendered in 1860); No. 224 in 1867, still in existence; and No. 209 in 1881 (no longer on the register). There are two now working at Hamilton, Bermuda; No. 123, founded in 1908 and No. 580, founded in 1924.

CHAPTER V

FREEMASONRY IN SOUTH AMERICA

THE Minutes of the Grand Lodge of England inform us, that Randolph Tooke, Provincial Grand Master for South America, was present at a meeting of that body held April 17, 1735. Of that worthy nothing further is known beyond the bare fact that, in 1731, his name appears on the roll of Lodge No. 19, at the Queen's Arms, Newgate Street, London, of which two persons holding similar appointments—Richard Hull and Ralph Farwinter—together with Sir William Keith, Ex-Governor of Pennsylvania and Benjamin Cole, afterwards Engraver to the Society, were also members.

The next Provincial Grand Master who received an English patent empowering him to exercise Masonic jurisdiction over any part of South America, was Colonel James Hamilton, who was placed at the head of the Province of Colombia in 1824. Political changes of subsequent years left their mark on the nomenclature of the existing States of the continent. New Granada, like all the adjacent portions of the New World, was for some centuries a colony of Spain. Upon the assertion of their independence by the Provinces of Spanish America, in the early part of the last century, it formed, with Ecuador and Venezuela, the Republic of Colombia. In 1831, each of the three States became autonomous and, in 1857, New Granada assumed the title of the United States of Colombia. The other parties, however, to the Federal Union, which was dissolved in 1831—Ecuador and Venezuela—adhered to their original appellations. This it is necessary to bear in mind, because whilst a Scottish, as well as an English, Masonic Province of Colombia was created during the existence of the earlier republic of that name, the two Lodges under these Jurisdictions were established at Angostura in Venezuela. The first Provincial Grand Master under Scotland, Don José Gabriel Nunez, the date of whose appointment is not recorded, was succeeded—May 6, 1850—by Señor Florentino Grillet and, on February 3, 1851, the designation of the Province was changed from Colombia to that of Guayana in Venezuela.

The evidence, therefore, so far as it extends, points to Venezuela, rather than New Granada, as having been the centre of Masonic activity—at least, in the first instance—while they were both component parts of the (older) Republic of Colombia.

There was in existence a Grand Orient of Colombia at Bogota in New Granada, shortly after the time when the two Lodges were established at Angostura, under British Warrants. The exact date of formation of this body it is not easy to determine. One of the two Grand Orients of what was formerly New Granada, but is now Colombia, which meets at Bogota, claims 1827 as its year of origin; while there is independent evidence of the exercise of authority in Peru, by a Grand Orient of Colombia at Bogota, in 1825. On the whole, the explanation which seems the most reasonable is, that the Grand Orient of 1827, was preceded by a Supreme Council, armed with, or at all events, exercising, the same authority as the hydra-headed organization of later date.

VENEZUELA

It was in 1865 there was formed the National Grand Orient of Venezuela. Judge Street quotes Gould as saying in 1886 that "The Grand Orient is divided into a Grand Lodge, Grand Chapter, Grand Consistory, and a Supreme Council, each having its own chief and possessing entire authority over its own Degrees."

In 1916 the Grand Orient voluntarily dissolved, there being formed from it a Scottish Rite Supreme Council, as well as a Grand Lodge of Symbolic Masonry, which called itself "The Grand Lodge of the United States of Venezuela." Each proclaimed itself completely independent and autonomous in its own part of the Masonry of Venezuela. It is expressly declared by agreement between the bodies that "The Grand Lodge of the United States of Venezuela is the Supreme Masonic authority of Symbolic Masonry in Venezuela," being made up of Delegates elected by the Lodges.

In 1921, possibly remembering the withdrawal of certain Lodges from the Grand Lodge in two separated sections to form organisations of their own, the Scottish Rite Supreme Council promulgated, as a part of its decrees, the following:

The Grand Lodge of the United States of Venezuela governs independently, as it has heretofore done, the first three degrees, or, in other words, the Symbolic Order of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite: and, therefore, it exercises the prerogatives which Article 19 of the present Constitution concedes to it as well as the powers and dignities inherent in its high Masonic authority, without the Supreme Council or any of the bodies of its dependence having any right to interfere in its deliberations.

While there is a close tie of friendship between Grand Lodge and Supreme Council, we do not believe, and indeed there is no reason for believing, that there is any insincerity in the decree quoted above.

The Lodges which withdrew formed a "sovereign Grand Lodge" of "Free and Accepted Masons of Venezuela," at Caracas, with seven Lodges; and the next year, 1919, three more formed the "Symbolic Grand Lodge of the East." Both of these are independent of the Scottish Rite.

Judge Street makes the following illuminating comment on the history of Masonry in Venezuela:

This Grand Lodge is entirely independent and works only the first three degrees. It exacts a belief in Deity and requires the display of the Bible on the altar.

This Grand Lodge and the Sovereign Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons of Venezuela, above, recognise each other and are in fraternal correspondence. It does not however, recognise the Grand Lodge of the United States of Venezuela, claiming that the latter is under the domination of the Supreme Council of the Scottish Rite.

At first blush, these eruptions in the Masonry of Venezuela appear discouraging, but after more mature consideration we conclude that they are manifestations of a desire and purpose on the part of the Masons of that country to liberate Blue or Symbolic Masonry from the dominion of the Scottish Rite. All North American Masons should be in sympathy with these movements, as we know how very beneficial such separation and independence have proved to both Rites wherever they have been put into full operation.

It must be remembered that Venezuela, like our own country, is composed of a number of States, in either one of which theoretically, under Masonic law, there might be a separate Grand Lodge. The presence of three separate Grand Lodges in that country does not involve a violation of the wholesome doctrine of exclusive territorial jurisdiction. On the whole we consider the outlook for independent Symbolic Masonry in Venezuela as rather favorable, though we are not prepared to recommend recognition at this time.

The following is the basis of recognition of the Grand Lodge of the United States of Venezuela by the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts:

(From Proceedings of the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts, 1921, p. 438)

M.: W.: Melvin M. Johnson, Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Grand Lodges, presented the following report:

In Grand Lodge, Boston, December 14, 1921.

To the Most Worshipful Grand Master, Wardens and Members of the Grand Lodge:

Your Committee on Foreign Relations begs leave at this time to report concerning Masonic conditions in Venezuela.

About a year ago our Most Worshipful Grand Master received a fraternal communication from Enrique Doval Castillo, Grand Master of the body known as "Gran Logia de los Estados Unidos de Venezuela," seeking an exchange of fraternal representatives. This is a custom which Massachusetts Masonry has not adopted, for which reason we cannot grant the request in terms. Inasmuch, however, as we have never officially recognised this body as a Grand Lodge, your Committee treats the communication as a request for recognition. At least it brings this Grand Lodge to our attention and calls for a determination upon our part whether or not it should be recognised. Much time and correspondence have been required to make a full investigation.

The investigation discloses that there are two bodies now claiming jurisdiction over symbolic Masonry in Venezuela namely (1) "Gran Logis de los Estados Unidos de Venezuela," which being translated is "The Grand Lodge of

Simon Bolivar, Known as "The Liberator."

In 1828 he issued a decree by which he prohibited meetings of all secret societies, including Masonic Lodges, in Venezuela.

the United States of Venezuela," and which will hereinafter be referred to as the "Grand Lodge of Venezuela," and (2) "Gran Logia Soberano de Libresey Aceptados Masone's de Venezuela," which being translated is "The Sovereign Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons of Venezuela." For convenience the latter will hereinafter be referred to as the "Schismatic Grand Lodge." The Grand Lodge which is recognised by England and which also finds place in the Swiss Year Book is the Schismatic Grand Lodge. The other body, however, is generally recognised throughout South and Central America.

HISTORY

Venezuelan Masonry has passed through many vicissitudes of war and rebellion which have been responsible for the destruction of its earlier archives. Enough remains to give every indication of probability to the traditions. Through tradition, coupled with more or less authentic fact, we learn that Venezuelan Masonry had its origin from Spain, which in turn received it from England in 1726. The Spanish Lodges worked under the jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of England until 1779, at which date a local governing body was formed. This latter was severely persecuted by the Inquisition, but notwithstanding continued to work, and in 1809 three Lodges formed the National Grand Lodge of Spain, which body, so reports state, celebrated its sessions in the very same place in which the Inquisition formerly held forth.

In 1808 Masonry was introduced into Venezuela from Spain. In 1811 the National Grand Lodge of Spain changed its title to the Grand Orient of Spain and the Indies and under the jurisdiction of this body Lodges were working at that date in Venezuela.

From 1813 to 1820 the Grand Orient was inactive, this being the period following the French invasion of Spain when the Bourbons returned to power and all liberals were severely persecuted, a persecution ending with the Revolution of 1820. Beginning also in 1811 the movement for independence from Spain was initiated in Venezuela. Naturally the local Masonry was thrown into confusion.

Notwithstanding the trials and tribulations through which Masonry was passing, a governing body was formed in 1824 which referred to itself as the Grand Lodge with the name of "Grand Orient of Venezuela."

On November 8, 1828, the great liberator, Simon Bolivar (who, according to report, was a Master Mason), issued a decree by which he prohibited meetings of all secret societies including Masonic Lodges. Bolivar died in 1830 and Masonry again began to work openly. Many Lodges were founded. Among them one, according to tradition, was constituted by the Grand Lodge of Maryland.

In the same year, 1830, Venezuela became an independent State. In 1835 the Grand Lodge of the United States of Venezuela was formed. It has existed uninterruptedly ever since, and it is this body which has applied to us for an exchange of representatives.

This Grand Lodge of Venezuela has been since its start the sovereign governing organisation of Symbolic Masonry in Venezuela. It has ruled and governed the Craft under its jurisdiction without acknowledgement of or submission to higher authority. It has always been composed of delegates elected by the Lodges, and these in turn have elected the Grand Officers. Its decrees and statutes have always been promulgated in the name of the Grand Lodge and have not been attested by the Supreme Council as has been the case in so many Latin jurisdictions. Indeed the Supreme Council of Venezuela was not established until 1840.

At one time or another for the purpose of preserving the continuity of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite, the Grand Lodge of Venezuela has confederated itself with the Supreme Council, but it has never united with or become a part of the Supreme Council. This position is in a way analagous to the recognition of the Supreme Council by many of the Grand Lodges of the United States including Massachusetts. The Grand Lodge, however, has not at any time yielded its sovereignty to the Supreme Council.

In 1851 there were sixty Lodges under the Grand Lodge of Venezuela, but in that year there was a schism. Forty-three Lodges remained faithful; thirteen joined schismatic Grand Lodge. In 1865 the schism was healed and schismatic Lodges returned to the obedience of the Mother Grand Lodge.

In 1882 the Supreme Council attempted to place itself at the head of a symbolic Masonry in Venezuela. The Grand Lodge refused to enter into any such agreement and so successfully maintained its own sovereignty that in 1884 the Supreme Council receded from its position and a new constitution was promulgated. In 1916 the constitution was revised. Article 19 of this constitution provides that "The Grand Lodge of the United States of Venezuela is the Supreme Masonic authority over the symbolic degrees and it is constituted by elected representatives named by the Lodges in the manner laid down in the statutes."

In 1918 a difference of opinion arose over internal matters. There was a certain amount of money in the Treasury of the Grand Lodge dedicated to a certain purpose. Being short of funds at the time, the Grand Lodges voted to borrow from this fund. This action in Venezuela met with the disapproval of certain of the prominent members of the Grand Lodge with the result that they withdrew and formed a schismatic Grand Lodge, upon which the Schismatic Lodge immediately made the claim that the Grand Lodge of Venezuela was not a sovereign and independent body but was rather dependent upon the Supreme Council and as such not entitled to rank as a Grand Lodge. The documents in evidence, however, seem to show conclusively that such a claim is not sound and that the Grand Lodge of Venezuela has always been sovereign and independent in Symbolic Masonry. While it is true that the Grand Lodge had entered into an agreement of confederation with the Supreme Council, such a confederation is amply proved to have been solely for the preservation of the Rite as a whole, and was not a yielding up of the powers of the Grand Lodge. Shortly after the schism the Grand Lodge repaid the money which it borrowed, above referred to, but whatever may have been done in this regard, it was only an internal matter of business administration. It was done by a majority vote of the Grand Lodge. It did not authorise a schism and it has no interest to any outside jurisdiction. It is mentioned here only to show the starting point of the present schism.

On March 15, 1921, the Supreme Council of Venezuela passed a resolution setting forth that the Grand Lodge of Venezuela has always been the supreme governing power in Symbolic Masonry, that the Supreme Council will not act in any way or manner with the Grand Lodge and that the Supreme Council recognises and concedes that now, as formerly, the Grand Lodge is the only authority of any kind in Symbolic Masonry. In other words, in order to clear up any misunderstanding as to the former agreement between the Grand Lodge and the Supreme Council, the Supreme Council now has formally and publicly acknowledged the absolute and complete autonomy of the Grand Lodge of Venezuela.

RITUAL

The Ritual of the Grand Lodge of Venezuela is that of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite. It does not pledge allegiance to any body other than the Grand Lodge, however. It is as truly Masonic, and it adheres as closely to the Ancient Landmarks and customs of the Craft as many of our own Grand Lodges. It is far closer to the working of the Grand Lodge of England and Scotland than many of our Rituals in the United States. The difference is mainly in the lectures. There is an absence of the innovations which Preston and Webb made in the English working.

We have filed in the Grand Secretary's office documents verifying the major statements hereinbefore made, viz.:

- a.* A resumé of the Masonic History of Venezuela.
- b.* Historical Masonic documents of the year 1842.
- c.* A copy of the Masonic constitution of the confederated Grand Lodge and bodies of the Supreme Council for the year 1884. This confederation was known as the Grand Orient and therefore, perhaps, it is wise to point out certain of the provisions. Article 10 is as follows:

"The Symbolic Order is composed of all the Symbolic Lodges already established, or which may be established under the jurisdiction of the Most Worshipful Grand Lodge in the jurisdiction of the National Grand Orient."

Article 17 defines the functions of the Grand Lodge:

"The attributes of the Most Worshipful Grand Lodge are:

1. To legislate with absolute authority in all that concerns the Symbolic Order, making such statutes, regulations, resolutions and reports as may be judged necessary for the successful advance of the Lodges of its dependence, in conformity with the general principles stated in this Constitution.
4. To sanction the rituals for all the workings of the Symbolic Lodges."

The above seem to us to be sufficient to show the authority of the Grand Lodge.

d. The 1916 edition of the Masonic Constitutions of the Grand Lodge of the United States of Venezuela. Annexed to it is a declaration and appeal by Grand Master A. Benchetiy to all the Lodges and Masons within his jurisdiction.

The Grand Orient underwent substantial alterations on July 26, 1893, but the so-called Grand Lodge remained subordinate to the Scottish Rite bodies. The Grand Orient continued in this form until August 18, 1916, when it voluntarily dissolved and out of its fragments was formed a Supreme Council of the Scottish, and a Grand Lodge of Symbolic Masonry under the name "The Grand Lodge of the United States of Venezuela," with seat at Caracas. These two bodies, thereupon, by mutual consent announced that each was sovereign and independent of the other within their respective spheres. Latest statistics give the Grand Lodge 9 Lodges and 250 members. Address Sus. 5, No. 78, Caracas.

On December 4, 1916, the Supreme Council and the Grand Lodge con-jointly adopted the "Masonic Constitutions of the United States of Venezuela," "Pact of Confederation," in the caption of which they are referred to as "United Constituent Bodies of Freemasonry" in Venezuela. In Article 19, it is declared that "the Grand Lodge of the United States of Venezuela is the Supreme Masonic authority of Symbolic Masonry" and that it is composed of delegates elected by the Lodges. Article 25 further says:

The Supreme Council and the Grand Lodge are under duty of mutually protecting, supporting and assisting each other by every legal means within their power in every case in which the general interests of the Institution require it, respecting as between themselves their respective jurisdictions, thereby recognising each other as Masonic Powers sovereign and independent in their respective Orders.

On January 9, 1921, the Supreme Council issued the following decree:

In view of the Grand Circular of the Grand Lodge of the United States of Venezuela of date the 4th day of the present month and having heard the conclusions of the Grand Minister of State, and in conformity with Article VI of the Grand Constitutions of 1786, the organic law of the Rite,

IT IS DECREED,

Art. I. The Grand Lodge of the United States of Venezuela governs independently, as it has heretofore done, the first three degrees, or, in other words, the Symbolic Order of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite: and therefore, it exercises the prerogatives which Article 19 of the present Constituent concedes to it as well as the powers and dignities inherent in its high Masonic authority, without the Supreme Council or any of the bodies of its dependence having any right to interfere in its deliberations.

COLUMBIA, FORMERLY NEW GRANADA

The Grand Orient of New Granada was formed at Carthagena on June 19, 1833. On July 11, 1851, the Grand Orient of France passed unanimously the following resolutions:

1. That a body of Masons, having founded in the Valley of Carthagena in the Republic of New Granada in 1833 under the title of the Grand Orient and Supreme Council of New Granada for the purpose of exercising the Scottish Rite of Ancient and Accepted Masonry;
2. That that authority has advised its existence and formation to all Masonic bodies and, in particular, to the Grand Orient of France, which has acknowledged receipt of its communication and invited that body to make known its titles and constitution;
3. That, according to its documents that have been received and deposited in the archives of the Grand Orient of France, proves that the Grand Orient and Supreme Council of New Granada has been founded like all Supreme Councils and, in virtue of such rights, according to the Grand Constitution of 1786, attributes to Frederick II of Prussia, the constitution of Lodges, Chapters, Councils, Areopagos, Tribunals and Consistories, exercising the work of the Ancient and Accepted Rite;

4. That the above authority has decreed a new Masonic Constitution on August 4, 1849 and the Grand Orient of France declares the Supreme Council of New Granada to be a legal Constitution from April 19, 1833 with the right to exercise jurisdiction over all the territory of New Granada.

The Supreme Council had been exercising its rights uninterruptedly, during its existence, over what was then known as the Republic of New Granada, which consisted of the Republics of Colombia, Venezuela and Ecuador. As these Republics formed themselves into distinct nations, they each formed its own Supreme Council, leaving Colombia with the title of New Granada, now known as the Republic of Colombia.

In May 1864, General T. C. Mosquera, Valero F. de Barriga and Francisco Villal formed a Grand Central Orient of Colombia, with the object of controlling Freemasonry in the southern part of the Republic, with Bogota as the capital. They argued that, owing to the lack of communication with the several towns in the interior of the Republic, there was justification for another Supreme Council. The Supreme Council of Colombia protested and declared the new body to be illegally formed and the two Supreme Councils of the United States declared it to be illegal. The new Supreme Council, however, continued on its way, partly owing to the fact that General Mosquera was the President of the Republic, although his opponents declared that he was not a member of the 33°. In 1871 Juan de Dios Riomalo succeeded Mosquera as Grand Master.

In 1860 the original body had nineteen Lodges on its roll, among them being Lodge La Mas Solida Virtus at Jamaica. Francisco de Zubirias was Grand Master in 1865 and Juan Manuel Grau in 1871. Four years later—according to the somewhat fragmentary evidence available—the latter appears to have given way to, or to have been superseded by, Juan N. Pombo, whose name is shown in the Calendars as Grand Master from 1875 to 1878. In 1879, however, the name of Juan M. Grau again figures in the lists, whilst that of Juan N. Pombo disappears. Full details are given in the Calendars with regard to the Masonic dignitaries of Colombia during the supremacy of either; and, as Grau is not mentioned, whilst Pombo was uppermost, and vice versa, it is probable—considering the manner in which Masonry and politics blend together in the Spanish Republics—that they were rival candidates for power in more ways than one.

Apparently the two bodies patched up their differences for, in 1879, Juan M. Grau was at the head of both, with the title of Sovereign Grand Commander and Sublime Grand Master of the Order. The Secretary General (or Grand Secretary) was also for a time the same for the two bodies, though there was always a separate Lieutenant Grand Commander (or Deputy Grand Master) at Carthagen and Bogota. In 1883, Leon Echeverria was elected Grand Master of the Order, an office which he continued to hold, according to the Calendars of 1886, where, however, his name was also shown as Sovereign Grand Commander of the Supreme Council at Bogota, “founded in 1827,” whilst that of Juan M. Grau is similarly shown as the head of the Supreme Council of Carthagená, "founded in 1833." An English Lodge—Amistad Unida, No. 808—established in 1848, existed at Santa Martha. Other foreign Jurisdictions were formerly represented. Lodge Les Philadelphes, No. 151, was erected at Colon-Aspinwall by the Supreme Council of France in 1858 and the Isthmus Lodge by the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts in (or before) 1866. Both these Lodges, however, have ceased to exist.

Several attempts were made to form a Grand Lodge of Colombia and the initiative was taken by the Freemasons of Barranquilla, on the coast of the Republic, where there is more liberty and less clerical influence. On July 20, 1917, four Lodges, two of which had their Charters from the Supreme Council of New Granada (Colombia) and two from the Supreme Council of Bogota, formed the Provincial Grand Lodge of the Department of the Atlantic, Calle of Barranquilla; and, later, on January 10, it declared itself as the National Grand Lodge of Colombia, notwithstanding protests from the Supreme Council of Colombia.

This Grand Lodge has become stronger with the passing years and is recognised as regular by the British Grand Lodges of Arkansas, Louisiana, Kansas, Massachusetts, New York, New Jersey, North Carolina and the Philippine Islands.

On November 30, 1919, several who had until then been loyal to the Supreme Council of Colombia, formed the Grand Lodge of the Republic of Colombia, maintaining that the National Grand Lodge was not legally Constituted and that the territory was unoccupied. This step was also opposed by the Supreme Council of Colombia.

The Grand Lodge of the Republic of Colombia at Bogota is growing in strength. It is recognised by the British Grand Lodges and by New York, Oregon, North Carolina and Massachusetts.

Later, the Supreme Council at Carthagená invited a few Lodges there to form a Grand Lodge under its auspices, which event took place on January 1, 1920. The Grand Lodge of Colombia at Carthagená continues to grow stronger. It is recognised by the British Grand Lodges and by Louisiana, New York, and North Carolina.

In 1935 the Foreign Correspondence Report of the Grand Lodge of North Carolina contained the following:

We have a formal announcement of the formation, on December 16, 1934, of the fourth Grand Lodge in Colombia, South America. There had been some confusion in this Republic, in Masonic circles, for quite a while, the nature of which confusion it is not profitable to attempt to analyze here. In the South American and Central American countries means of communication are none too good between distant cities and towns; and when Grand Lodges meet, their acts often receive scant consideration from some of the more remote Lodges. Then somebody wants to know why these Lodges have not done so and so, and the Lodges are liable to censure for matters in which they are not interested or which they do not understand—and trouble starts.

Grand Lodge. There was one Grand Lodge in Cartagena, another in Bogota, and a third in Barranquilla; so why should they not have theirs? We read that there are also four "Trianges," one at Jerico, one at Sonson, a third at Puerto Berrio, and a fourth at Rio Negro. We suppose these will ere long become Lodges, too.

The Grand Lodge of Medellen adopted the North Carolina Standards.

ECUADOR

The following is taken from the Proceedings of the Grand Lodge of Ecuador and is by an official writer, Bro. Fichtenfels:

The earliest information that we gather of Ancient, Free, and Accepted Masonry in the Republic of Ecuador, is found at the end of the eighteenth century, when, still under the Spanish Regime, José Pérez, born in Guayaquil, was accused before the Royal Government of being a Mason. According to the judicial documents, kept by the "Biblioteca Nacional de Lima." It is known that, fortunately for him, he could not be found; it being stated that Pérez escaped into Brazil, through the Amazon forests.

It is equally known, through the writings of Emilio Gondrón in his detailed narration of the part played by Masonry in the independence of the American Continent, that in the year 1808, fourteen years before the battle of Pichincha was fought, a victory that gave Ecuador its independence from Spain, there was in Quito a Lodge, under the name of "Ley Natural" under the authority of the Masonic Body of Neuvo Reino de Granada.

In 1821, a few months after the Province of Guayaquil had proclaimed its independence, the first Guayaquil Lodge was founded.

Thirteen years later, in 1843, a new Lodge was founded in Guayaquil, also under the Jurisdiction of Neuva Granada working under the name of "Centro Filantrópico."

In the year 1857 the Grand Orient of Peru organised a Lodge in Guayaquil, under the Scottish Rite, a Symbolic Lodge and a Chapter of eight degrees as stated by Brother Albert Galatin Mackey, M.D., 33°, in his "Encyclopedia Masonica y su relación con las Ciencias." The works of these bodies had to be stopped on account of the persecution of the catholic priests. The Lodge worked under the name of "Filantrópia" as the previous one; its worshipful master being Brother José Maria Molestina Roca 18°.

Knowing of the existence of this Lodge, Gabriel Garcia Moreno sought admission, but as he pretended to be admitted as a master mason, his request was refused. Taking the refusal as an offense, it is clearly understood why, later on, when he was President of the Republic, he issued a decree "that all Masons be courtmartialled."

During the Government of Garcia Moreno, the Church ruled, and all the priests were his closest friends. As a result masonic activities in this period were nil.

Only in the year 1878, when General Ignacio de Veintimilla started the liberal transformation, several masons, mostly foreigners, obtained a permit from the Grand Orient of Peru to open a Lodge in Guayaquil. This Lodge worked under the name of "Redención," and its existence was known to the President, but later, in order to be on the side of the Church, and to satisfy social demands, he made it known that unless masons would close the Lodge, he would have to close it. In order to prevent a fatal result, seeing that the President had lost his Liberal faith, and the energy to permit them to continue with the Lodge, the brethren had to abandon their work.

Masonry was at a standstill during the period of the Conservative Party, until the fall of the same in 1895. Masonic activity started with the return of the Liberal Party headed by Brother General Eloy Alfaro 30°, the "Great Fighter," who played a most important role in the history of Ecuador. The Lodge "Luz del Guayas" was formed on January 31, 1897, and received its charter from the Grand Lodge of Peru April 2, 1897. This worshipful Lodge has been active ever since up to the present time. From its members, two other Lodges were founded later.

It is in this period that Brother Colonel Gaspar Almiro Plaza, at present an active member of the Supreme Council of the 33°, one of the most prominent Masons in Ecuador, gathered the many Masons in the city and organised several bodies of the Scottish Rite, all under the jurisdiction of the Supreme Council of Peru.

Continuing his good work, Brother Plaza selected several Masons, and obtaining the necessary permission established, in Guayaquil, the Lodge "Filantropía del Guayas" No. 2, in commemoration of the old Lodge of 1860. At the same time there was in Quito a Lodge "Luz del Pichincha" that was conducting work in an irregular manner, because of not having fulfilled all the requisites. Brother Plaza obtained from the Supreme Council of Peru the regularisation of all the members of the Quito Lodge in the year 1906. Being in Quito, Brother Plaza founded another Lodge, giving it the name of "Ley Natural," in commemoration of the one founded in 1808. This further progress in Masonry, in a city completely overrun with priests, took place the 31st of December, 1906.

After a long transition, the Supreme Council Confederated 33°, of Peru, invested with this degree several prominent Masons and organised the Supreme Council Confederated 33° of Ecuador, which was duly installed the 24 July, 1910. All other Supreme Councils in the world have recognised the Supreme Council of Ecuador, and are in fraternal relations with it.

The Supreme Council Confederated, 33° of Ecuador, being duly constituted and its authority recognised, took over into her jurisdiction all the Symbolic Lodges established in Ecuador, and working in the Scottish Rite: except Lodge "Luz del Guayas" No. 10, dependent of the Grand Lodge of Peru.

Two new Charters were granted by the Supreme Council in 1917. The first one was "Eloy Alfaro Lodge," No. 5. The other Lodge was "Luz de América."

Since 1916, it was felt the necessity of founding the Grand Lodge of Ecuador and subordinating to it the three symbolic Lodges, leaving the degrees 4 to 32 to the jurisdiction of the Supreme Council of Ecuador. Several members of the Lodge "Sucre," No. 1, worked enthusiastically to obtain this end, and obtained that the Lodges "Filantropía del Guayas" No. 2, "Eloy Alfaro" No. 5, and "Luz de América" No. 6, support their intention. Also "Lodge Bolívar" No. 4, was founded in Quito in the year 1909, under the auspices of the Spanish Modern Rite, which was not recognised by the Universal Masonic Bodies.

Unfortunately, the work started by this newly organised Grand Lodge did not last, because of certain irregularities, which were not at first perceived. As a result, the subordinate Lodges lost the enthusiasm of its work, and were closed. The only survivor was "Luz del Guayas" lodge under the jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of Peru.

This failure did not discourage the good brethren who desired to obtain the benefits of a well organised Grand Lodge of Ecuador, and the recognition of the Universal Grand Bodies. Taking into consideration the previous experience, the Masonic Members, headed by the "Luz del Guayas," appealed to the Grand Lodge of Peru, for its patriotic desire. The Grand Lodge of Peru, recognising the justice of it, promised to support the Ecuadorian Masons. Toward this end, they granted permission for two new Lodges to be founded, under their jurisdiction, and sent Brother Mael Pérez Rosas, the Grand Secretary of Peru, to organise the work regularly.

Shortly after, the Grand Lodge of Peru granted the Charters to these two Lodges, and in March 6, 1921, they delegated the several members to meet in Convention with the purpose of organising the Grand Lodge of Ecuador, independently of the Grand Lodge of Peru, and to have jurisdiction over all the Lodges in its Territory.

In an extraordinary meeting of The Grand Lodge of Ecuador, on March 25th, 1922, a petition from Masons of the city of Quito was received to found a Lodge in that city. They named it "24 de Mayo" in commemoration of the battle of Pichincha, deciding battle in the Independence of Ecuador.

On September 6, 1922, the Government of Ecuador presided by Dr. José Luis Tamayo, by its degree No. 926 approved the Constitution and Statutes of the Grand Lodge of Ecuador, and recognised it as a legal institution.

In 1896, there was formed at Guayaquil, under the auspices of the Grand Lodge of Peru, the Lodge "Luz de Guayas," No. 10, there being at that date no Grand Lodge in Ecuador. This Lodge received its charter on April 2, 1897. As the years passed its membership increased slowly and it gradually drew to itself, despite the opposition of the clericals, many of the leading merchants, financiers, journalists, professors and army and navy men.

Within the last few years, the Grand Lodge of Peru sent a special deputy to Guayaquil to counsel the Masons there as to the proper procedure for the formation of a Grand Lodge. He advised the creation of two new lodges under charters from the Grand Lodge of Peru. Accordingly Lodges "Cinco de Junio," No. 29, and "Oriente Ecuatoriano," No. 30, were formed. It is stated that these three were then the only "regular" Lodges in Ecuador. We presume there were Scottish Rite Symbolic Lodges subordinate to the Supreme Council, but it is in all probability true that these were the only independent Lodges or the only Lodges subordinate to a regular Grand Lodge. They were, therefore, the only ones necessary to be invited to participate in the formation of the Grand Lodge.

Accordingly these three Lodges selected delegates to a General Assembly which convened at Guayaquil on March 5, 1921, 8 p.m., with full representation from each Lodge. Juan Molinari was chosen president and Miguel E. Rabascal, Secretary.

The Assembly then adopted and dispatched to the Grand Lodge of Peru a Petition praying its consent to the formation of a Grand Lodge of Ecuador and asking that a Deputy with full authority to act be sent to constitute the new Grand Lodge. In this Petition, the Assembly declared that the Grand Lodge would "teach the people to depart from fanaticism and superstition." The constitution, By-Laws and Ritual of the Grand Lodge of Peru were temporarily adopted. The Grand Lodge of Peru cheerfully and promptly released the Lodges from allegiance to it and unanimously consented to the formation of the new Grand Lodge, and commissioned a Deputy to constitute it.

Accordingly, on June 19, 1921, the "Grand Lodge of Ancient Free and Accepted Masons of the Republic of Ecuador" was solemnly constituted with jurisdiction over the three Symbolic Degrees only, viz., Apprentice, Fellow Craft, and Master, throughout the territory of Ecuador.

On July 29, 1921, another Lodge, "Pacific," No. 4, in which the work is carried on in English, was regularly installed under a charter from the new Grand Lodge, giving it 4 Subordinate Lodges, with 77, 50, 48 and 8 members respectively, or a total of 183 members. This Grand Lodge was recognised by Louisiana at its 1922 Annual in February last.

This is, of course, a weak body in point of numbers, but we have carefully read all the proceedings leading up to its formation and its printed constitution, laws and regulations, and we can see no reason why it should not be recognised.

PERU

It is traditionally asserted that Freemasonry was introduced into Peru about the year 1807, during the French invasion, that several Lodges were at work until the resumption of Spanish authority and of Papal influence in 1813, when their existence terminated. But the authentic history of Peruvian Masonry cannot be traced any earlier than 1825, when the independence of the Republic, declared in 1820, was completely achieved. In that year, General Valero, a member of the Grand Orient of Colombia at Santa Fé de Bogotá (New Granada), visited Lima and, as the representative of that body, proceeded, in the first instance, to legitimate the Lodges and Chapters which had already been established in the new Republic, afterwards to found and organize others. At this time there appear to have been four Lodges at the capital, and nine others were soon after erected in the provincial towns: Lima—Paz y Perfecta Union, 1821; Orden y Libertad, 1822; Virtud y Union, 1823; and Constancia Peruana, 1824; Cuzco—Sol de Huayna Ccapac, 1826; Lambayeque—Union Justa, 1826; Pinra—Constancia Heroica, 1829; and Ica—Filosofia Peruana, 1829. Five other Lodges were also formed about the same time in Arequipa, Trujillo, Cajamarca, Puno and Huamachuco respectively, but their names and dates of constitution have passed out of recollection. Thus the course of descent of Masonry in Peru was from Spain to Venezuela, from Venezuela to Colombia, thence to Peru. Its base is, therefore, Spanish, yet, from an early date, English and American Freemasonry have influenced very strongly that of Peru.

A Supreme Council of the A. and A.R. 33° was instituted at Lima in 1830 by the senior (local) member of the rite, José Maria Monson, Roman Catholic Chaplain in the Army of Independence, afterwards a Canon in the Cathedral of Trujillo. In the following year—June 23—Deputies from the Supreme Council 33°, the Consistory 32°, the Areopagus 30° and the Chapters 18°, together with the Masters and Wardens of the Lodges, assembled in the capital under the presidency of the Sovereign Grand Commander of the Scottish Constitution and established a Grand Lodge, with Thomas Ripley Eldredge as Grand Master. The Constitutions were settled on August 11, 1831, when it was unanimously resolved to substitute for the title Grand Lodge, that of Grand Orient of Peru. Shortly after this, owing to the political disturbances, there was an entire cessation of Masonic labour.

In 1845, after a recess of some twelve years, a few metropolitan Brethren, members of the Lodge Orden y Libertad and of a Rose Croix Chapter, met and continued to work regularly until November 1, 1848, when a General Convention of Masons was held and the Grand Orient was revived. In 1850 the Grand Orient again assembled and sanctioned a Constitution for the government of the Lodges. Marshal Miguel San Roman—afterwards President of the Republic—was Grand Master of this Grand Orient until 1852, but the Supreme Council 33° not only held aloof from its proceedings, but apparently ignored even its existence.

On July 13, 1852, the supreme Masonic body was reorganized under the title of Grand National Orient of Peru and the members of the so-called high Degrees recovered their supremacy. At this meeting twenty-five Brethren represented the Supreme Council, Consistory, Areopagus and the Rose Croix Chapters. There were also present the Masters and Wardens of three Lodges—Orden y Libertad and Estrella Polar, of Lima; and Concordia Universal of Callao. Of these, the first named was founded in 1822, the second (by the Grand Orient over which Marshal San Roman presided) in 1850-2, the third (by the Supreme Council of Peru) in 1852.

In the same year (1852) a Royal Arch Chapter—Estrella Boreal—No. 74 on the roll of the Grand Chapter of Scotland, was established at Callao. This, however, was not recognized by the Supreme Council of Peru, nor was it allowed a voice in the deliberations of the Grand National Orient.

In 1855 a new Lodge under an old title—Virtud y Union—was erected at Lima by Charter of the Supreme Council 33°.

New Statutes were promulgated by the Grand Orient May 5, 1856. These were very defective, consisting only of some disjointed extracts from the laws of the Grand Orient of Venezuela and placed the government of the Fraternity entirely in the hands of the Supreme Council 33°. At this time there were seven Lodges holding Warrants from the Supreme Council—acting on behalf of the Grand National Orient. Of these five were in Peru, one each in Ecuador and Chile. Additional regulations, framed with the especial object of restraining certain irregularities which—it was alleged—had penetrated into the Lodges, were enacted in May 1857. The new Statutes caused the cup of indignation to overflow and three Lodges—Concordia Universal, Estrella Polar and Virtud y Union—on June 3, 6 and 10 respectively ensuing, declared their independence. These were joined by others to the number of fifteen and a Grand Lodge was erected at Lima, November 20, 1859. In 1860 there was another schism in the Supreme Council and the seceders, with the Grand Lodge, formed a Grand Orient and Supreme Council under a Charter from the Grand Orient of Colombia (New Granada). In 1863, however, dissensions arose in this body and it passed out of existence.

Irish Lodges were established at Lima in 1861 and 1863 and several foreign Jurisdictions soon after became represented. Among these Scotland is entitled to the first place, having chartered no fewer than thirteen Lodges. Under the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts a Lodge was formed by dispensation at Arica in 1866, but is now extinct. The Grand Orient of Italy and the Grand Lodge of Hamburg each had a Lodge at Lima, the Italian Lodge bearing the name Stella d'Italia and the German one Zur Eintracht (Concord).

The Supreme Council reorganized the Grand Orient, but again suppressed it in 1875 and sentenced the opponents of this summary proceeding to "perpetual expulsion." The sentence was revoked in 1881, the Grand Orient once more revived and the Lodges placed under it. This gave umbrage to the latter, who contended that even if the Supreme Council was justified in separating itself from the Lodges, it could not possess the right of turning them over to any other body. Ultimately, in March 1882, five Lodges met in Convention at Lima and organized the Grand Lodge of Peru. Four out of the five Scottish Lodges at the capital are said to have given in their adhesion on May 31 and, shortly after, a Lodge was established at Guayaquil in Ecuador. This Grand Lodge is entirely independent, controls only the first three Degrees and works them according to the York ritual. It denies the right of the Supreme Council to form Symbolic Lodges where a regular Grand Lodge exists. It exacts of its initiates a belief in the Deity and displays the Bible on the altar. It does not seem, however, to have made great growth and is still weak in numbers and influence.

On June 13, 1897, Grand Master Christian Dam promulgated a decree substituting the Book of Constitutions on the altar in place of the Bible. Quite a furore was raised by this action in Peru and abroad. Many Grand Lodges severed relations with Peru, an action which, in some instances, has continued to this day. However, those in Peru, who objected to the action of the Grand Master, were able just one year later—June 12, 1898—to reverse it and a decree was promulgated abrogating the decree of 1897. In March 1899, England repealed her resolution of non-intercourse and other Grand Lodges took like action.

BOLIVIA

In 1875 a Lodge was Chartered by one of the competing Jurisdictions in Lima and is possibly included among the four Lodges in Bolivia under the Grand Lodge of Peru.

On November 20, 1929, there were in Bolivia seven Masonic Lodges under the Constitution of the Grand Lodge of Chile. On that date, the Grand Lodge of Chile granted to these seven Lodges a special Dispensation to organise the Grand Lodge of Bolivia, which Dispensation was transmitted to them and they proceeded to act upon it in due course.

On June 24, 1931, the Grand Lodge of Bolivia was formally organised by the Installation of its Officers under the patronage of the parent Grand Lodge of Chile, the constituent Lodges therein being the seven Lodges referred to, of the Chilean Constitution.

The Grand Lodge of Chile is duly recognised by the Grand Lodge of North Carolina. The Grand Lodge of Bolivia in beginning its Masonic life has adopted the standards of Masonic regularity which North Carolina set up ten years ago, and which were translated into Spanish soon afterwards and were broadcast throughout South America and exerted a profound influence in all Latin America.

The Grand Lodge of Bolivia requires that all of its Lodges exact of every member thereof unqualified belief in the Grand Architect of the Universe. It requires that all candidates be obligated upon the Volume of the Sacred Law. It makes Masons of men only, and forbids intercourse with all bodies alleged to be Masonic which admit women.

This Grand Lodge is a sovereign and independent body, having exclusive and undisputed control over the Symbolic Lodges within its Jurisdiction, and it does not divide or share its authority with any other organisation or body claiming to be Masonic. It exercises supreme control over the Degrees of Entered Apprentice, Fellow Craft and Master Mason in its Jurisdiction, and it thus divides the work of the Degrees and teaches the legend of the Third Degree.

The Grand Lodge in its declaration asserts that the Three Great Lights are always displayed in Lodge when open, and that the discussion of politics or religion is strictly prohibited in Lodges. What it sets out as the Ancient Landmarks is not stated, but these are strictly observed.

ARGENTINE REPUBLIC, OR CONFEDERACY OF LA PLATA

The Province of Buenos Ayres, after forming for some years a distinct State, re-entered, in 1860, the General Confederacy of La Plata, or Argentine Republic, of which it constitutes the head. The Masonic history of the allied States down to the year named may very briefly be summarised. A Lodge—No. 205, Southern Star—was chartered at the city of Buenos Ayres by the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, September 5, 1825. This capital, as the largest town and the outlet of all the trade of the Republic, has always exercised a preponderating influence in the formation and execution of the intrigues, conspiracies and insurrections, which constitute the political history of the Confederation. From the close connexion, therefore, between Masonry and politics, found subsisting in all parts of South America, save in the Lodges under the English Constitution, it will excite no surprise that, without exception, all the early Lodges in La Plata, of which any trace exists, were held at Buenos Ayres. Some were in existence there in 1846, but, about that time, the political aspect becoming gloomy in the extreme, their labours were suspended.

Two Lodges bearing the same name—L'Amie des Naufragés—were established by the Grand Orient of France in Buenos Ayres and Rio de la Plata respectively in 1852. The example thus set was followed by the Grand Lodge of England, under whose authority the first of a series of Lodges was erected in 1853, viz. Excelsior Lodge, No. 617. In 1856, there seems to have been in existence a body claiming the prerogatives of a Grand Lodge. It practised the Ancient and Accepted Rite, but was never recognized by the family of Supreme Councils and soon ceased to exist. Two years later—April 22, 1858—a Supreme Council and Grand Orient of the Argentine Republic was established at Buenos Ayres by the Supreme Council and Grand Orient of Uruguay, at Monte Video.

About this time—so at least it is gravely related—“ the Roman Catholic Bishop [at Buenos Ayres] fulminated a Bull against all Masons within his bishopric; he went the length of declaring the marriage contract dissolved and absolving the wife a vinculo matrimonii, in all cases where the husband refused to renounce Masonry. Some parties, as high in temporal authority as the Bishop was in spiritual, appealed from this decree to Pope Pius IX at Rome. After waiting a long time for a reply or decision upon the appeal and receiving none, an inquiry was instituted as to the cause of the delay, when it was found, to the great satisfaction of the Roman Catholics of La Plata, who were unwilling to bow to the behests of the Bishop, that in 1816, the venerable Pontiff—then a young man—received the Degrees, and took upon himself the obligations of Masonry!” The full story is told in Dudley Wright's Roman Catholicism and Freemasonry, pp. 172-4. See also the World-Wide Register, p. 528. A statement of similar character was made long before by J. L. Laurens in his Essai historique, with regard to Pope Benedict XIV, of whom it is related that, being himself a Freemason, he, not unnaturally, mitigated in some slight degree the rigour of the Papal edict against the Craft, which had been launched by his immediate predecessor, Clement XII.

In 1861 a treaty was concluded between the Grand Lodge of England and the Grand Orient of the Argentine Republic. This empowered the former to establish Lodges in La Plata and to appoint a District Grand Master to rule over them. The Rev. J. Chubb Ford presided over the English District Grand Lodge until 1867, when he was succeeded by R. B. Masefield, who was followed by Dr. George John Ryan, C. Trevor Mold and F. H. Chevallier Boutell. In 1914, the name of the District was altered to that of South America, Southern Division, and F. H.

Masonic Temple, Buenos Aires.

Chevallier Boutell retained the position until 1927, when he resigned and W. E. O. Hazell was appointed his successor.

Some trouble was caused in 1868 through the establishment of a Lodge under the name of Italia and the authority of the Grand Orient of Masonry in Italy located at Florence. Protest was at once made by the Supreme Commander of the Argentine Republic against this violation of long-established Masonic law, to which no reply was made. The worst feature of the proceedings was that one of the members to whom the Charter was granted was an expelled member from one of the city Lodges, while other rejected candidates or expelled members generally were admitted into the Italia Lodge (see The Freemason, July 17, 1869).

During the fatal cholera epidemic—December 1867 to February 1868—when more than four thousand persons became victims, the Freemasons formed the Sociedad Masonica de Socorros, under the presidency of Daniel Maria Cazon, Sovereign Grand Commander of the Ancient and Accepted Rite. Over 26,000 dollars was subscribed by the Order and the Committee visited over 300 families, furnishing them with medicine, medical advice, food and clothing and burying the dead: they also sent funds and assistance to several towns in the country where the epidemic was raging (see The Freemason, July 10 and 17, 1869).

About 1877, the invariable rebellion of the Lodges against the domination of the Supreme Council 33°, which is always met with in the histories of Grand Orients, occurred in Buenos Ayres. There appears to have been both a protest and secession, but without in this case culminating in any definite result.

There were some 13 Lodges under the Grand Orient of La Plata in 1860, 39 in 1878 and 60 in 1886. There are 13 Lodges under the Grand Lodge of England in Buenos Ayres and the same number in other parts of the District.

PARAGUAY

When this country proclaimed its independence of Spain, the reins of government were seized by Dr. Francia, a well-meaning despot, who, during his long administration, carried into effect his ideas of advancing the material interests of the state by shutting it off from all communication with the outer world. Under his government Paraguay was, for a long period, as effectually closed as Japan had been before it. The same exclusive policy, though without carrying it quite so far, was pursued by his successor, Don Carlos Antonio Lopez. The latter was followed in turn by his son, Don Francisco Solano Lopez, whose action involved the country in the disastrous war of 1864-70 with Brazil, Uruguay and the Argentine Republic. This war cost Paraguay nearly one-half of its territory and reduced its population from nearly a million and a half to about 220,000, of whom only 29,000 were men. If, conjointly with this, we bear in mind that Paraguay is the only country in South America without any seaboard, it will occasion no surprise that the traces of Masonry in the existing Republic are so faint as to be almost indistinguishable. The population of Asuncion, the capital, had fallen after the war from nearly 50,000 to about 10,000 of whom 3,000 belonged for several years to the Brazilian army of occupation. The Masonic Calendars of 1881-2 show a Lodge under the Grand Orient of Brazil as existing at Paraguay, but whether composed of natives or of the Brazilian garrison is a point upon which statistics leave us wholly in the dark.

The following is quoted from the report of Bro. John H. Cowles, Past Grand Master of Kentucky, who made a personal investigation of conditions:

The life of Masonry in Paraguay has been as hectic as the life of the country. Its early introduction as to authenticity is much mixed with legend, memories of the elder generation, and a few documents now known of. While proof is lacking, it is undoubtedly true that Lodges functioned in Paraguay before its war of 1866-1870, using both the French and Italian languages, but no knowledge is extant as to what Grand Masonic power established them, maybe Brazil. There were Lodges also using Portuguese which had their authority from Brazil. While in Asuncion I was presented with several documents of interest and to which reference is now made, viz.: A circular issued November, 1871, by the "Grand Orient and Supreme Council" of Paraguay, announcing its own establishment, and stating that the Grand Orient of Brazil had instituted "Fe" (Faith) Lodge in Asuncion in May 1869; that in July 1871, a Rose Croix was created from members of this Lodge. They declared themselves independent and divided Fe Lodge into four Symbolic Lodges. In Humaita, another Lodge was at work, said to be irregular; but no explanation given about it, and it was made regular, or healed as to membership while at Cerrito, another Lodge existed, presumably regular, but nothing said about how it originated. Three Lodges were organised out of the one at Humaita which made a total of eight, and these were formed into the "Grand Orient and Supreme Council" of Paraguay. Another is a printed balustre, dated November 15, 1871, giving the names of the officers of all the bodies, Grand and Subordinate, which include those of the eight Lodges mentioned. These papers are signed by Jose Garcia y Picos, Grand Secretary General, and Joaquin Jose Mondes Sampaio, Grand Chancellor and Keeper of the Seal. The name of Dr. Juan Adrian Chaves is printed as Sovereign Grand Commander; also printed is the name of Rev. Padre (Priest) Maestro Benedicto Conti as Grand Hospitaler. Another document is a written certificate with a red seal, stating that this priest, a chaplain in the Navy, is a member of the Supreme Council. There are three patents, or diplomas, of Joaquin Jose Mendes Samjoaio, one issued by a Lodge under the Grand Orient of Brazil, stating that he was made a Master Mason in 1865, age of twenty-two years; the second stating he was given the 30°, September 1872. This was issued by the Supreme Council of Paraguay, and signed M. Juan Adrian Chaves, Grand Master, Sovereign Grand Commander; the third issued by the Supreme Council to him as receiving the 33°, dated September 1874, signed the same way; still another document is a printed one, with a heading of the Grand Master Grand Commander of the Order of Masonry in Paraguay, and signed officially by Dr. Juan Adrian Chaves. Written authority is given in a letter to Sampaio by the Grand Commander to confer the 31st, 32nd and 33rd Degrees on Christian Heisicke, January 26, 1895, whose name appears as Grand Commander in 1896 and 1901 on a type-written balustre of officers, for what is designated as the four periods in Paraguayan Masonry, 1870-1874, 1896-1901. Another document is a patent, issued 1874, to a Brother whose name is undecipherable, by the Lodge Cruz under the obedience of the "Supreme Council and Grand Orient of Paraguay." Note that the words "Supreme Council" appear in this name before the words "Grand Orient."

In 1887, Aurora del Paraguay Lodge was established in Asuncion by authority of the Grand Orient of Uruguay. Later the second one was instituted, named Sol Naciente. Then three Lodges were created, authority doubtful, maybe under different authorities, Universo, Libertad and Frederick the Great, and they formed the Grand Orient against the protest of Uruguay, which considered them irregular, as they probably were. Sol Naciente Lodge joined with them voluntarily in this organisation. Afterward, though, the Grand Orient of Uruguay made them regular and then Fe Lodge united with them and this is the present Masonic Grand authority of the country. The date of this action by Uruguay was in 1895 and on January 3, 1896, it declared it regular with recognition. About 1906 Sapaena Pastor was Grand Master and Grand Commander. Anyway, it was during his occupation of that double office he decreed that the Bible should be removed from the altars and the decree was generally followed. One Lodge, which works the York Rite Blue Degrees, and instituted in recent years, requires the Bible on its Altar. In 1923, the name was officially changed from Grand Orient to Grand Lodge, and the Supreme Council and Grand Lodge were henceforth to be each sovereign and independent. This was originally to be the case but was not actually put into effect until the above date.

The Supreme Council has 13 Active Members at present and 9 Thirty-thirds; that is, those who have received the degree. They have the same standing as our Honorary Thirty-thirds, but they are not so designated. Their Honorary Members are those of other Jurisdictions they have elected as Honorary Members, and it is difficult to explain why we call our own members Honorary. There are only about 100 members in all grades above the fourth. Of course they use the Scottish Rite in the Blue Lodges, and there are not over 150 altogether in the 6 Blue Lodges, 4 of which are in Asuncion. They estimate, however, that there are some two or three thousand Masons in Paraguay who have been made in these Lodges from time to time and have dropped out. The field is very limited, and not a great deal of activity, besides dissensions continually disturb them, dissensions arising usually over trivialities. This is not so strange, for very few Paraguayans are Masons and the membership is English, Scotch, Dutch, German, Boer, Argentine et al, and each wants to follow the customs of Masonry in the countries they come from. There are a few American Masons in the country, but as the Grand Lodge is not recognised by any American Grand Lodges, they do not participate. The Grand Lodge of England is in relation of amity though, and exchanges Representatives.

An official document sent out by the Symbolic Grand Lodge of Paraguay, in 1934, contains a declaration of principles from which the following is taken:

The inviolability of human right in all its forms.

The existence of one great Creator whom we worship under the name of The Grand Architect of the Universe. We recognise as the three great lights of Masonry, the Volume of the Sacred Law, the Square and the Compass, which must be on the altar when the Grand Lodge and its subordinate lodges are working.

. . . It prohibits the discussion in its lodges when at labour, of religious controversy or militant politics. It combats ignorance in all of its forms. . . . It is essentially philosophical and philanthropic. . . . It works for the amelioration of humanity morally, intellectually and socially.

La Gran Logia Simbolica Del Paraguay practices the Scottish Rite Ritual (but) admits under its obedience Lodges of other Rites regularly recognised. . . . It is sovereign and independent of any other Masonic body but holds the power to make pacts and concordats with other regular Masonic Powers. It reserves to itself exclusively the prerogative to legislate concerning Symbolic Masonry in all of the territory of the republic of Paraguay as the sole Symbolic Masonic Power concerning the usages, customs and ceremonies transmitted since antiquity concerning the Landmarks called Ancient Landmarks of the Fraternity proclaimed and recognised by Freemasonry.

URUGUAY

Masonry—if we may credit Dr. Mackey—was introduced into this Republic in 1827 by the Grand Orient of France, which in that year chartered a Lodge called the Children of the New World. But there is no trace of any such Lodge in the French Masonic Calendars and it is important to recollect that the independence of Uruguay, or, as it was formerly called, Banda Oriental, “Eastern Side,” as a Republic, was only definitely established by a treaty dated August 27, 1828. The country prides itself on possessing one of the finest political constitutions in South America. It sounds, therefore, almost like irony to be obliged to add that this Republic has been cursed with more frequent revolutions than any other in the New World. In one respect, however, Uruguay is decidedly in advance of the Indian Republic of Paraguay. It has a large, well-built and pleasant capital, Monte Video, of which one-third of the residents are foreigners. A Lodge—No. 217, Asilio de la Virtud—was chartered in this city by the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, February 6, 1832. After this the Masonic history of Uruguay is a complete blank until the year 1841, in which year, also at Monte Video, Les Amis de la Patrie—ultimately a Lodge, Chapter, Areopagus and Consistory—was established by the Grand Orient of France. Further Lodges are said to have been erected under Warrants from Brazil, but of these no exact record is forthcoming. The next event of any importance occurred in 1855, when authority was obtained from one of the then existing Grand Orients at Rio de Janeiro to establish a governing Masonic body and the Supreme Council and Grand Orient of Uruguay were formally constituted at Monte Video.

Besides Les Amis de la Patrie, under the Grand Orient of France, which still exists, foreign Jurisdictions are represented at Monte Video by the following Lodges—England, No. 876, Acacia, 1861 and No. 3389, Silver River, 1909; Spain (Becerra’s Grand Lodge), No. 281, Paz y Esperanza; and Italy, I. Figli Dell’

Unità Italiana and I. Liberi Pensatori. A Lodge, Avenir et Progres, No. 182, was formed—also at the capital—under the Supreme Council of France in 1865, but is now extinct.

In 1927, Sir Alfred Robbins, President of the Board of General Purposes, went as a Deputation to South America from the United Grand Lodge of England, when he succeeded in effecting an agreement between the United Grand Lodge of England and the Grand Orient of Uruguay. After the foundation of the Silver River Lodge in 1909 it was found that the Grand Orient was unable to accord official recognition to the Lodge, although there was constant inter-visitation but, as the result of the visit of Sir Alfred Robbins, all difficulties were overcome.

Masonry, by the end of 1856 seemed to be well established and regularly so, and ready for work. It was not long in coming, true Masonic work outside of natural and routine Lodge business. The following year, 1857, a terrible epidemic of yellow fever swept the country. Masons volunteered, nursed, doctored and buried the dead, hundreds losing their own lives in the sacrificial work. Again, in 1873, the dread disease ravished the country and the Lodges again sent forth their members to perform their merciful mission. Then, in 1887, the cholera appeared and, Moloch-like, claimed its victims, yet again the Masons were in the forefront of relief. After Argentine had suffered from war's devastations, Bro. Paullier was sent with a sum of money and other necessaries as aid to those stricken people. After the disaster at Camation in Paraguay, the Masons of Uruguay lent aid and assistance to their fullest abilities. On other occasions, help was given Brazilian immigrants in 1894, a revolution in Quebracho, the grippe epidemic, and always the Mason of Uruguay has kept the faith. He can be credited with other altruistic work. An Orphans' Home for boys was reported by Bro. Goodall, of the Northern Masonic Jurisdiction, U. S. A., in 1856 when he visited here, which Home had 250 boys it was rearing and educating; the celebrated Escuela Filantropica (Philanthropic School) which may be the one Goodall wrote about, from which graduated many who afterwards became prominent in their country; other schools, some claim as many as four, and continued for sixteen years when the government adopted compulsory education laws.

RESPONSIBLE FOR MASONRY'S GROWTH

The Masonic powers in Uruguay are largely responsible for introducing Masonry into Argentina and Paraguay, which has resulted in the spread of our Institution, a thing always desirable.

In General Pike's day, the National Grand Orient of Uruguay appeared on the scene but from where it is long since dead. The Grand Orient of Italy established some Lodges from time to time, one of which it named Garibaldi, in 1879, but, receiving no recognition, applied in 1881 to the Grand Orient of Uruguay to be made regular, and was admitted to its fold and is now a very strong Lodge with a large Italian membership. In 1888, another Lodge was Instituted by Italy and it later withdrew and joined Uruguay, since which the Italian Grand Orient seems to have behaved itself, at least it has no Lodges in Uruguay now.

Lastly, there was founded in 1827 a Lodge, Les Enfants du Nouveau Mond, by French immigrants, under authority of the "Grand Orient of the Rio Grande," irregular itself. In 1842 it changed its name to Les Amis de la Patrie and the Grand Orient of France gave it a Charter in 1844. It is claimed by some that Garibaldi was a member of this Lodge. Until 1867, the Grand Orient of France was generally recognised in the Masonic World as regular, but in that year it removed the Volume of the Sacred Law from its Altars, and, of course, ceased to be regular Masonry. This Lodge claims continuous existence since its re-organisation in 1844, but other information (not proven) is that it ceased to exist for quite a period along in the 50's or 60's. Be that as it may, the fact remains that it acknowledges allegiance now to the Grand Orient of France and hence is outside the pale. Neither the Grand Orient of Uruguay nor the English Lodges in Montevideo have aught to do with it.

The Fraternal Correspondence Report of the Grand Lodge of North Carolina for 1933 contains the following:

We are in receipt of a bulletin in Spanish setting forth the separation of the Grand Orient of Uruguay from the Supreme Council of the Scottish Rite of the Country, a condensed translation of which is as follows:

TREATY OF PEACE AND ALLIANCE

Consummated Between the Supreme Council and the Grand Orient of Uruguay, August 24, 1931

The Supreme Council of Inspectors General 33° of the Scottish Rite of Uruguay and the Grand Orient of Uruguay (Grand Lodge) in accordance with an agreement of June 2, 1931, have assembled to work out an agreement of Peace and Alliance and to establish clearly and definitely the status of each of the contracting parties and the relations between them, as complete independence of symbolism, and unalterable and sincere friendship.

1. The contracting parties establish a treaty of friendship perpetually between the Supreme Council of the Inspectors General of the Scottish Rite of the Oriental Republic of Uruguay and the Grand Orient of Uruguay (Grand Lodge).

2. The Supreme Council recognises as an independent and sovereign organisation legally Constituted in accordance with the Symbolism, in the said jurisdiction, the Grand Orient of Uruguay (Grand Lodge).

3. The Grand Orient of Uruguay (Grand Lodge) sole proprietor of symbolic degrees in this jurisdiction, recognises the Supreme Council referred to as a free and complete governing body, sovereign and independent, occupying the territory of the national government, to govern the Masons of the degrees from the fourth through the thirty-second.

4. Both Bodies pledge mutually to use in behalf of each other co-operation both in perpetuity and to the greatest extent possible.

6. The Grand Orient of Uruguay (Grand Lodge) for itself declares:
 - a.* That in its capacity as an exclusive governing body, independent and sovereign, for the government of the symbolic work, in the jurisdiction of the Oriental Republic of Uruguay, it divides authority with no other Masonic body.
 - b.* That it requires secrecy in its ritualistic work.
 - c.* That it practices and will require the symbolism of the division of Masonry into three degrees, viz., Apprentice, Fellowcraft and Master Mason.
 - d.* That its work is to accomplish greater fraternity, respecting tolerance, benevolence and charity.
 - e.* That it controls symbolic masonry in the jurisdiction of the Republic and does not pretend to extend its acts to any other territory occupied by any other regular Grand Orient or Grand Lodge.
 - f.* That its members acknowledge belief in one God, Grand Architect of the Universe.
 - g.* That it accepts the ancient landmarks of the Masonic Order.
 - h.* That only men of legal age are accepted in its lodges.
 - i.* That political and religious discussions are prohibited in the lodges.
7. The High Powers contracting, obligate themselves to communicate to each other officially the amendments to laws, initiations, raises or decreases of salaries, suspensions, and other details of importance, which come to pass in their respective jurisdictions.

BRAZIL

The earliest record of the Craft in Brazil dates back to 1820 and has reference to a Lodge at Rio de Janeiro, in the then kingdom of Brazil, which is claimed to have been established under a French Warrant in 1815, but of which there is no proof. In 1821 this Lodge was split up into three units, apparently for the purpose of founding the first Grand Orient of Brazil. Under this body the modern French Rite of seven Degrees, already in use, was continued and this, taken in conjunction with the parentage, real or assumed, of the original Lodge, secured speedy recognition from the Grand Orient of France. In the same year, Dom Pedro, the Regent, afterwards Emperor, of Brazil, was initiated in one of the Lodges, but in which particular Lodge is not recorded. He was, however, proclaimed Grand Master almost immediately and very shortly exercised his authority as Regent and Grand Master to close all Masonic Lodges on the ground that they were really political concerns.

On November 17, 1823, Loge Le Bouclier de l'Honneur Française was founded at Rio de Janeiro under the authority of the Grand Orient of France, but this met with no better fate than its forerunners, because it was ordered to cease work almost immediately and, indeed, all Lodges were in suspended animation until 1831, when the Emperor Dom Pedro left for Europe. The abdication of this monarch led to the establishment of the Grand Brazilian Orient and, at once, the original Grand Orient of Brazil was revived under its first Grand Master, José Bonifácio de Andrada e Silva. Both worked the modern French Rite, but they were of opposite tendencies and political aims, the elder being despotic and the younger democratic, with the result that each anathematized and hurled defiance at the other.

In 1832 Montezuma, Viscount Jequitinhonha, who had served as Ambassador at several European Courts, returned to Brazil with authority from the Supreme Council of Belgium to establish a branch of the Ancient and Accepted Rite. In November of that year he set up a Supreme Council of Brazil. This, however, put the two Grand Orients on their mettle, and each erected a Supreme Council and began to issue Warrants for Chapters and Consistories. Further dissensions occurred and, by 1835, there were in activity two Grand Orients and four Supreme Councils.

The situation was not helped by the fact that, in December 1834, an English-speaking Lodge—the Orphan, 616—had been founded in Rio de Janeiro, under Warrant from the United Grand Lodge of England (it ceased working in 1842 and was erased from the register in September 1862), while the peace of the Craft was further harassed by political disturbances in Pará, the last Brazilian Province to declare its independence of the mother country and acknowledge the authority of the first Emperor. According to H. W. Bates (The Naturalist on the River Amazon, 1863), the native party in Pará was much enraged with the Portuguese and the former, in an evil hour, called to their aid the ignorant and fanatic mongrel and Indian population; and he adds (op. cit., p. 39): “The cry of death to the Portuguese was soon changed to that of death to the Freemasons, then a powerfully organized society, embracing the greater part of the male white inhabitants.”

In 1834, Viscount Albuquerque succeeded Andrada e Silva as Grand Master of the Grand Orient of Brazil (No. 1), holding the office until 1850, when he was succeeded by the Marquis d’Abrantes. On July 6, 1841, the second English-speaking Lodge—St. John’s, No. 703—was founded in Rio de Janeiro. This also was erased on September 3, 1862. In 1842, the Grand Brazilian Orient (No. 2) rejected the modern French Rite and transferred its allegiance to the Ancient and Accepted Rite and a union was thus effected between the Grand Brazilian Orient and the second Supreme Council, thus reducing the number of Masonic organizations in Brazil to three, viz. two Grand Orients, each with a Supreme Council and the original Supreme Council under Montezuma.

On December 26, 1847 (see History of Craft Masonry in Brazil, Peter Swanson, 1928), the Grand Orient issued orders to Lodge Comercio to expel the English Lodge working there “contrary to the stipulations of Article 22 of the Constitutions.” In the following year the Grand Orient followed this up by issuing a circular to all Lodges within its jurisdiction “prohibiting any of their members from visiting the English Lodge referred to, which had been illegally installed in the Orient of this Capital, under the auspices of a foreign Masonic Power.” Further, they were prohibited from receiving any members of the English Lodge as visitors or joining members and ordered to expel immediately any who might have become affiliated to the Brazilian Lodges. This may account for the fact that there are no records of St. John's Lodge after 1849, up to which time it had, apparently, been in a very healthy condition, but Swanson thinks it not impossible that the members found the opposition of the Grand Orient too much and gave up the struggle.

On April 25, 1856, the third English-speaking Lodge—Southern Cross, No. 970 (afterwards No. 672)—was established at Pernambuco. The last returns of this unit were sent to Grand Lodge in 1871 and it was erased in 1894.

On September 30, 1860, Grand Orient, No. 2 and Supreme Council, No. 1, were dissolved and suppressed by Imperial decree, leaving the older Grand Orient in possession of the field. In that year, according to the World Wide Register, there were 130 Lodges in Brazilian territory. Peace, however, was destined to be in possession of the land for but a short time, as, in 1863, the Grand Orient experienced another split into two sections, each becoming known by the name of the street in which it assembled. One, the Grand Orient of Lavradio Valley, chose Baron Cayru as Grand Master. He was succeeded, in 1865, by Dr. Joachim Marcellino de Brito and, in 1870, by the Visconde do Rio Branco. The second, the Grand Orient of Benedictine Valley, elected Dr. Joachim Saldanha Marinho as Grand Master.

In 1872 the schism was apparently healed by the amicable fusion of the two Grand Orients but, within a year, dissensions again broke out with undiminished virulence, each of the two opponents once more seeking recognition as the legitimate Grand Orient of Brazil.

The Lavradios were again arrayed under the standard of Rio Branco, Prime Minister of the Empire; whilst the Benedictinos renewed their fealty to Saldanha Marinho, a former Minister of State and the head of the Liberal party. The various Lodges throughout the country once more divided their allegiance, some adhering to the Lavradio faction, but the larger number enrolling themselves on the side of the Benedictinos.

The discord passed through sundry phases. In the first instance, to go back beyond the temporary fusion of 1872, the two Grand Orients reflected pretty accurately the prevailing opinions of the rival parties in the State. In course of time it became a recognized fact that the Lavradios were supporters of the clerical authority, whilst the Benedictinos, on the other hand, everywhere denounced the evils of priestcraft and Ultramontanism. At this period the clergy entered fully into the fray. On one party they bestowed high praise; on the other they lavished terms of opprobrium. The Lavradios, however, under the benignant rule of Rio Branco, gradually grew less bigoted and illiberal in their ideas and, in 1873, twenty-three of their Lodges went over to the enemy. This example was quickly followed by fifteen others. It is probable that the secession just referred to was also in some measure the result of proceedings which it becomes the next task to relate.

The Jesuits, driven from most of the European countries, selected Brazil as a field for their enterprise. For a long time the Church and the Freemasons had lived in peace and the population of Pernambuco was always recognized as the type of Christian piety. But the Bishop of that diocese—a young monk, aged twenty-three—at the bidding of the Jesuits, attempted to enforce the Papal Bull against the Freemasons. The prelate had counted on the support of the people, but his high-handed measures turned the tide of popular feeling. The Bishop was mobbed in his own palace and the military had to be called in to protect him.

Eventually the Government interfered and the Bishop, disdaining to avail himself of the locus penitentiae which had been devised for him, was sentenced to four years' imprisonment. The Archbishop of Bahia and the Bishops of Olinda, Pará, Rio de Janeiro, Dramantina and Marianna are also said—in violation of the orders of their Government—to have hurled their anathemas against the Craft.

The fickle populace then turned once more against the Freemasons, who suffered much at the hands of the mob, were refused the sacraments of the Church and burial for their dead in consecrated ground, by the clergy. The Benedictinos, nevertheless, held their own and especially distinguished themselves in the spread of liberal ideas. Among the measures they energetically supported were acts for the abolition of slavery and for the foundation of public libraries. Instructive lectures, moreover, were delivered from time to time by members of this party. Meanwhile the Lavradios had gradually shaken off the yoke of their clerical allies, by whom they were ultimately regarded with the same aversion as their rivals and, in 1877, there were attempts at a fusion. At this time the Benedictinos under Saldanha Marinho numbered 216 and the Lavradios, under Rio Branco, 56 Lodges.

In 1874, on November 10, Washington Lodge was founded under a Warrant from the Grand Orient of Brazil, deriving its name from the fact that it was composed almost entirely of American Brethren. It held its meetings at Santa Barbara in the State of São Paulo. The following interesting account of its formation is given by Peter Swanson (op. cit., pp. 8-9):

It is a historical fact that a considerable exodus of Southerners followed the civil war in the United States of America and many of them sought a new home in South America. It so happened that the State of São Paulo was chosen by a number of them and, in due course, Santa Barbara became the home of quite a few families. Amongst these immigrants was William Hutchinson Norris, better known as Colonel Norris, who was 65 years of age when he arrived in Brazil and was accompanied by his son, Dr. Robert Cicero Norris. Colonel Norris became a Mason early in life and, in his native country, had attained the high distinction of Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Alabama. As far as is known his portrait still hangs in the Masonic Hall in Montgomery, Alabama. His son, Robert, was also a Mason, having been initiated in the Fulton Lodge, Dallas, U.S.A., in 1858, his father being, at the time, Master of the Lodge. Dr. Robert served with distinction for four years in the Civil War, during which time he was wounded on various occasions and was finally taken prisoner and interned in Fort Delaware.

It was to men such as these that the Washington Lodge owed its being and, needless to say, Colonel Norris was its first Master. His son, Robert, who, later on, followed him in the Chair, practised medicine in this country until shortly before his death in 1913 and, although the Washington Lodge years ago disappeared from the Grand Orient register, it is pleasing to note that we number the third generation of the family amongst our members. Dr. Robert's son, Thomas John Norris, was received into Masonry in Eureka Lodge, No. 3, a few months ago and it is to him our thanks are due for this interesting information.

On January 18, 1883, a union between the two Grand Orients was consummated and Francisco José Cardoso was proclaimed Grand Master and Sovereign Grand Commander of the now sole Grand Orient of Brazil, which recognized three Rites—the Ancient and Accepted of thirty-three Degrees; the modern French Rite, with seven Degrees; and the Adonhiramite Rite. Each was governed by a Chamber of the Grand Orient, which Chamber was styled a Grand Lodge. In that year there were 139 Lodges, 48 of which met in Rio de Janeiro and 91 in the Provinces.

Other difficulties and troubles, however, occurred until the formation of the Grand Council in 1915, though the present oldest Lodge in Brazil, Eureka, No. 3, dates back to December 22, 1891, when it was granted a Warrant by the Grand Orient of Brazil. The members were given full liberty of action in following the standards set up by the Grand Lodge of England and to work the Emulation Ritual, but they were to be governed by the Constitutions of the Grand Orient. This naturally led to difficulties and, in 1902, the members of Eureka Lodge submitted their case to the Assembleia Geral, the legislative body of the Grand Orient. In December of that year that body gave its decision, which was that wherever the Lodge found that the practice of the Ritual in its purest form conflicted with the Constitutions, the members were to be guided by the Ritual and not by the Constitutions. But, says Swanson (op. cit., p. 12):

As time went on, however, in the body of the Grand Orient, discussions arose on political and religious matters and culminated in a Masonic Congress held in 1909, at which several themes of a rather revolutionary character were submitted. It will be sufficient to mention here that Brazilian Masonry proposed to take the lead in an International Congress for the unification of all Masonic Rites. They further proposed to deal drastically with religious bodies and with social problems on highly revolutionary lines. But the thesis which caused the English-speaking Brethren very serious alarm was the submission that “the actual historical moment exacts the simplification of the rituals, by which means the principle of the broadest tolerance will dominate in the interior of all temples, embracing in the bosom of Masonry, Deists and Atheists, the sectarians of any religion and Freethinkers.

It was not until 1912, however, that a Deputation from the Grand Lodge of England, consisting of Lord Athlumney, Past Grand Warden; P. Tindal-Robertson; H. Passmore Edwards, Past Grand Deacon; J. J. Keevil; and F. H. Chevallier-Boutell, then District Grand Master for the Argentine, visited Brazil “to negotiate some arrangement which would meet the conscientious scruples of English Brethren and establish new relations with the Grand Orient, consistent with the fundamental principles of English Freemasonry.”

The outcome of the negotiations was the formation of a Grand Council (Capitulo) of the York Rite with a Warrant of Sovereignty under the Grand Orient of Brazil. This Grand Council was to become the supreme authority in matters of principle for all the Lodges of the York Rite then existing in Brazil or which should be created in future. The result of this treaty was to "secure independence for the Lodges in Brazil composed of British subjects and ensure the regularity of their working in conformity with the principles of English Masonry." (Quoted from the Report of the Board of General Purposes, presented to the Grand Lodge of England, June 4, 1913.)

In 1927, Sir Alfred Robbins, President of the Board of General Purposes, went out to South America as a Deputation from the Grand Lodge of England and, in his report to the Grand Lodge, he said :

There is one point which is specially a matter for consideration by the United Grand Lodge of England and that is the relationship of Brethren initiated in or joining Lodges which acknowledge suzerainty to a Sovereign Jurisdiction other than that of our own Grand Lodge. As far as that Grand Lodge is concerned, Brethren belonging to Lodges working under the sanction of the Grand Council of Craft Masonry in Brazil have been regarded as having the same rights of entrance to Lodges under this Jurisdiction as if they had originally sprung from it. . . .

New Warrants for English-working Lodges are granted only on the recommendation of this Grand Council; and it is especially provided that a belief in T.G.A.O.T.U. as a fundamental principle of the Order shall be a necessary condition to membership of, or visitation in, any Craft Lodge in Brazil. The position thus created is without exact parallel in any other part of the English Jurisdiction, though one similar can be contemplated as a result of the spread of English-speaking Masonry in Chili. Plainly the situation is one of some delicacy and much tact and discretion are required on both hands for its satisfactory working; but I am glad to be able to record the information given me that, during the fourteen years of the existence of the 1912 Agreement, no serious difficulty has arisen, while the most friendly sentiments towards English Freemasonry have been expressed, as before shown, by the present rulers of the Grand Orient of Brazil.

It should be stated that new Warrants for English-working Lodges are granted only by the Grand Council, whose standing, therefore, as the Governing Body of Craft Masonry in Brazil is quite clear. The Grand Masters of the Grand Council since its formation have been H. L. Wheatley, Past Grand Deacon of England (1915-16); Antonio Luiz dos Santos (1916-21); H. A. Livings (1921-4); Victor N. Tatam (1924-7); and H. J. Hands, since 1927.

On March 28, 1925, the Brazil Craft Masters' Lodge, No. 15, was consecrated and its Warrant provides for meetings to be held at any place where there exists a Lodge working under the Grand Council. The first Master was R. A. Brooking, Past Grand Deacon of England, who was Master of the Eureka Lodge in 1905-6.

The Masonic organisation, or organisations, of Brazil, will be found to be unlike all others in the world, so far as we have information. The Brazilian system is completely mystifying to the casual reader, or even to the student not in possession of facts which it is not at all easy to obtain. This fact accounts for some of the unwillingness found at the present time to recognise Brazilian Masonry as legitimate and regular. This writer confesses that he was for a long time misled by it. It is therefore thought that a serious attempt to set these matters straight will not be improperly set forth. It is significant that we find that this Grand Orient is recognised by the mother United Grand Lodge of England; by Massachusetts; by Louisiana; by Alabama; by California; by the Grand Lodge of Ireland; and by a considerable number of other Grand Lodges in the United States or in other lands, which it is not possible to list here. Since the Grand Lodge of England sent personal representatives to Brazil twice, and since the standards of recognition of Massachusetts and of North Carolina, for example, are almost identical, the question of the regularity of the Masonry of Brazil should have our careful attention.

We have before us a translation into perfect English, of the article printed in the Anuario of the Grand Orient of Brazil for 1915, bearing the title, "The Organisation of Brazilian Masonry."

In this document, it is stated that whereas the usual form of Masonic organisation is either the Supreme Council, the Grand Orient or the Grand Lodge, that of Brazil is a "mixed corporation." In forming this "mixed corporation," the scattered Lodges then existing in Brazil were in 1882 merged into the present organisation. There were in existence then, as there now are in the "mixed corporation," Lodges practising the Scottish Rite, the Modern Rite (sometimes called the French Rite), the Adonhiramite Rite and the York Rite. As regards their Ritual, or liturgically, as they tell us, each of these groups of Lodges of Masonic Bodies derives its Work from the governing authority of the particular rite. As to the government of the Grand Orient there is no outside control.

It will be borne in mind in this connection that the Grand Lodge of Louisiana has certain Lodges which use the Scottish Rite Ritual, but we do not refuse to recognise Louisiana on this account. In Alberta, we believe, there are three different Rituals in use, but this fact does not make this Grand Lodge unfit to be recognised. The same condition is found in many Grand Lodges.

Let us next examine the administration of Masonry in the Grand Orient of Brazil. The centre of its work is the Council General of the Order. It consists of the Grand Officers and the Standing Committees. This Council General under their constitution is a part of the "Assemblea Geral," or General Assembly, which consists of the members of the Council General, just referred to; and in addition, the Representatives of the Lodges at, and of those away from, the seat of power; and the Representatives of each of the Grand Bodies which are heads of the Modern, Scottish, Adonhiramite and York Rites. This General Assembly therefore corresponds in a more or less rough way with the Grand Lodge as we know it; and its meetings coincide more or less with the Communications of the Grand Lodges. In addition, there is a sort of Committee on Appeals, Grievances, Jurisprudence and the like, which is called the Supreme Tribunal of Justice, and which consists of fifteen judges. The term of office of these judges is three years. Five are elected each year by the General Assembly.

This is the legislative and judicial organisation of Brazilian Masonry, as well as its Ritualistic origin and authority. It may be said that the Grand Master is also the Grand Commander of the Supreme Council, and the Grand Secretary is also the Secretary-General of the Supreme Council. There is also interlocking with the "Modern" and Adonhiramite Rites. In the Boletims which come to us quite frequently, there is always first space devoted to the Grand Orient and to the official doings of the Grand Master. This Boletim is published bi-monthly, and describes itself as "the official organ of Brazilian Masonry"—of all sorts. Therefore, following the pages for the Grand Orient and its Grand Master, there are other pages used by the Council-General of the Order; then other sections used by the Supreme Tribunal of Justice; and the scene changes and we find others used by the Supreme Council of the Scottish Rite, the Grand Chapter of the Noachites (Adonhiramite Rite); the Grand Chapter of the York Rite; and of the Grand Chapter of the Modern Rite (the French Rite). The inside back cover lists the Rituals of three Degrees of each of the four Rites as for sale by the Grand Secretary-General; he seems to be indifferent about which he sells.

The latest figures which we can get indicate that there are some 20,000 members of about 330 Lodges. Seven of these Lodges are of the York Rite, 32 Lodges are of the Modern or French Rite; 14 are of the Adonhiramite or Noachite Rite; 274 are of the Scottish Rite; and 3 are of the Schroeder Rite, which has not been referred to above. It was invented by a German named Friedrich Joseph William Schroeder, and consists of seven Degrees, terminating with the Rose Croix. In all cases the Lodges confer the three Symbolic Degrees.

A circular sent out from one of the Brazilian Grand Lodges gives the names of the new Grand Lodges formed in 1927 and later:

- Grand Lodge of Para P. O. Box 455. Belem do Pará-Pará
- Grand Lodge of Ceara Rua Barão do Rio Branco, 210 Sob. Fortaleza Ceará
- Grand Lodge of Pernambuco Recife, Pernambuco P. O. Box 297
- Grand Lodge of Bahia Rua Carlos Gomes 21 S. Salvador-Bahia
- Grand Lodge of Rio de Janeiro Rua do Carmo 61-1° Rio de Janeiro
- Grand Lodge Minas Gereas P. O. Box 127, Bello Horizonte-Minas Gereas
- Grand Lodge of Paraiba P. O. Box 3 Paraiba, Brazil
- Grand Lodge of Sao Paulo Rua da Tabatinguera 37A São Paulo
- Grand Lodge of Rio Grande do Sul P. O. Box 263 Pelotas-Rio Grande do Sul
- Grand Orient of Amazonas e Acre P. O. Box 362-Manáos—Amazonas

All these Bodies of Ancient, Free and Accepted Masons defend the autonomy of the Symbolic Masonry and are sovereign in the jurisdiction of each territory.

The following Symbolic sovereign Bodies act in Brazil separated from the Grand Orient of Brazil:

Grand Orient of Amazonas with 24 Symbolic Lodges
 Grand Lodge of Pará with 7 Symbolic Lodges
 Grand Lodge of Ceará with 5 Symbolic Lodges
 Grand Lodge of Parahyba with 8 Symbolic Lodges
 Grand Lodge of Pernambuco with 7 Symbolic Lodges
 Grand Lodge of Bahia with 21 Symbolic Lodges
 Grand Lodge of Rio de Janeiro with 13 Symbolic Lodges
 Grand Lodge of São Paulo with 27 Symbolic Lodges
 Grand Lodge of Rio Grande do Sul with 13 Symbolic Lodges
 Grand Lodge of Minas Geraes with 11 Symbolic Lodges
 The Grand Lodge of Matto Grosso is in formation, it has 4 adepts Lodges.

Nine-tenths of the Lodges which formed the Brazilian Grand Lodges already enumerated belonged to the Grand Orient of Brazil and when the separation of the Supreme Council took place they decided to separate freely and adopted the organisation of decentralisation, as per the Symbolic Universal Masonry.

Practically all of the new Grand Lodges formed in 1927 adopted substantially the same standards quoted as those of the Grand Lodges of Rio de Janeiro:

It is an independent, responsible and self-governing organisation, with undisputed and exclusive dogmatic and administrative authority over the Symbolic Lodges within its Jurisdiction. It is not, in any sense whatever, subject to, or dividing its authority with any other Body claiming Ritualistic or other supervision or control.

It makes Masons of men only.

It considers necessary and indispensable to admission of any Lodge under its Jurisdiction:

- a. The belief in God, styled T.:G.:A.:O.:T.:U.:
- b. Secrecy.
- c. The symbolism of operative Masonry.
- d. The division of Symbolic Masonry into the Three Degrees, universally adopted by all regular Grand Bodies:—E. A., F. C. and M. M.
- e. The legend of Third Degree (H. A.).
- f. Its dominant purposes are—Charitable, Benevolent, Educational and for the worship of God; and forbids expressly controversial politics and sectarian religion from all activities under its auspices.
- g. The Sacred Book of Divine law, chief among the Three Great Emblematic Lights of Masonry, must indispensably be present and open in the Lodges under its Jurisdiction, while at Work.

It occupies exclusively its territorial jurisdiction and does not presume to extend its authority into, or to establish Lodges in a territory occupied by another lawfully constituted Grand Lodge.

BRITISH GUIANA

Two Lodges are known to have been in existence at the capital, Georgetown, in the eighteenth century. The first, St. Jean de la Reunion, was established by the Grand Lodge of Holland, in 1771; the second, No. 887, on the register of the Grand Lodge of Ireland, apparently very shortly after the cession of a portion of Guiana, now forming the British colony of that name, in 1796. Mackey's Lexicon of Freemasonry, published in 1869, gives 1780 as the year of the foundation of the first Lodge in this colony. The "Three Rivers," viz. Essequibo, Demerara and Berbice, were then in the possession of the Dutch, but there were in Essequibo, at any rate, a considerable number of British settlers, who had been attracted thereto by the inducements offered under Gravesande's administration. In 1740, Essequibo had been opened to all nations; free lands, with ten years' exemption from head taxes, being offered to everyone who took up new plantations. Among the new colonists who arrived from England, Barbados, Antigua and other places, attracted by these inducements, were some enthusiastic Freemasons, who are said to have obtained a Charter for a Lodge from the Grand Lodge of England, of which, however, there is no mention in Lane's Masonic Records. Where the Lodge was originally held is difficult to say, but, probably, it was held at Fort Island, at that time the seat of administration, most of the settlers being then at Essequibo. The Three Rivers were captured, in 1781, by the British, who, in their short occupation of ten months' duration, chose as a site for the new capital the land near the mouth of the Demerara River, on which the city of Georgetown stands. The town was laid out by their successors, the French, who captured the Three Rivers in 1782. The Dutch, who resumed possession in 1784, called the town Stabroek, which became Georgetown in 1812; and the colonies were finally transferred to Great Britain at the peace of 1814-15, just about the time when the union of the two Grand Lodges in England took place.

There are no Masonic records of Freemasonry in these parts prior to 1813 and from 1780 to 1813 the colonies were in a very unsettled condition. It is known, however, that, in 1799, a Dutch Lodge, bearing the somewhat singular name of Cælum non Mutat Jesus, was formed at Berbice and that, in 1801, the Lodge of the Chosen Friends of Demerara was established by the Grand Lodge of New York. This last-named merged, apparently, into the Union Lodge, now No. 247, under the Grand Lodge of England, for that Lodge was, until 1901, when they were stolen, in possession of some old Masonic jewels marked "Chosen Friends, Demerara." Union Lodge was warranted by the Grand Lodge of England on July 28, 1813 and, three years later, its own Masonic Hall was dedicated. It was the very last Lodge to be warranted by the Antient or Atholl Grand Lodge and it is claimed as the first definitely English Lodge constituted at Georgetown. About fifty years ago the Grand Lodge of Canada was invited to found a rival to it but, in loyalty to the Mother Grand Lodge, refused. Further Lodges were founded under the United

Grand Lodge of England: Mount Olive, No. 385, in 1827; Ituni, No. 2642, at New Amsterdam, in 1896; Silent Temple, No. 3254, in 1907; Concord, No. 3508, in 1911; and Roraima, No. 3902, in 1918. Others have also been founded but have ceased to exist. In 1899, the District of British Guiana was formed under the Grand Lodge of England by three Lodges, Union, Mount Olive and Ituni, when Lieutenant-Colonel Thomas Daly was appointed the first District Grand Master. He was succeeded in 1903 by the Hon. Sir Joseph E. Godfrey, M.B., who ruled over the Province until 1915, when William Heather Parratt was appointed. In 1925, the present District Grand Master, Sir Alfred Parker Sherlock, was appointed.

DUTCH GUIANA, OR SURINAM

In the Freemasons' Calendar, 1776, a list is given of the Lodges in Holland and the Dutch colonies. Among these are La Vertieuse, 1769 and La Fidèle Sincérité, 1771, at Batavia; Concordia, 1762, La Zelée, 1767 and Le Croissant des Trois Clefs, 1768, at Surinam. Apparently the same Lodges, though with slightly varied dates of formation and, in a solitary instance, a change of name, are also shown in the edition of the same publication for 1778. Other Lodges in Guiana, of which there is no complete record, have doubtless lived their span and died.

FRENCH GUIANA, OR CAYENNE

Three Lodges in all appear to have been constituted at Cayenne, the capital of the colony, which is now scarcely anything more than a penal settlement of the French Government. The first, L'Anglaise, was established in 1755 by the Mother Lodge of the same name—No. 204—at Bordeaux; the second, La Parfaite Union, in 1829, by the Grand Orient of France; and the third, La France Equinoxiale, in 1844, by the Supreme Council 33° of the same country.

CHILE

Exactly when Freemasonry was established in Chile cannot definitely be ascertained. The earliest Lodge in the Republic of which there is any record, L'Etoile du Pacifique, was founded under the Grand Orient of France on September 12, 1851, but 1840 is claimed as the date of the foundation of an older Lodge. In 1852 the Pacific Lodge was founded under a dispensation from the Grand Master of California, but it had a brief existence of one year. Then came Loge L'Union Fraternelle, under the Grand Orient of France, established at Valparaiso, in 1854. The fourth Lodge, Aurora de Chilé, is said to have been established under the same sanction at Concepcion and, subsequently, to have taken the name of Fraternidad, but it cannot be traced in the French Calendars. The fifth, Estrella del Sur, which also met at Concepcion, was chartered by the Grand Orient of Peru, but the Warrant was returned in 1860.

The next three Lodges—Bethesda, Southern Cross and Hiram of Copiapo—derived their origin from the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts, the first in 1853, the last two in 1858. Bethesda and Southern Cross met at the capital and Hiram at Copiapo at first, afterwards at Caldera. Bethesda Lodge continued, but Southern Cross and Hiram became defunct, the first in 1860, the second in 1880.

In 1861, a member of the Ancient and Accepted Rite from Lima, Peru, established, on his own authority, a Lodge called Orden y Libertad, in Copiapo. This body at once sent out circulars to the other Lodges in Chile asking for recognition. This they declined to accord, basing their refusal on the ground that the founder of their Lodge belonged to an irregular and spurious Supreme Council; had been expelled from the Supreme Council of Peru; and that it was not within the power, even of a regular Inspector-General of the Ancient and Accepted Rite to establish a Lodge on his own authority, without the sanction of a Supreme Council of the Rite.

In April 1862, the news that Marshal Magnan had been appointed Grand Master of the Grand Orient by the Emperor, Napoleon III, reached Chile, when, immediately Lodges L'Union, Fraternelle, Valparaiso and Fraternidad, at Concepcion, returned their Charters and were formally erased from the register of the Grand Orient of France by decree dated November 10, 1863. The reason for this action was that Marshal Magnan was not a Freemason—he had never been initiated. The members of the Chilean Lodges met in Valparaiso on May 24, 1862 and passed the following resolutions:

Not to acknowledge the authority of Grand Master Magnan, in view of his having been appointed in an irregular manner.

To found the Grand Lodge of Chile with sovereignty over the whole of the territory of the Republic, so far as the three Degrees in Freemasonry are concerned.

Loge L'Etoile du Pacifique refused to unite with the other Lodges in the formation of a Grand Lodge but, in order to secure a quorum, a Lodge, called Progreso, was founded and, at the Convention, there were present Delegates from the Lodge Orden y Libertad and these four Lodges combined to form the Grand Lodge of Chile.

From the date of its formation the Grand Lodge has progressed and to-day numbers 65 Lodges and 23 Tringulos (Lodges of Instruction or Lodges in the course of formation, corresponding to "Lodges under Dispensation" in the American Jurisdictions), with an aggregate membership of more than 4,500.

Since the Grand Lodge has been formed, no Lodge has been founded in that territory under a foreign Jurisdiction, notwithstanding the fact that several Petitions were presented to the Grand Lodges of England, Scotland and Massachusetts. The Petitions were, in each case, refused by the Grand Lodges named and the Petitioners were recommended to organise Lodges under the auspices of the Grand Lodge of Chile.

With reference to this point, there was an interesting exchange of communications between the United Grand Lodge of England and the Grand Lodge of Chile in 1927. In 1926, the Board of General Purposes (England) reported that a number of Freemasons of British nationality, residing in Santiago, had requested from the Grand Lodge of Chile the necessary authorization to found a Lodge to be named the Prince of Wales Lodge, with the assent of H.R.H., which would act according to the working and ceremonial recognized in the Lodges throughout the English Jurisdiction. This request was granted immediately. Within a very short time two other Lodges were established under the like conditions. There were thus three Lodges established in Chile in 1927, which permitted English-speaking Freemasons to practise Freemasonry in their own language and to perform the ceremonial in the manner to which they were accustomed. The three Lodges are known respectively as Prince of Wales, No. 19; Andes, No. 20; and Montandon, No. 22. A petition was also presented by some German Freemasons resident in Chile for the privilege of founding a Lodge which should conduct its proceedings in the German language and in the German manner; and the Grand Master, Hector Boccardo, warranted Lodge Germania, No. 21, to work according to the ritual of the Grand Lodge of Prussia. Reporting on this matter to his Grand Lodge, the Grand Master said :

The enthusiasm of all these Brethren so to work under our Jurisdiction is good for our Grand Lodge; for the many Brethren, constituted like this, demonstrates our conception of the Masonic Powers upon which these Brethren originally depended.

Numerous other Lodges would be constituted under similar auspices but for the difficulty of many of the Grand Lodges of North America prohibiting their members to belong to more than one Lodge at the same time; and many of these North American Brethren do not wish to sever their connexion with their Mother Lodges.

Our Grand Lodge has made this friendly gesture to obtain the good elements permanently and for all time in the Lodges and we are hoping that this difficulty will disappear shortly.

The authorization of Lodges that work in a different language and ritual than ours is not easy and it is for this reason that, in a separate message, I am proposing certain constitutional reforms to solve the difficulty.

The Chilean Supreme Council of the 33° was formed in 1899 when a Treaty was signed with that body establishing clearly the exclusive jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of Chile over the three Degrees of Symbolic Masonry, also the absolute independence of the Supreme Council.

The connexion of Chilean Freemasonry with the Grand Orient of France was, of course, prior to the alteration of the Constitutions of the latter. The Grand Lodge of Chile has always demanded from its initiates a belief in the Supreme Being and it has always maintained the Bible on its altars. Discussion of political matters in Lodges is also prohibited. It has received recognition from about eighty Jurisdictions, England included.

In 1928, the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts, which has a District Grand Lodge, or several Lodges, in Chile, sent out a letter containing the following:

The Grand Lodge of Chile was recognised by this Grand Lodge in December of 1862. We were, we believe, the first Grand Lodge to recognise it, as it had then been formed but a few months. There was then a Lodge in Chile working under a Massachusetts Charter. That Lodge preferred to retain its original allegiance and within a few years two other Lodges were chartered by us in Chile, the Grand Lodge of Chile not insisting upon its sovereign rights over the territory. These three Lodges still function under the obedience of the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts and in warm and close fraternal relations with their Chilean Brethren.

In recent years three Lodges of English and Americans, using the English language and English or American ritual, have been chartered by the Grand Lodge of Chile, and we understand that the organisation of Lodges of a similar sort is encouraged.

We have found the Grand Lodge of Chile in every way worthy of our respect and esteem. M.: W.: Dudley H. Ferrell visited Chile in 1925, during his administration as Grand Master. He had conference with M.: W.: Brother Boccardo and other leaders in Chilean Masonry and found their Masonic principles and practice fully conforming to the strictest type of Masonic regularity and propriety as we understand it.

CHAPTER VI

FREEMASONRY IN ASIA

IT has been the practice of Masonic writers to pass very lightly over the history of Freemasonry in non-European countries and to exclude almost from mention the condition or progress of the Craft in even the largest Colonies or Dependencies within the sovereignty of an Old-World power. Thus we are told by Findel (p. 614) that "the Lodges existing in these quarters of the globe were one and all under the Grand Lodges of England, Scotland, Holland, or France, therefore their history forms an inseparable part of that of the countries in question." With all deference, however, the position here laid down must be respectfully demurred to. In the East and West Indies—and elsewhere—the natives of many countries commingled, Lodges existed under a variety of Jurisdictions and, if an intelligent appreciation of Freemasonry is best attained by comparing one Masonic system with another, the Brethren at a distance from Europe enjoyed, in many cases, opportunities denied to those residing in London, Paris, or Berlin. The most popular and extensively diffused of the Masonic innovations which either claim an equality with, or a superiority over, the Grand Authority of the Craft, were cradled in the Greater Antilles; whilst in the Lesser Antilles—as in the East Indies—British, French and Dutch Lodges existed side by side. Indeed, in some of these islands, there were Lodges under other Jurisdictions than those already enumerated and the reader, desirous of studying the Masonic history of the West Indies, would, in the absence of any further materials to facilitate his inquiry, be left very much in the position of an astronomer without a telescope, who might seek to compute the path of a planet by conjecture.

According to Rebold (Histoire des trois Grandes Loges, p. 119), "After Holland had become incorporated with the French Empire (July 1810), the Grand Orient of France assumed the control of all the Dutch Lodges which then existed, with the exception of those of the Indies, which remained under the obedience which had created them and which carried on the title of Grand Lodge of the United Provinces of the Low Countries."

Thus, for a time and during the temporary obliteration of Holland as a kingdom, what had been the Colonial Lodges of that monarchy, became, in strictness, the only component members of the Grand Lodge.

In another way the Provincial Grand Lodge of Bengal, in British India, became, on more than one occasion, in everything but name, a Grand Lodge, independent of the mother country and, unless its proceedings formed the subject of a separate inquiry, the student who in all good faith accepted the assurance of Findel, that the history of Masonry in Hindustan was inseparable from that of England, would vainly search the archives of the Premier Grand Lodge of the World, for the names of Lodges that never appeared on her roll, or for an account of transactions that were never entered in her records.

CHINA

During the eighteenth century, two Lodges of foreign origin were constituted in the Celestial Empire—the Lodge of Amity, No. 407, under an English and Elizabeth under a Swedish, Warrant. The former was erected in 1767, the latter in 1788; in each case the place of assembly was Canton. The English Lodge was not carried forward at the Union (1813) and Elizabeth came to an end in 1812.

The next Lodge erected on Chinese soil was the Royal Sussex, No. 735, at Canton, for which a Warrant was granted by the United Grand Lodge of England in 1844. This is still in existence at Shanghai, as No. 501. A second—Zetland, No. 768—was established at Hong-Kong under the same sanction, in 1846, which also is still in existence, as No. 525; and a third—Northern Lodge of China—at Shanghai, in 1849, now No. 570. No further increase of Lodges took place until 1864, in which year two were added to the English roll, at Hong-Kong and Shanghai respectively, known to-day as Victoria Lodge of Hong-Kong, No. 1026 and Tuscan Lodge, No. 1027; and one each at the latter port under the Grand Lodges of Scotland and Massachusetts. In 1865, the foundation stone of a Masonic Hall at Shanghai for the joint use of English, Scottish and American Lodges was laid by R. Freke Gould. In 1867 the Lodge of Perseverance, No. 1165, was consecrated at Hong-Kong, which is still on the register. In the following year Lodge Star of Peace, No. 1217, was formed at Ningpo, but this was erased in April 1872. The United Service Lodge, No. 1341, was founded at Hong-Kong in October 1870 and has survived. Other English Lodges in China are the Doric, No. 1433, consecrated in December 1873, still in existence; the Ionic Lodge of Amoy, No. 1781, founded in September 1878, but since erased; the Corinthian Lodge of Amoy, No. 1806, consecrated in December 1878, still in existence; the Union Lodge at Tientsin, No. 1951, formed in October, 1881; Lodge Star of Southern China, No. 2013, consecrated in March 1883, all three still in existence. In more recent years there has been a marked increase in the number of Lodges in both Northern and Southern China, as evidenced by the formation of the following Lodges, all still on the English register: Northern Star of China, No. 2673, Newchang (1897); Far Cathay, No. 2855, Hankow (1901); Coronation, No. 2931, Tientsin (1902); Daintree, No. 2938, Wei-hai-wei (1902); Tongshan, No. 3001, Tongshan (1903); University of Hong-Kong, No. 3666 (1913); Swatow, No. 3705, Swatow (1913); Cathay, No. 4373, Hong-Kong (1921); St. George's, No. 4575, Shanghai (1923). The register of Irish Lodges contains the names of none in China, but there are three in Hong-Kong and Southern China under the Scottish Constitution, viz. No. 618, St. John; No. 848, Naval and Military; and No. 923, Eastern Scotia, governed by a District Grand Lodge ; with five in Northern China, viz. No. 428, Cosmopolitan, Shanghai ; No. 493, St. Andrew-in-the-Far-East, Shanghai ; No. 924, St. Andrew, Chefoo ; No. 936, Saltoun, Shanghai ; and No. 1300, Caledonia, Tientsin, also under the governance of a District Grand Lodge.

The District Grand Lodge of China under the English Constitution was formed in 1847 when Samuel Rawson was appointed Provincial Grand Master of British Freemasonry in China. In 1875 this was split up into two Districts—Northern China and Hong-Kong, and Southern China.

In May, 1930, a number of Masons in Shanghai Petitioned the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts for a Dispensation to form a Lodge to be composed largely of Chinese. The Petition was denied, and they applied to the Grand Lodge of the Philippine Islands and on October 28, 1930, received the Dispensation. In 1932 a Dispensation was granted from the same source to form a Lodge at Nanking.

JAPAN

The first English Lodge in Japan, the Yokohama, No. 1092, was founded in 1866, being warranted on January 30 and consecrated on June 26 of that year. A second Lodge at Yokohama, the O Tentosama, No. 1263, was chartered on April 22, 1869 and consecrated on July 28 of the same year. The Nippon Lodge, No. 1344, at Teddo (now Tokio), was warranted on December 7, 1870 and constituted on May 26, 1871. The Warrant was afterwards surrendered and the Lodge was erased from the list on July 27, 1883. In 1872, a Charter was issued for the Rising Sun Lodge, No. 1401, at Kobe and, eleven years later, the Tokio Lodge, No. 2015, was constituted at Tokio. In 1873, a District Grand Lodge of Japan, under the Grand Lodge of England, was formed, which has to-day under its jurisdiction Lodges Yokohama, O Tentosama, Rising Sun and Tokio, mentioned above and the Lodge of Albion in the Far East, at Kobe, No. 3729, warranted in 1914. Charles Henry Dallas was the first District Grand Master appointed ; succeeded, in 1886, by William Henry Stone ; in 1900, by Edward Flint Kilby ; in 1904, by William Henry Stone for a second term of office, which lasted until 1911, when George Harvey Whymark was appointed ; and, in 1923, by Stanley Edward Unite. The Lodges are far removed one from another, the distances apart being as far as 400 miles. The Grand Lodge of Scotland has two Lodges—Hiogo and Osaka, No. 498, established in 1870, in Kobe and Lodge Star in the East, No. 640, established in 1879, at Yokohama. A Scottish Lodge, No. 710, established in 1884, at Nagasaki, has ceased to exist.

There are numerous stories by the Japanese, dating back to the latter part of the seventeenth and the earlier part of the eighteenth centuries, of mysterious documents, carefully preserved in secret by the natives, which they regard as precious heirlooms. Several of these are matters of history, but the theory has been advanced (Masonic Magazine, vol. vii, p. 319) that these documents may have been vouchers of Lodges, Warrants, lists of members, etc and, in some cases, the certificates of ancestors.

When, in 1923, the Japanese earthquake occurred, the Grand Lodge of England at once voted the sum of two thousand guineas to the Relief Fund. The Lodge at Tokio and the two Lodges at Yokohama were specially affected by the disaster. The Charters of the Yokohama Lodge and Chapter (this latter established in 1871), No. 1092; of the O Tentosama Lodge and Chapter (the latter established in 1912), No. 1263; the Orient Mark Lodge, No. 304, constituted at Yokohama, in 1882; Lodge Star in the East, No. 640, Scottish Constitution; and the various bodies holding under the Supreme Council of the Southern Jurisdiction of the Ancient and Accepted Rite in the United States, were all lost, together with the furniture and regalia, both Lodge and private, the regalia of the District Grand Lodge and a valuable Masonic library. The records of the Yokohama Lodge, from its formation in 1866, deposited in the vault, were destroyed, while all the Minute books, registers and current records of the different bodies, kept by the various secretaries, were lost. This, apart from the loss of life. A second Mark Lodge in Japan, the Torii, No. 837, was established on October 22, 1926, under the Grand Mark Lodge of England.

The Imperial Japanese Government does not allow its citizens to become members of any secret society at whose meetings the police may not be present, but Masonic Lodges composed of citizens of other countries are not molested. In view of this prohibition it is not likely that there will be native Lodges.

PERSIA

Thory informs us that Askeri Khan, ambassador of the Shah at Paris, who was himself admitted into Masonry in that city—November 24, 1808—took counsel with his French Brethren respecting the foundation of a Lodge at Ispahan (Acta Latamorum, vol. i, p. 237). Whether this project was ever carried into effect it is impossible to say, but two years later we find another Persian—also an ambassador—figuring in Masonic history. On June 15, 1810, His Excellency Mirza Abdul Hassan Khan was granted the rank of Past Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of England. This personage—the Minister accredited from the Court of Persia to that of Great Britain—in addition to having been a great traveller both in Hindustan and Arabia, had also performed his devotions at Mecca. In the course of his journey from Teheran he passed through Georgia, Armenia and Anatolia. At Constantinople he embarked in a British man-of-war and reached England in December 1809. Sir Gore Ouseley, Bart., who was selected to attend upon the Mirza “as Mehmander—an officer of distinction, whose duty it is to receive and entertain foreign princes and other illustrious personages” (European Magazine, vol. lvii, 1810, p. 403)—in the following year (1810) received the appointment of ambassador to the Shah of Persia and was also granted an English Patent as Provincial Grand Master for that country. No Lodges, however, were established in Persia at any time by the Grand Lodge of England, nor—so far as the evidence extends—by any other external authority. The Mirza Abdul Hassan Khan was made a Mason by Lord Moira in 1810 (Freemasons' Magazine, January 2, 1864). The extent of his services to the Craft must be left undecided; but it was stated in the Masonic journals, on the authority of a Persian military officer then pursuing his studies in Berlin, that nearly all the members of the Court of Teheran were Freemasons.

THE EASTERN ARCHIPELAGO

The Neptune Lodge, No. 344, was established at Penang (Prince of Wales's Island) under the Antients, on September 6, 1809, but is stated to have become extinct in 1819. It was revived in 1825 and again became dormant in 1846, although it was not erased from the register until June 4, 1862. In June 1822, a military Lodge—Humanity with Courage, at Georgetown, Penang, No. 826 on the register of the Antients—was warranted from Bengal, but it did not appear in the List until 1828 and it was struck out of the Calendar in the following year, having, it is said, become irregular through the initiation of civilians. The next Lodge to be founded at Penang was the Royal Prince of Wales, No. 1555, still in existence and the only English Lodge there. It was warranted on July 5, 1875 and consecrated on December 4 following. In honour of the Grand Secretary of that period, Colonel Shadwell Clerke, a Lodge bearing his name and numbered 2336 was consecrated at Penang on May 2, 1890, but this has since been erased.

The oldest Lodge in Singapore is Zetland-in-the-East, No. 508, was warranted on February 28, 1845 and, in 1867, united with the Lodge of Fidelity, founded in 1858. The Lodge of St. George, No. 1152, still in existence, was warranted on February 22, 1867 and consecrated on June 22 following. There are two other Lodges in Singapore under the English Constitution, St. Michael, 2933, founded in 1902 and Eastern Gate, No. 2970, founded in 1903.

The District of the Eastern Archipelago under the English Jurisdiction was founded in 1858, with William Henry McLeod Read, C.M.G., as District Grand Master. He was succeeded in 1885 by Colonel Samuel Dunlop, C.M.G.; in 1891, by General Sir Charles Warren, G.C.M.G., K.C.B., renowned as the first Master of the Quatuor Coronati Lodge, No. 2076; in 1895, by Lieut.-Colonel Sir Charles Bullen Hugh Mitchell, G.C.M.G. There was an interregnum from 1899 to 1902 and, in the latter year, Sir Walter John Napier, D.C.L., was appointed, who held the office until 1909, when Frederick M. Elliot, O.B.E., was appointed. In 1919, Walter Frederick Nutt, O.B.E., became his successor, followed, in 1923, by Major-General Sir Neill Malcolm, K.C.B., D.S.O. and, in the following year, by the Hon. Mr. Justice Percy J. Sproule, who still holds the appointment.

There are to-day fifteen Lodges under the English Jurisdiction in the District of the Eastern Archipelago and, according to the official returns, neither Ireland nor Scotland is represented there.

SUMATRA

An English Lodge—No. 356—was established at Bencoolen in 1765; two others—Nos. 424 and 559—at Fort Marlborough in 1772 and 1796 respectively. These continued to appear in the Lists until 1813; but only one, the Marlborough (afterwards Rising Sun) Lodge (1772), was carried forward at the Union, which ultimately became No. 242 and, having omitted to make any returns for several years, was erased March 5, 1862. Sumatra was erected into an English Province in 1793 under John Macdonald, who was succeeded as Provincial Grand Master—December 10, 1821—by H. R. Lewis, who continued to hold office until his death in 1877, there having been one Lodge in existence at the time of his original appointment and none at all for fifteen years preceding his decease.

Java, Celebes, Borneo and the Philippine Lodges were established in these islands by the Grand Lodge of the Netherlands at various dates between 1769 and 1885. The Grand Lodge of Scotland has one Lodge in the Philippine Islands, but England and Scotland are not represented in these islands.

GRAND ORIENT DU LIBAN

The following official document was received by the Masonic Grand Lodges in the year 1934:

The Grand Orient of Lebanon has the honour to announce to the Grand Lodges and Orients its foundation and constitution as an Independent Body; and, considering that a number of Masonic Lodges had been working under Charters from various Grand Lodges and Orients, and that the active Lodges in the Lebanon which worked under Foreign Masonic Authorities now desire to unite under an Independent National Grand Orient, now, therefore, the following Lodges, to wit:

Al Waleed, Hermon, Bokaa-al-Aziz, Al-Maaref, Hermol, Al-Meena-Al-Ameen, Hermon-Tripoli, Phoenecia, Damascus, Annoor, with an enrolment of over eight hundred members have met and unanimously decided to return each its Charter to the Grand Authority that granted it, and have unanimously decided further to found and constitute a Grand Orient under the name of the Grand Orient of Lebanon. The said Lodges have drawn an organic constitution for the Grand Orient of Lebanon based on the principles and traditions of the Ancient and Accepted Rite.

On the 15th day of September, 1934, the newly organised and constituted Grand Orient of Lebanon met, consecrated and dedicated its Temple and installed its Officers in their respective chairs.

The Grand Orient of Lebanon begins its work trusting in the assistance and guidance of the Great Architect of the Universe and hoping that friendly relations and courtesies will be exchanged between the Grand Lodges and Grand Orients and itself and that the fraternal bonds which unite Masons all over the world will grow stronger as the days pass by. The Grand Orient of Lebanon trusts further that its older Sister Organisations will extend to it their assistance and recognition and thereby help it to go onward with them, hand in hand for the furtherance of the Cause.

PALESTINE

Lodges under the Grand Lodge of Egypt and others under the British Grand Lodges have existed in Palestine many years. These did not for a long time think of the formation of any Grand Lodge. It was only in 1932 and 1933 that this step was taken. The Symbolic Grand Lodge of Palestine was formed and appears to be Working upon principles very acceptable to British and American Masonic standards. It appears to be composed of Lodges of several nationalities, with Egyptian Lodges preponderating. The Lodges formed under the British Constitutions have not yet seen fit to connect themselves with this new organisation but there is no hostility between the groups.

In addition to the Symbolic Grand Lodge of Palestine, there is another organisation which has adopted the name, "Symbolic Grand Lodge of Germany in Exile." About 1931, the Symbolic Grand Lodge of Germany was organised in the German Republic, and after the Hindenburg régime gave way to the Hitler government, all Masonry in Germany was dissolved by the government of the Reichsfuehrer. The Symbolic Grand Lodge, while not in some respects like any of the old Masonic Bodies of Germany, was akin to the Humanist group. A nucleus of its members with some Officers, the names and titles of whom are not stated to us, assembled in Jerusalem and then announced that the Symbolic Grand Lodge of Germany was functioning in Palestine in exile. Circulars have been sent out giving accounts of the activities of this group, and reports have been quite favourable.

CHAPTER VII

FREEMASONRY IN INDIA AND CEYLON

BENGAL

ON December 27, 1728, a Deputation was granted by the Grand Lodge of England to George Pomfret, authorizing him to "open a new Lodge in Bengal." Thus, says Preston, he "first introduced Masonry into the English settlements in India" and Pomfret figures in the Masonic Year Book as the first Provincial Grand Master for East India. Nothing further, however, is known of this individual and even the voluminous Calcutta records are silent concerning him. He was succeeded in 1729 by Captain Ralph Farwinter as Provincial Grand Master "for East India in Bengal" and, under his direction, a Lodge was duly established in 1730, known as Lodge East India Arms, which, in the Engraved Lists, is distinguished by the arms of the company and is described as No. 72 at Bengal in the East Indies. The records of the Grand Lodge of England contain an entry to the effect that, on December 3, 1731, Captain Farwinter attended a Communication as the Provincial Grand Master for India and that, on his return to India, he sent "from his Lodge of Bengal a chest of the best arrack for the use of the Grand Lodge and ten guineas for the Masonic Charity." At the Communication held on December 13, 1733, the thanks of the Grand Lodge of England were voted to him for his gift.

The following letter of thanks, which was sent by the Grand Lodge of England to the Provincial Grand Lodge of Bengal, is taken from a copy which appears in the Rawlinson Collection in the Bodleian Library at Oxford (Rawl. Ms., c. 136).

R^t Worshipful G. Master, Deputy and Wardens, with the other Worshipful Members of the Grand Lodge at Calcutta in Bengall in East India.

All our Fraternity here rejoyce much in the frequent good account of your excellent Conduct, the Grand Lodge have been refreshed by your genteel Present of Arrack, which made curious Punch and you may without telling believe that we drank all your healths after the ancient manner of Masons.

We return our hearty Thanks for it, but much more for your two handsome Presents of ten Guineas by Br. Capt. Farr Winter and twenty Guineas by Br. Capt. Rigby for the Releife of our poor Brethren : which we lodged in the hands of our Treasurer and recorded in our Books as a lasting Evidence to Posterity how strong and extensive appears the Brotherly Love of true and faithful Masons surmounting all tempestous Billows, Promontories and distant Capes and Climes.

You have well rewarded us for our Deputation or Patent and we heartily rejoice in your Honour and Reputation, as you are a part of our Selves, for it all redounds to us and we cannot forbear saying that no Lodge out of Britain has been so generous and so deserving our esteem.

Providence has fixed your Lodge near those learned Indians that affected to be called Noachidæ, the strict observers of his Precepts taught in those parts by the disciples of the great Zoroastris, the learned Archimagus of Bactria or Grand Masters of the Magians, whose religion is largely preserved in India (which we have no concern about) and also many of the Rituals of the ancient Fraternity used in his Time, perhaps more then they are sensible of themselves. Now if it was consistent with your other Business to discover in those parts the Remains of old Masonry and transmitt them to us, we should be all Thankfull, but especially the learned Brothers who grasp at new Discoveries from ancient Nations that have been renowned for Arts and Science and must have some valuable remains among them still.

The Grand Master (the Lord Viscount Weymouth) orders me to write this, with as many commendations as you can imagine from all the Brethren, who, I may assure you, of their most sincere affection, and I am with great esteem

R^t Worship^t and Honrd Brethren

Your most humble servant and affectionate brother

I. R.

Secretary to the Grand Lodge.

The name of Ralph Far Winter appears as a member of the Lodge held at the Queen's Arms in Newgate Street, in a list published in 1730. The name of Capt. R. Farr Winter also appears in the same year as a member of the Lodge held at the Hoop and Griffin in Leadenhall Street. He was Steward at the Grand Festival held on March 30, 1734.

Farwinter was succeeded by James Dawson, temp. incert. and by Zachariah Gee, who held the office from 1740 to 1754, but whose name, for some reason, does not appear in the Masonic Year Book. He was Gunner and Master Attendant at Old Fort William and is described in an official document as "honest, industrious, to be confided in." Gee was succeeded in 1755 by the Hon. Roger Drake. According to the Minutes of Grand Lodge, at the Communication held on April 10, 1755, James Dawson, late Provincial Grand Master for East India, was present and the Grand Master "was pleased to appoint the Honourable Roger Drake, Esq., Provincial Grand Master at Bengal for East India." Drake was Governor of Calcutta at the time of the attack made on the settlement by Surajah Dowlah in 1756 and escaped the horrors of the Black Hole by deserting his post and flying to the shipping; but though present at the retaking of Calcutta in January 1757 by the forces under Clive and Watson, it is improbable—after the calamity which befell the Settlement—that he resumed the duties of his Masonic office.

Archdeacon W. K. Firminger, in his Freemasonry in Bengal and the Punjab points out that the hero of the Black Hole, Zephaniah Holwell, the renowned Collector of Calcutta, was a Freemason. He was offered an easy opportunity of escape, but elected to remain with his fellow-captives and be their leader in the sufferings of that awful night, of which Macaulay said "nothing in history or fiction, not even the story which Ugolino told in the sea of everlasting ice, after he had wiped his bloody lips on the scalp of his murderer, approaches the horrors which were recounted by the few survivors." On February 13, 1759, says Firminger, "Messrs. Holwell and Mapletoff, on behalf of the Provincial Grand Lodge of Masons, laid before the Board the sum of Rs. 2,475," but the bond was lost at the capture of Fort William. Holwell, it may also be mentioned, erected on the site of the Black Hole, in the north-west corner of Tank Square, an obelisk, fifty feet high, inscribed with the names of the thirty victims who perished on that occasion on June 20, 1757, but the monument was ordered to be pulled down by the Marquess of Hastings.

The Minutes of Grand Lodge inform us that William Mackett, Provincial Grand Master for Calcutta, was present at a meeting of that body on November 17, 1760 and we learn from the same authority that, in 1762, at the request of the Lodges in the East Indies, Grand Lodge "ordered that a Deputation be made out in the neatest manner appointing Cullen J. Smith, Esq., of Calcutta, to be Provincial Grand Master for India, the expenses to be defrayed out of the funds of Grand Lodge." Culling J. Smith (for that is the correct spelling of the name) was secretary of the East India Company and a churchwarden at St. Anne's Church, which figures largely in the Masonic life of that period. He had previously been sub-impport warehouse keeper. He signalized his appointment to the high office by sending to Grand Lodge the sum of fifty guineas for the Public Fund of Charity.

At the period in question it was the custom in Bengal "to elect the Provincial Grand Master annually, by the majority of the voices of the members then present, from among those who had passed through the different offices of the [Provincial] Grand Lodge and who had served as Deputy Provincial Grand Master." This annual election, as soon as notified to the Grand Lodge of England, was confirmed by the Grand Master without its being thought an infringement of his prerogative. In accordance with this practice, Samuel Middleton was elected Provincial Grand Master in 1767, but a few years previously a kind of roving commission had been granted by Earl Ferrers, Grand Master of England, 1762-3, to Captain John Bluwitt, or Blevit, Commander of the Admiral Watson, Indiaman, "wherever no other Provincial Grand Master may be found."

Middleton's election was confirmed—October 31, 1768—and as the Dispensation forwarded by the Grand Secretary was looked upon as abrogating the practice of annual elections, he accordingly held the office of Provincial Grand Master until his death in 1775. According to the terms of the Patent, in the absence of Middleton, Thomas Burdell might act until a new Provincial Chief was appointed. It appears, also, that one John Graham was elected Provincial Grand Master to succeed in like manner.

The records of the Provincial Grand Lodge reach back only to 1774, the earlier ones having been lost and it is, therefore, convenient if, before leaning on their authority, a preliminary outline is given of the progress of Masonry in Bengal from the erection of the first Lodge in 1730. A second Lodge, now known as Star in the East, No. 67, Calcutta, soon after sprang into existence, which, becoming too numerous, seven of its members were constituted—April 16, 1740—by the Provincial Grand Lodge into a new and regular Lodge. Of the former nothing further is known; but the Grand Lodge of England, on the petition of the latter, ordered “the said Lodge to be enrolled (as requested) in the list of regular Lodges, agreeable to the date of their Constitution.”

A Lodge—No. 221—was formed at “Chandernagore, ye chief French Settlement,” in 1752, which became dormant in 1788 and was erased in 1790. Others sprang up at Calcutta, 1761—No. 275, now Lodge of Industry and Perseverance, No. 109; and at Patna and Burdwan, 1768—Nos. 354 and 363, erased in 1790. As the last named, however, were styled respectively the 8th, 9th and 10th Lodges, some others of local constitution must have been erected.

Five Lodges—Nos. 441-445—were warranted in 1772, the 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th and 9th Lodges of Bengal. These were at Dacca, Calcutta and with the 1st, 3rd and 2nd Brigades respectively. All, however, with the exception of the 6th Lodge, No. 442, Calcutta—afterwards Unanimity—were erased in 1790. This became No. 292 in 1792, but lapsed in the following year, when its place was assigned to Lodge Anchor and Hope, Calcutta, on the Provincial establishment.

The 10th and 11th Lodges of Bengal—Nos. 452 and 453—were added to the roll in 1773 and the 12th—No. 482—in 1775. The former were at Moorshedabad and Calcutta respectively; whilst the latter was “with the 3rd Brigade.” No. 453, which underwent many vicissitudes, appears later as Lodge Humility with Fortitude; whilst No. 482 is described in 1793 as the Lodge of St. George in the East and, in the following year—having then become No. 316—as the Lodge of True Friendship, with the 3rd Brigade.

Returning to the year 1774, there appear, from the records of the Provincial Grand Lodge, to have been at that time only three Lodges in Calcutta, viz. (local) Nos. 1, Star in the East—constituted in 1740 as the third, but which became the first, Lodge of Bengal on its predecessor of 1730 dropping out in 1770; 2, Industry and Perseverance; and 3, Humility with Fortitude. Besides these, however, there were Lodges at Chandernagore (French settlement), Patna, Burdwan, Dacca and Moorshedabad, also at some of the military stations or with the army brigades. The Provincial Grand Lodge under England seems to have worked in perfect harmony with a similar body under Holland, “The Grand Lodge of Solomon at Chinsura” (Dutch settlement) and the officers and members of the two Societies exchanged visits and walked together in processions. Constitutions were granted by the Grand Lodge of Holland to the following Lodges in Bengal:—Solomon, 1759; Perseverance, 1771; and Constance (Houghly), 1773.

On February 15, 1775, the Provincial Grand Lodge “taking into consideration the propriety of preserving concord and unanimity, recommend it to the Brethren who call themselves ‘Scott and Elect,’ that they do lay aside the wearing of red ribbons, or any other marks of distinction, but such as are proper to the Three Degrees, or to the Grand Lodge as such"—a request, we are told, which was cheerfully complied with.

Middleton passed away in 1775 and, in the following year, Charles Stafford Pleydell was elected in his room, but the confirmation of the Grand Lodge of England was withheld until 1778. Pleydell, in addition to being Collector or Collector-General of Calcutta, member of the Board of Trade, Master in Chancery and Superintendent of Police, seems also to have had a private practice as a barrister in Calcutta. As already noted, John Graham had, in 1769, been elected to succeed Middleton whenever he should vacate his office, but Graham had left India in 1775, before Middleton's demise. Pleydell was succeeded by Philip Milner Dacres, who was installed on November 4, 1779.

On March 17, 1777, a letter had been sent to the Grand Lodge of England from the Province in which the following passage occurs :

We are sorry we cannot give the same favourable relation of Masonry in our Province. It has grown languid in the interior districts where Lodges are established, by reason of the Brethren being, by their several callings, so dispersed as to prevent their assembling at all in some places and seldom in others, for want of sufficient number to form a Lodge. This we premise, that you may not be surprised that our contribution this year to the Grand Charity from Bengal fell short of former years. However, from us you will receive thirty golden mohurs, as usual, to be allotted, £20 to the Fund of Charity, and £10 towards dedicating the hall.

In 1779 a contribution of fifty-one gold mohurs was made to the Charity and Hall Funds of the Grand Lodge of England. C. S. Pleydell presided for the last time in the Provincial Grand Lodge on March 29, 1779. He died exactly two months later. He is described on his tombstone as member of the Board of Trade, Master in Chancery and Superintendent of Police in Calcutta. The confirmation of his appointment had been received from the Grand Lodge of England only a few months before his demise.

Under Dacres the Provincial Grand Lodge for Bengal had but a very brief existence. It assembled for the last time on January 25, 1781. Doubtless the war in the Carnatic, which broke out about that time, had much to do with its dissolution and Masonry in India was very nearly swept away by it. Every Lodge in Calcutta, where alone in Bengal Masonry may be said to have existed, was extinguished, with the exception of Industry and Perseverance and, even there, the light glimmered feebly. But the members of that Lodge nobly determined that the light should not go out. The name of Philip Milner Dacres is associated with the first proposal for a corps of volunteers in Bengal and he was one of the signatories to the Governor-General to a petition to establish a Patriot Band. An interesting event occurred on April 6, 1784, when the foundation stone of the Presidency Church was laid, with Masonic ceremonial, by Edward Wheler, Senior Member of the Council.

At two meetings held in January, 1784, Lodge Industry and Perseverance resolved to call a general assembly of the Craft "for the purpose of taking into consideration the present state of Masonry and of concerting and adopting measures to revive its ancient splendour in the Settlement."

The Provincial Grand Lodge was reopened July 18, 1785, under the presidency of George Williamson, a former Deputy Provincial Grand Master, who, on the same date, produced a Patent from England appointing him Acting Provincial Grand Master and directed that a meeting of the Provincial Grand Lodge should be held a fortnight later for the express purpose of electing a Grand Master. At this assembly the Wardens of Lodge Star in the East said their meetings had been interrupted, because, in the absence of the Provincial Grand Lodge, no new Master could be installed. Williamson, however, ordered them to proceed with the election of a new Master and engaged to convene a Provincial Grand Lodge for his installation.

The election, however, did not take place until November 14, when four votes were cast for Williamson and six for Edward Fenwick, a former Provincial Grand Warden.

The new Provincial Grand Master was installed March 17, 1786, although the Patent granted to Williamson clearly indicated that he was to retain his acting appointment until the confirmation from London of the person who might be elected to the office. This led to serious disagreements, which harassed the Fraternity for some years.

The supporters of Fenwick were, undoubtedly, in the wrong from the constitutional, which is the only, point of view. This was clearly laid down in a letter written by William White, Grand Secretary, dated March 24, 1787, in which he pointed out that the Bengal Brethren had fallen into the error of electing, instead of recommending to the Grand Master, the name of the Brother they deemed suitable for the office of Provincial Grand Master and he added :

The powers and dignity of the Provincial Grand Master are delegations of the Grand Master's high authority and granted by him, during his pleasure only, to such respectable Brethren in particular districts as he may deem worthy to represent him for the purpose of cementing the Brethren and more easily communicating with Grand Lodge ; but the Brethren of a particular Province can have no powers of election. They may recommend and their recommendations, when conducted with general assent and harmony, will always receive the Grand Master's sanction and approbation. But in an election the electors assert a legal right, which, in the present instance, cannot be pretended.

The Grand Master refused to make any appointment of a Provincial Grand Master "in hopes that the Brethren will be more unanimous in the recommendation of a Brother for that office" and continued the powers specified in the commission to George Williamson. Thus it happened that Williamson was supported by the Grand Lodge of England and the letter already quoted continued to Williamson the powers specified in his Patent of 1784. This was read in the Provincial Grand Lodge held on August 27 of that year, but that body studiously refused to yield to its mandate. In the discussion which ensued, the Master of Lodge Star in the East observed:—" . . . Mr. Williamson, whose affairs have long been in a most anxious situation—who has been obliged, for a long time past, to live under a foreign jurisdiction—who now cannot come to Calcutta, but on a Sunday, or, if he comes on any other day, is obliged to conceal himself during the day time and to be extremely cautious how he goes out even when it is dark ! "

In spite of repeated protests on the part of the Acting Provincial Grand Master, Fenwick continued the exercise of the duties of the office to which he had been elected by a majority, even to the granting of Lodge Warrants, but his election was not confirmed by the Grand Lodge of England until March 4, 1789. The position was an extraordinary one. Fenwick, in his rôle of Provincial Grand Master, which he claimed to be, had set aside the Warrants granted by Williamson, in the exercise of the right conferred upon him by Grand Lodge and by recognizing Fenwick ultimately as Provincial Grand Master, Grand Lodge countenanced and set the seal of approval upon Fenwick's insubordination. Fenwick, however, had but a short lease of office, for on December 27, 1790, he was forced to resign his position " in consequence of his unfortunate state of affairs."

Williamson's loyalty was never in question. Directly he received the official intimation of the confirmation from Grand Lodge of Fenwick's appointment, he handed over to him all the property he had in his possession belonging to the Provincial Grand Lodge. Apparently, from a letter written by Williamson, dated December 21, 1790, Freemasonry in Bengal had passed into a more or less moribund condition, " no Lectures ever being given and nothing going forward but the outward form of Making, Passing and Raising, insomuch that there is scarce among them one that has sufficient knowledge to gain admittance into a strange Lodge." Williamson, in the same letter, protested against the treatment he had received from Grand Lodge. He said :

I do not consider myself ill-treated by the Lodges here only, but conceive also that I was very ill-requited by the Most Worshipful Grand Master of England, whose Dignity and Authority I so strenuously strove to support and maintain, for certainly private Thanks such as I received through you was by no means a Recompence, for who, saving myself, could suppose otherwise than that my Conduct was disapproved? Had the Thanks been publicly announced and registered on your Records, a Vote passed creating me an Honorary Member of the Grand Lodge, or an honorary Medal sent me as a testimonial of Approbation, I should have been perfectly satisfied, whereas now I am confidently told that Brother Miller and others have propagated among the Brethren that the Grand Lodge of England were highly incensed against me for the part I had acted contrary to the intent and meaning of my commission.

Some interesting correspondence occurred about this period. In a letter dated February 6, 1788, from the Provincial Grand Lodge meeting under Fenwick to William White, Grand Secretary, the following passages occur :

Country Lodges.—We earnestly wish to see the whole number of Lodges which existed in 1773 or 1774 re-established. But the Subordinates at Patna, Burdwan, Dacca and Moorshedabad now consist of such small societies and these so liable to change, that we must confess it rather to be our wish than our hope to see Lodges established at any of these places.

Military Lodges.—With respect to the Brigades, they have been divided into six of Infantry and three of Artillery. This regulation has lessened the number of officers in each and they will be more liable to removals than formerly. The first circumstance must be a great discouragement to the formation of Lodges in the Brigades and the second would sometimes expose such Lodges to the risk of being annihilated. However, we shall give all encouragement to the making of applications and all the support we possibly can to such Lodges as may be constituted.

On the same day a letter was written to the Grand Lodge introducing the Rev. William Johnson who, for sixteen years, had been in Bengal as one of the chaplains of the Settlement and, for three years, Provincial Grand Chaplain, who was then on his return to Europe. That letter refers to the erection of the church by public subscription and, to a large extent, by the Freemasons in the Settlement. That letter, by stating that the church “was consecrated on the Festival of St. John the Baptist, one of the Patrons of the Fraternity,” settles the point raised by Archdeacon Hyde in his Parochial Annals of Bengal, when he writes :

It has long been a matter of controversy as to whether the Evangelist or the Baptist is to be held as the patron saint—and the following solution to the question is now proposed. The Provincial Grand Lodge of the Freemasons of Bengal had been revived the previous year, Mr. William Mackett, previously mentioned being the Grand Master and Mr. Holwell and Mr. Mapletoft high office-bearers. Mr. Churchwarden Culling Smith was also a member of the Lodge and succeeded as Grand Master in 1762. It happened that the new chapel was projected and completed during the six months, January 28 to July 27 of Mr. Holwell’s administration as President in the Bay and Governor and Commander-in-chief for Fort William in Bengal for the United East India Company, before Mr. Henry Vansittart, who had been designated for that Jurisdiction, arrived to assume it. There is a tradition that the first Calcutta church was dedicated to St. John at the request of the Freemasons, who provided the ceremony of dedication. It is now known that the first church was dedicated to St. Anne, but that the chapel built in 1760 was St. John’s. Adjusting, therefore, the tradition to the dedication of the Chapel, it appears very likely that the Governor Holwell appointed the 24th of June, St. John the Baptist’s Day, a great Masonic anniversary, for the opening solemnities and not some time, as Mr. Long thinks, in July.

Masonic Church Services were not infrequent at that period and did not always take place on Sundays. The Calcutta Gazette of January 1, 1789, contains the following paragraph :

On Saturday last the different Lodges of Free and Accepted Masons met at the Exchange, from whence they proceeded to the new church and attended divine service, after which the Brethren retired to their respective Lodges and the day was concluded with that festive mirth and harmony which ever characterize the meetings of this ancient and honourable Fraternity.

There are previous references to the practice. One occurs in the Minutes for December, 1786, the last occasion on which the service was held in the old church. Future services were held in the new church, in the erection of which the Craft had taken a great interest. The preacher in 1786 in the old church and in the new church on St. John the Evangelist's Day, 1787, was the Rev. W. Johnson and, concerning the latter service, the Calcutta Gazette of January 3, 1788, said :

A historical sermon on the occasion was preached by the Rev. Mr. Johnson, a member of the Fraternity, who traced the origin of the Society from the ancient Egyptians and enumerated its several revolutions, encouragements and persecutions, down to the present period, concluding with many excellent doctrinal maxims for the qualifications and conduct of the true Mason, who, he strongly argued, must necessarily be a good man and a worthy member of the Society of mankind in general.

The Rev. J. Long, in an article entitled "Calcutta in the Olden Time," which appeared in the Calcutta Review (vol. xviii, p. 299), says :

To the west of Writers' Buildings, Fort William College, thirty yards east of the Fort, stood the first church of Calcutta, called St. John's on the suggestion of the Freemasons, who were liberal contributors to it. We have accounts of a Freemasons' Lodge in Calcutta in 1744 ; in 1789 they gave at the old court-house a ball and supper to members of the Company's service in Calcutta ; and they seem to have had a local celebration and name from the days of Charnock—their institution tending to mitigate the exclusiveness of European classes in modern times.

Unhappily there is no evidence to support this statement as to the antiquity of Freemasonry in Calcutta. It was on August 24, 1690, that Job Charnock of the English East India Company founded the city of Calcutta. The place is mentioned briefly in the Survey of Bengal made in 1596, by command of the Emperor Akbar, but it did not emerge into history until eighty-four years later. In those days Calcutta was a small rent-paying village, then and later known as Golgotha, because of its malarial jungles and heavy death-rate.

A grand ball and supper was given by the Provincial Grand Lodge, January 14, 1789, to which invitations were sent, not only to residents in Calcutta, but also to "Bro. Titsingh [?] Titsink], Governor of Chinsurah and other Masons of that Colony ; to Bro. de Bretel, and the other Masons of Chandernagore ; also to the Masons of Serampore [Danish settlement] and to the Sisters of these Colonies, according to what has been customary on such occasions formerly."

This reference to "Sisters" is very curious and it occurs elsewhere in the Masonic annals of Bengal. A possible explanation is that special distinction was accorded to the sisters, wives and daughters of members of the Lodges in the district. In the arrangements made for a Festival in connexion with a private Lodge in January 1775, the following directions occur :

General invitations to be sent to the ladies of Calcutta with a request to those who are sisters and don't receive blue ribbons, would send intimation thereof, that they may be sent.

Particular invitations with ribbons to be sent to all the Sisters.

On the same day—December 27, 1790—that Fenwick resigned the office of Provincial Grand Master, the Hon. Charles Stuart, Senior Member of the Supreme Council, was elected and installed as his successor, which action was, of course, again entirely contrary to the ruling of Grand Lodge. There is no record, however, of any protest on the part of that body, but one undoubtedly was lodged, as may be deduced from a letter written three years later, an extract from which is given below. Stuart, however, was unable to perform his Masonic duties, owing to the fact that the government of the country devolved upon him, in consequence of the absence of the Earl Cornwallis from Calcutta. He, thereupon, appointed Richard Comyns Birch as Acting Provincial Grand Master of Bengal and reappointed John Miller as Deputy. In February, 1793, Stuart appears to have handed in his resignation, not to the Grand Master of England as he ought to have done, but to the Provincial Grand Lodge of Bengal and that body communicated the fact to the Grand Master, George, Prince of Wales, afterwards King George IV. The Provincial Grand Lodge assembled on the 19th of the same month, elected and installed, again in defiance of the Grand Lodge regulations, Richard Comyns Birch as Provincial Grand Master. On this occasion they wrote a letter to the Grand Master, explaining their action in the following words :

We have the Highest Respect for your Most Worshipfull Lodge and wish to conform exactly to the Line of Duty Laid Down to us, . . . and we would have awaited the Confirmation of our Choice. . . . But to have done so would have occasin'd a Long Delay, which, in any case, would have Evil Consequences : And We have very forcible Reasons for wishing to avoid in the Present Occurrence. We have already informed you, that the Craft has been for some time, on the Decline and We have Cause to apprehend It may be still more so. . . . Wherefore, after the most serious Consideration, We were Unanimously of Opinion that it was essentially necessary for the proper Support of the Provincial Grand Lodge and of the interests of Masonry in these Provinces in General, that Brother Birch should be immediately seated in the Chair of Solomon ; and he was installed accordingly.

When war broke out between England and France in 1793, Chandernagore, the French settlement, was occupied by the English and Richard Comyns Birch was appointed " Superintendent and Judge and Magistrate of Chandernagore " and de Bretel was appointed " Deputy to the Superintendent."

A noted character appeared on the scene at this period in the person of the Rev. Dr. James Ward, who seems to have been inspired with a genuine desire to resuscitate and to reorganize Freemasonry in the District. At any rate, on St. John's Day, December 27, 1809, the members of five Lodges—True Friendship, Humility with Fortitude, Marine, Union (then No. 338, afterwards 432) and the Dispensation Officers' Lodge (which worked under a Warrant granted by No. 338)—walked in procession to St. John's Church, where Divine Service was sung and "an excellent sermon illustrative of the grand principles of Masonry" was delivered by Dr. James Ward, who is described as a "Royal Arch Brother." A like service was held in December 1811, when, at Dr. Ward's suggestion, a subscription was made for the distressed Portuguese. That sermon was printed by request and over four hundred copies were taken by Lodges Humility with Fortitude, Star in the East, Marine and True Friendship. This sermon, says Firminger, stirred up the zeal of some Brethren of the dormant Lodge Star in the East. A meeting was at once called and it was resolved that the Lodge should be revived. W. C. Blaquiere, who was elected Master, attributed the resolution "of restoring the Lodge to its former splendour" to the impulse given to the zeal of the Brethren by Dr. Ward's eloquent and impressive sermon on St. John's Day last.

The question of electing a Provincial Grand Master and submitting his name for the approval of the Grand Lodge of England was also broached and, when the ballot was taken, there were sixteen votes for Dr. Ward and ten for W. C. Blaquiere and the former was accordingly declared elected, although, for reasons that will presently be noted, his election was not confirmed by Grand Lodge and he was never installed in the position.

During the ten or eleven years that intervened between the obliteration of the Provincial Grand Lodge and its re-establishment in 1813, Masonry in Calcutta was represented almost exclusively by the Lodges which had seceded from the (older) Grand Lodge of England.

It may be as well to break in here with a description of the Lodges in the Presidency as they were given in the Freemasons' Calendar for 1794 :

Nos.		Founded.
70.	Star in the East, Calcutta	1740
143.	Industry and Perseverance, Calcutta	1761
288.	Unanimity, Calcutta	1771
	Revived in 1787, when it consisted of handicraftsmen in Calcutta.
292.	Anchor and Hope, Calcutta	1773
	According to Grand Lodge records this Lodge was placed at this vacant number in 1793.
293.	Humility with Fortitude, Calcutta	1774
	Afterwards became dormant and was revived by Acting Provincial Grand Master Williamson in 1787.
316.	True Friendship, with the Third Brigade	1775
	When the Third Brigade removed to Berampore in 1788 a new Warrant was issued to the seven members remaining in Calcutta.

Nos.		Founded.
399.	Lodge at Futtu Ghur Dormant in 1788, erased 1794.	1786
464.	North Star, Fredericksnagore In connexion with the Danish Factory in Bengal.	1789
528.	Lodge at Chuna, East Indies Known as Sincere Friendship. Dormant from 1796 to 1812. Erased from English roll in 1813, though accord- ing to Provincial records was on November 23, 1814, "doing well and their numbers daily increasing."	1793
529.	Mars, Cawnpore	1793

There was also in existence about this time the Marine Lodge, originally formed by persons employed in the Government's marine service, Calcutta, which, however, only obtained a local number; and a Stewards' Lodge—established June 24, 1736—with privileges akin to those of its prototype under the Grand Lodge of England.

It unfortunately happened that the officers of the Provincial Grand Lodge had always been selected from the first two Lodges on the above list and this circumstance led to no slight dissatisfaction on the part of the other Lodges, who, feeling themselves aggrieved, were not slow to resent the treatment. This it was which mainly conduced to the almost general defection, about the close of the century, from the Provincial Grand Lodge of Bengal and, consequently, from the older or legitimate Grand Lodge of England. A Lodge—No. 146—under the Atholl (or Antient) Grand Lodge, was established at Calcutta in 1767, but it took no root and it does not appear that any further Lodges were erected by the same authority until the secession now about to be described. The Lodges True Friendship and Humility with Fortitude were the first which transferred their allegiance, the former becoming No. 315, or No. 1 of Bengal—December 27, 1797 and the latter, No. 317, or No. 2 of Bengal—April 11, 1798. The Marine Lodge followed their example and obtained a similar Warrant—No. 323—March 4, 1801. Meanwhile, Lodge Star in the East fell into abeyance and Industry and Perseverance was on the point of closing also. One meeting only was held in each of the years 1802, 1803 and 1804, after which, for a long period, there were no more. Lodge Anchor and Hope obtained an Atholl Warrant as No. 325—October 1, 1801. Little is known of Lodge Unanimity, which, though carried forward at the Union (1813), must have died out at least several years before.

As St. John's Day in Winter, 1812, fell upon a Sunday, the two newly revived Lodges decided to hold their Service on January 6, 1813, while the Atholl Lodge True Friendship, No. 1, with its Royal Arch Chapter and the Lodge Marine also held a Service on January 14, the sermon on each occasion being preached by Dr. Ward. The Atholl Lodge True Friendship had also held a Service in the previous January, when the sermon was delivered by the Rev. T. Thomason. A very elaborate dinner followed these gatherings at which a very large number of toasts were honoured, in which the Earl of Moira and "our noble and gallant Brother, the Marquess Wellington" were included and honour duly paid to "the memory of our illustrious Brethren, Lord Nelson, Sir Ralph Abercromby and Sir John Moore."

It was not until March 27, 1813, that Lodge Star in the East communicated to the Grand Lodge of England the desire of the Brethren concerning Dr. Ward and this unexplained delay of six months undoubtedly accounts for the events that followed.

On October 4, 1813, the Earl of Moira, who had been appointed Acting Grand Master of India, arrived in Calcutta, after a short sojourn in Madras, where he had held a Masonic reception. It should also be noted that on his outward journey he stopped at Mauritius, where, at the head of the Freemasons of the island, he laid the foundation-stone of the Roman Catholic cathedral there. The first Masonic act of the Governor-General was to constitute a new Lodge, the Moira Lodge of Freedom and Fidelity, which he did on November 8, 1813. Major-General Sir William Keir (who afterwards became successively Sir W. Grant Keir and Sir W. Keir Grant) was the first Master of the Lodge and he had for his Wardens, Colonel L. J. Doyle (afterwards Sir Charles Doyle) and Commodore Sir John Hayes. Another Founder was Sir Robert Rollo Gillespie. Archdeacon Firminger relates the following interesting story concerning the last named :

Bro. Gillespie had seen much service in the West Indies. On one occasion he was sent by the Commander-in-Chief as bearer of a command to the enemy to surrender an island. His boat, with the flag of truce and the papers were overturned. Gillespie, with his sword between his teeth, swam ashore under a heavy fire. He was brought before the Governor-General, Santhoax, who condemned Gillespie, as a spy, to the gallows. Fortunately the Governor was familiar with Masonic language and, instead of being executed, Gillespie was sent back to the squadron under a guard-of-honour.

As soon as the Union of the two Grand Lodges of England became known in India, which was not until December 1814, the Atholl Lodges at Calcutta tendered their allegiance to the Provincial Grand Lodge. These were, True Friendship, Humility with Fortitude and Marine. The Anchor and Hope—which also seceded from the legitimate Grand Lodge of England—is not mentioned in the records of the Province 1814-40.

At the period of this fusion, there were the following Lodges under the older sanction : The Stewards, Star in the East, Industry and Perseverance and Sincere Friendship (Chunar). Of these Lodges, the first never held a London Warrant and the last was struck off the roll inadvertently at the Union. There were also then in existence the Moira Lodge and three others constituted since the revival of the Provincial Grand Lodge, the names of which head the following table of Lodges erected during the period 1813-26 :

1. Moira, Calcutta, November 13, 1813.
2. Oriental Star, Noacollee, April 21, 1814.
3. Aurora, Calcutta, June 23, 1814.
4. Courage with Humanity, Dum Dum, July 12, 1814.
5. Northern Star, Barrackpore, July 18, 1816.
6. Sincerity, Cawnpore, January 8, 1819.
7. Hastings Lodge of Amity and Independence, Allahabad, April 9, 1821.
8. United Lodge of Friendship, Cawnpore, June 13, 1821.
9. Humanity with Courage, Prince of Wales' Island, July 1822.
10. Amity, St. John's, Poona (Deccan), January 30, 1824.
11. Kilwinning in the West, Nusseerabad, October 20, 1824.
12. Larkins' Lodge of Union and Brotherly Love, Dinapore, October 20, 1824.
13. Independence with Philanthropy, Allahabad, October 26, 1825.
14. South-Eastern Star of Light and Victory, Arracan, October 26, 1825.
15. Tuscan, Malacca, October 26, 1825.
16. Royal George, Bombay, December 9, 1825.
17. Union and Perseverance, Agra, October 23, 1826.
18. Kilwinning in the East, Calcutta, December 23, 1826.

Out of these eighteen Lodges, however, only seven—Nos. 2, 3, 4, 6, 7, 13 and 18 above—secured a footing on the Roll of the Grand Lodge of England. It is not a little curious that, of the two now alone surviving, Courage with Humanity (1814) and Independence with Philanthropy (1825), which were placed on the general list in the same year (1828) in juxtaposition, the latter bears the earlier number and has the higher precedence! The first was the only one in India warranted by Lord Moira: it had ceased working in 1821. The second sent £100 to the English Charities in 1816 and, five years later, surrendered its Warrant. The third amalgamated with Lodge True Friendship in 1830. The fourth was for many years composed of non-commissioned officers of the Bengal Artillery. It threw off a shoot in Penang—Humanity with Courage, in 1822, which took the place of the Atholl Lodge Neptune, No. 344, established in 1809. The fourteenth Lodge was never established, in consequence of the dispersion of the petitioners.

As a result of the appointment of the Earl of Moira, Dr. Ward's appointment as Provincial Grand Master was not confirmed, which is the explanation of the absence of his name from the list of Provincial Grand Masters for Bengal. The Grand Lodge of England explained the position in the following letter:

I am commanded by H.R.H. the Duke of Sussex to say that he sees not the least objection to the appointment; but as the Earl of Moira is vested with the rank of Acting Grand Master for the whole of India and in that capacity is competent to appoint Provincial Grand Masters for Districts (whose rank and authority will be the same as if appointed by the Grand Master himself) he feels it would be more correct that the appointment should be under the hands of his Lordship; and as no inconvenience or delay will result from this course being adopted, I have to refer you to the noble Lord accordingly.

There was no resentment on the part of Dr. Ward, who accepted the appointment of Provincial Grand Chaplain in the Provincial Grand Lodge appointed by Lord Moira in December 1813.

This re-establishment of the Provincial Grand Lodge was the second Masonic act of Lord Moira, who appointed the Hon. Archibald Seton as Acting Provincial Grand Master. He left India in 1817, when the Governor-General, who had now become the Marquess of Hastings, intimated to the Provincial Grand Lodge that he had selected the Hon. C. Stuart to succeed him. The latter does not appear, however, to have entered upon the duties of his office; and in the following year—January 17—the Hon. Charles Robert Lindsay was successively appointed, by Warrants of Lord Hastings, Provincial Grand Master for Bengal, January 17, 1818, and Deputy Grand Master for India, January 13, 1819.

On November 30, 1818, an application was made to the Grand Master for India, by eight Brethren residing at Poona, in the Deccan, praying for authority to meet as Lodge St. Andrew at that station, also for "a dispensation for holding a Provincial Lodge, for the purpose of making the Hon. Mountstuart Elphinstone a Mason, he having expressed a wish to that effect." The petitioners further requested "that his name might be inserted in the body of the Warrant, authorizing them to install him, after being duly passed and raised, a Deputy Grand Master for the Deccan." Of the reply made to this application, no record has been preserved.

According to the Calcutta Gazette of January and February 1819, the Provincial Grand Lodge for Bengal was solicited by the Collector of Government Customs (Sir Charles D'Oyly, Bart.) to assist in the ceremony of laying the foundation-stone of the new Customs House, then about to be erected on the site of the old fort. The stone was accordingly laid by the Hon. C. R. Lindsay, who was accompanied by W. C. Blaquiere as Deputy and the Rev. H. Shepherd as Provincial Grand Chaplain. The Lodges represented were Courage with Humanity, Aurora, Moira, Humility with Fortitude, True Friendship, Industry with Perseverance and Star in the East.

Lindsay, on his appointment to a distant station, was succeeded as Deputy Grand Master for India and Provincial Grand Master for Bengal by John Pascal Larkins, who was installed by W. C. Blaquiere on December 24, 1819. At that meeting it was decided to abolish the Stewards' Lodge and, on March 21 following, it was reported that the Aurora Lodge had ceased to work.

On December 20, 1822, an address was presented to the Marquess of Hastings on his approaching departure from India and, a week later, on the Festival of St. John, the Governor-General was present at the Cathedral Church in his capacity of Grand Master for the last time. The members of the Lodges walked there in procession and a Masonic Service was held, conducted by the Rev. D. Corrie, afterwards first Bishop of Madras.

Larkins returned to Europe in 1826, but did not resign his appointment, with the consequence that, from that year until 1840, Bengal was under the nominal rule of a Provincial Grand Master resident in England, with a Deputy at Calcutta. Before leaving for England, Larkins earnestly recommended the Brethren to maintain the custom of attending Divine Service on the anniversaries of the Saints John and issued a Warrant authorizing William Coates Blaquiere to officiate as his Deputy and to execute all the functions of the Provincial Grand Master in his name. The absence of the Provincial head, however, resulted in the extinction of the Provincial Grand Lodge and the annihilation of all order and constituted authority for a time. In 1827—November 22—Lodge Independence with Philanthropy, at Allahabad, so resented this conduct, as to return its Warrant, intimating that its future meetings would be held under a Dispensation obtained from Lodge Union, No. 432 (Irish Register), in the 14th Foot, until a Warrant could be obtained from England, for which application had been made direct and which, strange to say, was granted by Grand Lodge.

In 1834, some Masons at Delhi applied to their Brethren at Meerut for an acting Constitution of this kind, which might serve their purpose until the receipt of a Warrant from the Grand Lodge of England. At the latter station there were two Lodges, one of which, however, was itself working under Dispensation and could not therefore dispense grace to another. The other belonged to the 26th Foot, No. 26, under the Grand Lodge of Ireland. This Lodge declined giving a Dispensation, for the somewhat Irish reason that the Cameronian Lodge had already granted one to another Lodge, of the propriety of which act they had great doubt; and that until an answer had been received from Ireland, they could not commit a second act of doubtful legality! The custom, however, was a very old one. In 1759, Lodge No. 74, I.R., in the 1st Foot (2d Batt.), granted an exact copy of its Warrant—dated October 26, 1737—to some Brethren at Albany, to work under until they received a separate Charter from Ireland. This was changed—February 21, 1765—for a Warrant from George Harrison, English Provincial Grand Master for New York; and the Lodge—Mount Vernon—is now No. 3 on the roll of the Grand Lodge of that State. Cf. Barker, Early History of the Grand Lodge of New York, Preface, p. xviii.

The Lodges in Bengal made their returns regularly and forwarded their dues punctually, to the Provincial Grand Lodge; but as no steps were taken for the transmission of these returns and dues to their destination, the Grand Lodge of England ceased to notice or regard the tributary Lodges of Bengal. On the submission of a motion for inquiry—March 22, 1828—W. C. Blaquiere, Deputy Provincial Grand Master, “felt himself constrained to resign his chair on the spot and the Grand Wardens also tendered their resignations.”

On April 19, 1828, a letter signed by the Master, Wardens and Secretary of Lodge Aurora, requesting the Deputy Provincial Grand Master to reassume his high functions and to call an early meeting of the Provincial Grand Lodge was despatched. On May 31 a meeting called by Lodge Aurora was attended by representatives from Lodges True Friendship, Humility with Fortitude, Marine, Courage with Humanity and Kilwinning in the East and led to the formation of a representative body styled the Lodge of Delegates, which, on August 28, 1828, sent a Memorial to the Duke of Sussex as Grand Master of England.

To this no reply, beyond a bare acknowledgment, was vouchsafed. The letters of the Lodges in Bengal remained unanswered and their requests unheeded. The usual certificates for Brethren made in the country were withheld, notwithstanding that the established dues were regularly remitted; and applications for Warrants were also unnoticed, though they were accompanied by the proper fees. This state of affairs continued until 1834, when the question of separation from the Grand Lodge of England was gravely and formally mooted in the Lodges. Overtures for a reconciliation at length came in the shape of certificates for Brethren who had by this time grown grey in Masonry. Answers to letters written long ago were also received; but the most important concession made by the Grand Lodge of England was the constitution of the first District Grand Lodge for Bengal—under Dr. John Grant—which held its first meeting, February 28, 1840.

Although the Masonic Jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of Ireland has always been a favourite one with the rank and file of the British army and the number of military Lodges under it has ever been vastly in excess of those owing allegiance to any other authority, only a single Irish Warrant for a stationary Lodge in India appears to have been issued. This was granted in 1837 to some Brethren at Kurnaul, but its activity seems not to have outlasted the year of its constitution. An attempt was made in 1862 to establish an Irish Lodge in Bombay, but on the representation of the Grand Secretary of England to the Deputy Grand Secretary of Ireland that it would be objectionable "to create a third Masonic independent Jurisdiction in the Province, there being already two, viz. English and Scotch," the Grand Lodge of Ireland declined to grant the Warrant.

In the decennial periods 1840-50 and 1850-60 there were, in each instance, 12 additions to the roll. In 1860-70 the new Lodges amounted to 19 and in 1870-85 to 38. Since 1885, 52 Lodges have been added. These figures are confined to the English Lodges, but extend over the area now occupied in part by the District Grand Lodges of Burma and the Punjab, both of which were carved out of the territory previously comprised within the Province of Bengal in 1868. The following statistics show the number of Lodges existing—January 1, 1886—in the various states and districts which until 1868 were subject to the Masonic government of Bengal: under the Grand Lodge of England—Bengal (District Grand Lodge), 39; British Burma (District Grand Lodge), 7; and Punjab (District Grand Lodge), 24. Under the Grand Lodge of Scotland, 11—the earliest of which, St. David (originally Kilwinning) in the East, No. 371, Calcutta, was constituted February 5, 1849.

The Dutch Lodges in Hindostan have passed out of existence, but with regard to these, also to certain other Lodges established by the Grand Lodge of Holland in various places beyond the seas, the materials for an exhaustive list are not available to the historian.

MADRAS

The first Lodge on the Coromandel Coast was established at Madras in 1752, shortly after that city had been restored to the English under the treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle. It is described in the lists as "at Mādrass" in East India and it was first numbered 222, becoming 157 in 1755; 124 in 1770; 101 in 1780; and 102 in 1781. It was erased from the register in 1790. Canon C. H. Malden, in his History of Freemasonry on the Coast of Coromandel, thinks that, in all probability, the Lodge was founded by Captain Edmund Pascal, who was appointed Provincial Grand Master for that District on February 27, 1767. He was an officer in the English Coast Army, the date of his commission being October 30, 1751. He was also responsible for the foundation, in 1765, of three Lodges, numbered respectively 353, 354 and 355. The first had its location at Madras and the third at Trichinopoly, and Canon Malden thinks that the second worked at Ellore on the East Coast, where there certainly was a Lodge of which G. Westcott was Master for many years.

It was in the Trichinopoly Lodge that the last reigning Nabob of the Carnatic, Omdat-ul-Omrah Bahadur, then the eldest son of the reigning Nabob, was initiated in 1775 by Terence Gahagan, who returned to England in the following year on account of his health. He attended a meeting of Grand Lodge held on February 5, 1777 and reported the initiation, stating that Omdat-ul-Omrah Bahadur professed a great veneration for the Society.

It was thereupon resolved that a complimentary letter should be sent to His Highness, accompanied with a Masonic apron, elegantly decorated and a Book of Constitutions, bound in a most superb manner. This apron and book cost £37 17s. 6d.

The letter and present were entrusted to the care of Sir John Day, then going out as Advocate-General of Bengal, who executed his commission to the universal satisfaction of the Society and the following letter was written by him to His Highness as an introduction :

May it please your Highness,—The underwritten (having been honoured with the commands of the Grand Lodge of Masons of Great Britain, to convey to your Highness an apron and Book of Constitutions, as a testimony of their respect for you and your illustrious father, the stedfast friend and ally of their Sovereign, as well as of the satisfaction they feel at seeing so exalted a name enrolled among their Order) intended to have executed the commission with which he is charged in a manner that might best answer the intentions of his constituents, and the dignity and importance of the occasion.

It so happens, however, that the late dissensions in this Settlement have so effectually dissolved the ties of amity and confidence which once subsisted amongst them, that even the fraternal bond of Masonry has been annihilated in the general wreck.

For this reason the Lodge has so long discontinued its meetings that it may be said to be now extinct.

In this situation of things, it being impossible to invest your Highness in full Lodge and with a splendour and solemnity suited to the dignity of your character and the importance of the commission he is honoured with, the underwritten hopes your Highness will condescend to accept (in the only manner that remains) the pledge of amity and respect from the Masons of Great Britain that accompanies this and remains, with the most profound respect,

Your Highness's

Most humble and devoted servant,

JOHN DAY.

Omdat-ul-Omrah Bahadur returned an answer to the Grand Lodge of England in the Persian language, elegantly decorated and enclosed in cloth of gold, which translated is as follows :

To the Right Worshipful His Grace the Duke of Manchester, Grand Master of the Illustrious and Benevolent Fraternity of Free and Accepted Masons, under the Constitution of England and the Grand Lodge thereof.

Most honoured Sir and Brethren,—An early knowledge and participation of the benefits arising to our house from its intimate union of councils and interests with the British nation and a deep veneration for the laws, constitution and manners of the latter, have for many years of my life led me to seize every opportunity of drawing the ties subsisting between us still closer and closer.

By the accounts which have reached me of the principles and practices of your Fraternity, nothing can be more pleasing to the Sovereign Ruler of the Universe, whom we all, though in different ways adore, or more honourable to His creatures, for they stand upon the broad basis of indiscriminate and universal benevolence.

Under this conviction I have long wished to be admitted of your Fraternity ; and now that I am initiated, I consider the title of an English Mason as one of the most honourable I possess, for it is at once a cement to the friendship between your nation and me and confirms me the friend of mankind.

I have received from the Advocate-General of Bengal, Sir John Day, the very acceptable mark of attention and esteem with which you have favoured me ; it has been presented with every circumstance of deference and respect that the situation of things here and the temper of the times would admit of ; and I do assure your Grace and the Brethren at large that he has done ample justice to the commission you have confided to him and has executed it in such manner as to do honour to himself and to me.

I shall avail myself of a proper opportunity to convince your Grace and the rest of the Brethren that Omdat-ul-Omrah is not an unfeeling Brother, or heedless of the precepts he has imbibed ; and that, while he testifies his love and esteem for his Brethren, by strengthening the hands of humanity, he means to minister to the wants of the distressed.

May the common Father of all, the one omnipotent and merciful God, take you into His holy keeping and give you health, peace, and length of years.

Prays your highly honoured and affectionate Brother,

OMDAT-UL-OMRAH BAHADUR.

MADRAS,

Masonic Grand Lodge, Madras, South India.

The building was dedicated by Viscount Goschen, Governor of Madras in 1925.

This letter is still preserved in the Library and Museum of the United Grand Lodge of England. Unhappily, in later years, when he succeeded to the rule, the Nabob seems to have fallen from Masonic grace and through his inattention to the just claims of dependents upon him much suffering was caused, so much so that, in 1793, the Lodge of Perfect Unanimity, now No. 150, recorded :

With respect to the claims of our late Brother on the Nabob, experience has shown that the solemn obligations of a Mason and the admonitions of Lodge, have weighed little with His Highness, in the payment of a just debt to the orphans of a faithful Brother and Servant.

Some years later, Terence Gahagan was the bearer of a personal letter from the Prince of Wales (afterwards George IV) to the Nabob, but, apparently, no notice was taken even of that communication.

Captain Pascal appears to have appointed as Deputy Provincial Grand Master, John Call, who was appointed Chief Engineer, in succession to Captain Brohier, in 1757. He was granted the rank of Captain in December 1758 and took a leading part in the siege of Fort St. George.

It is worthy of recollection that for a short period the Presidency of Madras and its Dependencies was predominant over all the other English settlements in India ; and, during the latter half of the eighteenth century, the continuous wars with the French and, afterwards, with Hyder Ali and his son, caused the Carnatic to figure largely in Indian history.

In 1767 a fifth Lodge was warranted at Madras, being described as " of Fort St. George, East Indies." Its number was first 389, being changed successively to 323, 254 and 255. It did not appear in the List for 1770 and it was erased on February 9, 1791.

On January 5, 1768, the Atholl Grand Lodge established a Lodge—No. 152—at Fort St. George, recruited mainly, if not altogether, from officers in the army, which received an impetus in consequence of the break-up of Lodge No. 353. This unit seems to have exercised the functions of a Provincial Grand Lodge, inasmuch as, in addition to building a Masonic Hall, it established a Charity Fund and granted Warrants, or Dispensations, for subordinate Lodges. It was not until 1782, however, that a regular Provincial Grand Master for the Coromandel Coast was appointed by the Atholl Grand Lodge in the person of John Sykes, an attorney-at-law, then Master of Lodge No. 152, but the Warrant of his appointment never reached its destination. Prior to that date—at the latter end of 1778—the Master and Past Master of the Lodge had been constituted into a " Provincial Grand Committee for hearing petitions and granting Dispensations for holding Lodges to such Brethren that may apply and be deemed worthy."

In 1785 there was the expression of a desire for Masonic union on the part of the Atholl Masons. In a letter to the Earl of Antrim, dated from Fort St. George on July 17, 1785, the Master and Officers of Lodge No. 152 wrote :

We cannot but express our deepest concern that Freemasonry should be unhappily divided into two different sects, by the term of Ancient and Modern and that their respective laws strictly prohibit a free communication with each other. We wish a union of the Craft could be effected ; the principles of both are the same, the difference, therefore, must be in their manner of conducting the business of their respective societies, which do not appear so essential as to prevent a scheme taking place that would cement the Fraternity in universal harmony and give it more the appearance of its divine origin, than it at present bears.

On February 20, 1786, Brigadier-General Mathew Horne was appointed by the Duke of Cumberland as " Provincial Grand Master for the Coast of Coromandel, the Presidency of Madras and parts adjacent " and the Atholl Brethren welcomed his suggestion that they should transfer their allegiance to the older body. They surrendered their Atholl Warrant and a number of them joined the Lodge of Perfect Unanimity, still in existence as No. 150, which has existed uninterruptedly since its constitution on October 7, 1786. Although 1786 is the date given in the Masonic Year Book, it is clear from a letter from Horne to the Grand Master of England, dated January 16, 1785, quoted in full in Canon Malden's History, that he had held the office previously, but Freemasonry generally had been abandoned, owing to the unsettled conditions of the times. General Horne appointed Terence Gahagan as his Deputy Provincial Grand Master. Gahagan had striven hard, in 1784, to secure the higher office, but unsuccessfully. We are indebted to him, however, for a description of the surrender of the Atholl Brethren. In a letter to the Grand Secretary of England, dated October 9, 1786, he says :

I am very happy to inform you that previous to the arrival of the Patent, I made no small exertions in bringing about a Union with a set of gentlemen here who had acted under the Patronage of that Spurious Set who assumed the title of " Antient Masons." My arguments have at length carried conviction and, about three months ago, they offered General Horne and me unconditional terms to come under our Authority, which we gladly accepted, but deferred the execution of it till the Patent arrived, since which General Horne repaired to the Presidency of Madras, tho' 300 miles distant from Trichinopoly, where I met him and the 5th instant we visited Prov. Grand Lodge, No. 152, which was composed of some of the first Characters in the Settlement, who in a very formal and awful manner surrendered their constitution of York Masons, with all their Jewels, Masonic Implements, etc., to General Horne and me and solicited our Patronage under the Grand Lodge of England and, on Saturday, the 7th inst., a Masonic assembly was convened at a very large, elegant House for the purpose of consecrating in due form the new Lodge, as well as to proclaim our Authority, which was done in ample form. After a regular procession, we marched round the Hall three times with a Band of Music and then entered in a solemn manner and consecrated devoutly and installed in due form. As the ceremony had never been performed in this part of the world, it was left to my management and I take no small share of satisfaction to myself in finding that the largest assembly of Masonic Gentlemen, sixty and upwards, attended upon the occasion ; and were agreeably surprised and extremely pleased at the ceremony.

The full programme of the procession is given by Preston, in his Illustrations of Masonry, though he has wrongly placed the year as 1787 instead of 1786.

At this period all the Lodges under the older Grand Lodge of England seem to have been extinct; but, in 1786, the Carnatic Military Lodge, No. 488, was established at Arcot. In 1787 four Lodges were added to the roll, viz. Perfect Harmony, St. Thomas Mount; Social Friendship, Madras; Trichinopoly; and Social Friendship, St. Thomas Mount. Two other Lodges were already established—Stewards' and Perfect Unanimity—which, according to the loose practice of those days, were given the places on the list of the two earliest Madras Lodges and became, in 1790, Nos. 102 and 233 respectively. The Lodge of Perfect Unanimity is, as already stated, still in existence as No. 150, but the Stewards' Lodge is extinct. A Lodge of happy nomenclature, La Fraternelle Cosmopolite, was constituted at Pondicherry in 1786 by the Grand Orient of France and a second, Les Navigateurs Réunis, in 1790.

Brigadier-General Horne resigned his office as Provincial Grand Master in 1788 on his transference to Trichinopoly, his resignation being accepted with great regret by the Grand Lodge of England, a regret which was accentuated when he passed away in December 1789. He was buried in the church at Trichinopoly, where a handsome tablet was erected to his memory.

General Horne was succeeded by John Chamier, a member of the Madras Civil Service, a very enthusiastic Freemason, who held the office until 1804, when he returned to England, where he died in 1810, after holding the office of Senior Grand Warden of England in the previous year. Chamier was succeeded by Terence Gahagan, who had been Deputy Provincial Grand Master since 1786. He had waited long for the preferment which he had sought with much assiduity. In 1812, when he returned to England, where he died in 1814, he appointed Herbert Compton as acting Provincial Grand Master, who became his successor. Compton had the distinction of being the first Grand Superintendent of Royal Arch Masonry in Madras, in which office he was succeeded, says Canon Malden, by Richard Jebb, LL.D., although his name is absent from the list of Grand Superintendents as given in the Masonic Year Book, who also ruled over the Province as Provincial Grand Master from 1814 until his death in 1820. Between 1790 and 1812 four Lodges were added to the roll: Solid Friendship, Trichinopoly, 1790; Unity, Peace, and Concord, 1798; St. Andrew's Union, 19th Foot, 1802; and Philanthropists, 94th Foot, Scotch Brigade, at Madras.

Richard Jebb was, of course, the first Provincial Grand Master for the Coast of Coromandel appointed after the Union of the Antient (or Atholl) and Modern Grand Lodges, but it was not until April 1815 that the official intimation of that Union was received at that outpost. Jebb was succeeded by George Lys in 1820, who, however, was never formally installed and, five years later, Compton again ruled over the Province. The name of this worthy only disappears from the Freemasons' Calendar in 1842, and with it the provincial title, "Coast of Coromandel," which was exchanged for that of Madras, over which Lord Elphinstone had been appointed Provincial Grand Master in 1840. In 1866 Madras was designated a District instead of a Province, the latter term being reserved for the Provinces in England and Wales.

Between 1814 and 1842 numerous Lodges were warranted locally, but thirteen only, of which seven were in Madras itself, secured places on the London register. There are, at the present time, thirty-five Lodges on the register of England and five on that of Scotland within the boundaries marked out for the English District, but the introduction of Scottish Lodges into India will be referred to in the ensuing section.

The French Lodge at Pondicherry, La Fraternité Cosmopolite, was revived (or a new one established under the old title) in 1821. Another, L'Union Indienne, was erected at the same station in 1851. At the present date, however, there exist throughout India and its dependencies no Lodges other than those owing allegiance to the Grand Lodges of England and Scotland.

The earliest Minute relating to Royal Arch Masonry occurs in the proceedings of the Lodge of Perfect Unanimity, dated March 4, 1790 and runs :

Read a letter from the Cosmopolitan Lodge at Pondicherry acquainting us of the zeal they have demonstrated from the Royal Arch by promoting Brothers Robson and Griffiths to a high degree.

Agreed that a letter be written to Cosmopolitan Lodge at Pondicherry expressive of our attention for the regard they have demonstrated to Brothers Griffiths and Robson and further a mark of our attention that we have referred their letter to the Lodge of the Royal Arch.

The Degree, however, was worked in a Chapter attached to the Lodge of Perfect Unanimity right from the time of its foundation in 1786, although many years elapsed before a Royal Arch Chapter was regularly warranted on the coast. About 1809 two Chapters were established in Madras—Benevolence and School of Plato—but their Warrants were not issued until December 10, 1811. The first was formed by members of the Provincial Grand Lodge and the second by the members of the Lodge of Perfect Unanimity. In 1811, also, a Chapter, named St. George, which met at Fort St. George, was formed from among the members of the Lodge Carnatic Military, which met as a separate unit until July 1814, when it joined forces with the Chapter of Benevolence. The only Chapter in this trio still in existence is the School of Plato, which, Malden says, may fairly claim to be the oldest Colonial Royal Arch Chapter now on the roll of the Supreme Grand Chapter of England.

The Mark Degree was worked by the Lodge of Perfect Unanimity from August 1856, when the following resolution was adopted :

That the Mark Degree having been sanctioned by the Grand Lodge of England, it be given as a separate Degree in this Lodge to any desirous of it who have taken the degree of Fellow Craft.

The Lodge of Social Friendship also worked the Mark, Ark Mariner and Excellent Master Degrees and had a Knight Templar Encampment attached to it.

The first Chapter of the Ancient and Accepted Rite was opened in Madras in 1839, before the establishment of the Supreme Council for England, which was formed in 1845. The following are the Minutes of the first meeting held on August 2, 1839 :

In the name of the Holy Trinity, At a meeting of the Knights of the Sovereign Chapter of Rose Croix. Present : Sir Knights John Carnac Morris, Most Wise ; Varden Seth Sam, 1st Knight ; Eleazar Seth Sam, 2nd Knight ; Paul Melitus, Grand Expert ; Stephen Lazar.

After the Sovereign Chapter was opened in due and antient form, the Most Wise announced to the Sir Knights present the object of the meeting. That it was to admit a certain number of candidates into the Sovereign Chapter in order to enable the Masons in Madras to establish a Chapter of that Degree, which proposition being put to the Sir Knights present and all assenting to, the 1st Knight was desired to admit the following candidates : Major John James Underwood, Dr. D. S. Young, Cosmo Richard Howard (Merchant), Alexander Inglis Cherry (Madras C.S.), Surgeon William Middlemass, John Binny Key (Merchant), James Ouchterlony (Merchant), Captain John Bower, William McTaggart (Merchant), Captain Godfrey Webster Whistler. The candidates were admitted to a participation of the Sublime and Sovereign Degree of Rose Croix. No other business being on hand, the Most Wise closed the Chapter with Prudence, Intrepidity and Justice and the Sir Knights departed in the true Christian faith.

All the candidates were members of the Lodge of Perfect Unanimity. At the next meeting held on December 27, 1839, the following twelve candidates, all again members of the same Lodge, were admitted to the Rite ; John, Lord Elphinstone, Governor of Madras ; Alexander Duncan Campbell, C.S. ; John Henry Wilkins, Attorney ; Charles Martin Teed, Barrister ; John Thompson, Merchant ; Lieutenant the Hon. G. F. C. Graves ; Walter Elliot, C.S. ; Alexander Maclean, C.S. ; Colonel William Monteith ; William Serle, Lawyer ; Joseph Pugh, Merchant ; and Captain James Macdonald. The Chapter seems to have fallen into abeyance soon after 1850, a fate which, in the same year, appears to have befallen three other Chapters of the Rite which were working in 1847. It was not until 1869 that a Warrant was obtained from the Supreme Council of England for the establishment of a Chapter at Madras, the foundation of which was due to the Masonic zeal of Colonel A. J. Greenlaw, a member of the Thirty-first Degree. That Chapter, known as the Coromandel, No. 27, is still in existence. The address delivered by Colonel Greenlaw on the occasion of the consecration of this Chapter contained the following historical references :

Some years back the 18° was worked by two of the Lodges in Madras, I think in Perfect Unanimity and Pilgrims of Light, but without, as far as I can discover, any Warrant from a Supreme Grand Council of the 33°. The Degree has now long ceased to be worked in Madras.

On my arrival from Burma, where I had inaugurated the Leeson Chapter under a Warrant from the Supreme Grand Council 33° for England and Wales, I made every inquiry regarding these Chapters and found that even the working had been incorrect.

There were some interesting local customs, particularly in the Lodge of Perfect Unanimity. When the time for the election of Master came round, the retiring ruler invariably proposed the Senior Warden as his successor. The members then put forward another candidate and the votes of the Brethren were then cast, the candidate securing the majority being, of course, declared elected. He then nominated a Brother to take the office of Senior Warden; the members brought forward a candidate in opposition and the ballot again decided the issue. The same procedure was adopted for the election of Junior Warden, Treasurer and Secretary, but the remaining officers were appointed by the Master-elect. A similar custom seems to have been followed in St. Andrew's Union Lodge. The Lodge of Perfect Unanimity seems to have valued Chaplains highly. On November 6, 1792, it admitted the Rev. Richard Hall Kerr, D.D., as an honorary member and, shortly afterwards, he was appointed Grand Chaplain at a monthly salary of thirty pagodas (a pagoda was of the value of about seven shillings). The Provincial Grand Lodge demanded that the names of all candidates should be submitted to that body before any subordinate Lodge could proceed to confer any Degree, a rule which was the cause of much irritation. The following extract from the Minute Book of the Carnatic Military Lodge is somewhat amusing :

Resolved unanimously that henceforward no person exercising the occupation of Gaoler, Bailiff, Turnkey, or any other whose Livelihood arises from being actually and personally employed in restraining the Liberty of his Fellow Creatures, be admitted a member of this Lodge, with the exception (to prevent misconstruction) of anyone who being a Housekeeper in Madras may be obliged to serve the office of Constable, as parochial duty in his turn, when regularly chosen as such, for the usual term; an office unavoidable and which every one so situated is liable to; but no Person holding the last-mentioned employ as a substitute for another (for hire or otherwise) is by any means to be admitted. Furthermore, the exception equally applies to all military men immediately employed as such, whose duties are of that nature, so as to preclude them from always acting according to their own inclination and who cannot give way to the impulse of their own feelings, or resist the authority by which they are commanded.

The old customs of St. John's Day in winter and summer, says Canon Malden, were regularly kept. On June 24 and December 27 it was the practice for the Brethren to assemble at sunrise and to open the Lodge. The officers for the ensuing six months were then installed. During the day the meeting of the Provincial Grand Lodge was held and attended by the Masters and Wardens of the subordinate Lodges. In the evening the Brethren reassembled, and the business of the Provincial Grand Lodge was reported to those who had no right to attend. At sunset the Lodge was closed, after the usual Masonic toasts had been honoured.

The Lodge of Social Friendship appears to have visited the sins of a wife upon a husband, according to the following extract from its Minute Book :

Brother S. having petitioned the Lodge for advancement, it was proposed and agreed to and accordingly put to the ballot, whether or not Brother S. should be advanced, or even continued as a member of the Lodge, unless he put away his wife, she being convicted of having behaved in a loose and indecent and scandalous manner in various instances, particularly during his absence at Seringapatam, on command. The poll proved against him by ten to three, on which he was directed to withdraw and his name struck out of the Lodge.

The expelled Brother, quite naturally, appealed to the Provincial Grand Lodge, with the result that about a year afterwards he was readmitted to membership of the Lodge.

The Brethren of the District have always been stalwart supporters of the Masonic Institutions and have organized their own local Benevolent Funds. The Civil Orphan Asylum was founded in 1807, as the outcome of a scheme drawn up by Dr. R. H. Kerr and placed before the members of the Lodge of Perfect Unanimity in September 1800.

The Madras Masonic Institution for Maintaining and Educating the Children of Indigent and Deceased Freemasons, inaugurated in 1879, is in a healthy condition.

In April 1917 a plot of land in a central position in Egmore was acquired with the object of erecting thereon a Masonic Hall with Offices for the District Grand Lodge. A temporary building was at once erected and the foundation-stone of the new building was laid on February 26, 1923, by Lord Willingdon, Governor of Madras. The building has since been completed and was opened by Viscount Goschen, who succeeded Lord Willingdon as Governor, on February 27, 1925, being dedicated by A. Y. G. Campbell, District Grand Master. Among the important events in the history of Freemasonry in Madras, probably the one of outstanding importance was the visit of H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught, Grand Master, who attended the District Grand Lodge in 1921.

BOMBAY

Two Lodges were established in this Presidency during the eighteenth century—Nos. 234, Bombay, in 1758 and 569, Surat, in 1798, both of which were carried on in the lists until 1813, but disappeared at the Union. A Provincial Grand Master—James Todd—was appointed in 1763, whose name only drops out of the Freemasons' Calendar in 1799. In 1801, an Atholl Warrant, No. 322, was granted to the 78th Foot, which regiment was engaged in the Mahratta war under Sir Arthur Wellesley and took part in the decisive victory of Assaye (1803). In 1818, Lord Moira was asked to constitute a Lodge at Poona. But none was again established in the Presidency until 1822, in which year the Benevolent Lodge, No. 746, Bombay was placed on the English lists. Among the Freemasons about this time in Bombay were thirteen non-commissioned officers who were too poor to establish a Lodge of their own and too modest to seek admittance in what was considered an aristocratic Lodge. They met, however, monthly in the guard-room over the Apollo Gate, for mutual instruction in Masonry. This coming to the knowledge of the Benevolent Lodge, the thirteen were elected honorary members of No. 746, for which they returned heartfelt thanks. At their first attendance, when the Lodge work was over and the Brethren adjourned to the banquet, the thirteen were informed that refreshments awaited them downstairs. Revolting at the distinction thus made among Freemasons, they one and all left the place. The next morning they were sent for by their commanding officer, who was also one of the officers of the Lodge and asked to explain their conduct. One of the party, W. Willis, told him that as Masons they were bound to meet on the Level and part on the Square; but as this fundamental principle was not practised in No. 746, of which they had been elected honorary members, they could not partake of their hospitality. The astonished colonel uttered not a word, but waved his hand for them to retire. Ever after this, the Benevolent Lodge—including the thirteen—met on the Level, both in Lodge and at the banquet-table.

In 1823, a Military Lodge—Orion in the West—was formed in the Bombay Artillery and registered at Poona as No. 15, Coast of Coromandel, November 15. According to the early proceedings of this Lodge, members “were examined in the Third Degree and passed into the chair of the Fourth Degree”—for which a fee of three gold mohurs was exacted. In the following year, a second Lodge at Poona was established by the Provincial Grand Lodge for Bengal, which, however, has left no trace of its existence. In 1825, the civilian element of Orion seceded and formed the Lodge of Hope, also at Poona, No. 802. Here, Orion, unrecognized at home, aided in the secession of some of its members, who obtained a Warrant, on the recommendation of the parent Lodge, from the Grand Lodge of England. A Lodge was erected at Bombay—Perseverance, No. 818—in 1828. Two years later it was discovered that no notification of the existence of Orion in the West had reached the Grand Lodge of England, nor had any fees been received, though these, including the quarterages, had been regularly paid to the Provincial Grand Lodge of the Coast of Coromandel. It was further ascertained that in granting a Warrant for a Bombay Lodge, the Provincial Grand Master for the Coast of Coromandel had exceeded his powers. Ultimately, a new Warrant, No. 598, was granted from England, July 19, 1833.

Up to this time the Jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of England had not been invaded; but in 1836, Dr. James Burnes was appointed by the Grand Lodge for Scotland, Provincial Grand Master for Western India and its Dependencies.

No Provincial Grand Lodge, however, was formed until January 1, 1838. A second Scottish Province—of Eastern India—was subsequently erected, which, on the retirement of the Marquess of Tweeddale, was absorbed within the Jurisdiction of Dr. Burnes, who, in 1846, became Provincial Grand Master for all India (including Aden), but with the proviso, that this appointment was not to act in restraint of any future subdivision of the Presidencies. D. Murray Lyon says that though Lord Tweeddale was Governor and Commander-in-Chief of Madras from April 1842 to September 1848, his name does not occur in any records of the Grand Lodge of Scotland of that period, nor indeed of any other, as Provincial Grand Master for Eastern India.

Burnes, in 1836, may be best described, in ecclesiastical phrase, as a Provincial Grand Master in partibus infidelium, for whatever Lodges then existed throughout the length and breadth of India were strangers to Scottish Masonry. But the times were propitious. There was no English Provincial Grand Lodge for Bombay; and under the Chevalier Burnes, whom nature had bountifully endowed with all the qualities requisite for Masonic administration, Scottish Masonry presented such attractions, that the strange sight was witnessed of English Masons deserting their mother Lodges to such an extent that these fell into abeyance, in order that they might give their support to Lodges newly constituted by the Grand Lodge of Scotland. In one case, indeed, a Lodge—Perseverance—under England went over bodily to the enemy, with its name, jewels, furniture and belongings and the charge was accepted by Scotland.

From this period, therefore, Scottish Masonry flourished and English Masonry declined, the latter finally becoming quite dormant until the year 1848, when a Lodge, St. George—No. 807 on the roll of the Grand Lodge of England—was again formed at Bombay and, for some years, was the solitary representative of English Masonry in the Province.

In 1844, Burnes established a Lodge, No. 413, Rising Star, at Bombay, for the admission of natives—by whom a beautiful medal, cut by Wyon, was struck in consequence—and No. 414, St. Andrew in the East, at Poona. These were followed by Nos. 421 (now No. 337)—Hope, Karachi—and 422 (now No. 338)—Perseverance, Bombay—in 1847.

Scottish Lodges were next erected in Bengal—No. 353 (now 371), St. David in the East, Calcutta, 1849; and in Arabia—No. 355, Felix, Aden, 1850, still existent with the same number. At the close of 1885, 33 Lodges in all—or under Bombay, 19; Bengal, 11; Madras, 2; and in Afghanistan, 1—had received Charters from the Grand Lodge of Scotland.

Burnes left India in 1849 and was succeeded by a Provincial Grand Master for Western India only. In 1874, however, Captain Henry Morland became Provincial Grand Master for Hindustan and, subsequently, was commissioned as Grand Master of All Scottish Freemasonry in India.

Returning to the Lodges under the Grand Lodge of England, St. George—No. 807 (now No. 549)—constituted in 1848, was for ten years the only representative of its class. In 1858, however, Lodges Concord—No. 1059 (now No. 507)—and Union—No. 1069 (now No. 767 at Karachi)—were established at Bombay and Karachi respectively. A year later, Orion in the West (now No. 415, Poona), awoke from its dormancy. In 1861, a Provincial Grand Lodge was established and to-day there are 49 Lodges under the District Grand Master for Bombay.

Until recent years, it cannot be said that Freemasonry has taken any real root among the native population of India. Umdat-ul-Umará, son of the Nabob of Arcot, was admitted a member of the Society in 1776. The princes Keyralla Khan (of the Mysore family) and Shadad Khan (ex-Ameer of Scinde) joined, or were made Masons in, the Lodge of True Friendship in 1842 and 1850 respectively; and, in 1861, the Maharajahs Duleep and Runder Sing were initiated in Lodges Star of the East and Hope and Perseverance—the last-named personage at Lahore, the other three in Calcutta. Since then several native princes have received Grand Rank in the United Grand Lodge of England.

A By-law of the Provincial Grand Lodge for Bengal, forbidding the entry of Asiatics without the permission of the Provincial Grand Master was in force until May 12, 1871; and there was at least a popular belief in existence so late as 1860, that Hindus were ineligible for initiation. An assistant military apothecary was initiated in the Meridian Lodge, 31st Foot, in that year. The legality of this act—on the score of the intransigent being a Brahmin—was demurred to in the Masonic press; the 31st Regiment being with the Expeditionary Force in China, G. W. Ingram, P.M., No. 345, took up the cudgels on behalf of the Lodge, pointing out, in an elaborate argument, “that the very ground-work of the Brahmin faith is the belief in one Grand Superintending Being.” The journal in which these letters appeared ultimately reached the Lodge—then at Tientsin—when a final letter, deposing that, having filled the chair on the occasion alluded to, the individual whose admission had been called in question was, “by his own statement a Christian,” was sent to the press. Cf. Freemasons' Magazine, April 21, September 8, and October 13, 1860; and May 18, 1861; and for some startling assertions respecting Freemasonry forming a portion of the Brahminical knowledge, see Higgins, Anacalypsis, 1836, vol. i, pp. 767-9; and H. Melville, Revelation of Mysteries, etc., 1876, p. 17. The Parsees of Western India were the first of the native races who evinced any real interest in the institution and in 1886 one of their number, Dorábjee Prestonjee Cama, was elected to the high position of Treasurer of the Grand Lodge of England. Another member of that family was, in 1927, appointed to the rank of Past Assistant Grand Registrar, while there is a Lodge at Hampton Court, Cama, No. 2105, named after another distinguished Parsee (see Masonic News, London, June 14, 1930, p. 480).

In 1876, a Scottish Lodge, No. 587, Islam—presumably for the association of Mohammedans—was erected at Bombay. The extent to which Freemasonry is now practised by the Hindus—who form 73½ per cent. of the total population of India—is impossible to determine.

CEYLON

The earliest trace of a Lodge in Ceylon is that of one warranted by the Antient Grand Lodge of England in October 1761, to be attached to the 51st Regiment. Little is known of its activities. In a certificate of 1802 from Colombo it is referred to as the Orange Lodge, but it does not appear in the Register after 1781, although it is included in the list in Abiman Rezon in 1804. In 1802, the Antients warranted a Lodge for the Sixth Battalion of the Royal Artillery then stationed at Colombo, but this seems to have had an inglorious existence and it was erased in 1830. In September 1807 a further Lodge was warranted by the Antients to be attached to the Second Battalion of the 34th Regiment, but it is doubtful whether the Lodge ever met there as the Warrant is endorsed "At Bandon, November 25, 1807." The Lodge met at Bandon and Clonmel in that year and at Jersey in the following year. Little more is known of its movements and it was erased from the English Register in 1832. In 1822, the Taprobane Lodge was established in Ceylon under a Provisional Warrant from the United Grand Lodge of England, but it does not appear in the list until 1836, when it met at Madras; it was erased in June 1862. In the same year (1822), St. John's Lodge, No. 628, was formed at Colombo by members of the St. Andrew's Union Lodge, which had been founded in 1799, to be attached to the 19th Regiment of Foot. It is still in existence as No. 434, but meets at Secunderabad and is, therefore, included in the District of Madras. In August, 1838, the oldest existing Lodge in Ceylon was established—the St. John's Lodge of Colombo, No. 454, which now meets at the Henry Byrde Memorial Hall, Kandy. Then comes a long break until 1886, when the Lodge of St. George, No. 2170, still in existence, was founded at Colombo. To-day there are nine Lodges in the District of Ceylon, which was formed in 1907. Sir Alexander Johnston was appointed Provincial Grand Master in 1810, but he was connected with the Coast of Coromandel, which had the supervision of the Lodges in Ceylon.

There are three Lodges under the Irish Constitution: two in Colombo, No. 107, founded in 1861 and No. 115, founded in 1868; one at Talawakelle, No. 298, founded in 1874. Scotland has jurisdiction over one only, Bonnie Doon, No. 611, at Colombo.

The Grand Lodge of the Netherlands was one of the earliest Masonic invaders of Ceylon and erected Lodges at Colombo in 1771 and 1794 and at Point de Galle in 1773. In 1795 the British took possession of the Dutch settlements on the island and annexed them to the Presidency of Madras but, six years afterwards, in 1801, Ceylon was formed into a separate Crown colony.

CHAPTER VIII
FREEMASONRY IN AFRICA

SOUTH AFRICA

THE Cape Settlement was taken by a British naval force in 1795, restored to Holland in 1802, retaken in 1806 and permanently ceded to Britain at the Congress of Vienna.

Dutch Lodges—"Of Good Hope" and "Of Good Trust"—were erected at Cape Town in 1772 and 1802 respectively. These, happily, survive; but several Lodges, at least, in South Africa under the same Jurisdiction appear to have passed away without leaving any trace of their existence.

After the final cession of the colony, Lodges under the rival Grand Lodges of England were established at the capital in 1811 and 1812 respectively—in the former year, the British, No. 629, under the older sanction, still in existence as No. 334, the oldest Lodge in the District of South Africa, Western Division; and in the latter, No. 354, the Cape of Good Hope Lodge, in the 10th Battalion of the Royal Artillery, under an Atholl Warrant; this Lodge was erased in 1851.

The first band of English settlers arrived in 1820 and, in the following year, a second stationary Lodge, under the United Grand Lodge of England—Hope, No. 727 (erased in January 1878)—was erected at Cape Town—where, also, a Lodge bearing the same name under the Grand Orient of France, sprang up, November 10, 1824. A third English Lodge—Albany, No. 817—was established at Grahamstown in 1828. It is now numbered 389 and is the oldest Lodge in the District of South Africa, Eastern Division.

The following statement appears in the Proceedings of the Grand Lodge of England for June 5, 1867:

The Dutch Lodges received the English Brethren with open arms and with great satisfaction. When English Masonry had increased and it was considered right to form a Provincial Grand Lodge, the Brother selected for the office of Provincial Grand Master was the Deputy Grand Master of the Netherlands, who continued till his death to hold the two appointments.

This must have been Sir John Truter, who received an English Patent in 1829; for, although an earlier Provincial Grand Master under England—Richard Blake—had been appointed in 1801, the words quoted above will not apply to the latter. Between 1828 and 1850 there was no augmentation of the Lodges; but, in the latter year, a revival set in and, during the decade immediately ensuing—1851-60—six Reproduced from Ars Quatuor Coronatorum.

Curious hand-painted Masonic apron, given to Bro. De Wet by his father, Bro. Jacobus Petrus De Wet, of Cape Town. This apron was exhibited in 1887 at the exhibition of the Huguenot curiosities, and was catalogued as a Masonic apron over a hundred years old. It is made of kid or lamb skin, is lined with green silk, and bound with green ribbon, and the lower part is semi-circular, like the Dutch Rose Croix aprons, instead of square.

were warranted by the Grand Lodge of England. These were the Sovereignty, 871, founded in 1851 and erased on June 4, 1862; Zetland, No. 884, now No. 608, founded at Fort Beaufort on November 30, 1852; Fordyce, No. 987, founded at King William's Town, in November, 1856, which ceased working in October 1860; Lodge of Good Will, No. 1013, now No. 711, warranted on July 30, 1857 and consecrated on June 24, 1858; Port Natal, No. 1040, now 738, warranted on March 3 and consecrated on June 14, 1858; and St. John's, No. 1130, now No. 828, warranted on August 7 and consecrated on November 29, 1860.

In 1860, to the Jurisdictions already existing (those of Holland and England) was added that of Scotland, under the Grand Lodge of which country a Lodge—Southern Cross, No. 398—was erected at Cape Town, which is still in existence. Shortly afterwards, in a single year (1863) two Dutch Lodges were established in Cape Colony and one at Bloemfontein, in the Orange Free State. This period coincides with the appointment in 1863—after an interregnum—of Sir Richard Southey as Provincial Grand Master under the Grand Lodge of England for the whole of South Africa. This, however, was not the first appointment of this character, as he had been preceded, in 1801, by Richard Blake; in 1826, by Sir John Truter; and, in 1834, by Clerke Burton. In 1877, South Africa was divided into two Districts—Eastern and Western Divisions, when Sir Richard Southey became District Grand Master of the latter. In 1895 there was a further partition and the District of South Africa, Central Division, was founded. The District of Natal was formed in 1882; Transvaal in 1895; and Rhodesia in 1929.

The strength of the English Jurisdiction in South Africa to-day is as follows: Natal, 40 Lodges; Rhodesia, 6 Lodges; South Africa, Central Division, 12 Lodges; South Africa, Eastern Division, 46 Lodges; South Africa, Western Division, 31 Lodges; Transvaal, 61 Lodges.

Ireland has two Provincial Grand Lodges in South Africa: the Northern Province, with jurisdiction over 23 Lodges and the Southern (Cape) Province, with 5 Lodges.

Scotland has five Districts: the Eastern of the Cape of Good Hope, 12 Lodges; Natal, 14 Lodges; Rhodesia, 11 Lodges; Transvaal, 44 Lodges; Western of the Cape of Good Hope, 9 Lodges.

The relations between the English and Dutch Masons at the Cape have always been of the most friendly character. When the District Grand Lodge under England was re-erected (1863), the Deputy Grand Master under the Grand Lodge of the Netherlands assisted at its re-inauguration and placed at the disposal of the English Brethren, the Masonic Hall belonging to the Dutch Fraternity. At the celebration of the festival of St. John, it has long been customary for the English and Dutch Masons to assemble at different hours of the day, in order that the Brethren under each Jurisdiction might be present at both meetings. There is frequent inter-visitation between the members of all four Jurisdictions.

At a Quarterly Communication of the Grand Lodge of England, held June 5, 1867, it was stated:

Recently an objection has been raised by some of the younger English Masons against the establishment of some new Lodges lately formed by the Dutch, on the ground that the Convention of 1770 prohibits their doing so, the Cape now being an English possession, having been so since the early part of the present century. In this view, the District Grand Lodge does not seem to participate. That body is anxious that the amicable relations that have so long subsisted between the English and Dutch Masons should continue. ∴ ∴ After setting the foregoing facts before the Grand Lodge, the Grand Registrar expressed an opinion that, whatever might have been the intention of the Convention of 1770, it had not been acted on in the Cape Colony, but that the Grand Master of England, by appointing the Deputy Grand Master of the Netherlands to be his Provincial Grand Master over English Lodges, virtually recognized the Dutch Lodges. It must be taken for granted that both the contracting parties have tacitly consented that it should not apply to the Cape. ∴ He was of opinion that as both parties seem to have considered that the Cape was neutral ground and, the existence of two Grand Lodges having been allowed to continue side by side, it would be for the benefit of the Brethren in that Colony, that, as they have gone on working as friends and Brothers, they should still continue to do so (Proceedings, Grand Lodge of England).

A resolution embodying the foregoing was then put and unanimously adopted.

WEST COAST OF AFRICA

Richard Hull was appointed Provincial Grand Master for Gambia, West Africa, in 1735; David Creighton, M.D., was similarly commissioned for Cape Coast in 1736; and William Douglas for the African Coast and American Islands in 1737. Notwithstanding these appointments by the Grand Lodge of England, the earliest Lodge in the western portion of the continent established by that body, seems to have been No. 586, at Bulam, constituted in 1792. After this came the Torridzonian Lodge, No. 621, at Cape Coast Castle, in 1810. The former of these disappeared at the Union (1813), but the latter was only erased March 5, 1862, though doubtless inactive for a long time previously, as three Lodges of much later constitution—Nos. 721, Sierra Leone, 1820; 599, Cape Coast, 1833; and 867, Bathurst, River Gambia, 1851—were likewise struck off the Roll on the same occasion. Two further English Lodges were established in the district—Nos. 1075, Cape Coast Castle, 1859, now No. 773; and 1171, Lagos, West Coast, 1867—both of which are still shown in the list.

To-day there are altogether eleven Lodges of the English Constitution in the Gold Coast under the charge of a Grand Inspector, viz. four at Accra: Victoria, No. 2392, (founded in 1891); Accra, No. 3063 (1904); Harmonic, No. 4190 (1920); and Three Pillars, No. 4867 (1926); one at Cape Coast Castle, Gold Coast Lodge, already mentioned; two at Coomassie: Ashanti, No. 3717 (1914) and McCarthy, No. 4132 (1920); two at Sekondi: Sekondi, No. 3238 (1907) and St. George's Secondee, No. 3851 (1918); two at Tarkwa: Taquah, No. 3356 (1909) and Wanderers' Home, No. 3814 (1917). There are thirteen Lodges under the Scottish Constitution in West Africa: at Sierra Leone (three), Nigeria (seven), Gambia (one), Cape Coast Castle (one) and Ashanti (one).

LIBERIA.—This remarkable State, colonized in 1821 by a handful of freed slaves from the United States, recruited ever since by emigrants of the same class and by the wretched cargoes of captured slave vessels, acknowledged in 1847 as an independent Republic, governed and well governed too, on the American model, by the elsewhere despised negro race, with a navy of one vessel (a present from England), a college with professorial chairs all filled by negroes—this successful outcome of a daringly humane experiment, which has partly civilized countless hordes of natives on its borders, possesses an independent Grand Lodge of its own, with a seat at Monrovia, the capital. Its Masonic history, properly told, would prove both interesting and instructive, but unfortunately nothing beyond the barest statistics can be obtained. A Grand Lodge was established in 1867, of which the first Grand Master was Amos, an ex-Pennsylvanian slave. In 1870 he died and was followed by Joseph Roberts, an ex-President of the Republic. According to the Masonic Calendars, in 1876 C. B. Dunbar was the Grand Master, with five Lodges; in 1877, Reginald A. Sherman; and in 1881, William M. Davis, with six Lodges and 125 members.

THE AZORES.—In these, which form a province and not a dependency, of Portugal, there was a Lodge under the United Grand Lusitanian Orient. That Jurisdiction is a favourite one in the islands of the North Atlantic, as there were in MADEIRA three and in the CANARIES nine, Lodges holding Warrants from the same Grand Orient.

ST. HELENA.—An (Atholl) Lodge—No. 132—was established in this island in 1764, but lapsed in the following year; another—No. 568—under the (older) Grand Lodge of England in 1798, which was carried forward at the Union (1813), though it did not survive the renumbering of 1832. Lieut.-Colonel Francis Robson was appointed Provincial Grand Master in 1801, David Kay, M.D., in 1803, both holding office under the senior of the two Grand Lodges. The latter continued for several years to preside over a Province in which there was no Lodge; but a revival took place in 1843, when No. 718, now No. 488, was erected and a second Lodge—No. 1214—came into existence in 1862, but has since been erased.

The 20th Foot—to which the famous Minden Lodge, No. 63, was attached by the Grand Lodge of Ireland in 1748—formed the guard over Napoleon in 1819–21; but the historian of the Lodge informs us, “the political and peculiar state of the island during our station at St. Helena, the severity of duty, the want of a building, all operated to prevent the best intentions ∴ ∴ to assemble for Masonic purposes.”

In the only other British island on the coast of Africa lying south of the Equator—ASCENSION—a Lodge, No. 1029 on the English Roll, was erected in 1864, but has ceased to exist.

There is one Lodge under the Irish Jurisdiction in West Africa, No. 197, at Calabar.

EGYPT

Tradition states that Freemasonry was introduced into Egypt, according to the Rite of Memphis, in 1798, by Napoleon, Kleber and other officers of the French Army. It is not, however, until 1802 that there is definite information concerning regular French Lodges, when Loge La Bienfaisance was established at Alexandria; in 1806, a second unit, Loge Les Amis de Napoleon le Grand, was established, also at Alexandria: both these were under the Grand Orient of France. Others were constituted by the same authority, at Alexandria, in 1847 and 1863; at Cairo, in 1868; and at Mansourah, in 1882. The rival French Jurisdiction—the Supreme Council of the 33rd Degree—also established a Lodge at Alexandria in 1862, others at Ismailia, Port Said and Suez in 1867, which remained in existence for many years. There was also in existence, in 1879, a French Lodge under the dominion of the Grand Independent Symbolic League—a body no longer in existence.

The following Lodges were established under the United Grand Lodge of England, prior to 1894:

St. John's Lodge, No. 1221 (afterwards 919), founded at Alexandria, July 12, 1862; erased April 5, 1877.

Bulwer Lodge of Cairo, No. 1068, constituted February 8 and chartered June 7, 1865, still in existence.

Hyde Clarke Lodge, No. 1082, founded in 1865 at Alexandria; erased December 14, 1869.

Grecia Lodge, No. 1105, warranted March 31 and constituted April 20, 1866, at Cairo; still in existence.

Lodge of St. John and St. Paul, No. 1154, at Alexandria, chartered on February 22, 1867; erased December 6, 1882.

Egyptian Lodge, No. 1156, at Cairo, chartered March 5 and constituted April 29, 1867; erased December 6, 1882.

Zetland Lodge, No. 1157, at Alexandria, warranted March 5 and constituted May 30, 1867; still in existence.

La Concordia Lodge, No. 1226, Cairo, formed in 1868 and erased June 4, 1890.

Lodge Star of the East, No. 1355, warranted March 27 and constituted June 10, 1871; still in existence.

Ramleh Lodge, No. 1419, at Ramleh, warranted October 21, 1872, and constituted on January 28, 1873; erased December 6, 1882.

The Lodges constituted since 1894 and still in existence are: Khartoum, No. 2877, Khartoum; Sir Reginald Wingate, No. 2954, Khartoum; Pelusium, No. 3003, Port Said; Delta, No. 3060, Tantah; Lotus, No. 3296, Cairo; Mahfalel-Ittihad, No. 3348, Khartoum; Ataka, No. 3367, Suez; Lord Kitchener, No. 3402, Cairo; Atbara, No. 3407, Atbara; Ionic, No. 3997, Cairo; Alexandria, No. 4184, Alexandria; Red Sea, No. 4570, Port Sudan; and United Service Lodge of Alexandria, No. 4571, Alexandria.

In 1899, the District Grand Lodge for Egypt and the Sudan was established, the District Grand Masters of which have been as follows: Earl Kitchener of Khartoum, 1899; General Sir Francis Reginald Wingate, 1901; John Langley, 1920; Sir Lee O. F. Stack, 1924; and Brigadier-General Charles Stuart Wilson, 1926.

In 1867, the Grand Lodge of Scotland established a Lodge, No. 472, at Suez, but this has since been erased. There are now, however, four Lodges under the jurisdiction of the Scottish Grand Lodge, viz. Albert Edward, No. 707, at Alexandria; St. John Lodge of Cairo, No. 1080; Lodge St. Andrew, No. 1161, at Aboukir; and the United Service Lodge, No. 1337, at Port Said.

A few Lodges work under Greek and Italian Constitutions.

Before referring to the National Grand Lodge of Egypt, it is necessary to deal with the Rite of Memphis. In 1862, J. E. Marconis resigned his position as Grand Universal Hierophant of that body in favour of the Grand Orient of France. According, however, to the Official Bulletin of the latter body, before he did so he constituted, in Cairo, the Lodge Menes and founded, in Alexandria, a Supreme Council of the Rite of Memphis, with the distinctive title of the Grand Orient of Egypt, giving authority to found Lodges, Chapters, Areopagi, Senates and Consistories to confer from the 1st to the 90th Degrees. The Grand Orient decreed that this was illegal and they convoked all the Patriarchs of the Order, of whom there were ninety-five in Egypt and founded the first Sanctuary of Memphis in Egypt. This was in 1867 and Prince Halim Pasha, son of the famous Mehemet Ali, was elected Grand Master of the Order, which prospered greatly until 1868, when the Grand Master was sent into exile and the Lodges and Councils ceased to work. In the following year, the Sanctuary, which had worked for a time in secret with a limited number of Patriarchs, also fell into abeyance. On December 21, 1872, however, the Rite was revived, when, with the sanction of the Khedive, S. A. Zola was elected and proclaimed Grand Master of the Grand National Orient of Egypt, which worked according to the Rite of Memphis and, in 1874, he was further authorized to assume the title of Grand Hierophant, which is the 97th Degree, or the supreme office of the Rite. In the following year, two treaties were concluded between the Grand Orient of Egypt, viz. the Rite of Memphis, working 96 Degrees and the Ancient and Accepted Rite, working 33 Degrees. This latter body had been established in Egypt in 1864, under Charter from the Grand Orient of Naples, which had derived its authority from a Spanish source, while the Order of Memphis held its authority from a Charter granted, also in 1864, from Paris. The agreement was entered into: "That a Body shall be formed like the Grand Council of Rites in Ireland; that the jurisdiction of the Grand Orient of Egypt shall be limited to the first three symbolic Degrees and that the Rites of Memphis and of the Ancient and Accepted Rite shall work the remainder."

On May 8, 1876, the Grand Orient was reorganized and there was constituted a Federal Diet of Egyptian Masonry. It was resolved that there should be three Grand Masonic bodies in the Valley of the Nile, each of which should be different, distinct and separate from the others, viz. 1, the National Grand Lodge of Egypt;

2, the Supreme Council of the Ancient and Accepted Rite (working 33 Degrees); and 3, the Sovereign Grand Council of the Rite of Memphis (working 96 Degrees). These two latter bodies were to work from the 4th Degree upwards, the first three Degrees being left entirely to the National Grand Lodge of Egypt.

The National Grand Lodge of Egypt has flourished since its establishment; in 1886, it numbered twenty-five Lodges under its jurisdiction, but, at the present time, it has nearly three times that number. John H. Cowles, Sovereign Grand Commander of the Supreme Council of the Ancient and Accepted Rite for the Southern Jurisdiction of the U.S.A., who paid a recent visit to Egypt, says that the National Grand Lodge is quite cosmopolitan, there being Lodges working in the Arabic, Turkish, Greek, French, Italian, German and English languages. As its model, it follows the Grand Lodge of England in its customs, laws and ritual, as it interprets them.

J. H. Cowles goes on to say :

On a recent visit to Cairo, I saw no Degrees conferred, but was told they were very much the same as those of the Mother Grand Lodge. I did recognize the furniture, fixtures and altar arrangements as being about the same as ours and on the altar were the Holy Bible and the Koran opened, with the Square and Compasses in proper position, so that Mohammedan, Jew and Christian can take their vows at the same time and on the volume sacred to each. Belief in a Supreme Being is a necessary prerequisite to membership. Political and religious matters are prohibited and how essential is this in a land where the elements composing the membership are so far apart in many ways and in ideals. Yet what a tribute to Freemasonry it is that they can all assemble around the same altar in the spirit of Brotherhood.

The Supreme Council of Egypt has been recognized generally by the regular Supreme Councils of the world and, for many years, has exchanged representatives with ours. There are Rose Croix Chapters under its jurisdiction which are conducted in the Arabic, Greek, French and Italian tongues and one in the English tongue may come into existence before a great while. The present Grand Commander, Nachaat, is now Ambassador to Spain and the Secretary-General is Mohammed Rifaat Bey, who is also the National Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge.

In 1889 Idris Bey Ragheb was elected Grand Master of the National Grand Lodge and continued in office until 1922. He was a very rich and influential man and, for a long period, the Craft prospered under his leadership, but there came a time when a schism arose and the Brethren, who sought to restore the prestige of their Grand Lodge, turned to Prince Mohamed Ali and, in 1922, asked him to become a candidate for the office of Grand Master. The petitioners were, however, confronted with a statute which read :

No Brother can be elected Grand Master, unless he be an active and contributing member of a Lodge subordinate to the National Grand Lodge of Egypt and has been a Grand Warden.

The Prince was an Honorary Grand Master of the Grand Lodge, but he was not an active member of any Lodge in Egypt at the time and Idris Bey Ragheb, as Grand Master, refused to accept a proposition for a modification of the statute. Prince Mohamed Ali was thereupon elected to membership of the Nile Lodge, but Idris Ragheb declared the election null and void, suspended the Charter of the Lodge and a considerable number of Brethren who had sided with Nile Lodge. The Prince, however, had also become a member of Sun Lodge, No. 91, at Cairo. There were many unseemly disputes because of the action of Idris Bey Ragheb, but Prince Mohamed Ali was elected Grand Master in 1922, being succeeded in 1927 by Mahmoud Fahmy Kutry Pasha. The dissension, however, led to the formation of a second Grand Lodge of the same name, which has led to much confusion. Of this second body Le Ferik Said Ali Pasha is the Grand Master. The former body only is recognized by the United Grand Lodge of England, the Grand Lodge of New York and 52 other Sovereign Bodies. It claims jurisdiction over 73 Lodges and 6,500 members. Forty-three Lodges work in Arabic, fifteen in Greek, six in English, six in French, two in Hebrew and one in Italian. Fifty-four are in Egypt, ten in Palestine, eight in Syria and one in Iraq.

Royal Arch Masonry, under the Supreme Grand Chapter of England, is represented in Egypt and the Sudan by five Chapters: Ataka, No. 3367, Suez; Bulwer, No. 1068, Cairo; Pelusium, No. 3003, Port Said; Star of the East, No. 1355, Cairo; and Sudan, No. 2954, Khartoum, but there is no District Grand Chapter. There are three Mark Lodges in Cairo, working directly under the Grand Mark Lodge of England.

In 1913, a Masonic hall was opened at Cairo for the use of the Masonic units working under the English Constitution. It may also be mentioned, as illustrative of the amicable relations existing between the English and Egyptian Constitutions, that, on May 15, 1914, the late Lord Kitchener, as representative of the Grand Lodge of England, attended a special meeting of the National Grand Lodge of Egypt, held under the presidency of the then Grand Master, Idris Bey Ragheb.

The reader will remember that the Grand Lodge set out in 1922 to elect Prince Mohammed Aly as Grand Master in place of Idris Bey Ragheb, and that Idris Bey Ragheb and his associates withdrew and formed another body. Both flourished for several years. We find the Committee on Foreign Correspondence of Massachusetts asked to recognise the Idris Bey Ragheb Body, and declining to do so. They quote a letter from England which states that England will not take any action about it until the difficulties are settled. Of course, one can easily see that England must be particularly careful for political reasons. The Grand Lodge of England therefore, which recognised the Grand Lodge of Egypt a few years ago, has to keep entirely away from the present matter, not from reasons of Masonic regularity but from reasons having to do with the numbers in the two Bodies.

Here are comments by Ossian Lang, of the New York Committee, who visited Egypt in 1928:

The Grand Master's address opens with a triple salute to the Craft: "Salute of Friendship, Salute of Brotherliness, Salute of Unity," followed by "most sincere wishes for a good and happy Masonic year" and an appeal to the Great Architect of the Universe "to fill the year for us with His Infinite Blessings."

In speaking of the Brethren who died during the year, he paid a special tribute of respect to him who is known the world over as Zaghoul Pasha, the great Egyptian patriot, who was a member of the National Grand Lodge of Egypt. He said:

"With profound and keen regret I deplore the cruel loss which our Country and the Craft in general have suffered in the person of our most devoted and R.: Ill Bro. Saad Pasha Zaghoul, father of the Nation. By his wisdom and his noble ideas imbued with Masonry, he has made the Nation and the Craft shine with a new brilliancy, like the re-appearance of the sun after its eclipse."

Stress is laid on the need of scrupulous care in the admission of candidates in words that might well be heeded by the Lodges everywhere:

"I beg of you to be very severe in the choice of candidates for every person who aspires to be part of the Craft must be worthy of it, in order that he may by participation in our labors add to the reputation of Freemasonry. Remember that we have need of men of intelligence, of wealth and force to help promote our purposes. Keep out the ignorant, the lazy, the quarrelsome and the weak, and you will have merited well of the Fraternity. Shut the doors to those who are unworthy of you and receive all those who can become the strong pillars on which Masonry in Egypt must rest, for it must continue its upward trend toward greater progress. I count to an extraordinary degree upon the Worshipful Masters of the Lodges to assist me in this difficult and delicate task, and I feel sure of your precious collaboration."

The appreciable gain made during the year in the extension of relations with regular Grand Lodges in foreign lands has been a source of much gratification to the Grand Master. In reporting concerning this matter, he adds a word which gives us particular pleasure:

"Last August, we had the pleasure to receive the official visit of the Grand Lodge of New York to our Grand Lodge. The delegation charged with this visit was composed of the M.: W.: Brother Harold Jay Richardson (Grand Master), the R.: W.: Brother Charles Johnson (Senior Grand Warden) and the R.: W.: Brother Ossian Lang (Grand Historian). I have regretted very much my absence from Egypt at that time, but, from another point of view, I have been very well satisfied with the touching reception which was tendered to them by the personnel of this Grand Lodge. Moreover, this visit was really unexpected and was announced rather late, hardly two or three weeks before the arrival of the delegation in Egyptian territory."

"The great loss which Freemasonry suffered in the unexpected death of the V.: Ill. Brother Saad Pasha Zaghoul, President of Parliament, former President of the Council of Ministers, President of the Wafd and Father of the Egyptian Nation" is announced. The Lodges are asked to use black-bordered stationery, to drape their rooms and furniture in black and to have all Brethren wear black rosettes on their insignia and aprons, for the space of seven weeks. A Lodge of Sorrow was held in memory of the beloved patriot.

sistance to needy Brethren of foreign Jurisdictions. The answer given by Grand Lodge was that there is no restriction on the use of Lodge funds for the relief of the poor of no matter what race or religion.

April, 1928: Word has been received that M.:W.:H.R.H. the Prince Mohammed Aly has felt compelled by ill health to retire from the Grand Mastership. He has been suffering for some time, and spent a great part of the year abroad in search of health and restoration of health.

This is a polyglot Grand Lodge, for of seventy-five Lodges, forty-five Work in the Arabic language, sixteen in Greek, six in French, five in English, two in Italian, and the other one in Hebrew. Fifty-nine of the Lodges are in Egypt, the others being in Syria, Palestine and Iraq.

We gladly reprint a statement by Bro. Cowles, after a visit to Egypt:

The National Grand Lodge of Egypt has about sixty lodges with approximately five thousand members under its obedience. It is quite cosmopolitan, there being lodges working in the Arabic, Turkish, Greek, French, Italian, German and (one) English languages. As its model it follows the Grand Lodge of England in its customs, laws and ritual, as it interprets them.

On a recent visit in Cairo I saw no degrees conferred, but was told they were very much the same as those of the Mother Grand Lodge. I did recognise the furniture, fixtures and altar arrangement as being about the same as ours, and on the altar were the Holy Bible and the Koran opened, with the Square and Compasses in proper position, so Mohammedan, Jew and Christian can take their vows at the same time and on the volume sacred to each. Belief in a Supreme Being is a necessary prerequisite to membership. Political and religious matters are prohibited, and how essential is this in a land where the elements composing the membership are so far apart in many ways and in ideals. Yet what a tribute to Masonry it is, that they can all assemble around the same altar in the spirit of brotherhood.

Ill. Bro. Idris Bey Ragheb was Grand Master some thirty-five years. He was a very influential and rich man, but in the last few years has lost most of his fortune and with it some of his friends. In September, 1922, at the Grand Lodge session an endeavor was made to elect Prince Mohammed Aly (nephew of the present King of Egypt) as Grand Master, and there were votes enough to do it, but Grand Master Idris ruled that the statutes of the National Grand Lodge of Egypt required a brother to be Master or Past Master of a lodge before he could be a member of the Grand Lodge, and further that the law was clear that a brother must serve a year as Grand Warden before he was eligible for election to the office of Grand Master. He declared that, as the Prince could fill neither of these requirements, he was ineligible. The Prince was popular, and added to this was the prestige of royal birth. The ruling started a disturbance which refused to be quelled by the Grand Master's orders, so he declared the Grand Lodge closed and retired with seventeen of his officers. One officer who sided with the Prince remained and called Grand Lodge to order, and the Prince was elected Grand Master. The difficulty was then taken to the civil courts and decided against the Prince and in favor of Grand Master Idris.

Whereupon the Prince's faction smashed the furniture, pictures, paraphernalia, etc., of which they had retained possession. This act was inexcusable, even if they had been in the right, and was unworthy of Masons and pretty fair evidence that they were not imbued with true Masonic ideals and principles. The records show that the Prince affiliated with one lodge on August 19, 1922, and another on September 26, 1922 (dual membership being permitted as in England), while his election was held September 28, 1922. His former Masonic connections were with the Grand Orient.

The law of eligibility in this Grand Lodge is practically the same as that of the Grand Lodges of the United States, and it is a credit to Grand Master Idris that he had stamina to uphold the Grand Lodge statutes even if a Prince of the Royal House were concerned. The National Grand Lodge of Egypt has obstacles to meet and difficulties to overcome in bearing aloft the light of Masonry, and it would be aided greatly if the Grand Lodges of the United States gave it the encouragement of recognition and fellowship.

The two Egyptian factions were merged.

TUNIS

Many authors have asserted the existence of Speculative Masonry amidst the Arabian and Moorish inhabitants of Tunis. There is, undoubtedly, a secret society current amongst them bearing a resemblance to it but with no claim to a common origin, though of a strictly religious nature. In 1821 a revolution in Naples led to a large migration to Tunis and, among the emigrants, were many members of the Grand Orient of Naples. Though forbidden by the Bey, they held secret meetings in the suburbs of the capital and, amongst other places, under the friendly shelter of the great Roman cisterns amidst the ruins of Carthage. They seem to have met under the authority of a body styling itself the Grand Orient of Tunis. Proofs of the existence of these Lodges have been furnished by the discovery of their Constitutions, but the volume has suffered considerably from being buried in a box between the meetings, of which no written record was kept. (See A. M. Broadley's History of Freemasonry in Malta, p. 83.) In 1830 the working Lodge was named Figli Addottioi di Cartagine ed Utica which, in 1845, became merged in the Lodge Figli Scelti di Cartagine ed Utica. The 18th Degree of the Ancient and Accepted Rite was worked at this time and the Lodge issued a very beautiful and artistic certificate in the French language. These Lodges were succeeded by La Novella Cartagine and the Attilo Regolo and, in 1860, the Grand Orient of France chartered a Lodge, with a Rose Croix Chapter attached, named La Perseverance. In 1865 the Grand Orient of Palermo (afterwards Rome) constituted the Lodge Cartagine ed Utica and, about the same time, the Grand Council of France chartered the Lodge La Segretezza, which, apparently, had a very brief prosperity. Two years later the Grand Orient of Italy, which then had its headquarters at Florence, authorized the opening of a Lodge and Chapter called Concordia ed Progresso. None of these bodies, however, had an active existence after 1870.

In 1877 the Lodge of Ancient Carthage, No. 1717, was warranted by the United Grand Lodge of England and, for a time, had a very successful existence and, within three years, had added to its seven founders no fewer than 135 initiates and joining members, composed of 18 Protestants, 75 Roman Catholics, 2 Greek Orthodox, 35 Jews and 5 Moslems, while the Royal Arch Chapter, which had been formed in connexion therewith had added to its original membership no fewer than 49 members. The Lodge and Chapter, however, were erased from the register in 1904, the reason assigned being that its Warrant and all furniture had been destroyed by fire. In 1879, the William Kingston Lodge, 1835, was opened on the petition of seven Brethren, the Lodge being named after the District Grand Master of the day. During the first year of its history it added to its strength by 36 initiates or joining members and for a time it had a very successful career. For reasons not stated, however, it was erased from the register in 1890 and to-day the Grand Lodge of England is not represented in Tunis.

SOUTH AFRICAN ISLANDS

RÉUNION, or BOURBON.—Masonry appears to have been established with some success in this island, under the sanction of the Grand Orient of France. Lodges Perfect Harmony, Happy Reunion and Triple Union were erected in 1775, 1777 and 1784; the second in order at St. Pierre, the others at St. Denis, the capital—where also there was a Provincial Grand Lodge (taking rank from 1781), presided over in 1787 by De Beurnouville, afterwards Marshal of France. Other Lodges sprang into existence—under the same authority—Friendship, 1816 (revived 1859); Happy Union, 1819; and Beneficence, 1862.

MAURITIUS, or ISLE OF FRANCE.—Lodges—under the Grand Orient of France—were established at Port Louis, Triple Hope, 1778; The Twenty-One, 1785; The Fifteen Articles, 1786; and Peace, 1790. In 1810 the island was captured by Britain, to whom the seizure was confirmed at the peace of 1814. The Earl of Moira, on his way to India, stayed a short time at the Mauritius and—August 19, 1813—“at the head of all the Masons of the island, laid in Masonic form, the first stone of the (Catholick) Cathedral of Port Louis.” Lodge Peace, after a slumber, resumed its labours in 1857, but again became extinct.

In 1811 R. T. Farquhar was appointed Provincial Grand Master “for the Isle of France” under the Grand Lodge of England, but no Lodge was formed in the Jurisdiction, until 1816, when No. 676—Faith and Loyalty—came into existence. This was short-lived, becoming extinct before 1832 and the next English Lodge on the island was the British—No. 1038—erected in 1858, also extinct. After which came the Lodge of Harmony—No. 1143—in 1860 (now extinct), followed by one bearing the same title—No. 1535—(possibly a revival), in 1875; and Friendship—No. 1696—in 1877. Only the last one, however, has survived.

An Irish Lodge—No. 235—was established at Port Louis in 1858, the Warrant of which was surrendered in 1873 and a later one—Independent, No. 236—erected in 1878 is now also extinct.

Scotland is represented by a single Lodge, Friendship, No. 439, chartered in 1864. The fifth and last Masonic Jurisdiction which remains to be noticed is that of the Supreme Council of France, under which L'Amitie, No. 245, was added to the roll of Lodges on the island, March 30, 1877.

A resolution, expressing sympathy with the Brethren in the Mauritius under the persecutions they had experienced at the hands of the Roman Catholic authorities in that island, was adopted unanimously by the Grand Lodge of England, December 5, 1855.

SEYCHELLES.—In these dependencies of the Mauritius a Lodge—Sincere Reunion—was erected at Mahé, the largest island of the group, under the Grand Orient of France in 1869.

MOZAMBIQUE.—This island and town forms the capital of the Portuguese possessions in S.E. Africa. It possessed two Lodges, both of which held their Warrants from the United Grand Lusitanian Orient.

CHAPTER IX

FREEMASONRY IN AUSTRALASIA

TASMANIA and New Zealand, together with the whole of Australia, were subject originally to the Government of New South Wales, and the following are the dates on which the former colonies became independent of the latter: Tasmania, 1825; Western Australia, 1829; South Australia, 1834; New Zealand, 1841; Victoria, 1851; Queensland, 1859.

SOUTH AUSTRALIA

To the United Grand Lodge of England unquestionably belongs the credit of the introduction of Freemasonry into South Australia. Some intending Masonic emigrants to that part wished to practise their Masonic Craft in the land and, before leaving England, made application for a Warrant for a Lodge to be established by them in Adelaide on their arrival. The application was granted and, on the very day that the Charter was signed by the Duke of Sussex, as Grand Master—October 22, 1834—the South Australian Lodge of Friendship, No. 613, was consecrated at No. 7, John Street, Adelphi, W.C. A further meeting of the Lodge was held at the same place on March 2, 1835, but the third meeting was held at Black's Hotel, Franklin Street, Adelaide, on August 11, 1838. The Lodge, which is still in existence, has had a successful career throughout its history. It numbered, among its early initiates, Sir John Morphett, afterwards President of the Legislative Council and Sir R. D. Hanson, Chief Justice of the Colony. Governor Grey became a joining member when the Lodge was established in Adelaide and, in 1844, another member, E. Solomon, offered the Lodge a quarter of an acre of land and 10,000 bricks with which to build a Lodge room. As premier Lodge in the colony it acted as Consecrating Lodge of the Adelaide St. John's Lodge on February 1, 1844 (not mentioned in Lane's Masonic Records) and of the Lodge of Harmony of South Australia, No. 743, on February 9 of the same year, the Warrant for which was granted by the United Grand Lodge of England on December 10, 1844. On November 20 of the same year the South Australian Lodge of Friendship petitioned England for permission to form a Provincial Grand Lodge for South Australia and, that permission being granted, Henry Mildred was appointed to the office of Provincial Grand Master and duly installed in January 1848. He was succeeded, in 1854, by Benjamin Archer Kent, who was followed, in 1860, by Arthur Hardy. The first Irish Charter was received in 1855 and, by 1883, the Lodges in South Australia numbered twenty English, seven Irish and six Scottish. In the latter year, mainly through the efforts of H. M. Addison, a Masonic Union was formed, from which was held, on April 16, 1884, a Congress of 85 delegates representing 28 Lodges, when practically the voting in favour of a Sovereign Grand Lodge was unanimous. Eventually, in 1884, fifty years after the creation of the first Lodge, the Grand Lodge of South Australia was established, the Charters of all the Lodges under the English, Irish and Scottish Constitutions being surrendered to this body on April 16, 1884 and, on the following day, the Grand Lodge was brought into being. In consequence of a conflict of opinion as to whether the Grand Lodge was properly constituted, an independent Charter was applied for and received from the Mother Grand Lodge of England. On July 18, 1889, Chief Justice Way, who had been appointed Grand Master of South Australia, resigned that office on the establishment of the United Grand Lodge. In the following October, the Earl of Kintore, then Governor of the colony, was elected Grand Master and, on the 30th of that month, was installed in that capacity by Lord Carrington, Grand Master of the United Grand Lodge of New South Wales, who was assisted in the ceremony by Sir William J. Clarke, Grand Master of the United Grand Lodge of Victoria. The South Australian Lodge of Friendship was placed as No. 1 on the Register, which position it still occupies. It had absorbed the Lodge of Concord, No. 677, on October 28, 1869 and the Albert Lodge, No. 927, on December 2, 1869. The Lodge of Harmony, No. 743, was the first to form a Royal Arch Chapter.

NEW SOUTH WALES

The first known reference to Freemasonry, says the author of the article on Freemasonry in the Illustrated Australian Encyclopædia, is contained in a document, dated September 1802, which purports to admit Anthony Fenn Kemp "into the grade of Ancient Masonry." It is signed by Jacques St. Cricq, "Sovereign Prince of Rose Croix"; George Bridges Bellasis; and Jerome Bellefin. Bellasis was artillery officer in the colony and St. Cricq and Bellefin officers in the Naturaliste, a ship of Baudin's expedition. This document, however, has reference to a continental form of Masonry. A non-stationary Lodge, holding a Warrant from the Grand Lodge of Ireland, the Lodge of Social and Military Virtues, No. 227, attached to the 46th Foot Regiment in 1752, was, after undergoing many vicissitudes, at work in the same regiment at Sydney, in 1816. An attempt was made earlier, in 1803, by Sir Henry Browne Hayes, in conjunction with officers of H.M. ships Glatton and Buffalo and several members of the Craft, then resident in Sydney, to found a Lodge and initiate candidates. Governor King, however, prohibited the meeting and threatened Hayes with transportation to Norfolk Island. Nevertheless, the proposed meeting was held, raided by the police and Hayes ordered to be deported to Tasmania, although the sentence was never carried out. There are no records of the meeting in existence and it can only be described as clandestine, since compliance with the law is the first elementary principle of Freemasonry.

W. F. Lamonby in Some Notes on Freemasonry in Australia (1906) says that an entry in the diary of a long-deceased colonist states that, on May 22, 1803, a number of Masons were arrested at a meeting and, after serious report, were discharged as having no wilful intention to disturb the peace.

In 1817, another Irish military Lodge, No. 218, attached to the 48th Regiment, visited New South Wales and, presumably, held meetings under its Warrant. Acting on the suggestion of the Lodge of Social and Military Virtues, made on its return to Ireland, the Grand Lodge of Ireland, in 1820, issued a Charter for the first stationary Lodge in New South Wales, the Australian Social Lodge, No. 260, which was constituted on August 12, 1820, which is the recognized date as the foundation of Freemasonry in Australia. This Lodge has twice changed its name: it was first the Australian Social Mother Lodge, but, shortly after its centenary, in 1920, it assumed the name of the Lodge of Antiquity. The next Lodge to be formed, by dispensation from the Australian Social Mother Lodge, was the Leinster Marine Lodge of Australia, to which was given the number of 266 and a separate Warrant from the Grand Lodge of Ireland, dated February 12, 1824. The third Lodge to be constituted in New South Wales, strictly colonial in membership, was the Lodge of Australia, the first Lodge to be warranted by the United Grand Lodge of England. It was opened in 1838 and its number under the English Constitution was 820, but it is now No. 3 on the register of the United Grand Lodge of New South Wales. The first Lodge chartered in New South Wales by the Grand Lodge of Scotland was Lodge St. Andrew, No. 358, in Sydney. Then followed a quick succession of other Lodges, which gave Freemasonry such a firm standing in the colony that, in 1839, the United Grand Lodge of England formed a District Grand Lodge for New South Wales; Scotland followed suit in 1856; and Ireland in 1858. After a time Lodge St. Andrew, writes W. F. Lamonby, in Some Notes on Freemasonry in Australasia, declined to pay Provincial Grand Lodge dues and was suspended at the Provincial meeting. The malcontents formed themselves into an independent Grand Lodge of New South Wales. The Grand Lodge of Scotland confirmed the suspension, but Blair's Grand Lodge, as it was known locally, never became a power in Masonry and was, indeed, speedily forgotten.

In the eighties there was manifested a strong desire for a properly constituted and duly recognized Grand Lodge of New South Wales. The situation was an awkward one because, in 1877, thirteen Lodges, nearly all belonging to the Irish Constitution, had formed a Grand Lodge of New South Wales, which was never recognized by England, Ireland, or Scotland and remained without the pale until 1888. In 1885, the Earl Carrington (afterwards the Marquess of Lincolnshire) was appointed Governor of the colony, three years after he had held the office of Senior Grand Warden in the United Grand Lodge of England. He was empowered by the Prince of Wales (King Edward VII), then Grand Master of England, to endeavour to bring about a Masonic reconciliation. In this objective he was materially assisted (Australian Encyclopædia) by the Earl of Carnarvon, then Pro Grand Master of England, who went out to New South Wales in 1888. After several conferences and an active canvass among the Lodges, a committee of five prominent Brethren from each Constitution was appointed to draw up a basis of union. These Articles of Union were adopted at a joint meeting held on August 16, 1888, when Lord Carrington was elected the first Grand Master of the United Grand Lodge of New South Wales, in which position he was duly installed, in the presence of some four thousand members of the Craft, on September 18 following. The Grand Lodge thus inaugurated represented some 5,600 Brethren attached to 176 Lodges.

The centenary of the introduction of Freemasonry into Australia was commemorated by the United Grand Lodge of New South Wales in July 1903. Pride of place was given to the Lodge of Social and Military Virtues, No. 227, the regiment to which it is attached now being known as the Second Battalion of the Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry.

The rapid growth of Freemasonry in New South Wales is evidenced by the fact that, in October 1923, the 500th Lodge was dedicated under the name of Lodge Literature, its membership being composed of newspaper men and authors. At that date the membership of the Lodges in New South Wales stood at 52,000; the assets amounted to £213,000; and the probable value of Masonic real estate was, at least, £500,000. In the same year the William Thompson Masonic Schools for Orphans was opened. In 1926, according to the Masonic Guide of New South Wales, Lodge Booralee Lewis, No. 598, was founded and consecrated. It is, also, of interest to note that Leinster Marine Lodge, now No. 2, celebrated its centenary by the foundation of an auxiliary Lodge, known as Leinster Marine Centenary Lewis, No. 524.

Other Masonic activities under the United Grand Lodge of New South Wales are the Freemasons' Benevolent Institution—a society of voluntary subscribers, which arranges for permanent annuities to the aged, widows and permanently incapacitated. In 1926, it had 380 annuitants on the roll and it expended £12,487 in relief. There are also the New South Wales Masonic Club, Freemasons' Orphan Society, Lodge Secretaries' Association and a Freemasons' Scholarship at the University of Sydney, of £50 per annum tenable for three years for the sons of Freemasons of five years' membership in a Lodge within the Jurisdiction.

Royal Arch Masonry was first practised in New South Wales by virtue of a Warrant held by the Australian Social Mother Lodge. This Warrant was returned to the Grand Lodge of Ireland in 1877, but the Lodge is still in possession of the original seal of the Chapter. There is evidence in the Minute-book that the Royal Arch Degree was conferred by this Lodge as early as June 4, 1827. Leinster Marine (Irish) Chapter was established in 1848; Zetland (English) Chapter, in 1855; and Burrangong (Scottish) Chapter, in 1863. The Supreme Grand Chapter of New South Wales was established by the Chapters working under the English Constitution in 1889. There is evidence that the Mark Degree was conferred on November 8, 1820. It is now worked by the Scottish and Irish Chapters, but not by the New South Wales Chapters, which leave that Degree to the Grand Mark Lodge of New South Wales, established in 1889.

Other branches of Freemasonry in New South Wales are the Ancient and Accepted Rite, working under the English and Scottish Jurisdictions; the Knights Templar (English and Scottish Great Priories); the Knights of Constantine (Scottish); and the Cryptic Degrees.

VICTORIA

On March 25, 1840, the Lodge of Australia Felix, No. 697, was established in Collins Street, Melbourne, the Warrant for which was granted by the United Grand Lodge of England on April 2, 1841. On July 4, 1846, the same body granted a Charter for the Lodge of Australasia, No. 773, to meet also in Melbourne. Three years earlier, the Australasian Kilwinning Lodge, No. 408, had been established under the Scottish Constitution and, in 1847, an Irish Lodge, Hiram, No. 349, had also been founded, while, in the same year, a Warrant was granted for the third English Lodge in Victoria, No. 801, the Geelong Lodge of Unity and Prudence, which met at Geelong. In the same year, also, a Scottish Provincial Grand Lodge was formed, Ireland following suit in 1854 and England in 1855. The Craft in Victoria had prospered by leaps and bounds and, between 1847 and 1862, no fewer than thirty-six English Lodges were added; twenty-eight between 1863 and 1876; and twenty between the last-named year and 1886. Major-General Sir Andrew Clarke, K.C.M.G., was the first English Provincial Grand Master appointed, in 1855. He was followed by Captain Frederick Charles Standish, in 1861; and he was succeeded, in 1883, by Sir William J. Clarke, Bart., who held the like office for the Grand Lodges of Ireland and Scotland, an event which stands without parallel in the annals of Freemasonry. The object, of course, was to effect a union between the three Constitutions and to form a Sovereign Grand Lodge. This, as a matter of fact, was brought about in 1883, but was rendered abortive, owing to the fact that recognition was not accorded to it by the Grand Lodges of England, Ireland and Scotland. The Hon. J. E. Murray was the first Provincial Grand Master appointed by Scotland and he was succeeded by J. H. Ross, who held the office until 1883. J. T. Smith ruled the Province in the interest of the Grand Lodge of Ireland until 1880, when Sir William J. Clarke was appointed.

The idea of forming an independent Grand Lodge of Victoria appears to have first been mooted in 1863 and was debated at the Quarterly Communication of the Grand Lodge of England on March 2, 1864, when it met with strenuous opposition on the part of the Earl of Zetland, Grand Master and Grand Lodge passed a resolution expressing its strong disapprobation of the contemplated secession. The agitation was renewed in 1876, though, apparently, only feebly and it was not revived until 1883, when, on April 27, the Masonic Union of Victoria was formed. At that time there were seventy English, fifteen Irish and ten Scottish Lodges in Victoria, but of this number, only eighteen Lodges—twelve Irish, five Scottish, and one English—gave their adherence to the movement and, of that number, two—the only English Lodge and another—immediately withdrew. However, at a Convention held on June 19, 1883, it was resolved “that the date of founding the Grand Lodge of Victoria should be July 2, 1883.” The opposition of the Grand Lodges of the Motherland will readily be understood when it is realized that sixteen Lodges, with an estimated aggregate membership of 840, assumed the position of a governing body of the territory, which possessed ninety-five Lodges, with an aggregate membership of five thousand. A satisfactory solution of the difficulty was arrived at in 1888, when, with the assistance of the Earl of Carnarvon, then Pro Grand Master of England, the United Grand Lodge of Victoria was formed, all the Lodges in the colony, with the exception of Lodge Combermere, No. 752, which still remains under the English Constitution, enrolling under the Victorian Constitution.

According to the Articles of Union, it was agreed that the United Grand Lodge adopt the Book of Constitutions and the mode of procedure of the Grand Lodge of England, as far as the same may be applicable, until otherwise decided. The United Grand Lodge of Victoria became an accomplished fact on March 20, 1889, when Sir William J. Clarke, Bart., was unanimously elected the first Grand Master and was formally installed by Lord Carrington, Grand Master of the United Grand Lodge of New South Wales, assisted by Chief Justice Way, Grand Master of South Australia. Thus, within fifty years of the opening of the first Lodge in Melbourne, the Sovereign Jurisdiction was established in the Melbourne Town Hall, in the presence of upwards of 3,000 Freemasons. The United Grand Lodge started on its existence with 140 Lodges and a membership of, approximately, 7,000, while it was estimated that there were also more than 10,000 unattached Freemasons in the colony. Already Masonic almshouses had been erected on a piece of land liberally granted by the Government and the contributions to Masonic Charities had exceeded £20,000. To-day the headquarters of the Jurisdiction are in Collins Street, Melbourne; there is a Masonic Club at Swanston Street; while houses are provided for aged Brethren, under the group system, at South Yarra. The other branches of Masonry, the Royal Arch, the Mark Degree, the Knights Templar, the Ancient and Accepted Rite and the Societas Rosicruciana are also in a flourishing condition.

In Victoria, no person, without a dispensation from the Grand Master, may be balloted for as a candidate for initiation who has not for, at least, six months preceding the ballot been a resident in the State of Victoria, nor until testimony in writing as to his character, based upon, at least, six months' personal knowledge, has been obtained and submitted to the Lodge. The Grand Master also has power, by notice in writing, addressed to the Grand Secretary, to prohibit the initiation of any candidate proposed for initiation into Freemasonry and, by a like notice, may prohibit the passing or raising of any Brother. Also, the Grand Master may, by notice in writing to the Grand Secretary, prohibit the installation of a Master-Elect and the Grand Secretary shall notify the Lodge of such prohibition.

When Lord Somers was installed as Grand Master of Victoria, on March 16, 1927, it was stated that the membership of the Jurisdiction, at the end of the previous December, stood at 44,793, an increase during the preceding year of 2,703. In that period, twenty new Lodges had been consecrated and twelve new temples in country towns dedicated. During the six years ending December 31, 1926, the membership had been nearly doubled, while more than 190 Masonic temples were in occupation.

NEW ZEALAND

The first Lodge in New Zealand, under the United Grand Lodge of England, was founded under a provisional Warrant on September 9, 1842. It was called the New Zealand Pacific, No. 758; the provisional Warrant was exchanged for the regular document on July 29, 1845 and the Lodge continued its existence under the English Constitution until the foundation of the Grand Lodge of New Zealand, when it became No. 2, on the register of that body. On August 29, 1843, Loge Française Primitive Antipodienne was founded at Akaroa, by the Supreme Council of France and, in 1844, Lodge Ara, at Auckland, was warranted by the Grand Lodge of Ireland. Masonry in New Zealand then appears to have remained stationary until August 1852, when the Grand Lodge of England issued a Warrant for the New Zealand Lodge of Unanimity, No. 879, at Lyttleton, which is now No. 3, on the register of the Grand Lodge of New Zealand. On November 30 of the same year, a Warrant was granted for the St. Augustine Lodge, No. 885, at Christchurch, which was consecrated on October 19, 1854 and is now No. 4, of New Zealand. On April 4, 1856, was founded the Mount Egmont Lodge, No. 968, at New Plymouth. On September 6 of the previous year, the Waitemata Lodge, No. 990, at Auckland, had been constituted, although the Warrant was not granted until December 3, 1856. On June 30, 1857, a Dispensation to work for two years was granted to the Tongariro Lodge, No. 1007, at Wanganui and the Lodge was constituted on October 7 of the same year, but the Warrant was not issued until March 1862. In 1858, on February 6, a Charter was granted for the Southern Star Lodge, No. 1037, which was constituted on October 4 of the same year. On October 23, also in 1858, the Southern Cross Lodge, No. 1062, was warranted and this was consecrated on July 12 following. This Lodge is now No. 6, on the register of the Grand Lodge of New Zealand. In the same year, the first Lodge under the Irish Constitution was opened at Napier, Hawkes Bay. The first meetings were held in a roofless room on the upper floor of a store, the primitive furniture and accessories being well in keeping with the cheerless appearance of the apartment in which the members assembled. It was not long, however, before better accommodation was secured. In the same year, a second Lodge under the Irish Constitution was opened, also at Napier. Two years later, the Lodge of Otago, No. 1146, was formed at Dunedin, under the Grand Lodge of England. This continued in existence until 1890, when a majority of members formed a new Lodge, which is now No. 7, of New Zealand. The first Lodge in New Zealand, under the Scottish Constitution, was erected, also at Dunedin, in 1861. From this time Freemasonry in New Zealand grew apace and, between 1860 and 1875, there were warranted in the colony twenty-five English, eight Irish and twenty-one Scottish Lodges. In 1865, a Lodge under the Irish Constitution existed at Onehunga, Auckland, but, on the migration of a considerable number of its members to the goldfields, the Lodge practically ceased to exist. In 1875, the question was debated as to whether the Lodge should be resuscitated or a new Lodge formed and it was decided to found, under the Scottish Constitution, a Lodge named Manukau, after the harbour on which Onehunga is situated.

District Grand Lodges under the English Constitution were formed at Canterbury, in 1859; at Otago and Sutherland, in 1864; at Westland, in 1870; at Wellington, in 1875; at Auckland, in 1877; and at Nelson (now united with Westland), in 1920. All these Districts are still in existence, the number of Lodges in each sub-Jurisdiction being: Auckland, 17; Canterbury, 7; Otago and Sutherland, 4; Wellington, 6; Westland and Nelson, 7. Scotland has two Provincial Grand Lodges in New Zealand: North Island, with 5 Lodges and South Island, with 7 Lodges.

In 1890, a Sovereign Grand Lodge of New Zealand was formed, but many Lodges, as will be seen, elected to remain under the jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of England, through their respective District Grand Lodges. Several efforts have been made, particularly in 1906, by Lord Plunket, when he was installed as Grand Master of New Zealand, to effect a transference of the allegiance of the English Lodges to the New Zealand Constitution, but they have all proved abortive. The Grand Lodge of England and the Grand Lodge of New Zealand work in complete harmony and it is noteworthy that the present Grand Secretary of New Zealand, Colonel George Barclay, is also an officer (Past Grand Deacon) of the United Grand Lodge of England.

Royal Arch Masonry under the English Constitution is represented by six Chapters, one at Auckland and five under the District Grand Chapter of the South Island, one each at Dunedin, Greymouth, Hokitika, Port Chalmers and Timaru. The District was formed, in 1881, as that of Westland, but, in 1914, it became that of the South Island. In 1874, a Chapter was founded, with thirty-five Companion Founders, in connexion with the Southern Star Lodge, No. 735, then and now under the English Constitution, but the Chapter, known as Trafalgar of Nelson, was formed under the Scottish Constitution.

TASMANIA

The credit of performing the rôle of pioneer in the establishment of Freemasonry in Tasmania has to be awarded to the Grand Lodge of Ireland, which body, in 1763, granted a Charter to the Royal Fusiliers Lodge, No. 33, which was attached to the 21st Regiment. Another Lodge was attached to the 51st Regiment and both held their meetings in the barracks at Hobart. The date of the settlement of these Lodges in Tasmania is circa 1823. From these two Lodges sprang, in 1828, the first civilian Lodge, the Tasmanian, No. 31, which held its Charter direct from the Grand Lodge of Ireland. About 1829, another civilian Lodge was established, known as the Union, No. 326 and, in 1834, there was founded the Tasmanian Operative Lodge, No. 345, also under the Irish Constitution. The removal of the 21st Regiment, says the writer in the Illustrated Australian Encyclopædia, caused the introduction of another civilian Lodge, as the Master and the Senior Warden of the regimental Lodge settled in Tasmania and applied to the Grand Lodge of Ireland for a stationary Warrant. This was granted in 1842 and the old title and number were permitted to be retained. In the same year the first Lodge in Launceston was established under a Dispensation from the Tasmanian Operative Lodge, as No. 346, under the Irish Constitution, although the Founders had previously made application to work under the Military Lodge, No. 404, which had been warranted by the United Grand Lodge of England. The new Launceston Lodge, which was named St. John's, was opened on January 19, 1843 and, in the same year, the Masonic Benevolent Fund was started in Hobart. In 1844, application was made by the members of the Tasmanian Operative Lodge for a Warrant from the English Constitution and, on June 29 of that year, a Provisional Warrant was granted, the Lodge working under dispensation from the Deputy Provincial Grand Master at Sydney. There was already established, at Hobart, a Freemasons' Hotel, where the Lodge held its meetings until 1847, the Warrant from the Grand Lodge of England, which assigned to the Lodge the number 781, being issued on November 30, 1846. This was the first introduction of English Freemasonry into Tasmania: the Lodge is still in existence as No. 3 on the register of the Grand Lodge of Tasmania. The second English Lodge in Tasmania was formed in 1852, on September 7, under the name of the Lodge of Hope, but its Warrant from the United Grand Lodge of England is dated August 5, 1853. It gave birth, in 1856, to the Lodge of Charity, No. 989, warranted on November 25 and to the Lodge of Faith, No. 992, warranted on December 3, although both had been constituted in 1855, under Dispensation from New South Wales. On the joint petition of the members of these three Lodges, the Rev. Robert Kirkwood Ewing, a Past Master of the Lodge of Hope, was appointed Provincial Grand Master for Tasmania by the Grand Lodge of England. He was succeeded, after a break of fifteen years, in 1875, by William Simmonds Hammond, who was followed, in 1880, by the Rev. Richard Deodatus Poulett-Harris. Objection was raised to the appointment of the Rev. R. K. Ewing by the Tasmanian Union Lodge, solely on account of pique at not having been, as the members thought, consulted sufficiently on the proposed appointment. The Lodge was suspended and remained closed for nine months, but the action caused a general set-back to the English branch in Tasmania; the three other Lodges also practically closed. There was, however, a quick revival. The Grand Lodge of Scotland began to charter Lodges on the island and, in 1884, a Provincial Grand Lodge was formed under the Irish Constitution, Scotland following suit in the same direction, in 1885. In January 1888 the question of a Sovereign Grand Lodge for Tasmania came under discussion, but it was not until March 6, 1890, that the decisive steps were taken and, on June 26 following, the Grand Lodge of Tasmania was formed, with 22 Lodges within its Jurisdiction, recognition being immediately accorded by the Grand Lodges of England, Ireland and Scotland.

WESTERN AUSTRALIA

It was not until 1842 that the Perth Lodge, No. 712, was founded in the capital city, under the United Grand Lodge of England, its Charter being granted on August 20 of that year, although it was not consecrated until April 4, 1843. In 1844, it changed its name to the Western Australia Lodge and, in 1845, to the Lodge of St. John. In 1879, it amalgamated with the Perth Lodge of Unity, founded, also, under the English Constitution, as No. 753, on May 3, 1745 and the amalgamation is now known as the Lodge of St. John, No. 1, under the Grand Lodge of Western Australia. According to the latest returns it is the largest Lodge in the Jurisdiction and has a membership of 141. Fremantle Lodge, No. 1033, was the next Lodge chartered by England on September 17, 1864, and it was consecrated on June 1, 1865. This is now No. 2 under the Western Australian Constitution and its present membership stands at 100. Plantagenet Lodge, No. 1454, chartered on September 18, 1873 and consecrated on April 26, 1874, is still in existence and is the only Lodge in Western Australia owing allegiance direct to the United Grand Lodge of England. On May 1, 1877, a Charter was granted by England to the Geraldton Lodge, No. 1683, the Lodge being consecrated on October 18 of that year. It is now No. 3, of Western Australia, with a membership of 114. On August 23, 1879, a Charter was granted for the Wellington Lodge, No. 1840, at Bunbury, but, for some reason, the Lodge does not appear to have been consecrated until May 10, 1886. Two other Lodges—the York Lodge, No. 2118 and the St. George's Lodge, No. 2165—under the English Constitution were added, in the same year and, in 1887, the District Grand Lodge for Western Australia was formed, the Hon. John Arthur Wright being appointed District Grand Master, succeeded, in 1898, by Lieutenant-Colonel Sir Gerard Smith, K.C.M.G. At that date the Grand Lodge of Ireland was represented by two Lodges only. Almost immediately after the appointment of Sir Gerard Smith, active steps were taken to form a Sovereign Grand Lodge for Western Australia, a project that had been in contemplation for nearly twenty years, but was regarded as impracticable until Freemasonry had become more firmly established. On October 11, 1899, however, the matter was definitely settled and, in the following February, Sir Gerard Smith, then Governor of the colony, was installed as the first Grand Master, with jurisdiction over 33 Lodges, a number which, according to the latest return available, now stands at 108 Lodges, with an aggregate membership of 7,270. Sir Gerard Smith was succeeded, in 1901, by Sir Winthrop Hackett, followed, in 1904, by the Most Rev. Dr. C. O. L. Riley, Archbishop of Perth, who held the office until 1918, when, for two years, his place was taken by Sir William Ellison-Macartney. The Archbishop of Perth was again elected Grand Master in 1920 and held the position till 1929. He acted as Pro Grand Master to both Sir Winthrop Hackett and Sir William Ellison-Macartney. There is, in this Jurisdiction, a Grand Inspector of Workings, who superintends the Lodges in the metropolitan area, while outside that boundary there are eight districts, each under the supervision of an Inspector of Workings. In addition to the Board of Benevolence, there is the West Australian Widows', Orphans' and Aged Freemasons' Fund, now in its twenty-first year.

When the formation of the Grand Lodge of Western Australia was under serious discussion, the Grand Lodge of Scotland sternly forbade any of the Lodges under their District Grand Lodge from taking any part whatever in the deliberations, so that the twenty-three Scottish Lodges were forced to continue their allegiance to Scotland when the new Grand Lodge became un fait accompli. Happily, the friendly relations continued and still continue between the twenty remaining Scottish Lodges in Western Australia and the Grand Lodge of Western Australia. Eighteen months after the installation of Sir Gerard Smith as Grand Master, the Foreign and Colonial Committee of the Grand Lodge of Scotland reported that the new Grand Lodge had been irregularly formed, which was tantamount to a refusal of recognition, but, with strange inconsistency, the same Committee recommended that the Masonic intercourse between the Lodges of the two Constitutions should be continued. This deadlock continued for several years, during which time several Scottish Lodges transferred their allegiance to the Grand Lodge of Western Australia.

It was not until 1907 that a basis for a settlement was arranged and not until the following year that the agreement was signed. Under this agreement the Grand Lodge of Western Australia was acknowledged to be the Sovereign Grand Lodge of the State, with the reservation that any Scottish Lodge which desired to do so should remain under the jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of Scotland. Scotland also agreed not to grant Charters for the erection of any new Lodges within the State. Individual members could transfer their allegiance at any time, but if any Lodge, as a Lodge, wished to transfer from the Grand Lodge of Scotland to the Grand Lodge of Western Australia, permission must first be obtained from Scotland and there must be a vote of two-thirds of the members present at the meeting held to consider the question of the transfer. Under the terms of this agreement, any increase in the number of Scottish Lodges in Western Australia became impossible. Overtures for amalgamation have frequently been made by the Grand Lodge of Western Australia, but there has never been any satisfactory response; with the result that Western Australia is now the only Australian State in which Freemasonry is divided into different Constitutions.

QUEENSLAND

Freemasonry was first established in Queensland just after the separation of that colony from New South Wales in 1859. On July 13 of that year, the North Australian Lodge, No. 1098, was founded in Brisbane, the capital, under the English Constitution, the Charter for which was granted on August 17 following. Then followed the Prince of Wales's Lodge, No. 1210, also in Brisbane, formed on September 5, 1861 and warranted on January 23, 1862; the Queensland Lodge, No. 1223, founded at Ipswich on June 19, 1861 and warranted on August 23, 1862; the Leichhardt Lodge, No. 1234, at Rockhampton, constituted and warranted in September 1862. In 1863, the Grand Lodge of Ireland chartered the St. Patrick Lodge, No. 270 and, in the following year, the Grand Lodge of Scotland issued a Warrant for Lodge St. Andrew, No. 435.

In 1862, a District Grand Lodge under the United Grand Lodge of England was formed, with the Hon. Charles Augustus Gregory, C.M.G., as District Grand Master, he being succeeded, in 1906, by Alfred John Stephenson and, in 1915, by Alexander Corrie, who still holds the position. A Provincial Grand Lodge for Queensland, under the Irish Constitution, was formed, in 1866, with Maurice C. O'Connell as the first Provincial Grand Master, while, in the same year, a Provincial Grand Lodge under the Scottish Constitution was established. Until 1875, the Irish Lodges retained the ancient practice of half-yearly installations, but in that year the change to the annual ceremony was made. At the same time, there was introduced the practice of submitting the names of all candidates for initiation to the Board of General Purposes for approval, before ballot, a system which is still in vogue. Another custom, still retained, introduced in 1915, is that of presenting every initiate, on the completion of his initiation, with a copy of the Bible.

Several attempts were made, particularly in 1887 and 1897, to establish a Sovereign Grand Lodge, which was strenuously resisted by the United Grand Lodge of England. In August 1903, the Grand Lodge of Ireland cabled its approval of the scheme, provided such Grand Lodge were formed in a regular manner. On December 19 of that year, it was resolved to form the Grand Lodge of Queensland, on the basis of the constitution of New South Wales and this was carried into effect on April 25, 1904. Recognition was refused by the United Grand Lodge of England but was accorded to the new body by the United Grand Lodge of New South Wales, on September 14 of the same year and, on October 29, following, the installation of the Grand Master was carried out by the Grand Master of New South Wales. The new Jurisdiction took the name of the Grand Lodge of Ancient Free and Accepted Masons of Queensland and it comprised, on its foundation, 44 Lodges, a Board of General Purposes, a Board of Benevolence and a Widows', Orphans' and Aged Masons' Institution. It was more insignificant than the District Grand Lodge under the English Constitution, which, at that date, ruled over 80 Lodges and had a District Board of General Purposes. The Provincial Grand Lodge of Scotland had, also, close upon 70 Lodges.

In 1920, a very strong endeavour was made to effect a union between the four Constitutions—England, Ireland, Scotland and Queensland, with the result that 85 English and 101 Scottish Lodges together established the Grand Lodge of Queensland. On April 27, 1921, these Lodges, together with those owing allegiance to the original Grand Lodge of Queensland—281 Lodges in all—joined together in forming the United Grand Lodge of Queensland, with Alexander Corrie, who still retained the office of District Grand Master under the English Constitution, ruling, in that capacity, over six Lodges which did not join the new organization, as the first Grand Master. The Articles of Union were presented and unanimously adopted before he was installed as the first Grand Master. It was mainly through his efforts and those of the late William Frederick Hamilton, then Grand Registrar of England, that a very undesirable state of affairs was brought to a termination and unity established. All the funds belonging to the District Grand Lodge under the English Grand Lodge, with the exception of £100 belonging to the General Fund and £400 belonging to the Benevolent Fund, passed into the possession of the newly formed United Grand Lodge, conditional on the moneys of the Benevolent Fund being reserved solely for charitable purposes. Since the establishment of the United Grand Lodge of Queensland, Freemasonry has increased considerably and, at the present moment, there are on hand several schemes for the extension of administration and benevolence.

CHAPTER X

SEA AND FIELD LODGES

THE only Stated Lodges in ships-of-war appear to have been held under English Warrants, though, in Portugal and elsewhere, there have been meetings of Occasional Lodges where members of the Craft, persecuted on shore, have sought a refuge in the shipping. Field Lodges have existed in numerous Jurisdictions and are variously described. The title here used occurs in a Calendar of 1763 and, while sanctioned by early usage, will admit of the inquiry being restricted to the existence of Lodges in military bodies—attached to the latter, both in quarters and in the field. The earliest of these Lodges was established in the 1st (British) Regiment of Foot in 1732, under the Grand Lodge of Ireland and four other similar Lodges, making a total of five, were at work in the same Jurisdiction at the close of 1734. (See Pocket Companion, Dublin, 1735.) The number had risen to eight in 1743, when the first Military Warrant was issued by the Grand Lodge of Scotland and stood at twenty-nine when the earliest Lodge of the kind was established—1755—by the Grand Lodge of England, in the 8th Foot.

The Irish Jurisdiction has always included the greater number of (British) Army Lodges and, in 1813, possessed a military following of one hundred and twenty-three. At the same date, the number of Lodges in regiments under the other British Grand Lodges and, without counting the remote pendicles under Provincial Grand Lodges in foreign parts, was : England, fifteen ; Ancients, sixty-two ; and Scotland, eighteen. This total declined, in 1886, to fifteen Lodges, of which nine were Irish and the remainder English.

A record of all the Lodges in regiments, or other movable military cadres, warranted by the British Grand Lodges or their representatives abroad, will be found—to the extent that they have been traced—in the present chapter. The enumeration of stationary Lodges in garrisons or fortresses, even though composed exclusively of military members, lies, however, beyond the scope of the present purpose. The same may be said with regard to the distinguished roll of general officers, who have been active members of the Society. Of these may be mentioned the names of Abercrombie, Moore, Earl Moira, Sir Charles Napier, Wellington, Roberts, Kitchener, Lee Stack and Wingate. The task is to exhibit in the smallest possible compass a picture of an almost obsolete branch of Freemasonry and neither sympathy with the subject, nor an affluence of materials collected, may cause a deviation from this imperative duty.

Of the Sea Lodges there is nothing further to be said beyond the passing allusion that the existence of all of them was probably due to the exertions of a single individual, i.e. Thomas Dunckerley. With the Field or Army Lodges it is different and the outline of these bodies, as given in successive tables, will, to a limited extent, be filled in, by prefacing each separate list with a brief introduction, commencing with the Lodges in British Regiments and deriving the materials for the sketch in great part from their actual minutes and records.

The Gibraltar Lodge (128), in the 39th Foot—Primus in Indis—claims to have made the first Mason in India, under a European Warrant, in 1757. It subsequently founded numerous Lodges in various parts of Hindostan. There is a stone let into the wall in Fort William, Calcutta, commemorative of the early history of this Lodge. All its working tools and jewels fell into the hands of the enemy during the Peninsular War, but were subsequently returned to the regiment. The same fate befel the Lodge chest in the 6th Dragoon Guards (577), which was returned under a flag of truce and with a guard of honour. The 17th Foot lost its Warrant (18) in the American War and it was courteously transmitted to them by General Parsons, with a fraternal letter. The 46th Foot (227) twice lost its chest, which was sent back on the first occasion by order of General Washington and, on the second, by the French military authorities, three years after its capture at Dominica, in 1805. The historian of the 43rd Foot complains, in 1758, that “the time passes very wearily” at Nova Scotia, and adds, “when the calendar does not furnish us with a loyal excuse for assembling in the evening, we have recourse to a Freemason’s Lodge, where we work so hard that it is inconceivable to think what a quantity of business of great importance is transacted in a very short space of time.” (See J. Knox, Hist. Journal, 1750, vol. i, p. 143.) It has not been possible to trace this Lodge, nor another, in the 54th Foot, attached to that corps at St. John, New Brunswick, in 1786. A battalion of the 9th Foot was wrecked on the French coast in 1805 and the members of the Lodge (183) solaced the weary hours of their captivity by assembling regularly at Valenciennes until the peace of 1814. The colonel of a regiment often became the first master of the Lodge attached to it. Thus, in the 20th Foot, in 1748, Lord George Sackville presided in the first instance over the Minden Lodge (63), though it cannot have borne that title until after his famous escapade at the battle of the same name in 1759.

The following announcement appeared in the Newcastle Courant of January 4, 1770:

This is to acquaint the public, That on Monday the first instant, being the Lodge (or monthly meeting) Night of the Free and Accepted Masons of the 22d Regiment, held at the Crown near Newgate (Newcastle), Mrs. Bell, the landlady of the house, broke open a door (with a poker) that had not been opened for some time past, by which means she got into an adjacent room, made two holes through the wall and, by that stratagem, discovered the secrets of Freemasonry; and she, knowing herself to be the first woman in the world that ever found out the secret, is willing to make it known to all her sex. So any lady who is desirous of learning the secrets of Fraemasonry, by applying to that well-learned woman (Mrs. Bell, that lived fifteen years in and about Newgate) may be instructed in the secrets of Masonry.

“It would be interesting to know,” says a writer in Chambers's Journal, 1882, p. 400; “how many pupils Mrs. Bell obtained and why she appealed to her own sex in particular. According to Clavel (p. 34), Madame de Xaintrailles, who had been given the rank of captain for service in war, by the First Consul, was made a Mason at Paris in the Loge Frères-Artistes, of which many French officers were members. An incident of the late American Civil War appears to be on all-fours with the stories of Miss St. Leger and Mrs. Bell. The life of a young Irishman, taken red-handed as a guerilla by a party of the Iowa Regiment in 1861, was spared—so it is related—through his sister making a Masonic sign for relief, it proving on Examination that she had passed all the Degrees (Weekly Budget, U.S.A., March 28, 1883). For these and further illustrations see Woman and Freemasonry, by Dudley Wright.

The 38th Foot still possesses a Lodge (441), originally constituted in 1765 and, as its proceedings have figured largely in the Masonic journals, some account of these, derived from the actual Minutes and records, may be interesting. The Lodge reopened at St. Pierre, Martinique, on November 8, 1796, “the former registry, with the chest, Warrant and jewels, having been captured by the enemy at Helvoet-Sluis in January 1795.” The regiment proceeded to St. Lucia and Saints, 1797; Ireland, 1802; Cape Town, 1806; Buenos Ayres and Monte Video, 1806-7; and, after a period of home service, the Lodge, which was closed in 1811, reopened, November 7, 1819, at Cape Town, when a letter—dated April 5 of the same year—was read from the Grand Lodge of Ireland, of which the following is an extract:

“The Union of Antients and Moderns in England had no particular effect in this country, as we never had any Lodges but Antient, neither have we adopted any of their new ceremonies.”

The working of the Royal Arch Degree was resumed in the Lodge November 14, 1822, when a letter, dated May 15, 1820, from the Deputy Grand Secretary, was read, of which the following passage is recorded in the Minutes: “There is not any Warrant issued by the Grand Lodge of Ireland other than that you hold; it has therefore always been the practice of Irish Lodges to confer the Higher Degrees under that authority.” The Minden Lodge (63), in the 20th Foot, continued to work the R.A. Degree under their original Warrant until October 9, 1838, when a separate Charter was issued by the Grand Chapter of Ireland. The names of the Members of the Degree are headed, “Roll of Excellent-Super-Excellent Royal Arch Masons of Lodge No. 441.” The following singular entry appears in the earlier R.A. Record: “1803.—T. Fallon, Ensign, was produced for entrance, but declined and was dismissed with the usual precautions.”

The Lodge was next opened at Berhampore, E.I., in the same year (1822), but closed in 1823 and remained dormant until 1840, when it resumed work at Limerick. At this period Lord Ebrington was the Lord-Lieutenant, on whose arrival in Ireland, Lodge No. 473 at Enniskillen, knowing that he was Provincial Grand Master for Devon, voted him an address, but, in his published reply, he declared that Masonry was not suited to the condition of Ireland and that, therefore, he could not countenance it. Shortly after this a paragraph appeared in the papers announcing the revival of Lodge No. 441 in the 38th Foot and the commander-in-chief, Sir Edward Blakeney, set in motion by the Lord-Lieutenant, peremptorily ordered the meetings to cease and "all documents connected with the institution to be forthwith returned to the Parent Society." The Warrant was therefore sent to the Grand Lodge, from whom, however, a hint was received in 1842—the 38th being then at Corfu—that "it was as much at the disposal of the members as when in their own possession"; and, in the same year, the box containing it, which had not been opened, was returned to the regiment.

As appears above, the Irish Lodges always worked according to the system in vogue among the so-called Antient Masons, or, perhaps, it would be better to say, that the latter took their Masonry undiluted and unchanged from the former. The result, however, in America, where the influence of the Army Lodges made itself chiefly felt, was very marked. The customs of the Scottish Regimental Lodges were, in no respect, different from those of the Irish and the older Grand Lodge of England was too sparsely represented among the military forces of the crown to exercise any counter-influence, if, indeed, her Field Lodges in foreign parts did not acquire the tone and character of the vast majority of these associations.

The active part played by Lodges in British regiments in the Masonic history of Massachusetts and New York will be narrated separately, but, it may be incidentally observed, that the predominance in North America of the "Antients" over their rivals, the titular "Moderns," must be ascribed, in great part, to the influx of Regimental Lodges from the Old World and to their subsequent dissemination of the principles and the practice of what was then termed "Antient Masonry" throughout the length and breadth of the continent.

The muster-roll of Field Lodges in the British Army has been drawn up so as to agree with the order in which the various regiments were understood to rank, before the recent abolition of numerical titles, though, for convenience' sake, the regimental sequence will not be interrupted by placing the Royal Marines and the Rifle Brigade after the 49th and 93rd Foot respectively, in accordance with their regulated precedence.

During the eighteenth century so many battalions were raised and disbanded, with the resultant shuffling of numbers, as to render it impossible to be quite sure in all cases whether the numerical titles of regiments are those borne on the dates when the Lodges attached to them were erected, or at a later period. The identification of particular corps has been a laborious task. These are sometimes described by the names of their colonels and, at others, by territorial or (obsolete) regimental designations. Thus we meet with Lodge No. 612 (I.) "in the First Ulster Regiment" and No. 277 "in the 2d Green Horse" (now 5th Dragoon Guards), 1757.

The Irish Lodges were always chiefly and, in many cases exclusively, known by their numbers, which, whenever practicable, were made—by exchanging the ones previously held—to correspond with those of the regiments whereunto such Lodges were attached.

When there were several Lodges existing in a regiment at the same time, this fact will ordinarily coincide with a plurality of battalions, but the possibility of two Lodges working simultaneously in a single battalion of the ordinary strength, is evidenced by the proceedings at the centenary of the Grand Lodge of Scotland, in 1836—when the members of Lodges Hibernia and St. Andrew, in the 42d Foot (or Black Watch), attracted admiration, alike for their martial appearance and Masonic behaviour.

The exact rank of the Hon. Artillery Company of London has never been definitely settled. According to the historian of the corps, “the members are usually classed with the Volunteers, which, properly speaking, they are not; and it is still an open question whether the officers would rank before or after militia officers, or with them according to the dates of their commissions.” (See Raikes, vol. ii, p. 25.)

No Lodge has yet been established in the Indian Native Army, though the erection of one—to be called John of Gaunt in the East—in the 15th Madras N.I., was all but carried into effect in 1858.

BRITISH AND IRISH FIELD LODGES

EXPLANATIONS.—E. denotes English (i.e. G.L. of England until 1813, and United G.L. afterwards); A., Ancients; I., Irish; S., Scottish; K., Kilwinning; Gib., Gibraltar; Jam., Jamaica; U.C., Upper Canada; L.C., Lower Canada; N.E., New England; N.Y., New York; and N.S., Nova Scotia. When known, the name is given before the number of a Lodge. A second date denotes erasure or last register, but, in the majority of cases, dormant Lodges continued to be shown in the Lists for many years after they had virtually ceased to exist.

Lodge 74 I.: According to the Grand Lodge records, the date of the foundation was 1783, the Pocket Companion (Dublin) shows that only thirty-seven Irish Lodges were in existence in 1735.

With regard to Lodge 18 (17th Foot, Unity), a Lodge in the 17th Foot (which arrived in Boston, January 1, 1776) is shown at this number on the register of the Grand Lodge of the Antients, and the Warrant, which was captured by the Americans, was returned to the Unity Lodge, No. 18, in the 17th Foot by General Parsons, in 1779. The Scottish Lodge, No. 168, which bore the same name, may have become No. 18 on the Provincial List.

There is an interesting entry in the Minutes of St. Abb's Lodge, No. 70, Eyemouth (S.C.), relating to Lodge 92 I., which states that the Lodge chest, having been lost at Münster in Germany, a new one was "consecrated" at Berwick on December 2, 1763.

Lodge 310 S.: Eighty-nine members were enrolled within nine months of its constitution and fifty intrants were admitted in the four months immediately following the Battle of Waterloo.

Lodge 227 I.: This was known as the Lodge of Social and Military Virtues; it is now the Lodge of Antiquity, No. 1, Quebec.

Lodge 170 A. was attached to the 2nd Battalion, which was made the 96th Foot in 1803, the 95th Foot in 1816 and disbanded in 1818.

Lodge 53 N.S. was afterwards No. 842 on the General List and a stationary Lodge until about 1838, when it was attached to the Rifle Brigade.

The first Lodge mentioned in the 55th Foot was the first Military Lodge under the Grand Lodge of Scotland.

The Warrant for 448 E. was granted originally in 1764 by the Provincial Grand Master for New York to Lieutenant J. Christie, of the 60th Foot, as Master and others, to meet as Lodge No. 1 at Detroit. It became 62 in 1806 and, later, No. 3 of the Grand Lodge of New York; it is now Lodge Zion, No. 1 of the Grand Lodge of Michigan.

The Warrant of Lodge 7 N.Y. states that it was to be held "in H.M. Loyal American Regiment or elsewhere."

Lodge 175 A. was constituted at the Mitre Tavern, Globe Lane, Chatham, Kent, in 1772; in 1807, one Warrant was transferred from the 67th Regiment to the Royal Cornish Miners at Dover and, in 1826, the Military Warrant was exchanged for a Civil Warrant, when the Lodge became known as the Lodge of Fortitude, under which name and the number 131, it still meets at Truro.

The 71st Foot was raised at Elgin, in 1777, as the 73rd Foot and it became the 71st—a numerical title held by three previously extinct regiments—in 1786.

Shakespeare Lodge, 501 E. was a Civil Lodge, founded at Norwich, in 1792 ; it was taken over by the Warwickshire Regiment of Militia, in 1796, but, in 1808, it was transferred to Warwick, when, in spite of the opposition of the military members, it became stationary. Between 1797 and 1808, it met at Gravesend, Chelmsford, Dublin, Drogheda, Colchester, Bury St. Edmunds, Huntingdon, Stilton, Norman Cross, Ipswich and again at Colchester. It meets now at Warwick as No. 284.

HONOURABLE ARTILLERY COMPANY OF LONDON

Armoury House, Finsbury, Fitzroy, 830 E., 1849

The Court of Assistants in this year sanctioned the formation of a Lodge to consist of members of the Company only. A proposal to establish "the Hon. the Artillery Company's Lodge" was agreed to in 1781, but negatived at the next Court (G. A. Raikes, Hist. of the Hon. Art. Company). Although the Fitz-Roy Lodge, now No. 569, is stationary in a sense, as having met hitherto at the Armoury House of the Company, it would, without doubt, accompany that distinguished corps should it ever change its head-quarters in time of peace, or be arrayed with the regular forces in time of war.

SWEDEN.—An ancient document in the archives of the Grand Lodge informs us that “ the Lodge St. Jean Auxilaire—instituted in 1752—was formed by sundry Brethren of the military and travelling Lodges (loges militaires et voyageuses) existing at that time ” ; but, with regard to the number of these itinerant bodies, the field of their operations, or, indeed, to any further particulars concerning them, we are left wholly in the dark. The next evidence in point of date—afforded by the same source of authority—relates to the formation of the Lodge of the Swedish army (Svenska Arméens) at Greifswald, in Pomerania, January 10, 1761. According to its Statutes, the seat of the Lodge was to be at the head-quarters of the Swedish army during the continuance of the [Seven Years’] war and at Stockholm in time of peace. Captain (afterwards General) the Count of Salza was the first Master and among the other founders were Barons de Beck-Trius, de Cederstrom, de Duval and the Count de Creutz—all Swedish military officers. During the continuance of the war, the Lodge threw off shoots at Greifswald, Stralsund and Christianstadt. At the peace of 1763, it removed to Stockholm, after having received—February 17—a confirmation of its Charter from the Grand Lodge of Sweden. The Lodge of the Swedish army established a pension fund for wounded soldiers and the recipients of its bounty wore silver medals, struck at the expense of the Lodge. Prince Frederick-Adolphe, Duc d’Ostrogothie, the king’s brother, was its Master at the period of his decease ; but, in 1781, its labours came to an end and the members joined other Lodges at the capital.

RUSSIA.—In 1761 a Field Lodge was formed in the Russian army, which, at that time, had its winter quarters in West Prussia and its head-quarters at Marienburg. A second was established at the same place in 1764, which afterwards became the stationary Lodge of the Three Towers. The latest appears to have been George the Victorious, constituted by Grand Lodge Astrea, March 12, 1817.

GERMANY.—Throughout the empire, Field or Camp Lodges were regarded as merely auxiliary to the regular or stationary Lodges. The former were, in every case, erected to serve a temporary purpose and before a candidate was accepted for initiation, he was required to name one of the latter as the Lodge he would repair to for admission, when the Warrant of the movable and transitory body was surrendered or withdrawn. They only existed in time of war, or when an appeal to arms was believed to be impending. In the eighteenth century there were Military (which sometimes became Field) Lodges. These were constituted in garrisons and fortresses during peace as well as war. Examples are afforded by the three Lodges which head the subjoined table. The first was founded by Frederick the Great, the second by French prisoners of war, the third by military officers in Potsdam. The Flaming Star, originally a Military Lodge, was established February 24, 1770, it being thought desirable by Krüger "to take the Brethren of Military rank out of all the Lodges and to erect a separate Lodge for them, which, in the case of war, might follow the camp and exemplify the benefits of Masonry in the field." From this time all military candidates were sent to the Flaming Star for initiation.

In 1778, there was a concentration of troops both in Saxony and Silesia and the military duties of the Master—Marschall von Bieberstein—taking him in the former direction, he was accompanied by the Flaming Star, whilst a branch or "Dispensation" Lodge—duly constituted by the G.M.—under Major von Kleist proceeded to diffuse Masonic light in the other. On August 23, 1779, the Brethren were reunited in a single Lodge, which was in existence at Berlin until shortly before the outbreak of the Great War in 1914.

Nos. 12-14 on the list were also erected in Saxony and Silesia in the commencement of the Bavarian War of Succession—the most important being the Golden Goblet, of which Zinnendorff was a member. No. 16 was established by Count von Lottom, in furtherance of his resolution to found a Lodge "on hearing that General Blücher was to command the Army Corps on the Prussian coast of the Baltic." The latter was a member of Field Lodge No. 1, in 1812. The particulars with regard to No. 8 are a little confusing and it is not clear that it ever received a Warrant or, if so, at whose hands. The General in command appears to have arrested its development at a very early stage and the same thing occurred in 1816, when an attempt was made by thirty military Brethren to establish a Lodge in Sedan.

The first Lodge in the list was founded by Frederick II; Nos. 2 to 7 and 9 to 11 were founded by the Three Globes; Nos. 8 and 12 to 19 by Zinnendorff's National Grand Lodge; No. 20 was founded by the Royal York; and Nos. 21 and 22 were founded by the Provincial Grand Lodge of Hanover. All are now extinct.

Two Lodges in Frankfort—of which mention has already been made—are not shown in the foregoing table. One of these (consisting chiefly of foreigners) was founded by Count Schmettau in 1743, the other would appear to date from about the year 1760. The latter, in the Royal Deux Ponts Regiment, affiliated in 1762 with Lodge Union of Frankfort, receiving, at the same time, a local Warrant empowering it to resume work as a "Field" (and daughter) Lodge on quitting that city. The Royal Deux Ponts Lodge joined the Strict Observance in 1771, but we again meet with one—Les Dragons Unis des Deux-Ponts—in the same Regiment, which was taken on the roll of the G.O. of France in 1783, with precedence from the previous year. This Regiment and possibly the Lodge—which may have only shaken off the fetters of the S.O. in 1782—accompanied the expedition of General Rochambeau to North America in 1780 and was commanded by the Marquis de Deux Ponts. Deux Ponts is a town of Rhenish Bavaria, which, passing to Charles XI of Sweden, became French territory in 1718 and, afterwards, Bavarian.

HOLLAND.—The following Military Lodges (all of which are now extinct) were constituted by the Grand Lodge of the Netherlands :

La Loge Militaire, Maastricht, 1745.	St Andreas, Sluis, 1786.	L'Union Constante Militaire, Alkmaar, 1799.

BELGIUM.—The subjoined list of Field and Garrison Lodges (none of which is in existence at this day) has been compiled from official and other sources :

Friends of Order, 1st Army Div., 1832.	Defenders of Leopold, Namur, 1834.	United Brethren, 3d Army Div., 1835.
Scots Camp, 4th Army Div., 1833.	Shield of Belgium, 4th Foot, 1834.	Military Union, Beverloo, 1836.

No Warrants for Field or Army Lodges have been granted at any time under the Jurisdictions of Switzerland, Greece, Denmark, Hamburg or Darmstadt. In the Austro-Hungarian empire, the members of both the sea and land services are forbidden to become Freemasons, "for which reason," wrote the Grand Secretary of Hungary in 1880, "there are no Military Lodges in existence, nor any military Brethren among us."

FRANCE.—Entombed in the archives of the Grand Orient are the records (dossiers) of about two hundred Regimental Lodges, together with a number of documents formerly belonging to the Lodges established in England by French prisoners of war, which subsequently came under the G.O. These books and papers, according to their official custodian, "contain very valuable information (renseignements précieux)," which, however, considerations of time and space have prevented being used. The Lodges in the following table are shown, as nearly as possible, in the order of their appearance in any official list. They are seventy-six in number and, while some were founded by the Grand Lodge, all such Lodges were afterwards newly constituted by the Grand Orient. The roll extends to 1787 and an asterisk in each instance is placed before the names of the fifty-two Lodges which, in that year, were represented at the G.O. by their Deputies. The dates of origin given are those from which the Lodges were allowed to rank. Some of the regiments named in the table—as holding Warrants for long periods—served in America during the War of Independence; and the stability, or tenacity of existence, of the older French Army Lodges, as contrasted with the ephemeral character of their successors under the Consulate and Empire, has led to a description of the former with a minuteness of detail, which would be altogether out of keeping with the importance of the latter in a general history of Freemasonry.

The Lodge Montmorenci-Luxembourg, constituted June 1, 1762, in the Regiment of Hainault Infantry, of which the Duke of Luxemburg was the Colonel, was accorded—April 18, 1772—by the Grand Lodge of France, the privilege of attendance at all its meetings. This Lodge has been styled, with great show of reason, the stem or trunk from which the Grand Orient budded forth in December 1773. The list of its members in 1772 is certainly a remarkable one. The Duke of Luxemburg was the Master, the Wardens were his son and the Prince de Rohan-Guéméné and, among the members—who were all, with one exception, noblemen—may be named the Princes of Condé, Ligne, Tarente, Montbazou, Nassau and Pignatelli; the Dukes of Lauzun, Coigny and Fronsac; and many others of lesser rank. Of the first officers of the Grand Orient, the five highest in rank (after the Duc de Chartres, Grand Master) and nearly the whole of the honorary grand officers, were members of this Lodge.

The last Lodge on the list was constituted March 16, 1787 and its first Master was André Masséna—afterwards Marshal of France—at that time Adjutant of the Royal Italian Regiment.

The abbreviations, Inf., Cav., Drag., Art., Chass. and Huss., denote Infantry, Cavalry, Dragoons, Artillery, Chasseurs and Hussars, respectively.

Loge Parfaite Egalité, in the Regiment Irlandais de Walsh, was legitimated by the Grand Lodge of France in 1772 and by the Grand Orient in 1777. According to an English Army List of 1743, however, the earliest Irish regiment existing, at that time, in the French service, was only formed in 1690.

Loge Militaire du Bourbonnois became, in 1787, Loge les Vrais Amis.

Loge Amis Réunis became, in 1805, Loge les Amis Réunis de la Victoire and was the only Lodge on the above list shown in the Official Calendar for that year.

No Field Lodges were constituted in 1788 or 1789 and only eight between 1790 and 1801. The next seven years, however, witnessed an addition of sixty-four; but at the close of this period nearly all the Lodges established under the old Monarchy had ceased to exist. The Calendar of 1805 shows a total of forty-three, of which one only was of earlier date than the Revolution, the next in point of age being a Lodge of 1790, whilst no fewer than thirty-five had been warranted in 1802-4. In 1809, sixty-seven Regiments had Lodges attached to them and, three years later, the number had risen to sixty-nine. At this time the Lodges were both opened and closed with a cry of "Vive l'Empereur!" In 1811-13, six further Lodges were established, but, as already related, no fewer than four hundred and twenty-nine on the general roll became dormant in 1814. Two new Lodges were formed in 1817-19, but only three Regiments in all are shown as possessed of Masonic Warrants in 1820. Three Lodges were constituted between 1821 and 1834; and, ten years later, Loge Cirrus (1821), in the 10th Regiment of the line, the last of the long roll of French Military Lodges, disappeared from the scene. It may be added, that a confidential circular from the Minister of War—Marshal Soult—to the colonels of regiments, in 1845, declared "that it was contrary to the rules of the service for any of the military to become even members of the institution." Soult himself was a Freemason, as were also many other Marshals of France—for example, Serrurier, Beurnonville, Kellerman, Masséna, Lefebvre, Mortier, Perignon, Bernadotte, Murat, Macdonald, Lauriston, Magnan and (it is alleged) Augereau, Brune and Sebastiani.

AMERICA.—The general history of Masonry in the United States may be divided into three periods—the first extending to the year 1755, the second to the Peace of Versailles in 1783 and the third until the present date. Of these, the first and last will be hereafter considered, but the second—so far, at least, as the details are capable of being treated as a whole—are dealt with in the current section.

According to a talented writer, “all warranted American Lodges, previous to the French War [1755], had worked the Rituals and acknowledged the authority of the Grand Lodge of England only (sometimes denominated the Grand Lodge of Moderns); but during this war Lodges holding Warrants from the Grand Lodges of Scotland, Ireland and the Antients of London, were working in America. They probably owed their introduction to the Military Brethren” (Sidney Hayden, Washington and his Masonic Compeers, 1866, p. 31).

It will in some degree clear the ground for the inquiry to mention that prior to the French War the only Lodge of a military character known to have been established in America was one at Annapolis Royal, in Nova Scotia, formed in 1738 by Erasmus James Phillips—Fort-Major of that garrison—as Deputy Grand Master, under an authority from Boston.

1755.—General Braddock arrived in America with two thousand regular troops, was defeated by the French and mortally wounded, July 8. Other regiments were despatched from Britain in this and later years. The movements of these battalions can easily be traced in a number of well-known books. A list of the British regiments to which Lodges were attached has already been given.

1756.—In this year there were six battalions and eight independent companies of King's troops in America, the whole being under the Earl of Loudoun. Richard Gridley was authorized—May 13—by the Provincial Grand Master of North America, “to congregate all Free and Accepted Masons in the Expedition against Crown Point and form them into one or more Lodges.” For military reasons, however, the proposed movement against Ticonderoga and Crown Point was not attempted.

Richard Gridley—the younger brother of Jeremy Gridley, Provincial Grand Master for North America—was born in 1711 and, after seeing much active service, was appointed Chief Engineer and Colonel of Infantry in 1755. For his distinguished services at the siege of Quebec he received a pension and grant of land from the British Government. Appointed Major-General by the Provincial Congress, September 20, 1775. Deputy Grand Master St. John's Grand Lodge, Boston, January 22, 1768 and continued to hold that office until the Union of the two Grand Lodges in Massachusetts (1792), though his presence in Grand Lodge is last recorded under the year 1787. It is probable that the connexion of this veteran soldier and Craftsman with the older Grand Lodge was not without influence in preventing its total collapse pending the happy amalgamation of the two Grand Lodges in 1792. Scottish Charters for Lodges in Blandford (Virginia) and Boston were granted March 9 and November 30 respectively.

1757.—Lodge at Lake George named in the Boston Records, April 8. Colonel

John Young, 60th Foot, appointed Scottish Provincial Grand Master in America, November 14. Three Ancient Warrants sent by Laurence Dermott to Halifax, in one of which Erasmus James Philips was named as Provincial Grand Master. About this year "several persons in Philadelphia, active in political and private life, were made Masons according to the practice of the Ancients" (Early History Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania).

1758.—Capitulation of Louisbourg, July 26: a Lodge formed there in the 28th Foot by Richard Gridley, November 13. A Warrant—No. 69—granted by the Antient Grand Lodge of England to Philadelphia. After this year there were only—in that city—one or two notices of any Lodges under the older (English) sanction. Scottish Charters were issued by the Grand Lodge and Mother Kilwinning respectively to Brethren at Fredericksburg and Tappahannock (Virginia).

1759.—Abraham Savage was authorized by Jeremy Gridley, Provincial Grand Master for North America, to "Congregate all Free and Accepted Masons in the Expedition against Canada into one or more Lodges," April 13. Crown Point surrendered, August 4; twelve officers of the 1st Foot were made Masons in the Lodge there by the Master, Abraham Savage. Capitulation of Quebec, September 18. "The anniversary of St. John the Evangelist was duly observed by the several Lodges of Freemasons in the Garrison" (Knox, Campaigns in North America, 1769, vol. ii, p. 235), where, at the time, Colonel Young, Provincial Grand Master for North America, under Scotland, was present with his regiment, the 60th Foot or "Royal Americans."

1760.—Quebec invested by the French, May 11. Commodore Swanton, with the Vanguard and two frigates, arrived and raised the siege, May 16. Charter of St. Andrew's Lodge—granted (by the Grand Lodge of Scotland, to certain persons, who, having been irregularly initiated, were refused admission into the Boston Lodges) in 1756—received at Boston, September 4. No. 98 (S.) erected at Charleston, South Carolina.

1761.—The members of the Boston Regular Lodges were forbidden to visit St. Andrew's. Charter—No. 89—appointed William Ball Provincial Grand Master for Pennsylvania, granted by the Antients, but not received. No. 92 (A.) erected at Charleston, S.C.

1762.—A Lodge in the 55th Foot—No. 7 from New York—petitioned Jeremy Gridley to grant a Charter to the Provincial troops at Crown Point (March 5) and a Deputation was issued to Colonel Ingersoll to hold a Lodge there.

1763.—Nos. 117 (S.) erected at Norfolk, Virginia and 399 (I.) at New York.

Owing to the loss of a great part of its records by the Grand Lodge of Ireland, the number of stationary Lodges warranted in America from that Jurisdiction must remain a matter of uncertainty. Lodge No. 74, in the 1st Foot, as already seen, gave an exact copy of its Warrant to a set of Brethren at Albany (N.Y.) in 1759 and it is unreasonable to believe that it was a solitary instance of the kind. Schultz mentions three Lodges of unknown origin in Maryland, as having existed in 1759, 1761 and 1763; it is possible, to say the least, that one or more of them may have derived their authority either directly or indirectly from Ireland. Dove, also, in his account of the early Lodges in Virginia, names the Irish as one of the five Jurisdictions by which that State was Masonically "occupied" in 1777.

1764.—Provincial Warrant—No. 89—received in Philadelphia from the Antient Grand Lodge of England. "From the time of the establishing of these Lodges of the four Degrees by the Antients, such records as we can find," says a careful writer, "show the speedy decline of the Moderns" (Meyer, History of Jerusalem Royal Arch Chapter, p. 10). A Lodge at Quebec—probably constituted by Richard Gridley or Abraham Savage—is first named in the Boston Records of this year.

1765.—No. 346, at Joppa, Maryland, under the Original Grand Lodge of England, was inaugurated November 21; the 14th By-law, passed the same day, enacts:—"That none who hath been Admitted in any Modern Lodge shall be Admitted as a Member of this Lodge, without taking the respective Obligations Peculiar to Antient Masons" (Schultz, Freemasonry in Maryland, p. 39).

1766.—In this year bickerings occurred between the St. Andrew's and the Boston Regular Lodges, a Union of Love and Friendship, to which the members of both Jurisdictions should be parties, was proposed by the former.

1767.—The funeral of Jeremy Gridley, Provincial Grand Master, North America, took place September 12 and the members of St. Andrew's Lodge—sixty-four in number (Joseph Warren being the Senior Warden)—walked in the procession. After this, however, when every generous effort on the part of St. Andrew's had completely failed and when it became evident that no Union of Love and Friendship could be effected, the members of that Lodge changed their ground. Men like Warren, Revere, Hancock and others of illustrious name, felt their patience exhausted and determined not to submit quietly any longer to be denounced as clandestine Masons and impostors. The early proceedings of St. Andrew's were indeed as irregular as it is possible to conceive. Originating in the association of nine Masons, who had been made clandestinely, it was chartered by the Grand Lodge of Scotland in 1756, when it numbered twenty-one members, exclusive of the original nine, who had left Boston in the interval. Its Charter did not arrive until 1760, at which time the Lodge had been increased by eighteen additional members, so that in all thirty-one candidates were initiated before the Lodge received its Charter and thirteen before the Charter was signed. At a conference—held April 28, 1766—between committees of St. John's Grand Lodge and St. Andrew's Lodge (Richard Gridley being a member of one and Joseph Warren of the other), the representatives of the latter fully admitted the illegality of their early proceedings, but contended that it was in the power of the Grand Master of Scotland to make irregular Masons, Regular. Against this, the other committee formulated their belief that "the Language of the Constitutions for irregularities was SUBMISSION." The older Society forgot for a moment its animosity over the grave of its Grand Master and, as already related, the Brethren of both Jurisdictions walked together in the procession. Subsequently, however, the spirit of manliness prompted the leading members of St. Andrew's to vindicate their own characters as Masons and to stand forth in defence of the Lodge which made them. It was therefore voted unanimously on St. Andrew's Day (November 30), that, during the continuance of the interdict against Masonic intercourse imposed by the English Provincial Grand Lodge, the Brethren under that Jurisdiction, unless also members of, or raised Masters in, St. Andrew's, were not to be admitted as visitors.

In this year there were three Lodges at work under the Provincial Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania (Antients), the last of which—Royal Arch Lodge—was constituted October 20.

From the earlier records of this Lodge, it appears "that they received and acted upon the petitions of at least one hundred Modern Masons, who petitioned to be made Antient Masons and, upon their petitions taking the same course as the profane, they were, after approval by ballot, regularly initiated" (Meyer, op. cit., p. 11). No. 3 maintained a close intercourse with a Lodge in the 18th Foot—No. 351 (I.)—and the Royal Arch furniture of the two bodies became in a measure common property.

1768.—The Grand Lodge of Scotland erected a Lodge—No. 143—at East Florida and appointed Governor James Grant, Provincial Grand Master for North America, southern district. In this year a standing army was quartered in Boston. The 14th, 29th and a part of the 59th Regiments, with a train of Artillery, arrived October 1 and, a short time after, the 64th and 65th Regiments, direct from Ireland. In these regiments were three Lodges, all working under what was then commonly known as the Antient System—Nos. 58 (A.), 14th Foot; 322 (I.), 29th; and 106 (S.), 64th. The presence of these troops created an intense excitement and the members of St. Andrew's, particularly Joseph Warren, participated in the universal feeling of opposition to the continuance of this strong force in Boston. Nevertheless, the members of the Lodge saw the opportunity before them of forming a Grand Lodge under the authority of the Grand Master of Scotland and, with this end in view, did not scruple to enter into fraternal communion with and to make use of, their Brethren in the obnoxious regiments (Proceedings Grand Lodge of Massachusetts, 1869, p. 162).

None of these Field Lodges were present at the installation of John Rowe—the Provincial Grand Master under England—on November 23, but all of them joined St. Andrew's, in December, in a petition to the Grand Lodge of Scotland, requesting the appointment of a Grand Master of Antient Masons in America and nominating Joseph Warren for that office.

1769.—The Earl of Dalhousie, Grand Master, Scotland, appointed Joseph Warren, "Grand Master of Masons in Boston, New England and within one hundred miles of the same," May 30. The commission was received in September, but in the interval the 64th Regiment had been removed from Boston. Little notice was taken of the Lodges in the other regiments in the arrangements for the installation and they were merely informed of the approaching event. The Grand Lodge was formally inaugurated on December 27, in the presence of St. Andrew's and of Lodges Nos. 58 and 322, in the 14th and 29th Regiments respectively. Although for convenience' sake this body will be henceforth referred to as the Massachusetts Grand Lodge, it may be observed that it did not adopt that title until December 6, 1782.

1771.—No 169 (A.), established in Battery Marsh, Boston. This Lodge, which is only once named in the records of the Massachusetts Grand Lodge, accompanied the British army to New York on the evacuation of Boston in 1776.

1772.—By a further Scottish patent, signed by the Earl of Dumfries, Joseph Warren was appointed Grand Master for the Continent of America, March 3. The strife between the rival systems of Masonry is thus pleasantly alluded to in the records of a Lodge at Falmouth, Massachusetts, under the date of December 16 in this year :—

In order to establish harmony amongst the Freemasons in this town, it is Voted, That (for the future) the Lodge be opened one evening in the Modern form and the next evening in the Antient form, which is to be continued till the Lodge vote to the contrary.

N.B.—The makings to be as usual in this Lodge.

1773.—A resolution was passed nem. con. that the members of St. Andrew's and of the Lodges under the Massachusetts Grand Lodge should be admitted as visiting Brothers in the Lodges under the older (Boston) Jurisdiction, January 29. John Rowe, Grand Master and Henry Price, Past Grand Master attended the meeting of the English Provincial Grand Lodge on Boston Neck, June 24; and, among the visitors, was Joseph Warren, also described as Grand Master. Meetings of both Grand Lodges took place, December 27, on which date Warren was installed under his patent of the previous year and, at a fixed hour, each Grand Lodge drank the health of the other.

In this year certain ships laden with tea were boarded in Boston Harbour by Paul Revere and others, disguised as Mohawk Indians and their cargoes, consisting of 342 chests of tea, valued at £18,000, thrown into the sea, December 16.

1774.—Nos. 177 (S.) and 190 (A.) were established at Philadelphia and Charleston, S.C., respectively. No. 243 (I.) in the 59th Foot, placed itself "under the Protection and Direction" of the Massachusetts Grand Lodge. The British Government shut up the port of Boston, repealed the Charter of the State of Massachusetts and sent a body of troops to Boston under General Gage. The other colonies took the part of the people of Boston and Deputies from each Province were sent to Philadelphia, where they assembled in Congress for the first time, December 5.

1775.—On April 18, the day before the battle of Lexington, Dr. Joseph Warren, hearing of the intended approach of the British, under General Gage, to Concord and Lexington, despatched Paul Revere to the latter town, via Charlestown, to announce the British expedition of the following day.

Paul Revere was an active member of St. Andrew's Lodge and, after filling both Wardens' chairs and twice holding the office of Deputy Grand Master in the Massachusetts Grand Lodge, served as Grand Master of the (United) Grand Lodge of Massachusetts, 1795-7.

Hostilities commenced between Great Britain and America, April 19. The town of Boston became a garrison and was abandoned by many of its inhabitants, so that the regular meetings of the stationary Lodges were suspended. Joseph Warren appointed Major-General, June 14. Battle of Bunker's Hill and death of Warren, June 17. Colonel Richard Gridley, Deputy Grand Master, St. John's Grand Lodge, the engineer who planned the works that Warren laid down his life to defend, was also wounded in the fight. The war was carried into Canada and Major-General Montgomery fell at the assault of Quebec, December 31.

Prince Hall, and fourteen other free coloured citizens of Boston, were initiated in a travelling Lodge attached to one of the British Regiments in the army of General Gage, March 6. St. John's Regimental Lodge, No. 1, New York, organized July 24; a Kilwinning Charter granted to Brethren at Falmouth, Virginia, December 20.

1776.—American Union Lodge, established February 15, by a Warrant issued in the name of John Rowe, Grand Master (St. John's Grand Lodge), bearing the signature of Richard Gridley, his Deputy. Boston evacuated by the British, March 17. Funeral of Joseph Warren, April 8. Richard Gridley was a pall-bearer, but John Rowe, though present by invitation of Joseph Webb (Deputy Grand Master Massachusetts Grand Lodge)—according to his own Diary—"was very much Insulted" and retired. Declaration of Independence, July 4. It is said that all but three of those that signed it were Freemasons. British occupation of New York, September 15 and introduction of so-called Antient Masonry into that State. Little or no intercourse was held between the Army and the Provincial Lodges. Of the latter, those in the city of New York virtually ceased to meet, while the others, with the exception of St. Patrick's—which met at Johnson Hall, the family seat of the Provincial Grand Master—continued their labours and were subjected to but little interruption during the war. Of the Provincial Grand Lodge under Sir John Johnson, there are no records after this year. St. Patrick's Lodge was constituted in 1766, Sir William Johnson serving as Master until 1770, when his son-in-law, Colonel Guy Johnson, took his place. Sir John (the Provincial Grand Master and second Baronet) was a regular attendant from 1767 to 1773. Sir William, late in life, took to his home as his wife Mary Brant, or "Miss Molly," as she was called; and her brother, Joseph Brant, or Thayendanegea, was afterwards secretary to Colonel Guy Johnson, who succeeded his father-in-law as General Superintendent of the Indian Department. Joseph Brant was a Freemason and, during the fierce struggle for independence, many military Brethren owed their lives to his protection, one of whom, Captain John M'Kinstry, at the period of Brant's interposition on his behalf, after the battle of the Cedars, near Montreal, in 1776, was actually bound to a tree and surrounded by the faggots intended for his immolation (W. L. Stone, Life of Joseph Brant, 1838, vol. i, pp. 18, 33; ii, p.156). Similar tales are related of Tecumseh, the famous Shawnee warrior and orator, in connexion with the war of 1812.

1777.—The authority granted to Joseph Warren by the Grand Lodge of Scotland having died with him, the Master and Wardens of the subordinate Lodges were summoned to attend and elect a Grand Master by Joseph Webb, his late Deputy. Accordingly, eleven Brethren met as a Grand Lodge and elected Joseph Webb Grand Master, March 8. This, if we leave out of present consideration the Lodge (and Grand Lodge) at Philadelphia, in 1731, was the first Independent or self-created Grand Lodge on the Continent. Philadelphia was occupied by the British, September 27. At that time the Provincial Grand Lodge (A.) had eighteen Lodges on its register. The American army took post at Valley Forge, twenty-six miles from Philadelphia and traditions affirm that Lodges were held in this camp, which Washington often attended. There can hardly be a doubt that such was the case, but unfortunately no records of the Continental Field Lodges, for this year, are in existence.

1778.—Philadelphia evacuated by the British, June 18. The Grand Lodge of Virginia, the second Independent organization of the kind, formed October 13. The Lodges in this State had derived their Charters from the Grand Lodges of England and Scotland, Mother Kilwinning, the Provincial Grand Lodges of New England and Pennsylvania and (according to Dove) the Grand Lodge of Ireland. At the close of this year, the city of New York, the town of Newport, Rhode Island and Savannah, Georgia (captured December 29), were alone held by the British.

1779.—No. 210 (A.), constituted at New York—making with No. 169 (A.)—removed from Boston in 1776—two Antient Lodges in that city. Three Lodges in the Continental army were chartered by the Provincial Grand Lodge (A.) of Pennsylvania. “The membership of the Lodges subordinate to the two Grand Lodges in Philadelphia gradually became merged, the Antients receiving and re-making the Moderns. The records of the Grand Lodge contain the names of many Modern Masons who were subsequently identified with the Antients” (Early History of the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, p. xlix). A notable instance of this is the case of Dr. William Smith, Provost of the University, who was a so-called Modern in 1755 and became Grand Secretary of the Antients (in Pennsylvania), October 22, 1779.

1780.—Washington nominated as General Grand Master by the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, January 13; Convention of American Field Lodges at Morristown, February 7. A French force, under General Rochambeau, arrived at Newport, Rhode Island, July 12. Among the subordinate officers employed with this expedition were the Dukes de Laval Montmorency, de Castries and de Lauzun, Prince de Broglio, the Marquis and the Count de Deux Ponts, Count de Segur and many other noblemen. The Baron de Kalb, a Major-General in the American army—mortally wounded at the battle of Camden, August 17—was buried with military and Masonic honours by his victorious enemies. In this year No. 212 (A.) was established at New York; and three further Warrants were granted in the Continental army by the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, on the roll of which body there were now thirty-one subordinate Lodges.

1781.—The Antient and Field Lodges in New York met as a Grand Lodge and elected Grand Officers, January 23; a Warrant for a Provincial Grand Lodge—No. 219—was granted by the (Antient) Grand Lodge of England, September 5. A Lodge in the Continental army was established in this year under a Pennsylvanian Charter.

1782.—Provincial Grand Lodge of New York (A.) inaugurated by the following Lodges:—Stationary—Nos. 169, 210, 212 (A.); Nos. 132 (S.), 52 (A.), 441 (I.), 213 (A.) and 215 (A.), together with a Lodge under dispensation—in the 22nd, 37th and 38th Regiments, the 4th Battalion Royal Artillery, the Regiment of Anspach-Beyreuth and the 57th Foot respectively, December 5. The title of Massachusetts Grand Lodge of Antient Masons was assumed by the Grand Lodge at Boston under Joseph Webb, December 6 and, from the official records of the same date, we learn that three subordinate Lodges were constituted before the death of Joseph Warren, fourteen subsequently.

1783.—Peace of Versailles, April 19. The third Independent Grand Lodge, that of Maryland, organized July 31. A majority of the Grand Officers, being about to leave New York with the British army, commended the Grand Warrant to the care of their successors, September 19. At this date seven Lodges had received Charters from the Provincial Grand Lodge, four of which were attached to the New Jersey Volunteers, the 57th Foot, the Regiment de Knyphausen and the Loyal American Regiment; also two Irish Lodges, Nos. 478, in the 17th Dragoons and 90, in the 33rd Foot, had at different dates ranged themselves under its banner. In this year there were forty Lodges on the roll of the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, eighteen under the Grand Body of which Webb was the head, in Massachusetts. Of the former, ten were established in Maryland (before the close of 1782), five in New Jersey, four in Delaware, three each in Virginia and South Carolina, single Lodges in North Carolina and Georgia. Of the latter, six were outside the State of Massachusetts, viz., in Connecticut three, in New Hampshire, Vermont and New York one each. Thus making a grand total of thirty-three Lodges from these two sources only—whose members gloried in the title of Antients and believed that they were walking in the old paths, from which the older Grand Lodge of England and her daughter Lodges had lamentably strayed.

Ten Lodges in all were at work in the American army during the Revolution, the earliest of which was—

ST. JOHN'S REGIMENTAL LODGE, warranted by the Provincial Grand Lodge of New York, July 24, 1775, i.e. before the military occupation of that city by the British. There are no records and, apparently, it was attached to the United States battalion during the war.

AMERICAN UNION, though of later date, was the first Lodge organized in the Continental army and may justly be regarded as the eldest Masonic daughter of the Federation. It was formed—February 15, 1776—by Warrant of the English Provincial Grand Master for North America—John Rowe—in the Connecticut Line of the army, wherever stationed, provided no other Grand Master held authority. Shortly after, the Lodge having removed to New York, asked for a confirmation of their Charter from the Deputy Grand Master, Dr. Middleton ; but a new Warrant was granted to the members under the name of Military Union, No. I. The Lodge is described as having “ moved with the army as a pillar of light in parts of Connecticut, New York and New Jersey.” Joel Clark, the first Master, was taken prisoner August 27 and died in captivity. He was succeeded by S. H. Parsons (the first treasurer), the latter by Jonathan Heart (the first Secretary). The original Warrant was taken by Heart to Marietta, Ohio and the Lodge is now No. I on the roll of that State.

WASHINGTON LODGE, No. 10, was constituted at West Point—November 11, 1779—by Jonathan Heart, as representative of Joseph Webb, Grand Master Massachusetts. The first Master was Brigadier-General J. Paterson, the Wardens, Colonels Benjamin Tupper and John Groaton. At this and the previous Lodge (American Union) General Washington was a frequent visitor.

ARMY LODGE, No. 27, in the Maryland Line, was warranted by the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania in April 1780. The first Master was Brigadier-General Mordecai Gist; the Wardens, Colonel Otho Williams and Major Archibald Anderson. All three greatly distinguished themselves at the battle of Camden, August 17, 1780, Gist in command of a brigade, Williams as Adjutant-General ; while, after the defeat of the Americans, Major Anderson was the only infantry officer who kept together any number of men.

No records of the American Field Lodges of the Revolution have been preserved, except a portion of the Minutes of American Union and some returns of the Washington Lodge. The latter merely inform us that in 1782 two hundred and forty-five names had—up to that date—been borne on the roll of the Lodge (Proceedings Grand Lodge of Massachusetts, 1877, pp. 63-7). The former are of a more interesting character. The principal officers of the army and the General in command are frequently named as visitors and at all the banquets, while the first toast was Washington or Congress, the second was invariably—Warren, Montgomery and Wooster, followed by the Dead March (E. G. Storer, Freemasonry in Connecticut, 1859, pp. 14-48).

Dr. Warren was the first man of distinction to lay down his life in the cause of American liberty. “ At Boston,” says a famous writer, “ Joseph Warren, a young man whom nature had endowed with grace and manly beauty and a courage that bordered on rash audacity, uttered the new war-cry of the world,” ∴ ∴ ∴ “ The good judgment and daring of Warren singled him out above all others then in the Province as the leader of rebellion ” (Bancroft, Centenary Edition, 1876, vol. iii, p. 598). He presided over the Provincial Congress the day before the battle of Bunker’s Hill—where, though holding the commission of Major-General, he fought as a volunteer. It was ordered by Congress that a monument should be erected at Boston in remembrance of him and—having left behind him very little of this world’s substance—that his son should be considered as the child of the public and be educated at the expense of the United States.

Warren was initiated in St. Andrew's Lodge, Boston, in 1761 and became its Master in 1768. During his Grand Mastership there were thirty-seven meetings of the Grand Lodge, thirty-four of which were held in "ample form."

Montgomery was of Irish birth and, after serving with distinction in the French war, settled in America. The commission of Brigadier-General in the Continental army was bestowed upon him early in the war and he was killed at the attack on Quebec, December 31, 1775. No man that ever fell in battle during a civil contest was more universally regretted and his untimely fate was as much deplored in England as in the country of his adoption. He was among the Masonic friends who gathered around Washington at Cambridge in the beginning of the war.

David Wooster, who was born in 1711, served as a Captain in the expedition against Louisburg in 1745. In the French war he commanded a regiment and, subsequently, became a Brigadier-General. In 1776 he was appointed Major-General in the American army and was mortally wounded while leading an attack on the British troops at Ridgefield, April 27, 1777. General (then Captain) Wooster was the first Master of the first chartered Lodge in Connecticut, instituted in 1750—now Hiram No. 1.

According to the late C. W. Moore, all the American Generals of the Revolution, with the exception of Benedict Arnold, were Freemasons. The Marquis de Lafayette was among the number and it is believed that he was initiated in American Union Lodge at Morristown, the jewels and furniture used on the occasion being lent by St. John's Lodge at Newark, New Jersey.

In nearly all cases the Army Lodges, in the event of removal from one State to another, were authorized to continue working, unless there was in existence a Grand or Provincial Grand Lodge, when the sanction of the presiding officer had to be obtained. In this may possibly be discerned the first germ of the principle of Exclusive (State) Jurisdiction.

It is supported by evidence, that the asperities which characterized the rivalry of the two Masonic systems, found no place in the Army Lodges. To quote the words of a somewhat impassioned orator, "the Antient and Modern contest turned to ashes in the red-hot furnace of liberty" and it is on record that, at the constitution of Washington Lodge, Jonathan Heart of American Union, under the Moderns, was appointed by Joseph Webb, Grand Master of the Boston Antients, his Special Deputy Grand Master, to open and inaugurate the new Lodge.

On December 27, 1779—the head-quarters of the army being then at Morristown, New Jersey—the American Union Lodge met to celebrate the festival of St. John. At this meeting, "a petition was read, representing the present state of Freemasonry to the several Deputy Grand Masters in the United States of America, desiring them to adopt some measures for appointing a Grand Master over said States"; and it was ordered "that the petition be circulated through the different Lines in the Army"; also, "that a committee be appointed from the different Lodges in the Army, from each Line and from the Staff of the Army, to convene on the 1st of February, at Morristown, to take it into consideration." There were present on this occasion thirty-six members of the Lodge and sixty-eight visitors, one of whom was General Washington.

Before, however, these proceedings ripened into action, the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, at a special meeting—held January 13, 1780—passed three resolutions; the first, affirming the principle that it would be for the benefit of Masonry "that a Grand Master of Masons throughout the United States" should be nominated on the part of that Grand Lodge; the second, unanimously electing General Washington to the office; the third, directing "that the Minutes of the election and appointment should be transmitted to the different Grand Lodges in the United States and their concurrence therein should be requested."

At the same meeting a committee was nominated "to inform themselves of the number of Grand Lodges in America and the names of their officers"—a point upon which a good deal of ignorance prevailed throughout the country at large.

On February 7, 1780, "according to the recommendation of the Convention Lodge," held December 27, a committee of ten met at Morristown, delegated by the Masons in the Military Lines of Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York and Maryland; St. John's Regimental Lodge, the Staff of the Army and the Artillery. The representatives of the Massachusetts and Connecticut Military Lines—John Pierce and Jonathan Heart—also acting on behalf of Washington and American Union Lodges respectively. Mordecai Gist was chosen President, Otho Williams, Secretary of the Committee. An address was then drawn up to "the Grand Masters of the several Lodges in the respective United States of America." In this—to avert "the impending dangers of Schisms and Apostacy"—the expediency was maintained of "establishing one Grand Lodge in America, to preside over and govern all other Lodges, licensed or to be licensed, upon the Continent"; and the Grand Masters, or a majority of their number, were requested to nominate as Grand Master, a Brother whose merit and capacity might be adequate to a station so important and to submit his name, together with that of the Lodge to be established, "to our Grand Mother Lodge in Europe for approbation and confirmation." This address being read and unanimously agreed to, was "signed in convention and the committee adjourned without delay."

A Convention Lodge from the different Lines of the Army and departments, was held—March 6—under the authority of the American Union Lodge, at which the proceedings of the committee were unanimously approved.

At this period the only Grand Lodges (in the contemplation of the Committee) were those in Massachusetts, Pennsylvania and Virginia; and, although the name of Washington as Grand Master designate does not appear in the address from the Masonic Convention in the Army, yet it was formally signified to these Grand Lodges that he was their choice. It will be observed that the Masons of the various Military Lines met three times in convention—on the first occasion to propound a scheme, on the second to arrange the details, on the third to ratify the proceedings of the executive committee. Washington, therefore, whose name is recorded among those of the visitors on St. John's Day, 1779, was as much a party to the proceedings of that date as were the actual members present of the American Union Lodge. This doubtless led to the project being taken up so warmly by the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, by which body it was communicated to other Jurisdictions; but they did not view it with favour and no action resulted. It is a little singular that in Philadelphia—then the metropolis of North America—the governing Masonic body was only informed on July 27, 1780, that there was a Grand Lodge in Virginia and the records from which this is gleaned (Early History of the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, p. 17) give—under the same date—the following:—"It is reported that there is a Grand Lodge in Boston." In the same year—September 4—Joseph Webb (Massachusetts) knew of but two American Grand Lodges, that of Pennsylvania and his own and had heard of no increase in the number beyond the Grand Lodge of New York so late as March 8, 1787.

The idea of a General Grand Master or Superintending Grand Lodge was revived in 1790, when it was taken up by Georgia and, at various other times (and ways), some seventeen in all, the last occasion being in 1862. It is somewhat curious that the project, though constantly revived by a number of American Grand Lodges after 1780, has since that date encountered the determined opposition of the Masonic community in Pennsylvania. The belief that General Washington was Grand Master of the United States—at one time a very prevalent one—was strengthened by a Masonic medal, struck in 1797, having on one side the initials, "G.W., G.G.M." The following, however, is his Masonic record briefly told:—He was initiated in the Fredericksburg Lodge, Virginia, November 4, 1752, became a Master Mason, August 4, 1753. This Lodge derived its authority from Boston, but obtained a Scottish Charter in 1758, which seems on the whole to fortify a conjecture which has been advanced by Hayden, that Washington was "healed and re-obligated" in No. 227 (46th Foot) in order to qualify him for admission into a Lodge held under a Warrant from the Grand Lodge of Ireland. In 1779 he declined the office of Grand Master of Virginia, but accepted that of Master of Alexandria Lodge, No. 22, in his native State, in 1788. As President of the United States he was sworn in—April 30, 1789—on the Bible of St. John's Lodge, New York, by Chancellor Livingstone, Grand Master of that State. In 1793—September 18—he laid the cornerstone of the Capitol and is described in the official proceedings as "Grand Master pro tem. and Master of No. 22, of Virginia." Washington died in 1799 and was buried with Masonic honours on December 18 of that year.

It is a curious circumstance, deserving to be recorded, that, with the exception of Major-General Richard Gridley, who attended two meetings of the St. John's Grand Lodge, Boston, in 1787, Washington appears to have been the only man of mark, who, graduating under the older system of Masonry before its popularity was on the wane, associated himself at all closely with the proceedings of the Craft, either during the war with England or at any later date. Before the political troubles no one figured more prominently on the Masonic stage than Benjamin Franklin; but we nowhere read of his participating in Masonic fellowship, in the country of his birth, after his return from England in 1762. According to a publication of great weight and authority (Early History of the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, p. xxxix), "the Moderns numbered among their prominent members many who were opposed to the independence of the colonies, while the Antients were mostly in favour thereof." In 1776 the earliest Provincial Grand Lodge for Pennsylvania was practically extinct, its members having been sharply divided in political sentiment at the era of the Revolution and their Grand Master, Chief Justice Allen, having placed himself under the protection of General Howe. At the same date the condition of affairs was very similar in New York, the Provincial Grand Master of which State, Sir John Johnson, was commissioned as a colonel by the British and, according to an unfriendly biographer, "directed the movements of as bloody a band of savages and outlaws as existed during the Revolution" (Hayden, p. 257); while at Boston the influence of Joseph Warren, both in Masonry and politics, has already been narrated.

At the termination of hostilities in 1783, we find, therefore, that in Pennsylvania the Antients were not only supreme but unchallenged. In Massachusetts about an equal number of Lodges held Charters from each of the two Grand Lodges and, at the Union of these bodies in 1792, the only allusion to the diversity of rites was the single proviso that "all distinctions between Antient and Modern Masons shall be abolished as far as practicable" (Proceedings Grand Lodge Massachusetts (1877, p. 45). In New York many of the Lodges under the older sanction gradually attached themselves to the predominant system and, beyond the fact that their members were understood to have shifted their allegiance and to have become Antients, very little more seems to have been required of them. In South Carolina the strife lingered for some years and this was probably mainly the result of the presence of the large British garrison in that State during the closing years of the struggle for independence.

Gradually, however, all distinctions between the two systems were removed throughout the Continent and the prudent course, adopted by the Grand Lodge of New Jersey, in 1807, must be commended, by which body the difficulties of reconciling any discrepancies were at once surmounted by the appointment of a committee "to consider of and introduce an uniform system of working to be observed throughout the several Lodges of the State" (J. H. Hough, Origin of Masonry in New Jersey, p. 125).

The first ten Lodges on this list were in existence during the Revolution. The third in order, now Montgomery, No. 19, Philadelphia, is traditionally asserted to have been "originally a Military Lodge, with a Travelling Warrant from the Grand Lodge of England." All Warrants issued to military bodies were recalled by the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania in 1784 and, from that date, the Army Lodges either ceased to exist or assumed a new character.

An application for "a Warrant to hold a Travelling Lodge in the armies of the United States" was refused by the Grand Lodge of New Jersey in 1791; and in the same year a "Travelling Warrant" was granted by the Grand Lodge of New York to some none-military Brethren desirous of erecting a Lodge in the Island of Curaçoa.

The first Field Lodge, after the peace—No. 58 (P.)—was established in the "Legion of the United States," commanded by General Anthony Wayne, in 1793; and it is said that nearly all the members were killed in the Indian War. After this, in the Grand Lodge of New York—March 2, 1814—"a petition from a number of officers of the second division of the Northern Army, at Plattsburgh, praying for a 'Marching Warrant,' to be called Northern Light Lodge, was read and referred to the Grand Officers." Whether the Charter solicited was granted or not cannot be said; but later in the same year a Field Lodge—No. 140—was erected by the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, to be held wherever the Master for the time being should be stationed in the Army of the United States.

The last two Lodges on the list were established during the Mexican war and it is quite possible that there were others, though the particulars with regard to them have not fallen in my way.

Field Lodges sprang up with rather a luxuriant growth during the Civil War and were freely established on both sides. But the experience of the war was decidedly unfavourable to their utility and we find the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, in 1865, congratulated on having "kept herself free from the difficulties, embarrassments and entanglements, which the issuing of Warrants for Army Lodges could not but have led to." The practice was, to issue Dispensations and, when the Regiments in which they were held were mustered out of the service, or the individuals to whom they were granted returned to civil life, the Lodges ceased to exist.

The following statistics have been supplied with regard to the number of dispensations issued in the different Jurisdictions:—Alabama, nineteen; Arkansas, thirteen; New York, eight; New Hampshire, five; Massachusetts, Virginia, Louisiana and North Carolina, several each; and both in Connecticut and Nebraska, single dispensations. None whatever were granted in Kentucky, Tennessee, California, Kansas, Oregon and Pennsylvania; the general verdict passed upon such Lodges by many American Grand Secretaries is strikingly in accord with the remarks of Past Grand Master Perkins of the last-named State, in 1865. There are no Lodges in the Standing Army of the United States and for this a very sufficient reason will be found, in the fact that the few Regiments of the Regular Army are generally—if not always—divided into small fractions, separated at widely different posts.

Sereno D. Nickerson, of Boston, also has drawn attention to many entries in the Proceedings of American Grand Lodges, which would otherwise have escaped observation.

CHAPTER XI

THE HOLY ROYAL ARCH

ALMOST until the union of the two Grand Lodges of England, in 1813, the Moderns held tenaciously to the opinion that Freemasonry was confined strictly to what are known as the Craft Degrees but, when that union was effected, in December 1813, it was "declared and pronounced that pure Antient Masonry consisted of three Degrees and no more, viz. those of the Entered Apprentice, the Fellow Craft and the Master Mason, including the Supreme Order of the Holy Royal Arch."

The Royal Arch was evidently known to the Moderns in 1738 for in that year their Grand Secretary wrote: "Our Society is neither Arch, Royal Arch, nor Antient," the last word referring, of course, to the Antients, or rival, Grand Lodge.

The questions as to how, when and where this Supreme Order of the Holy Royal Arch derived its origin have been debated at length over many years, without satisfactory solution. Some have ascribed the origin to France and to Chevalier Ramsay; others to Ireland and its introduction into England to Laurence Dermott; others again to York, where there was another rival Grand Lodge. Thory, in Acta Latamorum, published in Paris in 1815, alludes to Irish Royal Arch Chapters as existing in 1730, but gives no authority for his statement.

The Royal Arch, if not Jewish in its origin, is based entirely upon Jewish history. Its full title is that of the Holy Royal Arch of Jerusalem. The compilers of the ritual undoubtedly took the devices for their standards or banners from the blessings of Jacob to his sons as narrated in Genesis xlix. All the biblical passages used in the ritual are from the Old Testament and the members are presumed to be of the princely tribe of Judah, whilst a non-Christian chronology is followed.

Mackey lays down the following rule with regard to Royal Arch chronology:

Royal Arch Masons commence their era with the year in which Zerubbabel began to build the second temple, which was 530 B.C.

And he goes on to state that it is calculated by adding 530 to the Christian era and designating the result as Anno Inventionis, "In the year of the Discovery."

The earliest known reference to the Royal Arch in connexion with Masonry appears in a contemporary account of a Lodge meeting at Youghal, in Ireland, in 1743, when it is stated that the members walked in procession and the Master was "preceded by the Royal Arch, carried by two Excellent Masons."

The ceremony in Ireland, says Hughan (Origin of the English Rite of Freemasonry, p. 95) differs much from that of England and Scotland, for it has nothing to do with the rebuilding of the Temple, as narrated by Ezra, but with the repairing of the Temple by Josiah; the three chief Officers or Principals being the King (Josiah), the Priest (Hilkiah), and the Scribe (Shaphan), not as in the English ritual, Zerubbabel, Haggai, and Jeshua.

In 1744, Fifield Dassigny, M.D., in A Serious and Impartial Enquiry into the Cause of the Present Decay of Free-masonry in the Kingdom of Ireland, published at Dublin in that year, made the first typographical reference to the Degree. He wrote :

I am informed in that city [York] is held an assembly of Master Masons under the title of Royal Arch Masons, who, as their qualifications and excellencies are superior to others, they receive a larger pay than working Masons : but of this more hereafter.

Now, as the landmarks of the constitution of Free Masonry are universally the same throughout all kingdoms and are so well fixt that they will not admit of removal, how comes it to pass that some have been led away with ridiculous innovations, an example of which I shall prove by a certain propagator of a false system, some years ago, in this city, who imposed upon several very worthy men, under a pretence of being a Master of the Royal Arch, which he asserted he had brought with him from the city of York and that the beauties of the Craft did principally consist in the knowledge of this valuable piece of Masonry. However, he carried on his scheme for several months and many of the learned and wise were his followers, till, at length, his fallacious art was discovered by a Brother of probity and wisdom, who had some small space before attained that excellent part of Masonry in London and plainly proved that his doctrine was false; whereupon the Brethren justly despised him and ordered him to be excluded from all the benefits of the Craft and, although some of the Fraternity have expressed an uneasiness at this matter being kept a secret from them (since they have already passed through the usual degrees of probation), I cannot help being of opinion that they have no right to any such benefit until they make a proper application and are received with due formality; and, as it is an organis'd body of men, who have passed the chair and given undeniable proofs of their skill in architecture, it cannot be treated with too much reverence and, more especially, since the character of the present members of that particular Lodge are untainted and their behaviour judicious and unexceptionable, so that there cannot be the least hinge to hang a doubt on, but that they are most excellent Masons.

This reference is satisfactory in that it links up the Royal Arch as a Degree practised in York, Dublin and London in 1744.

It has been claimed that the Stirling Rock Royal Arch Chapter has a Minute-book dating from July 30, 1743 and that the evidence is in the hands of the Supreme Grand Chapter of Scotland. The statement, however, is disputed and no authentic evidence has ever been given in proof. If accurate, it would be the oldest Royal Arch Chapter in the world.

Lodges bearing the name of Royal Arch have been warranted in Scotland from 1755.

William Tait, of Belfast, a member of the Lodge of Research, CC, Dublin, found an entry in an old Minute-book of Vernon Lodge, 123, Coleraine, Co. Derry, dated April 16, 1752, which reads :

At this Lodge Bror. Thos. Blair propos'd Samson Moore, a Master and Royal Arch Mason, to be admitted a member of our Lodge.

This is the earliest known reference to the Degree in a Minute-book, but a Minute-book of the same Lodge, dated 1767, contains a list of members, with the date of each being made a Royal Arch Mason, the earliest date given being March 11, 1745, within twelve months of Dassigny's famous reference.

There is an entry in the Minutes of the Grand Committee of the Antients, dated September 2, 1752, which states that "the Lodge was opened in Antient form of Grand Lodge and every part of real Freemasonry was traced and explained by the Grand Secretary, except the Royal Arch." The Ancient (generally spelt Antient) Grand Lodge (or Committee), it will be remembered, was formed in London in 1751 by Irish Masons principally, with Irish customs, who evidently attached great importance to the Royal Arch, a Degree which was repudiated by the Moderns, as the members of the older established organization were termed. The Antients did much to establish the Royal Arch in a firm position, which has led, probably, to their being given credit for its origination.

The American record for the actual conferring of the Royal Arch Degree is on December 22, 1753 and is found in the Minute-book of the Alexandria-Washington Lodge, 22, in which George Washington was initiated on November 4, 1752.

On March 2, 1757, the Antients, in Grand Lodge, which succeeded the General Committee, decided "that a General Meeting of Master Masons be held on the 15th inst to compass and regulate several things relative to the Antient Craft ; the Masters of the Royal Arch shall also be summon'd to meet, in order to regulate things relative to that most valuable branch of the Craft."

Laurence Dermott, the energetic and zealous Secretary of the Antients, was an enthusiast of the Royal Arch and, in his famous Abiman Rexon, published in 1756, he says :

The Royal Arch, I firmly believe to be the root, heart and marrow of Masonry.

In the second edition of the same work, published in 1764, Dermott gave it as his opinion that a Modern could not be initiated or introduced "into a Royal Arch Lodge (the very essence of Masonry) without going through the Antient Ceremonies." It would appear also from the records that a candidate would have to "go through a ceremony," viz. that of "passing the chair," a ceremony which was not recognized by the Modern Grand Lodge. When the Royal Arch first came into public notice, it was conferred only upon Installed Masters, viz. those who had presided over a Craft Lodge. To-day that restriction has been removed, so far as admission into the Royal Arch is concerned, though none can be elected to any of the three Principal Chairs until he has served as Master of a Craft Lodge.

It was the particular claim of the Antients that the Royal Arch Degree was a component part of their rite, which is believed by some to have been the cause of what is sometimes described as the Great Schism. Thus we find Laurence Dermott writing on another occasion :

The members of the Grand Lodge and of all warranted Lodges (so far as they have abilities or numbers) have an undoubted right to exercise all Degrees of the ancient Craft and, consequently, the Royal Arch.

In 1759 we find in a Lodge at Exeter reference to the Royal Arch in such a form as to infer that the Lodge had the power to confer the Degree, which also demonstrates that the Royal Arch was being worked at Plymouth prior to 1759.

The earliest mention of the Royal Arch in London on the Modern Grand Lodge side is found in the records of the Constitution Lodge (afterwards merged in the Lodge of Emulation, No. 21) on December 6, 1757, when a visitor attended from the Royal Arch, Black Horse, Oxenden Street. The first Charter issued by the Grand Chapter of England (formed in 1767) was in 1769; therefore, the Royal Arch at the Black Horse could not have been authorized by that Society. In 1771 a Grand Chapter of the Antients is first mentioned and the two worked side by side until 1817, when the Grand Chapter of Royal Arch Masons, as it exists to-day, was formed.

In 1770, three Royal Arch Lodges at Hull, Ripon and Knaresborough received Warrants from the Grand Lodge of York, by which time the Royal Arch was well established in London, York, Dublin, as well as in Scotland.

The earliest known York Minute bears date 1762 and reads as follows :

A Most Sublime or Royal Arch Lodge open'd at the Sign of the Punch Bowl in Stongate, York, on Sunday the 7th of February, 1762 :

FRODSHAM, P. H.	}	in the Chairs.
ORAM, Z. L.
GRANGER, J. A.

At this Lodge Brothers Burton, Palmer, Tasker and Dodgson petition'd to be raised to the 4th Degree of Masonry, commonly called the Most Sublime or Royal Arch, were accepted and accordingly made.

Whitehead suggests (Hughan, Origin of the English Rite, p. 100) that the initials represent Haggai, Propheta; Zerubbabel, Legislator; and Jeshua, Armiger.

Godfrey (Anacalypsis) says that a Grand Chapter of All England was held at York on Sunday, May 27, 1778, the Minute of which reads as follows :

York Cathedral, 27th May, 1778

The Royal Arch Brethren, whose names are under-mentioned, assembled in the Antient Lodge, now a sacred recess within the Cathedral Church of York and then and there opened a Chapter of Free and Accepted Masons in the Most Sublime Degree of Royal Arch.

Present	JACOB BUSSEY, S.	FRANCIS CONSITT
	GEORGE KITSON, H.T.	ROBERT BEWLAY
	THOS. RICHARDSON, H.A.	THOMAS WILLIAMS
	JOHN COUPLAND,	THOMAS BECKWITH
	Secretary and Treas.	FRANCIS CLUBLEY

The Chapter was held and then closed in usual form, being adjourned to the first Sunday in June except in case of emergency.

The Royal Arch was described generally in the York records as the fourth Degree.

On May 2, 1779, an agreement was made that the Officers of the Grand Lodge of All England should be "Masters of Royal Arch Chapter whenever such presiding members shall be members hereof. In case of default they shall be succeeded by the senior members of the Royal Arch Chapter" (Hughan, op. cit., p. 101).

At a Grand Lodge of the Antients held on September 4, 1771, Dickey, then Grand Secretary, put the following question: "Is the Duke of Atholl Grand Master of Masons in every respect?" and, receiving an affirmative answer, said he "had several times heard it advanced that the Grand Master had not a right to inspect into the proceedings of the Royal Arch."

Evidently, however, the Moderns did not recognize officially the Grand Chapter formed in 1767, for, on January 18, 1774, James Heseltine, Grand Secretary, wrote to an inquirer:

It is true that many of the Fraternity belong to a Degree in Masonry which is said to be higher than the other and is called Royal Arch. I have the honour to belong to this Degree . . . but it is not acknowledged in Grand Lodge and all its emblems and jewels are forbidden to be worn there. In order to convince you of the untruth of the rumours you have heard, I can assure you that our present Grand Master, Lord Petre, is not a member of the Royal Arch, nor was our past Grand Master, Lord [the Duke of] Beaufort. You will thus see that the Royal Arch is a private and distinct society. It is a part of Masonry but has no connexion with Grand Lodge and this is the only further Degree known to us in England.

Even more definite was a letter sent by the same Grand Secretary to the same correspondent on December 15, 1775, presumably with the desire to end the correspondence. In it he said:

I have already told you a further Degree, called Royal Arch, is known in England, in which the present Grand Officers are mostly members of the Chapter. They belong to it as a separate Society, without connexion with Grand Lodge and its explanations of Freemasonry are very pleasing and instructive.

This attitude found corroboration as late as November 21, 1792, when Grand Lodge resolved:

That this Lodge do agree with its Committee that the Grand Lodge of England has nothing to do with the Proceedings of the Society of Royal Arch Masons.

The earliest record of Royal Arch working in Upper Canada, now known as Toronto, is a document issued in 1787, by Lodge No. 186, attached to the 8th Regiment of Foot, stationed in Niagara. It is contained in a certificate given to one, Joseph Clements attesting that "we have raised him into the Sublime Degree of Master Mason and have entitled him, as such, to the mysteries and most secret work of the Royal Arch," proving that this Lodge claimed to have Royal Arch powers.

The first actual record of Royal Arch work in the Province of Ontario under supreme authority was on June 7, 1795, when a Warrant was issued by William Jarvis, Provincial Grand Master, to a Royal Arch Chapter at Kingston, founded in connexion with a Craft Lodge, then numbered 6, but now Ancient St. John, No. 3, Canada.

On March 18, 1817, the members of the two former Grand Chapters in England met and constituted a new Grand Chapter under the name and title of the Supreme Grand Chapter of England and it was provided that Every Chapter shall be attached to some warranted Lodge and the rank and precedence of the several Chapters shall be determined according to the priority of the Lodges to which they shall be respectively attached.

In 1817 a Provincial Grand Chapter for Upper Ontario was formed, which held its first meeting at Kingston in February 1818. This body followed the American system and worked also the Degrees of Royal Ark Mariner, Past Master, Most Excellent Master, as well as the Royal Arch.

In 1857 the Grand Chapter of Canada was formed with W. M. Wilson, A. Bernard and Thomas Duggan as Principals. The Constitution followed on the lines of the Supreme Grand Chapter of England save that it set out that

The Mark Master, Past Master and Most Excellent Master Mason's Degrees shall be taken by all persons, to entitle them to be admitted to membership in any Chapter under this Jurisdiction, but that Royal Arch Masons, who have taken their Degrees in any regularly warranted Chapter under any other Jurisdiction may be admitted as visitors to any other Chapter in this Province, when working in the Royal Arch Degree or any Degree which such visitor may have taken under a regularly warranted Lodge or Chapter and that, in conformity with the foregoing resolution, the M.W. The Grand Master be the First Grand Principal and the R.W. Deputy Grand Master be the Second Grand Principal, the other officers to be left to the discretion of the Convention.

In England only the Royal Arch is worked in Royal Arch Chapters. The Mark and Royal Ark Mariner Degrees are under the control of the Grand Mark Lodge, while the Degree of Most Excellent Master forms one of what are known as the Cryptic Degrees.

Recognition to the Grand Chapter of Canada was accorded immediately by the Grand Chapters of Ireland and Scotland, but the Supreme Grand Chapter of England held aloof, stating through its Grand Scribe that with every desire to preserve friendly and fraternal intercourse with the Canadian Masons, the Grand Chapter of England feel they cannot consistently with their duty entertain official relations with a body which holds, as essential to admission within its pale, the possession of Degrees which are not recognized by the Grand Lodge or the Grand Chapter of England.

It may be added that, in 1894, the P.M.'s Degree was eliminated from the system of the Grand Lodge of Canada, in consequence of irregularities which had occurred.

Further complications arose when, in 1861, the Grand Chapter of England issued a Chapter Warrant to Dalhousie Lodge, Ottawa, when, in answer to a protest by the Grand Chapter of Canada, it maintained its right to issue Chapter Warrants to Lodges in Canada under its obedience, which right was yielded by Canada.

The Grand Chapter of Canada has become the Mother of five Grand Chapters in the Provinces of Quebec, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia and, in 1928, its membership stood at over 26,400 with 185 Chapters.

CHAPTER XII

THE MARK DEGREE

WHENCE originated the Mark Degree? According to Masonic tradition, two thousand Mark men were employed in the building of King Solomon's Temple, under the direction or supervision of Stolkyne, each receiving a daily wage of nine shekels; with six hundred Mark Masters, under the direction of Ghiblim, each of whom received twenty-five shekels daily. The legend also runs that the banks of the river at Joppa were so steep that it became necessary for the workmen to assist each other up the bank by a peculiar locking of the right hand, which is said to be preserved to this day in the Mark Degree. Be that as it may, there is no authentic account of the origin of this Degree, although the same may well be written of all Masonic Degrees. Mention, however, is made of Masons' Marks and even of the Mark Degree in very ancient Masonic records, both in Operative and in Speculative Masonry. The Schaw Statutes, which are dated December 28, 1598, ordain that no Master or Fellow-of-Craft is to be received or admitted except in the presence of six Masters and two Entered Apprentices, the Warden of the Lodge being one of the six, the date thereof being orderly booked and his name and mark insert in the said book.

Among the Steinmetzen of Germany in the seventeenth century, the Mason who was free of his apprenticeship and had thereby attained the rank of Fellow Craft, was formally admitted into the Fraternity at a regular Lodge meeting, when he took a solemn obligation to be a true, loyal and obedient Mason and, among the avowals, he declared that he would not of his own initiative change his distinctive mark. This was known as "pledging his mark," which, henceforth, became his distinctive property. The mark was used by him as a signature and he was required to engrave it upon all his work on completion, but he was punished severely if he did so before his work had been approved or passed. The placing of a mark upon finished work was not, however, peculiar to stonemasons, but was the practice also of cutters and joiners and, possibly, of other craftsmen. Nor was it a custom observed only in Germany. It was certainly adhered to in France and there is the authority of L'Assesseur in his Histoire des Classes Ouvrieres en France for saying that goldsmiths, cloth-workers, potters, coopers and nearly every class of artisans possessed their stamp or private mark. The assessors were also the depositaires of the common seal of the Craft and they placed it on all articles inspected by them.

In Lodge Kilwinning, according to the Minutes of December 20, 1678, two Apprentices were entered who "paid their binding money and got their marks." Lord Cochrane, who was the Warden of the Lodge at the time, appended his mark to the entry.

In the records of the Peebles Kilwinning Lodge, No. 24, some of the marks registered by the members in the eighteenth century are of an exceptional character; that of a Captain in the King's Foot Guards being a V-shaped shield, bearing on each half a small cross, the whole being surmounted by a cross of larger size. Amongst other varieties are a slater's hammer and a leather-cutter's knife, whilst, in 1745, the mark adopted by a wig-maker was that of a human head with a wig and an ample beard. Masons' marks on ecclesiastical buildings are, of course, of much greater antiquity. According to Jamieson, the cathedral church of Aberdeen, founded in 1357, had upon it Masons' marks from the foundation upwards.

According to English records, the Mark Degree was introduced into England by Thomas Dunckerley, who held a record number of Provincial Grand Master-ships in the history of the Craft in England. It was introduced by him into the Phœnix Royal Arch Chapter, No. 257, at Portsmouth, in 1769, the Warrant for which Chapter bears the date of August 11 of that year. The first entry in the Minute-book, which is in Masonic cipher, is dated September 1, 1769, and reads as follows:

At a Royal Arch Chapter held at the George Tavern in Portsmouth on First September, seventeen hundred and sixty-nine. Present—Thomas Dunckerley, Esq., William Cook, "Z"; Samuel Palmer, "H"; Thomas Scanville, "J"; Henry Dean Philip Joyces and Thomas Webb; The Pro [an abbreviation for Provincial] G.M. Bro't the Warrant of the Chapter and having lately rec'd the "Mark" he made the Bre'n "Mark Masons" and "Mark Masters" and each chose their Mark, viz., W. Cook, Z.; S. Palmer, H.; T. Scanville, J. H. Dean, Philip Joyes, T. Webb. He also told us of this man'r of writing which is to be used in the Degree w'ch we may give to others as they be F.C. for Mark Masons and Master M for Mark Masters.

The next reference to the Degree in England in point of time is found in the Minute-book of the Marquis of Granby Lodge, No. 124, Durham; it is dated December 21, 1773. This entry states that:

Bro. Barwick was also made a Mark Mason and Bro. James Mackinlay raised to the Degree of a Master Mason and also made a Mark Mason and paid accordingly.

There is an entry in the Minute-book of a Dumfries Lodge, dated October 8, 1770, which states that a member "elected Master of the Chair" had previously been found qualified "as an Entered Apprentice, Fellow Craft, Master and Mark Master Mason."

The historian of the Phœnix Lodge and Chapter, to which reference has been made, gives it as his opinion that no Brother received the Royal Arch in the Chapter attached to the Lodge, down to, at least, 1844, without also receiving the Mark, but of what the Mark Degree consisted at the time, he says there is no means of determining, though he imagines that the ceremony was very slight, probably consisting merely of the selection of a Mark and instructing the candidate in some peculiar sign or secret.

In the Minute Book of St. Thomas Lodge, No. 142, London, there is an entry dated August 9, 1777, which runs :

The W.M., with the following Brothers of the Lodge, were made Mark Masons and Mark Masters.

Another Minute of the 14th of the same month states that certain Brethren were made "Mark Masons and also Mark Master Masons."

Little or nothing is heard of the working of the Degree in England between 1813 and 1851, when the Bon Accord Lodge, which claims to be the first purely Mark Lodge established in England, was brought into being. This Lodge was the progenitor of the Grand Mark Lodge. It was founded as an offshoot from the Bon Accord Royal Arch Chapter of Aberdeen, from which body it received its Charter, the granting of which caused the Scottish Chapter to incur the displeasure of the Scottish Royal Arch authorities, which suspended it and the Chapter, consequently, ceased to exist. The deliverance of the Supreme Grand Chapter of Scotland, in 1855, which was issued through the Grand Scribe, was to the effect :

That the Aberdeen Bon Accord Chapter . . . cannot grant Warrants to any other body of Masons to confer the said Degree, or depute its own powers in any way whatever ; that the Chapter of Bon Accord of Aberdeen has thus assumed to itself powers which can be exercised by the Supreme Chapter alone and are not conferred on any daughter Chapter, either by its Charter or by the laws of the Supreme Chapter. The Supreme Chapter, therefore, directs that intimation be made to Companion Rettie to withdraw the Warrant immediately and to report at next Quarterly Communication that the same has been done in order to avoid the necessity of ulterior measures.

This deliverance was dated June 20, 1855 and, on the following September 19, further communication was issued by the Supreme Grand Royal Arch Chapter of Scotland at Edinburgh as follows :

It having been reported to the Supreme Grand Chapter that no communication has been received from Companion Rettie, First Principal of the Bon Accord Chapter, Aberdeen, in answer to their former deliverance calling upon that Chapter to report that they had withdrawn the Mark Warrant which had been improperly and illegally issued by them for constituting a Mark Master's Lodge in London, are unanimously of opinion that such conduct infers a want of respect towards this Supreme body and a refusal to comply with its decisions. They, therefore, as well on account of the irregularity which has been committed, as of this act of disobedience, suspend the said Chapter of Bon Accord, Aberdeen, from their privileges as a body of Royal Arch Masons until such time as effect shall have been given to the order made upon them and the Warrant in question delivered up in order to its being cancelled.

The Bon Accord Chapter, claiming to be in the right, decided to return their Charter to the Grand Chapter. They also, in 1856, passed the following resolution:

Being aware that the Arch and other subordinate Degrees connected therewith were wrought by the Knights Templar Encampments in Aberdeen many years previously to the formation of the Supreme Chapter and that the Knights Templar Encampments never gave up their inherent right of working those Degrees, therefore, resolve to apply to the St. George Aboyne Knights Templar Encampment for a Warrant or Charter to work the Royal Arch Degree and other subordinate Degrees connected therewith and that the office-bearers be appointed a committee to carry this resolution into effect.

The following Mark Lodges received their original Warrants from the Grand Chapter of Scotland: St. Mark Lodge, No. 1, London; Canynges Lodge, Time Immemorial, Bristol; and Thistle, No. 8, London, whilst Carnarvon Lodge, No. 7, claims to be Warranted from the Bon Accord Grand Lodge.

S. G. R. A. C. of Scotland warranted the following Mark Lodges in England:

| 10. Florence Nightingale, Woolwich, in 1858 | 27. Unity, Frizington, in 1875 |
| 11. Southwark, London, in 1857 | |

Two hymns were written by Bro. John Mott Thearle, the first Secretary of St. Mark's Lodge, which have almost been lost to Masonic history. The opening hymn was:

Grace this Lodge, Great Overseer,
With all Thy pure and earnest truth,
That it may flourish thro' all time,
Ever in unabated youth.

Bless the advancing ones this night,
That thro' their lives they'll onward go,
Marking their progress by the light
Kindled and derived from You.

Their mark in hand, Thy mark at heart,
Oh, may they ever constant prove
And in all time and circumstance
United in brotherhood and love.

The closing hymn was :

Have we mark'd well, Great Overseer,
A work to last beyond all time,
Each his allotted task fulfill'd,
The glory and the praise be Thine.

In this Degree we find the truth,
On earth below, in heaven above,
The cornerstone of every work
Should be unselfish, lasting love.

Still will we work and, working, pray,
Trusting that in a better land,
Our mystic keystone may be raised
And fitted by Thy Master Hand.

At the Quarterly Communication of the United Grand Lodge in March 1856, a joint committee of the Board of General Purposes and the Supreme Grand Chapter (not all of whom were members of the Mark Degree) reported to Grand Lodge :

That, after obtaining all the information in its power, this committee is of opinion that the Mark Mason's Degree, so-called, does not form a portion of the Royal Arch Degree and that it is not essential to Craft Masonry ; but they are of opinion that there is nothing objectionable in such Degree, nor anything which militates against the Universality of Masonry and that it might be considered as forming a graceful addition to the Fellow Craft's Degree.

This part of the Report is marked "Approved—Zetland" (i.e. Earl of Zetland, Grand Master).

The Report having been read, it was on motion duly made by Edward Lloyd, Senior Grand Deacon, resolved :

That the Degree of Mark Mason or Mark Master is not at variance with the ancient Landmarks of the Order and that the Degrees be an addition to and form part of Craft Masonry ; and, consequently, may be conferred by all regular Warranted Lodges, under such regulations as shall be prepared by the Board of General Purposes, approved and sanctioned by the Grand Master.

At the next Quarterly Communication, in June 1856, when the Minutes of the March meeting were read, John Henderson, Past Grand Deacon, moved the non-confirmation of the portion relating to the Mark Degree and his amendment was carried, whereupon the Grand Lodge of Mark Masters was immediately formed as an independent body, Lord Leigh being the first Grand Master.

Scotland and Ireland do not recognize the Royal Arch as pure and ancient Masonry but they recognize the Mark. The various Australian Jurisdictions recognize both.

In 1858 Lodge Journeymen of Edinburgh, the founders of which were all Mark Masons, presented a memorial to the Grand Lodge of Scotland, complaining that the Supreme Royal Arch Chapter of Scotland had unwarrantably assumed the sole power to grant Warrants to work the Mark Degree and claiming protection in their ancient rights and privileges. The Grand Committee gave the following deliverance in response to the petition (Freemasons' Magazine, July 15, 1859):

1. That the Grand Committee, having taken into consideration the petition from the Lodge Journeymen and the reasons adduced by Bro. Kerr in support of it, are of opinion that it has been proved to their satisfaction that certain Lodges have worked the Mark Degree ever since their foundation, previous to the existence of the Grand Lodge and have continued to do so to the present time.

2. That the assumption by any other authority of the sole power to grant Warrants for the working of Mark Masonry is, consequently, an interference with the rights and privileges of Lodges under the jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge.

3. That the Grand Lodge Committee recommend the Grand Lodge of Scotland to appoint a Special Committee to enter into communication with the Grand Lodges of England and Ireland and any other authority claiming of Scotch jurisdiction in Masonry, to endeavour to come to some amicable and fraternal arrangement and to report to the next Quarterly Communication.

At the Quarterly Convocation of the Supreme Royal Arch Chapter of Scotland held on February 1, 1858, some of the members were disposed to cavil at the report of this Grand Committee, but it was adopted by a large majority and a sub-committee appointed to carry this recommendation into effect.

CHAPTER XIII

THE ANCIENT AND ACCEPTED RITE

IN the United States of America and in many of the Latin countries this is known as the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite. In all countries, save the Anglo-Saxon, it has, throughout its history, been the most formidable rival to Craft Masonry, sometimes known as Blue or Symbolical Masonry. The Rite consists of thirty-three Degrees, the first three of which are identical with the three Degrees of Craft Masonry and the assumption by the Rite of control over those three Degrees has led, in very many instances, to controversy, bitterness and friction between the authorities of the Craft and the governing authorities of the Ancient and Accepted Rite. This accounts for the fact that when, in 1929, the United Grand Lodge of England set out the basic principles on which that Grand Lodge could be invited to recognize any Grand Lodge applying for recognition, one of the conditions was :

That the Grand Lodge shall have sovereign jurisdiction over the Lodges under its control ; i.e. that it shall be a responsible, independent, self-governing organization, with sole and undisputed authority over the Craft or Symbolic Degrees (Entered Apprentice, Fellow Craft and Master Mason) within its jurisdiction ; and shall not, in any way, be subject to, or divide such authority with, a Supreme Council or other Power claiming any control or supervision over those Degrees.

In a pamphlet published in 1744, entitled Le Parfait Maçon, ou les Veritables Secrets de quatre Grades d'Apprentis, Compagnons, Maîtres Ordinaires et Écossais de la Franche-Maçonniers, the author states :

It is said among the Masons that there are several Degrees above the Master : some say six, others carry the number to seven. Those who call themselves Scottish Masons claim to be the fourth Grade. This Masonry, differing from the other in many points, is becoming popular in France.

In 1754, the Chevalier de Bouneville established a Chapter of twenty-five Degrees, of what were known as the High Degrees in the college of Jesuits at Clermont, in Paris. This college was the asylum of the adherents of the Stuart cause, most of whom were Scotsmen. One of the Degrees was that known as Scottish Master, hence the origin of the name Scottish Rite. Three years later these Degrees were introduced into Germany by the Marquis de Lernay, a prisoner of war. In the following year (1758) they were adopted by the Grand Lodge of the Three Globes. In the same year they were revived in Paris under the authority of the Council of Emperors of East and West. In consequence of internal warfare in this organization, caused, it is said, by the Jesuits, who endeavoured to sow dissension with the view of suppressing the Order, a new organization was formed which was called the Council of Knights of the East, which practised what was known as the Rite of Perfection, the name by which the Clermont Degrees were originally known.

On August 27, 1761, Stephen Morin was invested with power by the Grand Consistory of Sublime Princes of the Royal Secret in Paris with a Patent to carry the Rite of Perfection to America; of which the following is said to be a copy, but the fact must be borne in mind that the original has never been produced:

To the glory of T.G.A.O.T.U., etc., and by the good will of H.S.H. thrice Illustrious Brother Louis de Bourbon, Count of Clermont, Prince of the Blood Royal, Grand Master and Protector of all Lodges.

At the Orient of a most enlightened place where reign Peace, Silence and Concord, Anno Lucis 5761 and, according to the common style 27th August 1761.

Lux ex tenebris. Unitas, concordia fratrum.

We, the undersigned, Deputies General of the Royal Art, Grand Wardens and Officers of the Grand and Sovereign Lodge of St. John of Jerusalem, established at the Orient of Paris; and We, Perfect Grand Masters of the Grand Council of the Regular Lodges of France, under the sacred and mysterious numbers, do declare, certify and decree to all the very dear Brethren, Knights and Princes scattered throughout the two hemispheres, that, being assembled by order of the Deputy General, President of the Grand Council, a petition was communicated to us by the Worshipful Brother Lacorne, Deputy of our thrice illustrious Grand Master, Knight and Prince Mason and was read in due form.

Whereas our very dear Brother Stephen Morin, Grand Elect, Perfect and Sublime Antient Master, Knight and Sublime Prince of all Orders of the Sublime Masonry of Perfection, Member of the Royal Lodge of the Trinity, etc., being about to sail for America, desires to be able to work under legal authority for the advancement and increase of the Royal Art in all its perfection and prays the Grand Council and Grand Lodge to grant him letters patent for the giving of Charters of Constitution.

On the report which has been made to us and, knowing the eminent qualifications of the very dear Brother Stephen Morin, we have, without hesitation, accorded him this slight gratification in return for the services which he has always rendered this Order and the continuation of which is guaranteed to us by his zeal.

For these causes and for other good and sufficient reasons, whilst approving and confirming the very dear Brother Stephen Morin in his designs and, wishing to confer on him some mark of our gratitude, we have, by unanimous consent, constituted and invested him and do, by these presents, constitute and invest him and give full and entire power to the said Brother Stephen Morin, whose signature is in the margin of these presents, to form and establish a Lodge for the purpose therein of receiving candidates and extending the Royal Order of Freemasons in all the Perfect and Sublime Degrees; carefully to take measures that the statutes and regulations of the Grand and Sovereign Lodge, in particular be kept and observed and never to admit therein any but true and legitimate Brethren of Sublime Masonry :

To rule and govern all the members who shall compose the said Lodge, which he may establish in the four quarters of the world wherever he may arrive or shall sojourn, under the title of Lodge of St. John and surnamed Perfect Harmony ; we give him power to choose such officers as he may please to aid him in governing his Lodge, whom we command and enjoin to obey and respect him. We do ordain and command all Masters of regular Lodges of whatsoever dignity, scattered over the surface of land and sea, do pray and enjoin them in the name of the Royal Order and in the presence of our Thrice Illustrious Grand Master, to acknowledge in like manner as we do recognize our very dear Brother Stephen Morin as Worshipful Master of the Lodge of Perfect Harmony, and we appoint him in his quality of our Grand Inspector in all parts of the New World to enforce the observance of our laws in general, etc. ; and, by these presents, do constitute our very dear Brother Stephen Morin, our Grand Master Inspector, authorizing and empowering him to establish Perfect and sublime Masonry in all parts of the world, etc., etc.

Consequently we pray all our Brethren in general to render to our said Brother Stephen Morin such assistance and succour as may be in their power, requiring them to do the same to all the Brothers who shall be members of his Lodge and towards whom he has admitted and constituted and shall admit or constitute in future to the Sublime Degree of Perfection. We give him full and entire power to multiply and to create Inspectors in all places where the Sublime Degrees shall not already be established, knowing well his great knowledge and capacity.

In witness whereof we have given him these presents, signed by the Deputy-General of the Order, Grand Commander of the Black and White Eagle, Sovereign Sublime Prince of the Royal Secret and by us, Grand Inspectors, Sublime Officers of the Grand Council and of the Grand Lodge established in this capital and have sealed them with the Grand Seal of our Illustrious Grand Master, His Most Serene Highness and with that of our Grand Lodge and Sovereign Grand Council. Given at the Grand East of Paris, in the Year of Light, 5761, or, according to the Vulgar Era, 27th August 1761.

(Signed) Chaillou de Jonville, Deputy-General of the Order, W.M. of the first Lodge in France called St. Antoine, Chief of the Eminent Degrees, Commander and Sublime Prince of the Royal Secret, etc., etc. ; Bro. the Prince de Rohan, Master of the Grand Lodge Intelligence, Sovereign Prince of Masons, etc., etc. ; Lacorne, Deputy of the Grand Master, Respectable Master of Lodge Trinity, Grand Elect Perfect Knight, Sublime Prince Mason ; Savalette de Bukoly, Grand Keeper of the Seals, Grand Elect Perfect Knight, Prince Mason, etc. ; Taupin, Grand Ambassador of His Highness, etc., Grand Elect Perfect Master, Knight, Prince Mason, etc. ; Count de Choiseul, Worshipful Master of the Lodge Sons of Glory, Grand Elect Perfect Master, Knight, Prince Mason, etc. ; Boucher de Lenoncourt, etc., Worshipful Master of the Lodge Virtue, Grand Elect Perfect Master, Knight, Prince Mason, etc. ; Brest de la Chaussée, Worshipful Master of the Lodge Exactitude, Grand Elect Perfect Master, Knight, Prince Mason.

By order of the Grand Lodge. Daubertin, Grand Elect Perfect Master and Knight Prince Mason, Worshipful Master of the Lodge Saint Alphonse, Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge and the Sublime Council of Prince Masons in France, etc.

Certainly Stephen Morin went on his American tour and his progress through the American continent has been traced by Albert Pike in his Historical Inquiry in Regard to the United States, published in 1883 by the Supreme Council of the Southern Jurisdiction of the United States of America.

The first recorded appearance of the Ancient and Accepted Rite in Europe was in 1804 and the scene of its early struggles and rise into notice was Paris. At that time Paris—and France—literally swarmed with systems of so-called Scots Masonry, all differing from one another—some claiming and exercising the right of warranting Lodges, others affiliating with Lodges under the Grand Orient and merely governing the supplementary Degrees—with widely diverging Rites, Rituals and dogmas, but all at one in arrogating for their members a superiority over the simple Master Mason. Curiously enough, the high officials of one system frequently held posts of equal dignity in the other and rival systems, as well as in the Grand Orient itself. At this propitious moment appeared the Count De Grasse-Tilly, claiming to be the sovereign of a new Scots Rite, founded upon one of the oldest and most important Rites of the preceding century. Arrogating to himself an unlimited power and authority over every person and thing connected with Masonry, offering an imposing series of thirty-three Degrees and boldly attacking the Grand Orient or common enemy, he, at once, succeeded in rallying to his support every class of Scots Dissenters, who proceeded without delay and without renouncing their previous Rites to acquire fresh light at the new source. This will explain the cause of Tilly's wonderful success.

De Grasse-Tilly—son of the celebrated Admiral de Grasse—was a landed proprietor (or planter) in San Domingo and had long resided in North America, where he received the High Degrees. On the eve of returning to San Domingo with the intention of propagating these ceremonies in that island, it cast off the French yoke and his project had to be abandoned. He therefore went to Paris instead, armed with all the authority of the 33°, where he found some other high and mighty Masons from the West who had arrived there before him, among others Hacquet—appointed a Grand Inspector-General of the 25°, or Princes of the Royal Secret, by a New York Grand Body—i.e. Hacquet still worked the original Rite of twenty-five Degrees of the Emperors, which, in Charlestown, had grown to the thirty-three Degrees of the Ancient and Accepted Rite. Hacquet had founded on the Paris Lodge of the Triple Union and Phœnix, a Council of Princes of the Royal Secret 25°. He supported Tilly, but refused to enter into any union with him, alleging that the two Rites were not identical. His scruples were probably overcome in course of time, as this Lodge ultimately became the seat of the Grand Consistory of the 32°—Sovereign Princes of the Royal Secret (the 25th and last Degree of the old Rite had been pushed up seven places by the insertion of intermediary Degrees in the new). By virtue of his inherent authority and with the aid of the other refugees from the Antilles, De Grasse-Tilly raised a sufficient number of Masons to the 33° and, on September 22, 1804, constituted a new Masonic power in France with the pompous title of Supreme Council for France of Sovereign Grand Inspectors-General of the 33rd and last Degree of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite. He chose for his proceedings the premises of the Lodge St. Alexander, Mother-Lodge of the Philosophic Scots Rite; and, on October 12, 1804, convoked the Grand Officers of his Rite, when they resolved themselves into a Grand Consistory. They then determined to form a Grand Scots Lodge on October 22 and to summon thereto all such members of any Rite as might be entitled to participate. Now most, if not all, of the Scots systems had Rose Croix Chapters; even the Grand Orient itself possessed one in the so-called French Rite. This was accounted equal to and must have been virtually identical with, the 18th Degree of the Ancient and Accepted Rite—Sovereign Prince Rose Croix—and all Masons elevated to that Degree were summoned. Accordingly on October 22, 1804, the meeting was held and the Grand Scots Lodge duly instituted with full power over the first eighteen Degrees. A Grand Master was proclaimed in the person of Prince Louis Buonaparte—who, by the way, never accepted the office—and forty-nine Grand Officers were appointed. De Grasse-Tilly was made the representative of the Grand Master.

It is now time to examine De Grasse-Tilly's Warrant of authority and thereby gain an insight into the genesis of this new Rite. Some idea of Tilly's Masonic pedigree may be obtained from the roll of the Lodge Seven United Brethren—June 24, 1803—in Cap-Français of San Domingo, of which he was an honorary member. He is there described as "Alexandre François August de Grasse, born at Versailles, age 37, an inhabitant, Captain of Horse; late president of all Sublime Lodges, Councils, Chapters of Charlestown in South Carolina; initiated in the Scots Mother-Lodge of the Social Contract, Paris; Past Master of the Lodge of Candour No. 12 and Reunion No. 45, Rose Croix; Kadosch; Prince of the Royal Secret; Grand Inspector-General 33°." As an authority for his proceedings Tilly produced the so-called Golden Book. This book was held in great veneration by his disciples, but there is no mystery attached to it, neither is it really golden. It is in fact a small manuscript volume bound in dark brown leather. In 1818 there were already at least forty copies of it in existence and every Grand Inspector-General was presumed to possess one, in which to enter Minutes of all his Masonic acts. It contained, first, a copy of Stephen Morin's Patent of 1761, which is in French and the use of the word Stephen instead of Etienne might at the outset suggest doubts as to its authenticity, as showing it to have been copied or translated from an English original, whereas Morin's Patent, if it ever existed, must have been in French. But this scruple is at once overcome by the attestation that follows it in the Golden Book, and which reads:

I, the undersigned Heyman-Isaac Long, P.M. [Prince Mason, not Past Master], Deputy Gr. Inspector-Gen., etc., declare that the above written patent, formerly granted to the very worshipful Br. Stephen Morin by etc., etc. and of which he presented a copy to P.M. Moses Cohen, Dep. Gr. Ins.-Gen. for the island of Jamaica, who himself gave me a copy, is truly translated and extracted from my protocol.

In witness whereof I have signed in the presence of the Illustrious Brothers Delahogue, De Grasse, Saint Paul, Croze Magnan, and Robin, as witness their signatures.

Before proceeding with the contents of the Golden Book, some consideration must be given to this curious Charter. What is the Grand Lodge therein spoken of? Little importance need be attached to the use made of the name of the Count de Clermont, because it has at all times—with very rare exceptions—been usual in France, to claim the National Grand Master as supreme head of all the rival systems, with or without his express consent. Some writers believe the Grand Lodge to have been one peculiar to this system, ruling over those Degrees inferior to the most illustrious but superior to the Craft—say, for instance, the 4th to the 8th Degrees—Secret Master, Perfect Master, Intimate Secretary, Master of the Works and Judge—all of which occupy themselves with temple allegory, yet do not come within the purview of the knightly Chapters. But if such be the case, why do we find titles used which refer undoubtedly to the Grand Lodge of the Craft? Yet if the proposition be admitted, it becomes evident that Morin could not have obtained any authority to erect Craft Lodges and the claims therefore of the Supreme Councils of to-day would be usurped. There is much in the wording of the document, which, isolated, without the context, might warrant the conclusion that Morin was only empowered to constitute Lodges of Perfection; but looked at as a whole, the Charter evidently intends him to constitute an ordinary Lodge, of which he was to be the Master.

But it may be maintained that the Emperors claimed the right to warrant Craft Lodges. Of this, however, there is no sign anywhere and, were it so, one could not expect officers of the National Grand Lodge to sanction such proceedings by their name and presence. Puzzled by these opposing considerations, some writers have been driven to conclude that the Warrant was granted conjointly by the National Grand Lodge and the Sovereign Council of the Emperors. But this theory is untenable, because in such a case one might—with far greater probability—expect to meet with two distinct Warrants. Moreover, the whole document speaks of the two bodies as practically one; and, most convincing of all, it is sealed with the seal, not the separate seals of one Grand Lodge and Supreme Grand Council. The two bodies are, therefore, one; yet these are the titles of the National Grand Lodge. There is but one possible solution to the problem—that arrived at by Kloss. The Grand Lodge at this time was distracted by dissensions, which have been generally attributed to the sinister conduct of the special deputy of the Grand Master—the dancing master Lacorne. These quarrels—just before the date of the Charter—resulted in a split in the Grand Lodge and the formation of two rival bodies. It did not last long and the parties were reconciled June 24, 1762, Lacorne failing to obtain Grand office, which has given rise to the assertion that he was made the scapegoat. But, during this interval, it now becomes clear that Lacorne's party made common cause with the Emperors, to which Rite they individually belonged and, of course, retained any titles they had borne in the undivided Grand Lodge. All the expressions of the Patent may thus be reconciled with the known historical facts and, moreover, possibly understand the allusion, "depute him to reform the observance of our laws in general."

One more point also calls for a few words. It is quite evident that the last and highest Degree at the time of the patent was the 25°—Sovereign Prince Mason—and that no Degree of Inspector-General existed. Morin was an Inspector and a Prince Mason; the Inspectorship was an office created ad hoc, not a Degree. He was empowered to nominate other Inspectors; but the high functionaries who signed his Patent do not call themselves Inspectors. When the Rite returned to Europe in 1804, the Prince Masons had been promoted to the 32° and a 33rd and last Degree, consisting of Sovereign Inspectors-General, had been created. The purely administrative office had, in other words, been converted into a Degree and the office holders had usurped authority over the very body which appointed them. Excepting the usurpation of authority, an analogy may be found in the position of an English Past Master.

The second document in the Golden Book summarizes the genealogy of De Grasse-Tilly's Inspectorship. Morin conferred it on Franklin of Jamaica, the latter on Moses Hayes, at that time Grand Commander at Boston, whilst Hayes in turn conferred it on Spitzer of Charlestown. All these Inspectors met at Philadelphia, gave it to Moses Cohen of Jamaica; he, in his turn, passed it on to Isaac Long, who, at Charlestown, created Delahogue, De Grasse, Croze Magnan, Saint Paul, Robin, Petit and Marie. Attested by "J. Long, D.G.I.G.," at Charlestown May 3, 1797 and countersigned by "Delahogue, D.G.I., Prince Mason, Sov. Gd. Commander."

The third item is the Patent granted to De Grasse-Tilly by the Sovereign Grand Council of the 33° of Charlestown, dated February 21, 1802, which recites that he had been tested in all the Degrees and appointed lifelong Grand Commander of the Supreme Council of the French Antilles. It authorized him to constitute, erect and inspect Lodges, Chapters, Councils and Consistories in both hemispheres and is signed by Dalcho, Bowen, Dieben, Alexander and Delahogue, who all describe themselves as "Kadosch, Prince of the Royal Secret, Sov. G. Inspector, 33°."

No. 4 is the Constitutions of 1762 in thirty-five articles. These are supposed to have been forwarded to Morin subsequently to his departure. In the text they are stated to have been the conjoint production of the Sovereign Council of Paris and the Sovereign Council of Princes of the Royal Secret at B——. For years B—— was supposed to mean Berlin, though, later, it was declared to signify Bordeaux. Unfortunately for the earlier theory, it is quite certain that the Emperors never existed in Berlin and it is nearly as capable of proof that there never was a Council of Princes of the Royal Secret at Bordeaux. These Constitutions were never heard of in France until De Grasse produced them, neither has the original ever been seen. Their authenticity, therefore, is in the highest degree suspicious.

Following these we have the Grand Constitutions in eighteen articles. According to the legend, the Young Pretender transferred his supreme authority in Masonry to Frederick the Great, who, on his deathbed in 1786, revised the regulations, transformed the twenty-five Degrees into thirty-three and vested his personal authority in the Supreme Council of the 33°. All this is pure fiction; the Pretender was not the head of the Emperors—indeed, not even a Freemason at all—Frederick never inherited his authority; the Emperors were unknown in Germany; and the thirty-three Degrees were not heard of in France until De Grasse-Tilly introduced them. The Constitutions of 1786 were undoubtedly fabricated in America and, probably, those of 1762. The intercalation of the eight additional Degrees also took place there. Rebold (Hist. des trois Grandes Loges, pp. 452-5) gives full details of the transformation and of the persons concerned therein. Cf. also Ragon, Orthodoxie maçonnique, p. 181. Rebold and Kloss (p. 418) concur in assigning the year 1801 as that of the creation of the 33°; Jouast, however (p. 296), carries it back to 1797.

It must be confessed that the Golden Book was eminently calculated to impose on the Masons of years ago, who did not enjoy the present opportunities for intelligent criticism. Nevertheless the Ancient and Accepted Rite 33° can boast of a very respectable antiquity, being descended in direct line from the Emperors of 1758, possibly from the Chapter of Clermont of 1754. It must also ungrudgingly be confessed that the compilers of their Historia Ordinis have displayed more moderation and greater respect for the unities, than are generally found in the histories of High Degree Rites. De Grasse-Tilly's rapid success is thus fully accounted for.

Without entering into many particulars concerning the ritual of this Rite, it may interest some to acquire a slight idea of the arrangement. The thirty-three Degrees are divided into seven classes: the first three are pure Freemasonry; in the others full play is allowed to the fancy, which is permitted to roam backwards and forwards throughout the domain of history without being fettered by chronological sequence. In the 4° the Master represents Solomon; in the 5°, Adonhiram; in the 7°, Titus; in the 8°, Solomon again; in the 15°, Cyrus; in the 16°, Zerubbabel; in the 20°, Cyrus Artaxerxes; in the 21°, Frederick the Great; in the 25°, Moses; in the 28°, Adam; and, in the 31°, 32° and 33°, Frederick once more.

Now return to the new Grand Lodge, founded October 22, 1804. The Supreme Council and the Grand Lodge being thus established, the new Rite issued on November 1 a circular addressed to the "Masons of the world," announcing its formation and offering to dispense its superior light to all regular Masons, etc. The Grand Orient, alarmed for its position, opened communications with the Supreme Council, which resulted in a fusion of the two systems on December 3, 1804. The Scots Grand Lodge had, therefore, enjoyed an existence of precisely forty-two days. Quarrels, however, arose between the contracting parties, which eventuated in a rupture, followed by a tacit understanding on September 6, 1805. By the new arrangement the Grand Orient, whose 7th and highest Degree had previously been conferred in a Rose Croix Chapter, retained sole control of the Ancient and Accepted Rite up to and including the 18°—Sovereign Prince Rose Croix—and the further Degrees were under the direction of the Supreme Council, with De Grasse-Tilly at its head. There is little doubt that matters would not have been so amicably arranged but for the authority exerted by Cambacères, second Consul—afterwards Arch-Chancellor—of France, Deputy Grand Master of the Grand Orient.

The Supreme Council having thus resumed the direction of affairs, instituted on September 24, 1805, a Grand Consistory of the 32°, in order to confer all Degrees from the nineteenth to the thirty-second inclusive. On July 1, 1806, De Grasse-Tilly resigned the office of Sovereign Grand Commander in favour of Cambacères, under whose influence a forced peace was maintained. The former, however, retained his office of Sovereign Grand Commander ad vitam of the Supreme Council for the French Antilles and, in common with the other refugees, was always cited as a member of that body in the états of the Supreme Council for France. It was supposed to be dormant, awaiting the moment of return to San Domingo. Meanwhile, the Rite made rapid progress, in spite of Tilly's absence in the wars and his eventual confinement as an English prisoner of war. The Grand Consistory 32° was abolished September 29, 1810, as it appeared to be growing too powerful for the Supreme Council, while Councils were established in 1805 at Milan for Italy; in 1806 at Naples for the Two Sicilies; in 1811 at Madrid for Spain. The dormant Council for America resident in Paris began, however, in 1813 to make members and grant diplomas in France, which led to a quarrel with the Supreme Council for France; and the Council for America, at whose head in Tilly's absence was placed his father-in-law, Delahogue, as Lieutenant Grand Commander, addressed itself in revenge to the Grand Orient demanding recognition and a fusion, proclaiming that the Grand Orient ought to be the sole and only constitutive power in France. The petition was dated October 7, 1813, but the events of 1814 precluded any action being taken upon it.

The Supreme Council for France, with Cambacères as Sovereign Grand Commander, was composed almost exclusively of high dignitaries under the Empire, so that the Restoration found its members dispersed and scattered and, of those still remaining, many were also members of the Grand Orient. The Grand Orient took advantage of this favourable state of affairs to attempt an absorption of the Rite. On August 26, 1814, an invitation was issued to the Supreme Council to effect a fusion of the two Rites. This was rejected by the Supreme Council on October 21, 1814. But many of its members nevertheless cast in their lot with the Grand Orient, of which they were already officers and transferred to it all their rights. On November 18, 1814, the Grand Orient passed a resolution that it therefore resumed the rights conferred upon it by the first fusion of 1804 and, from that date, has ever since conferred all the Degrees of the Ancient and Accepted Rite 33°. This action naturally abrogated the understanding of 1805 and the Ancient and Accepted Rite reasserted immediately its right to constitute Craft Lodges and other bodies up to the 18°, which had previously been relinquished to the Grand Orient. The Supreme Council for France was, however, too weak to take action and no more is heard of it till May 4, 1821.

At the beginning of 1815 De Grasse-Tilly returned from England, when he found his whole system in confusion, the Supreme Council for France practically lifeless and that for America trying to awake and occupy the vacant ground. He, therefore, suddenly remembered that the Grand Constitutions gave him no right to resign his post of Grand Commander in favour of Cambacères, that, consequently, his action of 1806 must be accounted void and all the acts of the extinct Supreme Council of no effect. For his partisans this declaration of course annulled the recent fusion of the Supreme Council with the Grand Orient. Before, however, he could arrange matters to his satisfaction he had to leave Paris in 1816, it is said, to avoid being arrested for debt. The efforts of his father-in-law, left in command as Lieutenant Grand Commander of the Supreme Council for America, were sufficient to arouse the enmity of the Grand Orient, which, on October 17, 1817, inhibited the Lodges, etc., under its jurisdiction from assembling at the Prado, a restaurant where the Supreme Council met. In the beginning of 1818 De Grasse-Tilly returned to Paris and, on February 23, his Supreme Council began to evince renewed activity. Delahogue resigned on account of his advanced age and the Count de Fernig was appointed Lieutenant Grand Commander. Vice-Admiral Allemand and Count, afterwards Duc de Cazes, Minister of Police, were among those raised to high administrative office. On August 7, 1818, Pyron, former Grand Secretary of the Holy Empire, i.e. Ancient and Accepted Rite, attempted to revive the old dormant Supreme Council for France, but did not live long enough to see his efforts crowned with success, as he died on September 23 following.

De Grasse-Tilly appointed a Commission to revise the Statutes and arrangements of his Council—with the singular result that the tables were completely turned upon him. A new list of officials was promulgated, which appeared without any Grand Commander at all, but, in his place, three Grand Conservators, one of whom, the future leader of the movement, was his own former nominee, Admiral Allemand. De Grasse-Tilly immediately issued a counter-circular on the 18th of the same month, rallied his friends around him and retired to the Pompei Tavern. After this, the two Supreme Councils for America are best known under the names of their respective houses of call, Prado and Pompei. The Pompei met on September 10, 1818 and De Grasse-Tilly, after defending his actions, resigned in favour of the Count de Cazes. The Prado met on September 17 and declared De Grasse-Tilly degraded and deprived of all his Masonic rights; but, although a bitter warfare between the rivals ensued, lasting for some years—much to the amusement of the Grand Orient—it would appear that the Pompei Supreme Council waxed daily stronger and the Prado gradually lost ground. After a lingering agony it flickered once more into momentary activity on June 28, 1821, but expired shortly afterwards, most of its members joining the Rite of Misraim. De Grasse-Tilly, after his resignation in 1818, also mysteriously disappeared from the scene. Count de Cazes appointed as his Lieutenant-General, the Count de Fernig. The Pompei Supreme Council, on October 8, 1818, decreed the erection of the Grand Scots Lodge, Propagators of Tolerance, which was regularly instituted on October 24. In 1819 an attempt at fusion was made, by the Grand Orient offering to renew the modus vivendi of 1805, but this proposal was rejected. On May 4, 1821, the original Supreme Council for France awoke from its slumber, so that at that period there were no fewer than four Supreme Councils quarrelling for the supremacy of the Ancient and Accepted Rite, viz. the Supreme Council of the Grand Orient, the Supreme Councils for America of the Prado and the Pompei and the revived Supreme Council for France. The Prado Supreme Council died shortly afterwards; and, on May 7, 1821, the Council for France and that of the Pompei amalgamated, thus reducing the rivals to two. At this fusion the Count de Valence was elected Sovereign Grand Commander and the Count de Ségur Lieutenant Grand Commander. On July 12, 1822, a new Grande Loge Centrale, or Loge de la Commanderie, was formed and opened December 28. At the beginning of 1822 the Count de Valence died and, on February 12, 1822, the Count de Ségur was appointed in his stead, with the Duke de Choiseul as Lieutenant Grand Commander. In 1825 Ségur resigned on account of old age and, on December 21, the Duke de Choiseul-Stainville was appointed Sovereign Grand Commander with Count Muraire as Lieutenant Grand Commander. All this time the Grand Orient and the Supreme Council had been at daggers drawn, each forbidding its own members to visit the Lodges of its rival; but the Duke de Choiseul inaugurated his reign by preaching tolerance and reciprocity. The Grand Orient, however, did not follow the example till 1862. On November 30, 1826, new efforts at a fusion were opened, but broken off on April 8, 1827; and similar proceedings took place in 1835. In 1838 the Duc de Cazes was appointed Sovereign Grand Commander and installed June 24; General Guilleminot was made Lieutenant Grand Commander, but, dying in 1840, was succeeded by General the Count de Fernig, who died in 1848 and was replaced by Viennet.

Fresh overtures from the Grand Orient to return to the original understanding were made in 1841 and, although these failed, an act of mutual tolerance and amity was promulgated which was speedily broken by the Grand Orient. In 1846 the Supreme Council published its new Statutes and the Revolution of 1848 for a time seriously affected it, robbing it of some of its highly placed supporters and of a few Lodges. From this blow it soon recovered. On October 24, 1860, the Duc de Cazes died and Viennet, Lieutenant Grand Commander, forthwith, by virtue of the Grand Constitutions, assumed the highest dignity, appointing Guiffrey as his Lieutenant. In consequence of dissensions in the Grand Orient, Napoleon III in 1862 appointed Marshal Magnan Grand Master, holding him personally responsible for the good behaviour of the Brethren. Marshal Magnan thought the shortest way to secure peace would be to suppress the Supreme Council of the Ancient and Accepted Rite, and issued an edict to that effect, in his capacity of Grand Master, to which the Supreme Council simply turned a deaf ear. But the Marshal, through threats of dire consequences, imposed peace and toleration, which have since reigned between the rival but no longer inimical Jurisdictions. In 1864 the Supreme Council issued new Statutes and, on July 11, 1868, Viennet died, who was succeeded by Allegri and, shortly afterwards, by the renowned statesman Crémieux.

The above is a short sketch of the rise of the Ancient and Accepted Rite 33° and its development in France. The Rite has obtained a firm footing in almost all other countries, where it either rivals the Grand Authority of the Craft, or is comprised in it. In Great Britain and Ireland, the United States and in most English colonies, it occupies a subordinate place, having ceded its pretensions to overrule the Craft or to establish Lodges. In England and Scotland, Master Masons may become members of the Rite, but it is ignored by the Grand Lodges of these countries and its marks of distinction are not allowed to be worn in their Lodges. In Germany it has failed to gain an entrance and, in Sweden and Denmark, it is debarred admission by the laws of either country, Freemasonry in both those kingdoms partaking much of the nature of a State institution. To judge by the success of the Grand National Lodge of Berlin, it might, perhaps, have stood some chance of acceptance in Prussia, but here again State laws interpose and exclude it even from a trial.

CHAPTER XIV

THE ROYAL ORDER OF SCOTLAND

THE Royal Order of Scotland consists of two Degrees, both being strictly Christian in character. The neophyte has a name given to him which denotes some moral attribute and he is, in a figure, sent forth to seek the lost word. The Degree is stated to have originated in the reign of David I, King of Scotland (1124-53), but the ritual of the Order states that it was first established at Icomkill and that, afterwards, at Kilwinning, Robert Bruce took the chair in person. There is an oral tradition that, in 1314, when this monarch again reinstated the Order, he admitted all known Knights Templar into the Order. It is also claimed that Robert Bruce gave power to the Grand Master of the Order for the time being to confer the second Degree, an Order of Civil Knighthood, known as the R.S.C.Y.S., a power not inherent in the general body, but given specially to the Grand Master and his Deputy, which can only be conferred by them or by Provincial Grand Masters appointed by them. In the earlier days of the Order the number of Knights was limited to sixty-three, all of whom must be Scotsmen, but that number has long since been exceeded and is now practically limitless, both as regards numbers and nationality.

This Order of Knighthood is said to have been instituted by Robert Bruce after the battle of Bannockburn and to have been conferred by him upon certain Brethren who assisted him upon that memorable occasion. Thus the revivification of the Degree of H.R.M. and the creation of the Order of Knighthood were simultaneous and it is asserted further that the Royal Order of Scotland and the Masonic Fraternity of Kilwinning were governed by the same head. To this tradition, D. Murray Lyon opposes a direct negative and holds that the paternity of both Degree and Knighthood must be sought on a soil more favourable to the growth of the high grades than Scotland has proved.

In his history of the Lodge of Edinburgh (p. 342) he writes :

As regards the claims to antiquity and a royal origin that are set up in favour of this Rite, it is proper to say that modern inquiries have shown them to be purely fabulous.

Later he says :

The Fraternity of Kilwinning never, at any period, practised or acknowledged other than the Craft Degrees ; neither does there exist any tradition worthy the name, local or national, that can, in the remotest degree, be held to identify Robert Bruce with the holding of Masonic Courts, or the institution of a secret society, at Kilwinning.

Thory, in his Acta Latomorum gives the following brief notice of the traditional origin of the Royal Order of Scotland :

On the 24th June, 1314, Robert Bruce, King of Scotland, instituted, after the battle of Bannockburn, the Order of St. Andrew of the Thistle, to which was afterwards united that of H.R.M. for the sake of the Scottish Masons, who composed a part of the thirty thousand men with whom he had fought the English army consisting of one hundred thousand. He formed the Royal Grand Lodge of the Order of H.R.M. at Kilwinning, reserving to himself and his successors for ever the title of Grand Master.

In the official history of the Royal Order of Scotland the following are the particulars given :

The Royal Order is composed of two parts, H.R.M. and R.S.Y.C.S. The former took its rise in the reign of David I., King of Scotland and the latter in that of King Robert the Bruce (1274-1329). The last is believed to have been originally the same as the most ancient Order of the Thistle and to contain the ceremonial of admission formerly practised in it.

The Order of H.R.M. had formerly its seat at Kilwinning and there is reason to suppose that it and the Grand Lodge of St. John's Masonry were governed by the Grand Master. The introduction of the Order into Kilwinning appears to have taken place about the same time, or nearly the same period, as the introduction of Freemasonry into Scotland. The Culdees, as is well known, introduced Christianity into Scotland and, from their known habits there are good grounds for believing that they preserved among them a knowledge of the ceremonies and precautions adopted for their protection in Judæa. In establishing the Degree in Scotland it is more than probable that it was done with the view to explain, in a correct Christian manner, the symbols and rites employed by the Christian architects and builders : this also will explain how the Royal Order is purely Catholic—not Roman Catholic—but adapted to all who acknowledge the great truths of Christianity, in the same way that Craft or Symbolic Masonry is intended for all, whether Jew or Gentile, who acknowledge a Supreme God. The second part, or R.S.Y.C.S., is an Order of Knighthood and, perhaps, the only genuine one in connexion with Masonry, there being in it an intimate connexion between the trowel and sword, which others try to show. The lecture consists of a figurative description of the ceremonial, both of H.R.M. and R.S.Y.C.S., in simple rhyme, modernized, of course, by oral tradition and breathing the purest spirit of Christianity. These two Degrees constitute, as has already been said, the Royal Order of Scotland and the Grand Lodge of Scotland. Lodges or Chapters cannot legally meet elsewhere, unless possessed of a Charter from it or the Grand Master, or his Deputy. The office of Grand Master is vested in the person of the King of Scotland (now of Great Britain) and one seat is invariably kept vacant for him in whatever country a Chapter is opened, and cannot be occupied by any other member. Those who are in possession of this Degree and the so-called Higher Degrees cannot fail to perceive that the greater part of them have been concocted from the Royal Order, to satisfy the morbid craving for distinction which was so characteristic during the later part of the century before last.

There is a tradition among the Masons of Scotland that, after the dissolution of the Templars, many of the Knights repaired to Scotland and placed themselves under the protection of Robert Bruce and that, after the battle of Bannockburn, which took place on St. John the Baptist's day (in summer), 1314, this monarch instituted the Royal Order of H.R.M. and Knights of the R.S.Y.C.S. and established the chief seat at Kilwinning. From that Order it seems by no means improbable that the present Degree of Rose Croix de Heredom may have taken its origin.

In two respects, at least, there seems to be a very close connexion between the two systems. They both claim the Kingdom of Scotland and the Abbey of Kilwinning as having been at one time the chief seat of government and they both seem to have been instituted to give Christian explanation to ancient Craft Masonry.

Murray Lyon ascribes the paternity of the Order and the Knighthood to Andrew Michael Ramsay, a devoted follower of Prince Charles Edward Stuart and a famous fabricator of certain Rites inaugurated in France between 1735 and 1740, through the propagation of which it was hoped that the fallen fortunes of the Stuarts would be revived.

The late F. H. Buckmaster, a Provincial Grand Secretary of the Order, in his brochure, The Royal Order of Scotland, gives the following account of Ramsay :

Andrew Michael Ramsay, better known in Scottish and French history as the Chevalier de Ramsay, was the son of a baker at Ayr and was born within a short distance of Kilwinning but, at the time of his birth and upbringing, Masonry at Kilwinning was purely an operative institution. Ramsay was educated at Ayr and Edinburgh University, after which he journeyed over to the Continent. Here he made the acquaintance of the theological mystic, Poiret, through whose and Fenelon's influence he became a Catholic. He became an intimate friend of Fenelon, who, at his death, bequeathed to Ramsay all his papers. Ramsay's Vie de Fenelon, published at The Hague in 1723, was immediately translated into English and this brought him under the notice of Prince James Francis Edward, who had also been on terms of friendship with Fenelon. Ramsay was chosen by Prince James Francis Edward to superintend the education of his two sons, Charles Edward and Henry, the latter afterwards Cardinal of York, who claimed to be Henry IX of England. Ramsay; however, declined to become tutor of the Duke of Cumberland, son of George II, afterwards well known in Craft Masonry. He was by birth and education a Presbyterian and his reversion to the older faith considerably incensed his father. He was the author of several works, the principal being the Travels of Cyrus; On the Principles of Natural and Revealed Religion; The History of Viscount Turenne, Marshal of France; and An Essay on Civil Government. Oxford honoured him with the degree of Doctor of Civil Law and the Royal Society elected him a Fellow. He resided in the Prince's family until his death at Germain en Laye on May 6, 1743, in the 57th year of his age.

With regard to the veridical history of the Order, there is presumptive evidence, that a Provincial Grand Lodge met in London in 1696 and indubitable evidence to show that, in 1730, there was a Provincial Grand Lodge of the Order in South

From the "Histoire Pittoresque de la Franc-Maçonnerie," by Clavel, 1844.

Reception of the Thirty-third Degree of the Scottish Rite.

Britain, which met at the Thistle and Crown, in Chandos Street, Charing Cross, whose constitution is described as being of "Time Immemorial."

This was two years after Ramsay proposed to the Grand Lodge of England to substitute for the first three Degrees of Craft Masonry three others of his own invention, those of Scotch Mason, Novice and Knight of the Temple, which he pretended were the only true and ancient ones and had their administrative centre, from time immemorial, in the Lodge of Saint Andrew, at Edinburgh. Eight years later, according to the Gentleman's Magazine for 1738 :

There was lately burnt at Rome, with great solemnity, by order of the Inquisition, a piece in French, written by the Chevalier Ramsay (author of the Travels of Cyrus) entitled An Apologetical and Historical Relation of the Secrets of Freemasonry, printed at Dublin by Patric Odinoko. This was published at Paris, in answer to a pretended catechism printed there by order of the Lieutenant de Police.

According to Thory, Prince Charles Edward Stuart, in 1747, issued his famous Arras Charter, in which he claimed to be Sovereign Grand Master of the Royal Order, which began as follows :

Nous, Charles Edouard Stuart, Roi d'Angleterre, de France, de l'Ecosse, et d'Irlande, et en cette qualite S.G.M. du Chapitre connu sous le titre de Chevalier de l'Aigle et de Pelican, et depuis nos malheurs et nos infortunes, sous celui de Rose Croix.

Jouast gives the opening of the Charter as " Charles Edward Stuart, Pretender, King of England." It must, however, be pointed out that Charles Edward never called himself King during his father's lifetime and he did not die until 1765 ; and he never, at any time, called himself Pretender. Nor is there any evidence that Charles Edward was ever in Arras. It is also necessary to add that there is no connexion between the Royal Order of Scotland and the Ancient and Accepted Rite, which is known generally as the Rose Croix, the eighteenth Degree of which is Knight of the Pelican and Eagle and Sovereign Prince Rose Croix of H.R.D.M.

The oldest records in the possession of the Royal Order at Edinburgh are those of an Anglo-Dutch Provincial Grand Lodge, established, according to the internal evidence of the document, in the middle of the eighteenth century. This charter, which was granted in July 1750 to William Mitchell, a Scotsman and teacher of languages at The Hague, by Robert Seccours, reads :

To our truly wellbeloved and Right Worshipful and Right Honoured Brother, Sir William, R.L.F., Knight of the R.S.Y.C.S., Provincial Grand Master of the Seven United Provinces, Know ye that out of the great esteem and brotherly love I bear to you and being well assured of your fidelity, I do hereby empower you (with proper assistance) to advance to the Order of the R.Y.C.S. at your Grand Lodge at The Hague or at any other Grand Chapter to which you may grant Constitution in any part of the Seven United Provinces. And be it further known to you that if you are found guilty of acting contrary to my will and pleasure, making breach of any of your constitutional laws, rules, ordinances and regulations appended for your observation by authority of the Grand Lodge where I preside and govern, you will be rendered for the future incapable of holding any said office or authority in the H.R.D.M. and also be liable to be excluded the Society for contempt and disobedience.

Given at London under my hand and priory seal this 22nd day of July, A.D. 1750, A.M.H. 5758, and in the 9th year of my authority.

There are, however, no records of any admissions to the Order at The Hague and it does not appear that Mitchell returned there but, instead, settled in Scotland, where he acted as Grand Master, or Ruling Chief of the Order, which office he retained until 1767, when he was succeeded by James Kerr, a Writer of the Signet, at Edinburgh. The oldest book of the records of the Order in existence is in Mitchell's handwriting. This contains a list of the Edinburgh members, from which it is ascertained that there was one admission in 1754, two admissions in 1755, one in 1760 and ten in 1763, all residents of Edinburgh and several of them members of the Scottish Bar. During the next three years more than fifty members were enrolled. Kerr was succeeded in 1776 by William Baillie, an advocate, who became Lord Polkemmet. He held the office for two years and was succeeded by William Charles Little, and he admitted Sir William Forbes, the eminent banker, into the Order. Forbes was at one time a partner in Coutts; he was one of the earliest members of the celebrated literary club which boasted among its members the names of Johnson, Burke, Garrick, Reynolds and other famous men; he was also the biographer of Beattie. David, sixth Earl of Leven, was admitted in 1778 and David Dalrymple, Lord Westhall, in 1780. Lord Leven became Deputy Grand Master of the Order in 1778 and he was also Grand Master Mason of Craft Masonry in Scotland in 1759. Lord Westhall, who was Deputy Grand Master in 1780, was Grand Master Mason in 1774. Another Deputy Grand Master in 1770, Lieutenant-General J. A. Oughton, was Grand Master Mason in 1769.

On January 5, 1767, a Code of Laws and a Constitution of the Order were adopted and approved, which are substantially the same as those under which the Order now works. They were revised slightly in 1843, when the King of Scotland was declared to be the hereditary and permanent Grand Master. Other Masonic bodies can, in certain conditions, establish themselves in any country as Grand Jurisdictions, owing no fealty to any other country, but immediately a Provincial Grand Lodge of the Royal Order throws off its allegiance to the Grand Lodge of the Order in Scotland it ceases to be legal and is, ipso facto, incapable of advancing Brethren to the Degree of H.R.M., for which purpose a Charter is granted by the Grand Lodge. A Provincial Grand Lodge has, in itself, no power to bestow the Knighthood of the R.S.Y.C.S., but, in practically every instance, the Provincial Grand Master receives letters patent conferring upon him and his Deputy the power and right to confer that dignity. All Knight Companions, no matter where advanced or promoted, must be registered in the books of the Grand Lodge at Edinburgh and pay the usual fees to the parent body. There are to-day thirteen Provincial Grand Lodges in existence, all in a flourishing condition.

CHAPTER XV

OTHER RITES AND SMALLER GROUPS

SOCIETAS ROSICRUCIANA

H. V. B. VOORHIS

THE Societas Rosicruciana in Anglia (Masonic Rosicrucian Society) was given its present definite form in 1866 by Robert Wentworth Little, a prominent English Freemason known principally because of his position as Secretary to the Royal Masonic Institution for Girls, which he held from 1872 until his death in 1878. William Henry White, who became Grand Secretary of English Freemasonry in 1810, came into possession of some Rosicrucian papers on his attaining Office and qualified Little by communicating the Work to him.

The Society was actually designed in 1865 with the aid of Kenneth R. H. Mackenzie, who had received Rosicrucian Initiation on the Continent while a tutor at the residence of Count Apponyi in Austria. At first Mackenzie did not become a member of the newly-organised body as he was not a Freemason, but being Initiated in Royal Oak Lodge, No. 871, at Freemasons' Hall, London, on March 9, 1870, he became qualified and was elected an Honorary Member on July 18, 1872.

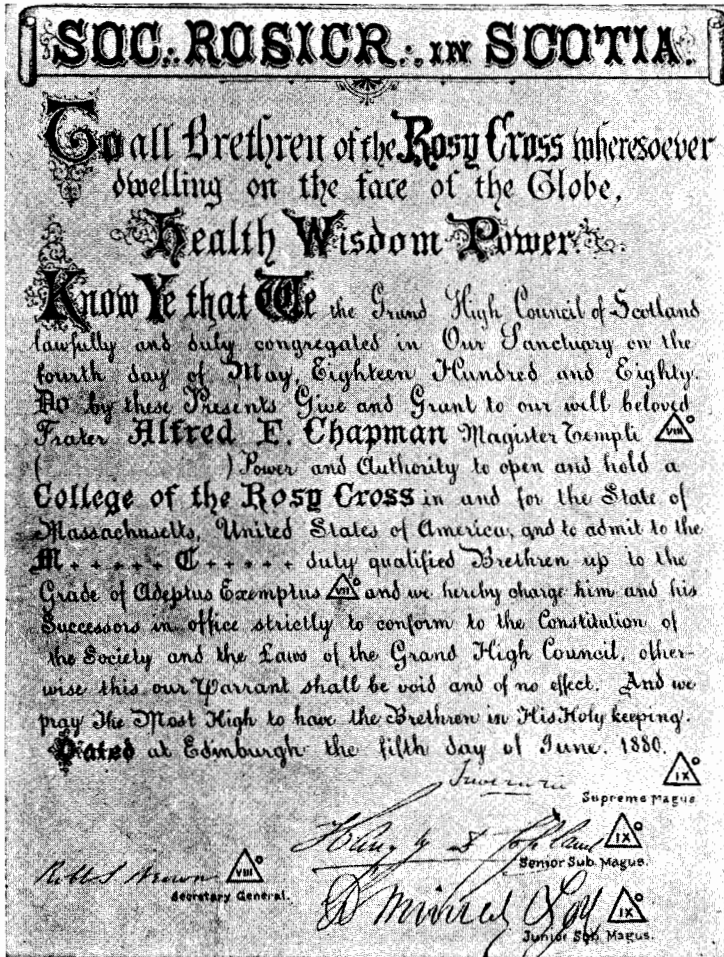

The Society is neither mystic or esoteric and does not claim descent from the Rosicrucians of the Middle Ages. It is not traditional nor has it any assertions to defend. It is composed of students and investigators interested in the history, philosophy and symbolism of Freemasonry and allied bodies. Although it is independent of the Masonic Fraternity, it only admits Master Masons to membership, and these by invitation. It consists of nine Grades divided into three Orders of four, three and two Grades, respectively, the final two being administrative. The whole Order is governed by a Most Worthy Supreme Magus, IX°, and his High Council in each country. The constituent bodies are termed Colleges, each headed by a Chief Adept, IX° (in England and Scotland by a Celebrant).

In addition to the original group in England the Society was early organised in Scotland where it dates its continuous existence from October 24, 1873. About the same time it was established in Greece through the titular Macedonian Prince Rhodocanakis, but here it was short lived. On September 19, 1876 it was organised in Canada where it existed for about ten years.

In the United States, where the first College was started by Warrant from Scotland on December 12, 1879, the Society has been continuously active. With four Colleges a High Council was formed in 1880. Although only one of the original Colleges remains (Massachusetts), and another started in 1911 in Minnesota is also dormant, at present there are 6 active Colleges having a combined membership of about 200 Fratres of various Grades.

In the five countries where the Society has existed there have been forty-three Colleges established. At present three countries have High Councils with a combined College roster of twenty-two Colleges.

THE PRIESTLY ORDER OF THE TEMPLE

J. RAY SHUTE, K.G.C., P.G.P.

Amongst the veritable avalanche of high grades, which made their appearance during the last half of the eighteenth century, was one which assumed the dignity of priesthood and employed a Melchizedekian legend; this was the grade, or rather order, known alternately as Knight Templar Priest, Pillared Priest,

The Priestly Order, and, later, Holy Royal Arch Knight Templar Priest. It is difficult to arrive at any reasonable date for the inception of this beautiful ceremony, but tradition links the order with the rise of the High Knights Templar in Ireland, where the presiding officer of the early Encampments bore the title of High Priest. The early Irish sequence of grades consisted of the Craft, Installed Master, Holy Royal Arch, High Knight Templar and Knight Templar Priest, the last of which formed the ne plus ultra.

The early Records in Ireland are fairly full of diplomas, seals, warrants, et cetera, of the Union Bands of the Priestly Order. When the Early Grand Encampment of Ireland issued Warrants for Encampments of High Knights Templar in Scotland, we are to assume that the Priestly Order went there also, for it is but a few years until we find the ceremony being employed there as the crowning grade of the White Series of the Early Grand Rite, under the optional title of White Mason; the body of the Order was, and is now, termed a Tabernacle. In Scotland the titles and Ritual underwent minor changes.

In England the Priestly Order has been worked time immemorially at Newcastle-upon-Tyne and there to-day is the Grand College for the British Empire, with Tabernacles there and here throughout the realm.

The late John Yarker, circa 1868, formed a governing body for the Order and erected Tabernacles in many cities; however that group has long since ceased to function and Newcastle reigns without challenge. The Grand College of America, established, in May 1933, now limits one Tabernacle to a State, with a maximum membership of only thirty-three Knights Priests.

The Priestly Order is perhaps the most exclusive group in all of Freemasonry and membership is by invitation and predicated, in America, upon the recipient having been Installed Commander of a Commandery of Knights Templar; in England the requirement of a Knight Templar to be an Installed Master of the Craft is demanded. In England the Orders are held as in America but there is only one active ceremony, being that of Holy Royal Arch Knight Templar Priest.

Within the bosom of Grand College there is a Chapter-General, which confers two honoraria: Knight Commander, the number of which is limited to twelve times twelve, which is conferred upon Eminent Preceptors of Tabernacles as an Installation requirement, and Knight Grand Commander, the number of which is limited to twelve, and is usually conferred only upon Grand Preceptors of Grand College, on taking office.

In America the Order uses the Latin title: Ordo Sacerdotalis Templi, with the abbreviation: O.S.T.; the insignia is the purple Salem cross, with a scarlet delta superimposed thereover, both edged with gold. The symbolism of the Order concerns the Birth, Life, Death, Resurrection and Ascension of the Lord Jesus Christ, the Redeemer.

ORDER OF THE SECRET MONITOR

The Order of the Secret Monitor has been developed from a still more ancient Degree called "The Brotherhood of David and Jonathan" and claims to be of the same antiquity as Freemasonry, its principles and watchwords being founded upon those grand examples set by the two worthy Hebrew princes, as recorded in Jewish history and tradition.

The earliest existing records of an organized system of the Brotherhood are found in Holland, where, in 1773, Statutes governing such a body, said to have been founded three years earlier, are on record in Amsterdam. Further traces of its existence are found in 1778, but the working of the Degree seems to have found its development in the United States, where it was carried by immigrants into New Amsterdam, whence it spread throughout the length and breadth of the Republic. The American ritual was very simple and, as might be expected, very loose and capable of considerable variations, but that which held the ground and is still recognized as the established ritual for America, is that which was adopted and adapted for England, by the Grand Council of the Order.

The British Organization of the Order dates from 1887, but, in 1892, some Masons in Virginia who had heard of its success, formed what they called a Sovereign College of Allied Degrees for America. They applied for a copy of the British ritual and then proceeded to construct an analogous ritual upon entirely fresh lines, for use in their new organization which embraced a Degree entitled the Secret Monitor. The organization collapsed in 1896, when its papers, Rituals and paraphernalia perished in a railway-tunnel accident at Baltimore.

During its existence, however, copies of the new ritual were imported into England by two members of the British Order, the Earl of Euston, founder of the Earl of Euston Conclave, No. 7 and Charles Fitzgerald Matier, Grand Secretary of the Grand Mark Lodge, founder of the True Friendship Conclave, No. 4, who thereupon renounced their allegiance to the Grand Council, immolated their Conclaves and set to work to propagate the new Virginian Degree in British Territory. Under the name of the Allied Masonic Degrees it has now several Conclaves in England. Its head-quarters are at Mark Masons' Hall in London.

The Earl of Warwick, Grand Supreme Ruler, protested strongly on behalf of the Grand Council of the Order and, eventually, in order to restore harmony, which had been interrupted for several years, it was arranged for recognition to be given to their movement and that Brethren belonging to it should be admissible as visitors to Conclaves held under the Grand Council of the Order, when opened in the first Degree.

OTHER MASONIC ORGANIZATIONS

THE ALLIED MASONIC DEGREES

J. RAY SHUTE

Until the formation of the Grand Council of the Allied Masonic Degrees of England and Wales, and the Colonies and Dependencies of the British Crown in 1880, there were many extraneous Masonic grades being Worked there and here throughout the world; some of these were Worked in connection with Lodges and Chapters and others were simply conferred by one Mason upon another. The formation of a central body for the control of these grades was an auspicious occasion indeed and was the result, without doubt, of a conference held in London, April 3, 1871, for the purpose of determining the position of the Mark grade in England. To this conference Representatives were present from the Grand Lodge and Grand Chapter of Scotland, the Grand Chapter of Ireland, and the Grand Mark Lodge of England. During the conference much was said about the difference in grades Worked throughout the world and suggestions were made that a group should be formed in England to take control over certain grades. Later the Grand Mark Lodge took over the grade of Royal Ark Mariner and to-day it is a most popular ceremony, Lodges being attached to Mark Lodges.

The Grand Council of the Allied Masonic Degrees of England Works: (1) St. Lawrence the Martyr, (2) Knight of Constantinople, (3) Red Cross of Babylon, (4) Grand High Priest, and (5) Grand Tiler of Solomon. The Secret Monitor was discontinued a couple of years ago, thereby bringing to a close an unpleasant controversy which had existed for many years between the Allied Masonic Degrees and the Grand Conclave of the Order of the Secret Monitor in England. In England the Order has had a most successful career and to-day there are more than thirty Councils of the Allied Masonic Degrees throughout the British Empire.

The Sovereign College of Allied Masonic and Christian Degrees of the the United States of America was formed in Richmond, Va., on January 14, 1892. During 1901 the See was removed to Norway, Maine, where it remained until a short time ago.

In 1932, several interested Royal Arch Masons in North Carolina, not knowing of the existence of the group in Maine, Petitioned for and received Charters for three Lodges of Royal Ark Mariners and Councils of Red Cross Knights from the Supreme Grand Royal Arch Chapter of Scotland; the Representatives from these groups met in Salisbury, N. C., on April 16, 1932, and formed the Grand Council of the Allied Masonic Degrees of the United States of America. Later, however, Representatives were sent to Norway and negotiations were concluded for a union of the two Bodies, articles of union were drawn up and signed and on October 10, 1933, the union was formally ratified in special Session, perpetuating the older Body and adopting the title of the newer.

The Grand Council of the United States Works the following grades: (1) Royal Ark Mariner, (2) Secret Monitor, (3) Grand Tiler of Solomon, (4) St. Lawrence the Martyr, (5) Knight of Constantinople, (6) Excellent Master, (7) Architect, (8) Grand Architect, (9) Superintendent, and (10) Masters of Tyre. In addition to these grades the Knight of the Red Branch of Eri, worked in three Orders, is conferred annually by Grand Council, each private Council having the privilege of nominating one candidate. Also, the highest award within the gift of Grand Council is Knight Grand Cross, which is usually conferred upon the Sovereign Grand Master upon his taking office; the number of Knights Grand Crosses is limited by law to fifty.

In America the Allied Masonic Degrees occupy a very unique position; Councils may not have more than twenty-seven members, membership being by invitation to Royal Arch Masons. The Councils usually meet in the homes of the members and the old ceremony of toasting is adhered to. The Councils are really study groups and Grand Council publishes a set of transactions under the general title of "Miscellanea," in which the Ritual of many of the one hundred odd inactive grades under its control are printed.

Each Sovereign Master-Elect must receive the grade of Installed Sovereign Master before taking office.

In addition to the twenty councils under obedience to the Grand Council of the United States, located in many States, there are also Lodges of Royal Ark Mariners, having a total membership of a little less than 1000. The Grand Councils of England and the United States have enjoyed through the years a most pleasant spirit of amity and recently the relations were strengthened by a new appointment of Representatives to and from each group, to the end that the only two Grand Councils of the Allied Masonic Degrees in the world may continue their progressive and constructive work hand in hand and heart to heart.

ROYAL ARK MARINERS

The Ark—the Noachite, not the Ark of the Covenant—is known as a Masonic symbol more in America than in England, but the Degree of Royal Ark Mariner is more popular in England than in any other country. Admission is limited to Mark Master Masons and, when a Royal Ark Mariners' Lodge is founded, it must be "moored" to an existing Mark Lodge. All matters relating to this Degree are controlled by the Grand Mark Master's Royal Ark Council. Very little is known as to the origin and early history of the Degree, which is claimed to have been worked from "time immemorial" and the earliest record of the Degree in England is at Bath in 1790; but the earliest documents now in possession of the Grand Lodge of Mark Master Masons are a Dispensation authorizing the working of the Degree, dated 1796, signed by Robert Gill as "Acting Commander Noah" with an undated list of officers in Dunckerley's handwriting, with Dunckerley himself as commander, which must be of a date previous to 1796, for Dunckerley died in 1795. It was not until 1870 that a union was effected between the Ark Mariners and the Grand Mark Lodge.

SCOTS MASONRY

It cannot be too strongly insisted upon, that all so-called Scottish Masonry has nothing whatever to do with the Grand Lodge of Scotland, nor, with one possible exception—that of the Royal Order of Scotland—did it ever originate in that country. If we add to this Rite that of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite of 33°, we may even maintain that none of the Scots Degrees were at any time practised in Scotland. In the Scots Masters we have the first of the legion of additions to Freemasonry on the Continent. Thory, it is true, tells us that “Irish Chapters existed in Paris from 1730 and held their constitutions from the Grand Chapter of Dublin. They were divided into Colleges and their Degrees were pretty generally spread throughout France. They fell into disuse since the institution of Scots Chapters.” This statement is positively all we know of these Chapters and has been copied ad nauseam by every subsequent writer. If true, how can the same writers attribute the deterioration of Freemasonry to Ramsay’s unlucky speech seven years afterwards? But it is not true. There is not a tittle of evidence to support it and it may unhesitatingly be rejected. All allusions to so-called Irish Degrees are of much later date. Neither should these Scots Masons be confounded with the Orient de Bouillon, as is so often done, this Orient de Bouillon being simply a Grand Lodge established in the Duchy of Luxembourg many years later. The Scots Degrees seem to have sprung up about 1740 in all parts of France and, at this distance of time, it would be impossible to define their precise teaching. This impossibility is not caused by the absence of Rituals, of which any number exist, but by their diversity. One chief idea, however, runs through all—the discovery in a vault by Scottish Crusaders of the long-lost and ineffable word—also, that in this search they had to work with the sword in one hand and the trowel in the other. The epoch referred to is, however, that of the Crusades, not that of Zerubbabel’s (or the second) temple. We do not even know whether the title applied in the first instance to one Degree only or to a series. The former is probable. Schiffmann considers that the Scots Masters at first formed no Degree and claimed no superiority, being a sort of volunteer inspectors who banded together to reform many abuses which had crept into the Craft; that their name maîtres écossois is a corruption of their special token, the acacia, whence they were called maîtres acassois; and that they ultimately developed into a separate Degree. Space precludes dwelling upon this theory, which has much to recommend it. See, however, Schiffmann, Die Freimaurerei in Frankreich, etc., Leipzig, 1881; and G. W. Speth in The Freemason, May 2, 1885. But however this may be, the Scots Master claimed to be in every way superior to the Master Mason; to be possessed of the true history, secret and design of Freemasonry; and to hold various privileges, of which some few may be mentioned. He wore distinctive clothing, remained covered in a Master’s Lodge and, in any Lodge, even as a visitor, ranked before the W.M. At any time or place, he could personally impart, either with or without a ceremony, the secrets of the E.A.; F.C.; and M.M. Degrees. If he was a member of a Lodge, none but Scots Masons could adjudicate upon his conduct. Later still, when Scots Lodges became more numerous, they were grafted on the ordinary Lodges and, not only asserted, but obtained still greater privileges. The Master was not chosen by the Lodge, but appointed by the Scots Lodge and was almost always one of themselves ; the finances of the Mason's Lodge were disposed of by the Scots Brethren, who also decided in all matters of doctrine and ritual. The Scots Lodge further usurped the privileges of a Grand Lodge and issued Warrants of Constitution. In this way arose throughout France the numerous Scots-Mother-Lodges. One of the most important of these was the Mère-Loge-Écossaise at Marseilles, said to have been founded by a travelling Scotsman in 1751, under the title of St. John of Scotland. This Lodge warranted a great number of Lodges throughout France, even in Paris itself, also in the Levant and the Colonies. The Mère Loge du Comtat Venaissin at Avignon, the founder of the Scottish Philosophic Rite, was probably of this class originally. Many of these Mother-Lodges then developed extended systems of Degrees of their own, which were worked in Chapters, all independent of each other. From France the earliest form of the Scots Degree was carried to Germany, it is believed, by Count von Schmettau. In 1741 we find a Scots Lodge at Berlin erected by members of the Three Globes ; in 1744 at Hamburg—and, shortly afterwards, a second ; in 1747 at Leipzig ; in 1753 at Frankfort, etc., etc. But in Germany their development was arrested because they were very soon absorbed by the Clermont system, becoming the stepping-stone to the lowest Chapter Degrees and, shortly after that, the Clermont Chapters were annihilated by the Templar system of the Strict Observance. But between 1742 and 1764 no fewer than forty-seven such Lodges were erected in Germany, of which, however, fifteen may be ascribed to Rosa and the Chapter of Clermont. Even now some of these Scots Lodges form the basis of what is called in some German Grand Lodge systems the Inner Orient.

In France, however, some of the Scots Lodges would appear to have very early manufactured new Degrees, connecting these very distinguished Scots Masons with the Knights Templar and thus giving rise to the subsequent flood of Templarism. The earliest of all are supposed to have been the Masons of Lyons, who invented the Kadosch Degree, representing the vengeance of the Templars, in 1741. From that time new Rites multiplied in France and Germany, but all those of French origin contain knightly and, almost all, Templar, Grades. In every case the connecting link was composed of one or more Scots Degrees. The Handbuch enumerates over sixty-eight such Degrees forming parts of different Rites. Thory and Dr. Oliver present us with even more and, if at all necessary, the list could be extended. Besides which, many Rites, or series of Degrees, took the name of Scottish to designate the whole system ; for instance, the Scottish Philosophic Rite and the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite 33°. The Chapter of Clermont was but a Templar continuation of the Scots Degrees. This probably grew into the Emperors of the East and West and these, in turn, blossomed into the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite 33°. According to a MS. in the possession of Kloss when he wrote his History of Freemasonry in France, the date of which he fixes at 1751 (latest), the sequence of Degrees apparently in most general use in France shortly before the rise of the Chapter of Clermont was as follows : 1°, E.A. ; 2°, F.C. ; 3°, M.M. ; 4°, Perfect Master, or Irish Architect ;

5°, Select Master ; 6°, Scots Apprentice ; 7°, Scots Fellow Craft ; 8°, Scots Master ; 9°, the Knight of the East. Foolish and unnecessary as it will always appear to destroy the original beautiful simplicity of the Craft, the great evil of these innovations lies in their destruction of an important principle. Freemasonry is founded upon the perfect equality of all its members and its governing body is an elective and representative one. In fact the Craft governs itself. But in almost every one of these new systems, with scarcely an exception, the governing power is autocratic and irresponsible. A Hierarchy is formed, each superior Degree directs without appeal those below it and the highest class rules all the others. Each class is self-elected, that is, it receives into its sacred circle those only whom it pleases, so that those of the lower classes have no voice whatever in the administration of their affairs or in the election of their rulers. This one consideration alone precludes these systems from ever being entitled to call themselves Masonic. They are not and never can be Freemasonry. They are simply separate societies, all of whose members happened to be Freemasons.

THE SCOTS PHILOSOPHIC RITE

From 1740 onwards there existed at Avignon, capital of the department Vaucluse, a school or rather many schools of Hermeticism, working in some cases under Masonic forms on the basis of the Craft Degrees, with an intermediate structure of so-called Scots Degrees. The head of the movement was apparently Dom. Antony Joseph de Pernety (1716-1801), a Benedictine monk, alchemist and mystic. Later on—1787—the Polish Starost Gabrianca, founder of the Illuminati of Avignon, added Martinist and Swedenborgian philosophy. Among the many Rites which originated here may be mentioned the Elus Coens, Illuminés du Zodiaque, Frères noirs, etc. Of most importance to French Freemasonry was the Mother-Lodge du Comtat Venaissin, the date of constitution of which is unknown. About the year 1766 this Mother-Lodge worked the following extra Degrees :—4°, True Mason ; 5°, True Mason on the Right Road ; 6°, Knight of the Golden Key ; 7°, Knight of Iris ; 8°, Knight Argonaut ; 9°, Knight of the Golden Fleece. On July 22, 1757, the Archbishop issued a mandate against the whole system ; and, on February 3, 1775, the Inquisitor P. Mabile, himself a Freemason (it is said), surprised the Mother-Lodge with an armed following and forced its dissolution.

A Lodge existed in Paris under the name of Saint Lazarus, which had been constituted by the Grand Lodge of France on May 30, 1766 and founded by Lazare Phil. Bruneteau. On April 2, 1776, this Lodge constituted itself the Mother-Lodge of the Scots Philosophic Rite in France, changing its title to Social Contract. On May 5, 1776, it was installed as such by commissioners from the Scots Mother-Lodge du Comtat Venaissin, which, on August 18, amalgamated with the Contrat Social; thus the Mother-Lodge, broken up at Avignon, revived in the bosom of a Paris Lodge, founded by the Grand Lodge of France and, after 1772, owing allegiance to the Grand Orient.

The Social Contract apprised the Grand Orient of its new departure, but for years the latter refused to recognize it as a Mother-Lodge, i.e. a Lodge with power to constitute others and erased it from the roll. The history of the negotiations belongs to that of the Grand Orient and it will be sufficient to state here that, in 1781, a Concordat was agreed to, which reinstated the Social Contract as a daughter of the Grand Orient in regard to the three Degrees proper of Freemasonry, but which left it sole control over the Scots Hermetic Grades. It was prohibited from warranting Lodges within the jurisdiction of the Grand Orient but permitted to do so elsewhere, to affiliate to itself French Lodges already in existence and to endow them with Chapters, Tribunals, etc., etc. This was practically a victory for the Philosophic Rite.

Its subsequent history may be summarized as follows :

1776. December 27.—It elected as Grand Master the Marquis de la Rochefoucault-Bayers, Baron Bromer being chosen Deputy Grand Master.

1777. February 20.—Its Grand Chapter prohibited all affiliated Lodges from working the Templar Degrees.

1777. December 26.—It convened the first Philosophic Convent. At these assemblies, Masons of all Rites were allowed to be present and to take part in the discussions. The subjects ranged through the whole field of Masonic and archæological research—art, science, alchemy, social economy, etc.—and are acknowledged by all writers to have done very much to raise the tone of Freemasonry in France. Papers were read and discussed by the first men of the age and many of the most celebrated names in the literature of the Craft may be recognized amongst those of the contributors to the proceedings. For example, quoting almost at random, Court de Gebelin, Dr. Boileau, C. A. Thory and Alex. Lenoir—not to mention other eminent literary characters—were members of this Rite. Convents were held in 1778, 1779, 1780, 1782, 1784, 1785, 1786, 1788, 1789, and 1812.

1779. June 19.—A building and plot of land in the Rue Coquéron were purchased by the Rite—and on August 16 it affiliated the notorious Paul Jones.

1780. October 4.—De Montausier was granted a Patent to establish the Philosophic Rite in St. Domingo and the French islands.

1783. March 12.—There was a “meeting in the Symbolical Degrees to initiate François Frist, military veteran, age 103 years (?)”

October 17.—Dr. Boileau, claiming to be National Grand Superior of the Lodges and Chapters of the Scots Philosophic Rite in France, instituted the Supreme Tribunal and various suffragan Tribunals. The members bore the title of Grand Inspector Commander and their duty was to supervise the dogma and supreme administration of the Rite. There is much doubt about the validity of Boileau’s Patent, as it is impossible to conceive who possessed the right to grant it, but inasmuch as he transferred all his rights of National Grand Superior to the Deputy Grand Master of the system, it was probably manufactured for the occasion. During the existence of this Rite seven Tribunals were erected, but after 1814 those of Antwerp and Brussels, of course, ceased to be French.

December 27.—M. Dubuissonnais presented the Grand Metropolitan Chapter with the sword used by the Count de Clermont when presiding over the Grand Lodge.

1785. July 20.—It refused to recognize Cagliostro’s Egyptian Rite.

1786. December 24.—The Viscount de Gand was elected Grand Master.

1788. March 10.—C. A. Thory (born 1759; died 1827) was appointed Grand Librarian. The library of this Grand Lodge was at that time one of the finest in existence. In 1789 it was partly pillaged, but the missing documents were subsequently recovered. In 1806 Thory enriched it with the most valuable of the works formerly belonging to the library of the Philalethes Lodge of the Amis Réunis, dispersed during the Revolution. On the extinction of the Philosophic Rite this grand collection remained in Thory’s custody and, at his death, passed to Dr. Charles Morrison of Greenfield, whose widow presented it—upwards of 2,000 volumes—to the Grand Lodge of Scotland in 1849. (See Lyon, History of the Lodge of Edinburgh, p. 403; The Freemason, November 22, 1884.) It is, however, possible that even these 2,000 volumes do not comprise the whole collection; as in 1860 and 1863 sales were advertised in Paris purporting to be from the library of the Contrat Social.

December 13.—Francis, Lord Elcho—Grand Master of Scotland, November 30, 1786, to December 1, 1788—received the Philosophic Degrees in the Grand Metropolitan Chapter.

1791. July 31.—Outbreak of the Revolution. The Mother-Lodge resolved to suspend work and invited her daughters to follow her example. From subsequent statements it appears that the Grand Chapter did not dissolve.

1801. June 28.—The members of the Social Contract having been dispersed by the Revolution, the position of Mother-Lodge devolved by the Statutes on the next oldest Lodge of the system in the capital and, failing this, on the senior Lodge of the Provinces. It will be perceived that this rule acted as a preventive of any possible fusion of the Rite with any other system, because the creative power remained unimpaired so long as a single Lodge withheld its adhesion. The Senior Lodge in Paris belonging to this system was constituted by the Grand Lodge of France, May 19, 1777, under the title St. Charles of Triumph and Perfect Harmony of St. Alexander of Scotland; and the Warrant was made out to the Chevalier Delamacque, Perpetual Master—a proprietary Lodge. At the time of affiliating with the Philosophic Rite—1782—it changed its name to St. Alexander of Scotland simply. In 1801 it became the Mother-Lodge and, in 1805, the remnant of the Social Contract united with it. The Grand Chapter and Grand Tribunal of course attached themselves to the new Mother.

1807. March 4.—Prince Cambacères, Grand Master of the Grand Orient, was also elected Grand Master of the Philosophic Rite.

1808.—November 24.—C. A. Thory in the chair. Askeri-Khan, ambassador of the Shah of Persia, was initiated and presented the Lodge with a sword which had served him in twenty-seven battles.

1809. November 23.—The Mother-Lodge acquired a curious collection of Indian idols formerly belonging to the Baron de Horn, then lately deceased.

In 1815 Thory gives the following list of its Degrees:—4°, Perfect Master; 5°, Select Philosophic Knight; 7°, Grand Scots Mason; 8°, Knight of the Sun; 9°, Knight of the Luminous Ring; 10°, Knight of the Black and White Eagle; 11°, Grand Inspector Commander. Clavel in 1843 gives a yet more extended list, but, inasmuch as the Rite had ceased to exist at that time, Thory must be accepted as the more competent authority.

Its Calendar of 1818 (the last) shows 76 Lodges warranted or affiliated to the system between 1776 and the last in 1814, besides the Chapters and Tribunals. But at this time and in spite of the exertions of Thory the rivalry of the 33 Degrees of the Ancient and Accepted Rite appears to have overwhelmed it. Its last Lodge was warranted in 1814. In the same year the Grand Chapter met for the last time. Its last public act appears to have been the issuing of a Calendar in 1818 and, in 1826, it had ceased to exist. In spite of its theosophic and hermetic Degrees, the Philosophic Rite merits admiration for the high tone of its literary labours and the quality of its membership.

ANTIENET AND PRIMITIVE RITE

The official claim made in the Constitution, General Statutes and Ordinances of the Sovereign Sanctuary (1875, p. 5) is that the Antient and Primitive Rite refers for the origin of its principles and form of organization to the Primitive

Rite of Philadelphes of Narbonne, which was established in 1779 and, in 1786, united with the Grand Orient of France. Apparently the ritual is a consolidation of several Rites, originating in 1758 with Lacorne, a dancing master, who collected out of the Degrees then known a Rite of twenty-five Degrees, to which he gave the name of the Empire of the East and West, which was subsequently amplified to thirty-three Degrees. He was followed, in 1760, by a Benedictine monk, named Perneti, Abbot of Burgel, who established at Avignon the Academy of True Masons (Mackey says that he was for a time librarian to Frederick the Great); in 1766, by Schroeder, who, it is claimed, founded an Alchemical or Hermetic Rite of seven Degrees; in 1767, by Baucherren, in the Order of African Architects; and, in the same year, by Benedict de Chastannier, who modified Perneti's system and established a Lodge of Illuminated Theosophists in London. His name, by the way, appears in the list of members of the Theosophical Society, "formed for the purpose of promoting the heavenly doctrines of the New Jerusalem by translating, printing and publishing the theological writings of Emanuel Swedenborg." He is described as a French surgeon, of 62 Tottenham Court. Thory says that he was, in 1757, Master of a Lodge known as Socrate de la Parfaite Union at Paris, and a member of La Grande Loge de la France. There were also other minor Rites, which seem to have been drawn upon for the ritual and constitution of the Antient and Accepted Primitive Rite. They numbered about seventy in all. In 1802, Lacorne's Rite of twenty-five Degrees was increased to thirty-three and, shortly afterwards, Marc Bédarride, a Jewish Freemason, assisted by some French Brethren (not of high character, according to Clavel), named Le Changeur, B. Clavel and Joly, formed the Rite of Mizraim of ninety Degrees. Waite (Secret Tradition in Freemasonry, vol. ii, p. 435) says that Bédarride died in April 1846 and that "his memory is, on the whole, that of an adventurer with little talent and, perhaps, less principle." It was some time after this, according to the Constitutions (op. cit.) that Jacques Etienne Marconis (claimed by some writers to have been an initiate into the Rite of Mizraim) determined to consolidate these various Rites and revised the 1802 Rite of thirty-three Degrees, added thereto a number of Degrees "embodying the explaining the religious dogmas of the ancient Hierophants," styling the new Rite, which consisted of ninety-five Degrees, "the Antient and Primitive Rite of Memphis," divided into three series and seven classes, the latter being known as Lodge, College, Chapter, Areopagus, Senate, Consistory and Council.

On July 7, 1838—after a fruitless effort to establish the Rite in Belgium—J. E. Marconis was elected Grand Hierophant of France and, on September 25 of that year, the first assembly of the Supreme Power of the Order was held in Paris. This consisted of three Councils, known as the Sanctuary of Memphis, the Mystic Temple and the Sovereign Council Administrative. The Sanctuary consisted of members of the 93rd Degree and was composed of the Grand Hierophant and of six Patriarch Conservators of the Order, who were nominated for seven years. It was charged with the general government and to it belonged the right of constituting Lodges, Chapters, Areopagi, Senates, Consistories and Councils, and with directing their labours. The first members of the Sanctuary were J. E. Marconis ; Delapine, ex-Surgeon of Marine ; Audibert, M.D., Chief of the Scientific Section ; Moutet, Man of Letters (Joint Editor with Marconis of L'Hierophante and Hermes, the organs of the Rite), Interpreter of Tradition ; the Baron de Poederle, Rentier, Conservator of Rites ; Laroussie, Rentier, Member of Legion of Honour, Interpreter of Hieroglyphics, Symbols, Emblems and Allegories ; Morison de Greenfield, Physician to H.R.H. the Duke of Sussex, Inspector-General. The Mystic Temple of Sublime Catechists of the Order was composed of a Grand Master and six Grand Officers, called Philosophers, appointed by the Sanctuary for five years. It was employed in watching over the instruction and in developing the dogmatic, moral, scientific, mystic and transcendent part of Freemasonry, forming an exposition of the esotericism of the High Mysteries. The Sovereign Grand Council was composed of seven members, a president, and six dignitary officers—Orator, Secretary, Verifier, Archivist, Inspector Regular and Administrator—all of whom held office for five years. It was employed in the administration of the Order and in the supervision of the Lodges. The decisions of the Council were only authoritative when confirmed with the seal of the Grand Hierophant and viséd by the Grand Chancellor.

The following units appear on the official register : Loge la Bienveillance, founded at Brussels, March 21, 1838 ; Chapitre de Heliopolis, founded at Brussels, December 6, 1839 ; Loge de Osiris, founded in Paris, June 21, 1830 ; Loge Disciples of Memphis, founded at Montauban, April 30, 1815 and revived at Paris, March 21, 1839 ; Chapitre des Philadelphes, founded at Paris, May 21, 1839. In November 1839 an attempt was made by Marc Bédarride and his brother, chiefs of the Rite of Mizraim, to secure the closing of all the Lodges and Chapters of Memphis, which they denounced to the police as political assemblies, but the effort was not successful, as, according to the Constitutions, the Grand Hierophant of the Primitive Rite was able to prove, by authentic documents, the falsity of the charge. Two Chapters—the Chevaliers of Palestine and the Lectateurs de Menes—were founded respectively in November and December 1840, but, on June 18, 1841, for some reason not stated, the police forbade any further meetings, and the Grand Hierophant ordered all units to cease operations, although the Supreme Power of the Order did not cease work until 1842. Operations were resumed on March 5, 1848, and the Supreme Council was installed on the 25th of the same month, again with Marconis as Grand Hierophant. The Chapterial and Areopagite Lodge, the Disciples of Memphis, was placed at the head because it claimed to be in possession of the sacerdotal part of the Order and to have in its Golden Book mysterious symbols and arcana unknown to the great part of its initiates and, as the depository of the holy doctrine, it was charged with the development of the dogmatic and moral part. The principal study of its members was the religious myths of the different ages of humanity and of all that belongs to theosophy and high philosophy.

The first organization of the Rite in the United States was established in New York City on November 9, 1856, by J. E. Marconis in person and, in the following year, a Sovereign Grand Council General, with David M'Clellan at its head, was formed, and in that year Marconis returned to France. In 1862 he surrendered the title of Grand Hierophant and vested the control of the Rite in the Grand Orient of France.

On October 24, 1859, W. Gray Clarke, Grand Secretary of England, issued a circular (see The Freemason, September 23, 1871), directing Masters of Lodges to be careful that no member of the "Reformed Masonic Order of Memphis, or Rite of the Grand Lodge of Philadelphes" had access to any Lodges and asking them to remind the members of their Lodges that they could hold no communication with irregular Lodges without incurring the penalty of expulsion from the Order and the liability to be proceeded against under the Act 39, George III for taking part in the meetings of illegal secret societies. In the same issue of The Freemason there appeared a letter from Meyer A. Loewenstark stating that the Antient and Primitive Rite of Memphis, lately introduced into England by B. D. Hyam, Past Grand Master of Craft Masonry of California, "who was present as a visitor at the last Grand Lodge Quarterly Communication has no connexion with the spurious body of the Order of Memphis or the Reformed Rite of Memphis." He added that "many of the distinguished American visitors but lately fêted here held high rank in the Order." Thevenot, Grand Secretary of the Grand Orient of France, writing on February 24, 1870 (see The Freemason, June 11, 1870), said that the Lodges in France which were closed during the term of office of Marconis as Grand Hierophant were closed by order of the police, although the membership consisted of honest and well-meaning men; that Marconis (who had died in 1869), after divesting himself of all rights in relation to the Rite and transferring his powers to the Grand Orient . . . continued clandestinely to give the high Grades to isolated Masons, addressing himself especially to strangers and saying that his renunciation had effect only in France. He added: "We hope that the Rite of Memphis will trouble us no longer. Already it has entirely disappeared from France. It is not maintained in Europe, save in some localities of Roumany, where it also tends to disappear, thanks to our incessant efforts." In The Freemason of October 7, 1871, there appeared the following note:

We are requested to state that the Rite of Memphis is not and never has been recognized by the Grand Orient of France; and, further that it is viewed as an imposture by the heads of the Masonic Order in America, who have repeatedly denounced the reputed "Sovereign of Memphis," Bro. Henry J. Seymour, and his colleagues, not only as spurious Masons, but as men unworthy of credit in every respect. We are also informed that the Rite is impious and atheistical in its teachings and that active measures are on foot to expose the iniquity of the whole proceedings.

An editorial note which appeared in The Freemason of October 19, 1872 (p. 644), stated that the Grand Orient desired to absorb the Rite of Memphis

“and so wipe out what it considered an anomaly and a disgrace to the Craft.” In consequence of the repeated public claims made by the officials of the Antient and Primitive Rite that Thevenot was a member of the Rite, possessing high rank, he wrote on August 22, 1873 (see The Freemason, November 1, 1873):

I declare that I do not take and never have taken part, either directly or indirectly, in the self-styled Antient and Primitive Rite of Masonry, either as a Founder or Director of the Rite, lately imported into England and which I bitterly deplore. I affirm that the mention of my name as a member and as possessing the 95° of this pretended Masonic Rite is an imposture which I publish to the Masons of all countries, against which I protest and which I declare a falsehood. This mention has been made unknown to me and without any participation on my part.

As a matter of fact, all doubt as to the Masonic illegality of the Antient and Primitive Rite had been settled on April 12 and 13, 1871, when a Concordat was arrived at between the Ancient and Accepted Rite (known generally as the Rose Croix) for England, Wales, the Dominions and Dependencies of the British Crown; the Grand Lodge of Mark Master Masons of England and Wales and the Colonies and Dependencies of the British Crown; and the Great Priory of the United Religious and Military Orders of the Temple of England and Wales and the Dependencies thereof, by which any member of any of those three bodies becoming or continuing a member of the Antient and Primitive Rite was, ipso facto, excluded from any or all of those bodies. It does not, however, appear that this Concordat was widely known, and no publicity was given to it in the Masonic press of that day.

Notwithstanding this decree, in 1872 a Charter was granted to John Yarker for a Sovereign Grand Body for Great Britain and Ireland, which was formally inaugurated at Freemasons' Hall, Great Queen Street, W.C., by Harry J. Seymour, Grand Master General of the United States and Yarker was installed as Grand Master General of Great Britain and Ireland. The officers appointed were Michael Caspari, Chancellor-General; Samuel Petty Leather, Treasurer-General; Charles Scott, Inspector-General; P. J. Graham, Keeper of the Golden Book; and A. D. Loewenstark, Secretary-General. Guiseppe Garibaldi, described as the premier Mason of Italy and Harry J. Seymour were elected honorary members. Yarker had previously, on August 24, 1871, been invested by Benjamin D. Hyam, under patent from H. J. Seymour, with powers to receive members until such time as a Sovereign Sanctuary should be erected; and Charters or Dispensations were granted for Chapters in London, Manchester, Havant and Dublin. On the foundation of the Sovereign Grand Body a Chapter was warranted for Burnley and a Dispensation granted for Aberdeenshire. It should be stated that, in 1865, the ninety-six Degrees of the Antient and Primitive Rite had been reduced to thirty-three, but permission was given to Chapters, Senates and Councils “to work such other Side Degrees as they may desire, if an accord with the old system.” (See letter from John Yarker in The Freemason, December 11, 1880.) The Rite in England has been defunct for many years, although as recently as 1900 there were Chapters working in Liverpool and the Isle of Man, and a periodical was issued entitled the Zurimuth, which was the successor of the Knepb, edited by John Yarker.

THE STRICT OBSERVANCE

Of all the wonderful perversions of Freemasonry which owe their origin to the fervid imaginings of Brethren of the eighteenth century, none can compare in point of interest with the system of the Strict Observance. For twenty years from its birth it either lay dormant, or made only infinitesimal progress; during the next twenty years it pervaded all continental Europe to the almost entire exclusion of every other system; within the next ten it had practically ceased to exist; yet a faint survival could more recently be traced in France. The whole system was based upon the fiction that, at the time of the destruction of the Templars, a certain number of Knights took refuge in Scotland and there preserved the existence of the Order. The sequence of Grand Masters was presumed never to have been broken and a list of these rulers in regular succession was known to the initiates; but the identity of the actual Grand Master was always kept—during his lifetime—a secret from every one except his immediate confidants, hence the term, Unknown Superiors. In order to ensure their perfect security these Knights are said to have joined the Guilds of Masons in Scotland and thus to have given rise to the Fraternity of Freemasons. At the time of the origin of the Strict Observance system, the period was assumed to have arrived when it would be advantageous boldly to proclaim the continued existence of the Ancient Order of the Temple and to endeavour to reinstate it in its former possessions, organization and privileges. Their hitherto restricted numbers were to be increased (in gratitude for past events) from the ranks of the Freemasons only and, at the proper period, the Grand Master was to make himself known. All this was supremely ridiculous, but it was firmly believed in by von Hund and his contemporaries, whose suspicions all pointed, at first, to the Young Pretender as the veritable Grand Master. There can be no doubt that these general outlines had been instilled into von Hund's mind, but the Ritual and the plan of operations were quite unknown to him; therefore, in the absence of instructions from his Superiors, had to be perfected by himself and colleagues. The persistency with which so many forms of the High Grades have been ascribed to the political tendencies and conspiracies of the Jacobites, together with a comparison of dates and the confessions of von Hund himself, might almost justify the belief that, during his stay in Paris, circa 1742, he was made acquainted with an ill-defined and half-formed scheme of the Stuarts for recruiting men and money, their political intentions being carefully concealed from him; that this scheme was dropped after the crushing defeat of Culloden in 1746; and that, consequently, when von Hund set about reviving the Templars in earnest in 1751, he was left to his own devices. This will account for the fact that, although he certainly received his first instructions from Lord Kilmarnock and other partisans of the Stuarts, no trace of Jacobite intrigues ever blended with the teachings of the Strict Observance: and, as a passing remark, it may be observed, that von Hund was not the kind of man to lend himself as a tool to any party. Von Hund may, therefore, be described as the wet-nurse of the system; but he was not its parent and those who accuse him of wilful imposition, have done a grievous injustice to the memory of a generous, impulsive, honest, warm-hearted, enthusiastic—but withal, pomp-loving and somewhat weak-minded man. His sincerity seems to be beyond question and fairly to merit the sympathy of his contemporaries in the state of embarrassment and uncertainty to which he was so often reduced, by the absence, at important crises, of any directions from the Unknown Superiors to whom he looked for instruction. Bearing this in mind, it can be understood why he so easily fell a prey to every new impostor, as he never could be certain that the latest arrival was not really an emissary from his chief.

Von Hund was not, however, quite the first link in the chain. His forerunner in Germany was C. G. Marschall von Bieberstein, whose identity still remains slightly a matter of doubt, but Keller, Findel, Nettleblatt and others have with an inexcusable want of circumspection confused him with H. W. Marschall, appointed Provincial Grand Master for Upper Saxony by Lord Darnley in 1737. He was a contemporary and relative but not identical. Von Hund always referred to him as his predecessor in the office of Provincial Grand Master of the VIIth Province (of Germany, between the Elbe and the Oder) and states he was directed in Paris to place himself in communication with him and receive his instructions; he died about 1750. Marschall does not appear to have done much towards preparing the way; but two Lodges existed in the first years of the forties, one at Naumburg and the other at Dresden, both of which conferred chivalric titles upon their members even upon the apprentices, these being first recorded instances of the usage. The Lodge in Dresden existed from 1738 and is supposed to have owed its existence to Marschall; the Lodge of the Three Hammers in Naumburg is known to have been constituted by him in 1749; its members afterwards took a prominent part in the institution of the new Rite.

Karl Gotthelf, Baron von Hund and Alten-Grotkau, was born September 1, 1722, lost his father when nine years old, was educated circa 1738 at the University of Leipzig and subsequently visited Strasburg and Paris. In 1742 he was present in Frankfort, as an attaché in the suite of the Ambassador of the Elector of Saxony, on the occasion of the coronation of the Emperor Charles VII. According to his friend, von Springseisen, he there received the three Degrees of Freemasonry on March 20, 1742, in the Union Lodge. Kloss has shown, however, that the Union Lodge did not initiate von Hund; but that, as there are some signs of a former, probably unchartered Lodge, having existed in Frankfort as late as April 21, 1742, he was possibly either made there or by some of the numerous Masons attending the coronation. From Frankfort he returned to Paris and of his doings there his Diary bears witness that on February 20, 1743, he consecrated a new Lodge as Master and, on August 28, served as Senior Warden in a Lodge at Versailles. At the Altenberg Convent of 1764 he declared that "an unknown Bro., the Knight of the Red Feather, in the presence of Lord Kilmarnock [Grand Master of Scotland 1742-3. Beheaded for high treason August 18, 1746], received him into the Order of the Temple and that Lord Clifford officiated as Prior on the occasion; also that he was subsequently introduced as a distinguished Brother of the Order to Charles Edward Stuart, the Young Pretender." He appears to have wavered as to the identity of the Grand Master; sometimes inclining towards Lord Kilmarnock, but more often towards Charles Edward. He further stated that "they gave him a Patent signed 'George' and directed him to apply for further instructions to Marschall, the Provincial Grand Master of the VIIth Province, whose successor he was to consider himself. But on application Marschall declared he had burnt all papers except the list of the sequence of Grand Masters and the Red Book or Matricula of the Order."

According to this Red Book, the VIIth Province, or Germany between the Elbe and the Oder, was to be divided into four Sub-Priories, which were further to be split up (as directed) into some twenty Prefectories, these again into smaller subdivisions—in reality, Lodges. The Provincial Grand Master was to appoint four Grand Commanderies and the heads of these and of the four Sub-Priories were to form the Chapter. In due course of time every Province of the Order had its Red Book as soon as it became properly constituted.

Von Hund's actions, so far as they are known, certainly bear out his story, for, upon his return to his own estates in 1743, he made Marschall's acquaintance, but delayed taking any important steps; nor was it till 1750 circa, on Marschall's death, that he assumed the position and authority of Provincial Grand Master. He then conferred with the Naumburg Lodge, more especially with those of the Brethren who were supposed to be in Marschall's confidence; he has, himself, stated that, failing advices from his Superiors, he determined to carry out the restoration of the Templars as best he could. He and Schmidt and von Tanner of the Naumburg Lodge are presumed to have arranged the Rituals and all other matters. In or about 1751, von Hund erected a Lodge and a Provincial Chapter on his estate at Unwurde; and, in 1753, issued a new Warrant to the Lodge at Naumburg. It was in this Lodge that the first financial scheme was worked out, for without funds it was of course impossible to restore the Order of the Temple. On it was probably based the second scheme of 1755. Von Hund also began at this time to make a few Knights of the Order, each of whom assumed a descriptive Latin title, but the number was increased very slowly. Europe was divided as in old times—according to the Red Book—into nine Provinces: I, Arragon; II, Auvergne; III, Occitania; IV, Leon; V, Burgundy; VI, Britain; VII, Elbe and Oder; VIII, Rhine; IX, Archipelago. These Provinces were to be revived as opportunity offered of gaining over the various Lodges to the cause and a special dress or uniform resembling that of the Old Templars was adopted. In the first or Entered Apprentice Degree, an oath of implicit and unquestioning obedience to the superiors was exacted, hence the title of STRICT OBSERVANCE. The 5° was the Novitiate, the 6° and last the actual Knighthood. The Master of a Lodge—who was in all cases to be a Knight—was appointed by the Chapter, not elected by the members. Only noblemen were eligible for the Knighthood; others might, however, be accepted as Socii. In after years, especially in such towns as Hamburg, rich merchants were received into the body of Knights on paying exorbitant fees. The seven years' war—1756-63—prevented, however, any considerable progress. The contending parties more than once committed great havoc on Hund's property; he himself was often obliged to fly, owing to his sympathy with Austria. The consequence was, that in 1763—so it is maintained—no more than thirty Knights had been elected and the scheme devised, as is perhaps possible, by the partisans of the Stuarts twenty years previously, but almost immediately afterwards given up by them (if indeed it was ever more than half conceived), had made no substantial progress. Perhaps it would have died out altogether had not Hund's hand been forced in a most remarkable manner by Johnson.

Who Johnson was will probably never be ascertained, but there is no doubt he was a consummate rogue and an unmitigated vagabond. He is described as of almost repulsive demeanour and of no education, but gifted with boundless impudence and low cunning. Professedly an Englishman, he was nevertheless unable to speak what he alleged to be his mother tongue, while it is stated that his name was either Becker or Leucht. It is surmised that in reality he had been valet to one Johnson, a recipient of some high Templar Degrees, whom he robbed of his Masonic papers and whose name he usurped. Various circumstances give an air of probability to this conjecture. It is also stated, with more or less possibility of truth, that he had been previously concerned as a principal in certain alchemical frauds, for which he had undergone imprisonment. He must have had some slight knowledge of von Hund's projects and, as shown by the correspondence which has been preserved, he artfully contrived to learn more from the Provincial Grand Master himself.

It will be remembered that in 1762 Rosa established in Jena a Clermont Chapter; that these Chapters all practised Templar Degrees and were thus more than half prepared to accept Hund's reform as soon as it might be communicated to them. In September 1763, Johnson suddenly appeared at Jena, where he resided till May 1764. Obtaining a footing in the Jena Chapter, he declared himself the emissary of the Order of the Temple, deputed by the Sovereign Chapter in Scotland to organize the Order in Germany. His chief lever wherewith he moved the mass of Brethren was a thinly disguised pretension of being able to impart the true secret of Freemasonry, viz. the preparation of the philosopher's stone. The Jena Chapter went over to him with one accord and, on November 6, received at his hands a new Warrant, the old one being burned by the Servitor in open Chapter amidst the blare of trumpets and horns. Rosa was summoned before him, examined and declared an ignorant cheat and was so taken aback that he was fain to confess the soft impeachment. The Berlin Chapter was required to submit to the new order of things and, refusing, was formally erased, whilst all Chapters, including Hund's, were kept well posted up in these occurrences by circular. Meanwhile Johnson was learning more and more through Hund's letters, who, devoutly believing in Unknown Superiors, was inclined to credit Johnson's account of his mission. Every hint which fell from Hund was immediately utilized by Johnson to blind and deceive those around him. At length, on January 3, 1764, Hund proposed a conference with Johnson, recognizing his position as special envoy; these admissions were immediately printed and sent to all the Lodges and Chapters of Germany—January 20—in order to strengthen Johnson's position. Thus, by degrees, the imposture gained strength and plausibility and Deputies arrived at Jena from numerous Chapters and Lodges to receive new instructions and constitutions. Their old Warrants were either burnt or forwarded to von Hund and the Deputies themselves were made Novices or dubbed Knights according to Johnson's pleasure. A regular discipline was maintained, the Knights were summoned by trumpet call at unearthly hours, knightly sentinels were placed at Johnson's door and he was accompanied by a bodyguard of Knights Templar. Let it not be forgotten that these Knights were all gentlemen of ancient and honourable lineage. Surely such another triumph of brazen-faced impudence had never been witnessed!

At last, when Johnson thought that he was firmly established in the saddle, he issued a summons to a congress at Altenberg for the beginning of May, announced to the Knights that von Hund was their future Superior and employed the interval in raising large sums of money from his dupes. He journeyed to Altenberg surrounded by a numerous company of Knights and, on May 26, 1764, von Hund appeared there. At first all went well; Hund made due submission and was confirmed in his post; and Johnson doubtless hoped with Hund's help to continue the deception. Hund, at his orders, knighted all his nominees and Johnson handed them over to the Provincial Grand Master as his future subjects. But Hund was no charlatan, neither was he a fool and, in course of time, his conversation with Johnson's dupes opened his eyes. He then boldly attacked him and exposed the whole fraud. Johnson swore and denied, but Hund persisted and, in the end, Johnson fled. He was pursued and arrested in Alsleben on February 24, 1765, but was never brought to public trial, being, doubtless through the influence of his former victims, confined in the Wartburg on April 18. There, in the room formerly occupied by Luther, he was detained in durance vile at the expense of the Order and died on May 13, 1775. The matter was hushed up, the papers and other matters relating to his arrest and examination were never published and, unless they are some day brought to light, it is improbable that the mystery of his identity will ever be revealed.

It was only natural that, after this experience, the Brethren should have been somewhat suspicious of von Hund's own authority, in spite of his acknowledged probity and position. Hund, however, candidly confided to them the history of his admission into the Order (as above related) and showed several of the Brethren the Red Book and other documents, when the majority of those present at the Convent (or Congress) resolved to acknowledge his authority and receive new instruction from him. From that moment the movement spread till it almost annihilated English Freemasonry in Germany and threw out branches of the Strict Observance in Russia, Holland, France, Italy and Switzerland. A large majority of the princes of Germany, from time to time, swore fealty to the Order, the Unknown Superiors and the Provincial Grand Master, von Hund, signing the act of unquestioning obedience. The chief convert at the Altenberg Convent was J. C. Schubart (1734-87)—during the seven years' war in the British, i.e. Hanoverian, service. In 1763 he was made Deputy Master of the Grand Mother-Lodge of the Three Globes, succeeding Rosa and erecting the last of the Clermont Chapters. He was knighted by von Hund and made delegatus to all Lodges of the Lax Observance. For five years he was indefatigable in his exertions, traversing the whole Continent in the interests of the Order, which, however, some slight misunderstanding caused him to leave in 1768 and, from that time until his death, he devoted himself to scientific agriculture. Through him, Zinnendorff and the whole of the Lodges appendant to the Three Globes were won over.

Hamburg, with its English Provincial Grand Lodge, also Denmark, gave in their adhesion in 1765. It was again Schubart who, in 1766, worked out a new financial scheme whilst on a visit to Hund at Unwurde and, to his persuasions, the Order owed a most influential convert, Bode, of whom more hereafter. On November 16, 1766, Zinnendorff resigned all further participation in the Strict Observance in order to introduce into Berlin the Swedish system, afterwards developed into the Grand National Lodge. From its very first institution this Rite proved a thorn in the side of the Strict Observance and, very rapidly, it grew to be a potent rival. On the other hand, the members of the Order were beginning to be anxious for something more definite than von Hund had yet offered. To be dubbed a Knight and to pay heavy fees was all very well ; to receive high-sounding titles was something better ; to be a real Knight Templar was no doubt glorious—but what was it all to lead to ? If the Superiors still refused to make themselves known, at least they might impart some of that occult knowledge which the eighteenth century believed so firmly was formerly in the possession of the Order of the Temple ; and which, doubtless, had descended as a heritage to the unknown Grand Master and his colleagues. Von Hund was himself by no means satisfied ; the financial scheme was not a success ; money was scarce ; and the whole expenses of the Provincial Chapter at Unwurde fell upon his private purse. He complained in a letter that he could not continue for ever keeping open house and laying covers daily for twenty emissaries, officials, etc. As for mystic lore, he probably believed in it himself, but nothing had been revealed to him and he was too honest to substitute any invention of his own. He must have been waiting for a sign from his Superiors with as much impatience as any of his disciples. Thus, in 1767, the ground was well prepared for the appearance of the Clerics and their Rite, the leaders of which strove to obtain the control of the Strict Observance. Of what this Rite consisted no one exactly knows, as the inventors only allowed a very select few to peruse the Rituals and it was not practised, because the leaders never quite succeeded in their intentions. On February 17, 1767, some Masons, chief amongst whom may be mentioned von Vegesack, von Bohnen and Starck, founded at Wismar the Lodge of the Three Lions; and attached thereto a Scots Lodge, Gustavus of the Golden Hammer. Shortly afterwards they added a hitherto unknown body, a Clerical Chapter. To these Brethren we are indebted for the historical fiction that the Knights Templar were divided into military and sacerdotal members; that the latter possessed all the secrets and mystic learning of the Order; and that they had preserved a continuous existence down to the eighteenth century. Starck claimed to be the emissary of these Clerical Templars, asserted their and his superiority over the secular Knights and offered, on his claims being acknowledged, to impart their valuable secrets to von Hund and his disciples. Starck (1741-1816) was a student of Göttingen, a very learned man, an oriental linguist of great attainments and had held scientific appointments in St. Petersburg, Paris, Wismar and elsewhere. Starck and Hund entered into a mutual correspondence, the latter evidently believing that in the former he had at last found the right clue and, being still more convinced of the truth of this supposition from the report furnished to him by his ambassador von Raven, who had easily fallen a dupe to Starck's charlatany. Starck pretended that the secrets had been conveyed by Natter from Florence to St. Petersburg, were preserved there in a Lodge of which he was a member and, as the price of his assistance, claimed that his Lodge should be independent of and superior to the Strict Observance Lodges and hold from the Provincial Grand Master only. As a result the three Clerics swore fealty to Hund and were knighted by him. Baron von Prangen was sent to Wismar in 1768 to arrange all subsequent matters, was made a Cleric, sending home enthusiastic reports. Then Starck wished to journey to St. Petersburg to complete his instructions and, in April 1768, asked for 200 thalers from the Provincial Funds for the purpose. Hund refused because the treasury was bare, while Prangen's mission had already cost him 500 thalers without any result. Starck answered with such insolence that, from that moment, all communications were broken off and he left for St. Petersburg. Hund's first ambassador then became the mainspring of the movement in Germany and erected a Clerical Priory in Wismar towards the end of 1771—Ritual, patent, etc., being sent to him from St. Petersburg by Starck. On his side Starck erected Templar bodies (secular) in St. Petersburg, which acknowledged Hund as their Provincial Grand Master. At last Starck came back and, on February 29, 1772, von Hund was formally summoned to accept or reject an alliance with the Clerics. But the Provincial Grand Master was no longer in a position to decide such important matters for himself. The Brethren had to be consulted through the Provincial Council and, as many other matters were pressing for a solution at the same time, a general Convent was summoned to meet at Kohlo. Prominent among these other subjects were the widely spread dissatisfaction with the financial scheme, the refusal of many Districts to fulfil its terms and the necessity of some more perfect governing body than the very informal Provincial Chapter at Unwurde. But, during the period sketched, some highly influential personages had cast in their lot with the upholders of the Strict Observance. First of all, may be mentioned Ferdinand, Duke of Brunswick, the victor at Minden, who was born in 1721 and died in 1792. During a part of the seven years' war, he was appointed General of the allied forces and, in 1760, the Grand Lodge of England voted £50 to the Masons in the army under his command. He was initiated on December 21, 1740, in the Lodge of the Three Globes and, in 1770, was appointed English Provincial Grand Master for the Duchy of Brunswick. In January 1771, however, he forsook English Freemasonry and was admitted into the Strict Observance.

Karl, Duke, afterwards Grand Duke, of Mecklenburg-Strelitz (born 1741; died 1816), until his accession Governor of Hanover and a Lieutenant-General in the British service, was also admitted to the Knighthood in 1767. Karl, Prince of Courland, joined the Order in 1772. Many other princes had already joined, but space forbids reference to them. No fewer than twelve were actually regnant in 1774.

In the Convent at Kohlo (June 4 to 24, 1772) the whole system was rearranged. The seats and limits of the various Prefectories were settled; the financial plan (Schubart's) replaced by other arrangements; the representation of the different bodies in the capitular government organized and Dresden chosen as its seat; von Hund's Provincial Chapter at Unwurde abolished; and inter alia, the following appointments made: Duke Ferdinand to be Magnus Superior Ordinis and Grand Master of all the Scots Lodges of the system; Prince Karl of Courland to be Superior Ordinis and Protector in Saxony; Duke Karl of Mecklenburg, Superior Ordinis and Protector in Mecklenburg and Hanover; Prince Frederick August of Brunswick (nephew of Duke Ferdinand), Superior Ordinis and Protector in Prussia. The basis of the system was the usual Lodges, with their various Grand or Mother-Lodges; above these stood the Scots Lodges, all united under the Grand Master Ferdinand. As these returned the greater part of the members to the Grand Chapter at Dresden, the President of which was Ferdinand himself, that Prince virtually became the Prime Minister of the whole system, von Hund, as Provincial Grand Master, thenceforth assuming more the rôle of a constitutional monarch. A Concordat was then arrived at with the Clerics. Their Chapter at Wismar was recognized, but future Chapters were to be regarded as emanating from the authority of von Hund only, not from that of the Grand Chapter. The Clerics were to institute their own government; to be taken into council at elections of future Provincial Grand Masters; to elect their own Prior, with the sanction of the Provincial Grand Master; they were not to be judged by the Temporal Knights; they were to have no vote in financial matters, only a consultative voice and to be free from all imposts and taxes; the Grand Prior to have a seat in the Grand Chapter at Dresden and his signature was to be attached to all future Warrants of Constitution, etc. In return, the Knights previously made were acknowledged as such, but with the proviso that whenever they came to a Clerical Chapter they were to obtain the sacerdotal investiture and no future Knights were to be made without priestly assistance; the Clerics also promised to make their knowledge useful to the Order and so on. But, unfortunately for the equity of this compact, the Clerics were, as events afterwards proved, most chary of extending their circle of members and only dropped very vague and delusive hints respecting their peculiar secrets, so that the Order benefited very little by the arrangement. Von Hund, as a last act of the Congress, was requested to legitimate himself, doing so in the same manner as previously. He also showed to a deputation of the Knights his Patent as Provincial Grand Master. It has been vaguely stated that about the year 1751 the Brothers Schmidt brought this from England. It was written in a peculiar cypher, which has not been solved to this day, but the deputation expressed themselves quite satisfied and the Convent broke up.

About the time of the Kohlo Convent and, shortly afterwards, four of the supposed nine Provinces of the Order were constituted and organized. The first to lead the way was the VIIIth Province—South Germany and Italy. It was divided into two great Priories and elected von Hund as Provincial Grand Master. Chapters were erected in Vienna, Munich, Stuttgart, Meiningen and Turin. After von Hund's death they elected, in 1777, Count Bernez in Turin as Provincial Grand Master and erected further Chapters in Naples and Padua. The chief instrument in organizing the three French Provinces was the Baron von Weiler (born 1726; died 1775). He professed to have been received into the Order of the Temple by Lord Raleigh, at Rome, in 1743 or the following year; became personally acquainted with von Hund in 1769; was rectified by him, that is, received anew, with proper formalities, into the Strict Observance system; employed in various delicate negotiations; finally appointed by the Provincial Grand Master Commissarius et Visitator specialis. He was a man of means and made it his sole object in life to spread the Strict Observance. In his official capacity he went to France, where he visited the Lodges working Templar Degrees, some of which were veiled under the name of Knights of the Dragon. Weiler consented to leave these Rites unchanged, to consider them equivalent to the Strict Observance Degrees and superadded Hund's newest and highest Degree, Equus professus. The result was that, in 1772, the Vth Province—Burgundy—was organized. This included Burgundy, Switzerland, Alsace, Lorraine, Artois, Flanders, Brabant, Luxemburg and a part of Zeeland. Strasburg was the seat of government and the French Brethren chose von Hund as their Provincial Grand Master. The Grand Prior and real director was Baron Landberg, Postmaster-General, Master of the Lodge Candour in Strasburg. After 1773 the Prince of Hohenzollern-Hechingen became Protector of the Province and, on April 8, 1777, Baron von Durckheim was elected Provincial Grand Master.

In 1774 the IInd Province—Albernia (Auvergne)—was constituted also by von Weiler. This included Provence, Dauphiné, Auvergne, Piedmont, Beaujolais, Bourbonnais, Nivernais, Berri, Touraine, Blaisois, Anjou, Vendome, Orleans, Maine, Normandy, Picardy, Isle de France and Champaign. The seat of government should have been Paris but, as no Chapter existed in that city, the Directory was transferred to Lyons. Baron von Hund was elected Provincial Grand Master and the directing Grand Prior was De Royer, Lieutenant of Police.

The same year von Weiler organized the IIIrd Province—Occitania—the chief seat of which was at Bordeaux. Here again von Hund was elected Provincial Grand Master, so that he was now the nominal head of five Provinces, viz. VII, Germany; VIII, South Germany; V, Burgundy; II, Auvergne; III, Occitania. By slightly anticipating, the history of the French Provinces may here be closed. For many reasons their open existence might have led to trouble. The unconcealed claim to revive the Order of the Temple was not without political danger in the land of its former persecution; their dependence upon a foreign potentate, Ferdinand of Brunswick, could not be viewed with equanimity by the State, nor their obedience to a foreign Jurisdiction by the Grand Orient; they, therefore, entitled themselves simply Scots Directories and, after 1775, only gave the Templar Degrees historically, that is, explained without conferring them. In 1776 they further managed to form a compact with the Grand Orient, which flattered the amour propre of the latter without increasing materially its power over their Lodges. In 1778 a Congress of these three Provinces was held at Lyons, usually denominated the Convent des Gaules, at which it was decided, out of consideration for their French fellow-subjects, to drop the name of Templars altogether, to alter the Ritual and its whole significance and, in future, to make the last Degree a purely moral one under the title of Beneficent Knights of the Holy City. During the Revolution the Order disappeared for a time, but revived in the early years of last century as the systeme rectifié. In 1808 and 1809 Burgundy and Auvergne elected the Grand Master of the Grand Orient, Prince Cambacères, as their Provincial Grand Master; and, on June 2, 1811, the Concordat of 1776 with the Grand Orient was renewed. During the succeeding twelve or fifteen years the Rite died out almost entirely in France.

But these French Provinces had been organized on von Hund's responsibility and, without the co-operation, nay, rather, in spite of the hesitation of the Dresden Directory. A feeling of uncertainty with regard to the legality of von Hund's authority was also abroad and strong symptoms of dissatisfaction were evoked by the failure of the Clerics to confer the great benefits they had promised. A Convent was therefore held at Brunswick in 1775, which met on May 23, lasting till July 6. Hund went through the old proceedings relative to his Warrant of Authority. Pressed to declare the name of the Knight of the Red Feather, he affirmed, with tears in his eyes, that he had sworn on his sword and his honour not to divulge it. He further volunteered the information that, as the Stuarts had evidently for some time ceased to exert their power as head of the Order, or to take any interest in it, it would not be inadvisable to elect a new Grand Master. The Clerics persisted that the Order was more indebted to them than it believed, refused to be hurried and the new Provinces were formally admitted. The Directory was moved to Brunswick to suit the convenience of Ferdinand, its president; and officers were appointed to assist him. This really amounted to an autocracy of five Brethren, because it was obviously impossible continually to summon the delegates from the end of Europe.

The Convent dissolved with a general feeling of dissatisfaction and with an evident desire to probe the Templar descent, the Grand Mastership of the Duke of Albany (Charles Edward, the Young Pretender) and other matters to the bottom. This very determination paved the way for a fresh impostor—Gugumos—who was, perhaps, even more audacious than Johnson. The Brunswick Directory deputed von Wächter to search out the truth. Wächter was born in 1746, practised the law at Stuttgart, held several court appointments in Saxe-Meiningen and Gotha, in 1779 was ennobled by the King of Denmark on the recommendation of the Landgrave Karl of Hesse-Cassel and, at the time of the Revolution, was Ambassador at Paris. On June 10, 1810, he was punished at Paris for dishonourable proceedings, degraded at Copenhagen and deprived of the Danebrog Order. After this he disappears from view. According to one account he died in England; whilst another informs us that his death occurred at Stuttgart in 1825. Initiated—in all probability—during his university career at Tübingen, he joined the Strict Observance at Frankfort in 1774 and was present as a deputy from Stuttgart at the Brunswick Convent in 1775. He was at first a devoted believer in Gugumos, the new false prophet, but, in later years, became one of his most energetic adversaries. Subsequently he was Chancellor of the VIIIth Province and, on his return from Italy in 1778, became a leading light of the New or Gold Rosicrucians—his chief pupils in alchemy being, according to his own statements, which have every air of probability, Ferdinand of Brunswick, Landgrave Karl of Hesse-Cassel and the Crown Prince, afterwards King Frederick William II of Prussia. He formally resigned the Strict Observance at the Wilhelmsbad Convent in 1782.

The Princes George and Ludwig of Hesse-Darmstadt had also determined to make strict and extended inquiries on their own account and undertook a long journey for that purpose. In France they made the acquaintance of Gugumos, who accompanied them to Italy and became a companion in their researches.

Of this adventurer's early life very little can be ascertained beyond what is disclosed by his own statement—about the very worst authority to which appeal could be made. It is, however, almost demonstrable that he was not made a Mason until after 1773 and it is known that, in 1746, he was in the service of the Margrave of Baden. He appeared at the Brunswick Convent, where he dropped mysterious hints of special knowledge and awoke the curiosity of von Raven and von Wächter, both predisposed to alchemical studies. He immediately left for France and travelled to Italy with the young princes, where he met von Weiler and where, according to Prince George, his demeanour curiously changed and he became most preoccupied and mysterious: he also appeared suddenly to have become possessed of a well-lined purse, although formerly of very narrow means. He gradually disclosed to his intimates that the Strict Observance was an illusion; that the members were a branch only of the old Order, that the founders had been taught the symbols merely—not the full knowledge; that the real head of the fully instructed branch lived at Cyprus as Patriarch of the Greek Church; that he, himself, was an important member of the body; and that its special knowledge comprised all the long-sought-for secrets of the alchemists. The Rituals, clothing, jewels, etc., of the Strict Observance were incorrect and must be reformed ; he was willing to instruct the Brethren and to admit a few into the higher class ; while he would endeavour to obtain the permission of the Master of the Temple to disclose the secrets to those worthy of that confidence. The two princes and Wächter were initiated by him into the new Rite.

On his return to Germany he issued an invitation on April 19, 1776, to a Convent at Wiesbaden. The Prince of Nassau-Usingen, himself a member of the Strict Observance, gave his consent to the meeting because he foresaw no harm and was not unwilling that his subjects should profit by the influx of strangers. A great deal of preliminary cross-examination of Gugumos was previously carried on by correspondence and his letters are masterpieces of impudent self-assertion. Eventually the conference was formally inhibited by Ferdinand, but, privately, he deputed Schwartz to attend on his behalf. The Convent opened on August 15, 1776, and, among others, there were present the Prince of Nassau, sovereign of the country ; the Duke of Gotha ; the Landgraves Ludwig and George and Wächter—the three last being already supporters of Gugumos—Bischoffswerfer, Hymnen, Wöllner, Raven, Ropert, Gemmingen, all subsequently shining lights of the later or Gold Rosicrucians ; and von Lestwitz, who, in 1764, had been appointed English Provincial Grand Master of Brunswick, but joined the Strict Observance before organizing his Provincial Grand Lodge. With so many members tending towards the practice of the occult sciences it is not to be wondered at that Gugumos, for some time, had things his own way. He produced a wonderful patent of authority and made a long and obscure speech. The Duke of Gotha was soon surfeited and retired ; many of the others submitted to be rectified, i.e. re-initiated, paying dearly for their jewels and clothing—the jewels ultimately proved to be of pinchbeck ; and others, although inclined to believe, had doubts, and insisted on an immediate trial of Gugumos's skill. Among these Rosskampf of Heilbronn deserves special mention. Gugumos at last declared that if the Brethren would build the necessary Adytum sacrum he would, meanwhile, travel to Cyprus and fetch the essential altars and sacred implements and, on that understanding, the Convent broke up on September 4, 1776. Gugumos retired to Frankfort, where, in spite of his philosopher's stone, he was unable to pay the hotel bill ; and, meanwhile, his servant was closely interrogated by Rosskampf, who induced him to reveal the whole truth, swear an affidavit naming the very student who had prepared Gugumos's papers and the armour-smith who had manufactured his harness. Gugumos fled for a time to Holland, where he is said to have taken part in the Bavarian war of succession ; and, in 1780, published a circular stating that he had been deceived by false teachers (it is supposed he was persuaded to take this step by the Rosicrucians) ; and died at Munich in 1818 as Colonel on the Bavarian general staff.

On October 28, 1776, von Hund died after an illness of twelve days at Meiningen. His estate, which had suffered largely during the seven years' war, had been still further reduced by his personal sacrifices for the welfare of the Order. This fact alone should suffice to bid one to pause, before stamping him as a charlatan and knave.

After his death a period of confusion ensued. According to the Statutes in that case made and provided, certain high dignitaries in the Order should have ruled pending the appointment of a new Master, but their great distance from each other's residences made this difficult. Duke Ferdinand and his council, on their side, appear to have thought that the moment had arrived when they could gather up all the reins into their own hands. Even respecting von Hund's official papers quarrels arose. These, Ferdinand wished to place in the Brunswick archives unopened, but others insisted on searching them in order to find some trace of the veritable Grand Master of the Order. This was done, but no sign of his existence was discovered, except that von Hund evidently believed Charles Edward Stuart to be the man. In 1777 von Wächter sought him out in Italy, when the Prince, to his dismay, declared he not only was not Grand Master and knew nothing about it, but that he was not even a Freemason. At this moment of suspense the brother of the King of Sweden presented himself as a candidate for von Hund's office. The proposal at first held out many advantages. A Swedish Freemason, von Plommenfeldt, had visited Ferdinand at Brunswick in 1776 and made the acquaintance of the chiefs of the Strict Observance. Sweden, then as now, worked a peculiar system of its own, based upon the Templar descent theory and a branch of it had been introduced into Germany by Zinnendorff, constituting the most formidable, indeed almost the only rival of the Strict Observance. Mutual explanations were, of course, exchanged; Plommenfeldt assured the Germans that, not only were the Swedes aware of and in communication with the veritable Grand Master, but, also, that in their Higher Degrees they preserved the true long-sought-for mysteries of the Order. Through Plommenfeldt the Directory hoped to make arrangements of a profitable character with Sweden and to benefit at the expense of their rivals of the Grand National Lodge. But, whilst these negotiations were in progress, von Hund died and the Duke of Sudermania, Karl, brother of Gustavus III of Sweden, seized the opportunity of acquiring control over the German Brethren and offered to accept the vacant office. He was already Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Sweden and it appears probable that political motives were not unconnected with the proposal. Indeed, the Landgrave Karl of Hesse-Cassel did not scruple to oppose his candidature on those very grounds. Although, therefore, many Brethren anticipated great results from the proposal, others advanced very strong arguments against it and the Brunswick Directory acted entirely on its own responsibility in the subsequent stages of the proceedings. The Directory agreed to further the Duke's candidature, provided Karl would cancel the Warrant formerly granted to Zinnendorff and thus render illegal the Grand National Lodge of Berlin.

However, the Grand Lodge of Sweden declared—April 28 and July 29, 1777—that it had never constituted Lodges out of the kingdom nor granted Zinnendorff a Patent, therefore, if he possessed such an authority, it was of no value. A meeting of Deputies was then arranged to take place at Hamburg : Sweden appointed Count Oxenstierna and von Plommenfeldt ; the Directory deputed General Major von Rhetz and Count Marschall ; Schwartz attending on behalf of Prince Ferdinand.

The Hamburg Conference lasted from July 4 to 16, 1777, the Deputies exchanged Rituals of the two systems, arranged a modus vivendi and the Swedes produced the Grand Lodge decree of April 28, 1777.

On July 26 the Directory informed the Order in general by a circular of the upshot of the negotiations. The information was by no means well received in all quarters and a state of mutual recrimination followed. After the Swedish Deputies had paid a visit to Berlin, the Chapter there convoked a Convent—though, of course, not empowered to do so of its own authority—which was held at Leipzig October 16 to 22, 1777. Only twelve Chapters attended and all, with the exception of that of Dresden, agreed to ratify the Hamburg resolutions and work for Karl's election.

At last a circular appeared on January 15, 1778, from the Vicars-general and the Directory, summoning a Convent of the Order.

This met at Wolfenbüttel, the country residence of Ferdinand, on July 15, 1778, but was not formally opened by him till the 28th, and closed on August 27. The proceedings at Leipzig were legalized ; the statute forbidding the appointment of a prince of a reigning family to the office of Provincial Grand Master was suspended ; the Duke of Sudermania was elected ; the Act of Union confirmed ; and the ratification on the part of Sweden was to be forwarded before October 1. The Act conferring protection on the Clerics was allowed to lapse, because they were desirous of withdrawing from the system. In all these years this branch had made no progress, had established no more Chapters and had fulfilled none of its promises. The Clerics, Starck, von Raven and others, thus disappear from the scene and little more is known of them. In Darmstadt they still possessed a Chapter in 1792, of which the Landgrave Christian was Prior ; but it must have died out shortly afterwards. In fact the Clerics, in spite of the noise they made in the world, never had any real consistency. But this Convent also marked the turning-point of the whole system, for the Chapters in Silesia and Berlin, i.e. all the Lodges under the Grand Lodge of the Three Globes, declared their intention of retiring from the Strict Observance and, in future, of working only the Craft and the Scots Degrees, still acknowledging, however, Duke Ferdinand as their Scots Grand Master ; his nephew being at that time their Craft Grand Master. Another heavy blow was the solemn protest of the Danish Lodges against the election ; those bodies having the most to fear from the political influence of Sweden. Other Chapters also protested on one ground or another and, even in Sweden, the action of their own Deputies was not fully ratified ; the Act of Union especially being objected to and another one proposed to be substituted. This led to another meeting at Brunswick, August 24 to December 9, 1779, at which only Deputies were present and not all who were entitled to attend a Convent. The meeting is, therefore, known by the name of Brunswick Diet. After interminable wrangles the Act of Union was replaced by a pact of amity and reciprocity ; the Danish Lodges exempted from subservience to the Provincial Grand Master ; the Duke of Sudermania finally elected and installed by proxy ; and the Landgrave Karl of Hesse elected as his coadjutor and eventual successor. In spite of all this, the end of the Strict Observance was approaching. Its most enthusiastic supporters commenced to be wearied of its uselessness ; the grand secrets had not yet been revealed ; the Grand Master persisted in preserving his incognito ; the members asked, did he exist ? were they Templars ? etc. Sweden had not helped them as expected. The Rosicrucians were seducing their Lodges on one side ; Bode, on the other, was scenting Jesuit intrigues in every phase of Freemasonry. Wächter came back rich from Italy and stated that the German Fraternity knew nothing, but that he had approached the true light ; even the Duke of Sudermania was disappointed because he found he could not rule the German Fraternity like his own Swedes.

On September 19, 1780, Ferdinand issued a summons for a new Convent, proposing the following questions for deliberation : Is the Order only conventionally, or is it actually derived from some older Society, if so, which ? Are there really Unknown Superiors in existence, if so, who are they ? What are the aims and purpose of the Order ? Can the restoration of the Order of the Temple be considered as such ? How may the ritual and ceremonies be best arranged ? Does the Order conceal any scientific knowledge ? etc., etc. The crushing effects of such a blow delivered at such hands may easily be understood. The Duke of Sudermania, on February 20, 1781, issued a decree forbidding this Congress : he had not even been consulted on the project—and, on April 20, 1781, he resigned his office. Ferdinand issued several other circulars preparatory to the Convent, which was more than once postponed. However, on July 16, 1782, it was, at length, opened at Wilhelmsbad and lasted till September 1 following.

Several princes were present at this Convent—thirty-five Deputies in all—and each of the five restored Provinces of the Order was represented. The IXth Province—Sweden—was not and, in fact, was looked upon as non-existent. Besides the actual members, emissaries from various contemporary systems introduced themselves. Some were merely heard as visitors ; others claimed a voice in their capacity as Knights Templar. Thus the Eclectic Union of Frankfort, then springing into existence, appeared in the person of Ditzfurth ; the Illuminati in that of Knigge ; the Rosicrucians in the Delegates of the Berlin Scots Grand Lodge ; and the Zinnendorff system in the Deputies from Austria. The results of the Conference were a complete revolution. It was resolved and declared that the Freemasons were not the successors of the Templars, although connected with them ; the playing at Knights Templar was to be discontinued and a merely historical instruction substituted ; the Rituals were to be amended and the last Degree was to be called Knights of Beneficence—in fact, the French System and Rite—established at the Convent des Gaules, 1778—was adopted, but the Lodges were not to be forced to work the Higher Degrees in opposition to their own wishes. Ferdinand was elected Grand Master General of the allied Lodges. The Rite was reformed in ritual and ceremonial and consisted of the three Degrees of the Craft, together with those of Scots Master, Novice and Knight. The order of the Provinces was changed and became as follows: I, Lower Germany; II, Auvergne; III, Occitania; IV, Italy and Greece; V, Burgundy; VI, Upper Germany; VII, Austrian possessions; VIII and IX were reserved for Russia and Sweden should they care to join. The Directory was removed to Weimar, because the reigning Duke of Brunswick was not a Mason, which might, perhaps, place the archives in danger.

The upshot of the whole affair was, that the system practically ceased to exist. The Grand Lodge of the Three Globes announced its intention of working the three English Grades (of course with a superstructure of hermeticism); many other Lodges returned in practice to English Masonry; Italy, in great part, followed suit; the newly established Eclectic Union gained in strength; the Zinnendorff system seduced numbers of Lodges; and, eventually, only the three French Provinces and the Lodges in Denmark remained true to the new arrangement. Even Prince Karl of Hesse-Cassel failed to assume (in Ferdinand's lifetime) the position of Provincial Grand Master of the Ist Province, which belonged to him as coadjutor of the Duke of Sudermania on the resignation of the latter. On January 30, 1784, the Three Globes system formally declared its independence and, on December 31, notice was given of the re-establishment in Hamburg of the former English Provincial Grand Lodge and the consequent refusal of all Lodges in that Constitution to work anything else in future but English Craft Masonry. The Strict Observance was moribund; Ferdinand gradually withdrew himself more and more from its direction; soon there was nothing left to direct; and, on July 3, 1792, the Prince died. His rich Masonic library and collections and the entire archives of the Ist (formerly VIIth) Province, came into the possession of the Landgrave Karl of Hesse in Schleswig. They are now in the Grand Lodge of Denmark at Copenhagen. According to a Cabinet decree of the King of Denmark, November 2, 1792, Karl became Grand Master of all Danish Lodges and no others were recognized in the kingdom. There the System and Rite established at Wilhelmsbad preserved a footing, but only in the first three Degrees and in the Scots Degree, as the others gradually fell into disuse. Karl still considered himself Provincial Grand Master of Germany and, in that capacity, founded Lodges at Frankfort and Mayence, which, however, were not recognized by the other Lodges in those cities and became the source of much bitterness. Karl died in 1836 and the Crown Prince of Denmark became Protector. The Rite was not changed, so that, in a mutilated form—the very name of Strict Observance or Knight Templar being almost forgotten—it may be said to have existed till 1855; but it would be more correct to say that it had been gradually supplanted by pure English Freemasonry, with an additional Scots Degree. In 1855, however, the Protector, King Frederick VII, ordered the Swedish Rite to be adopted. Thus perished the last lingering trace of this wonderful system—the French Directories, to all intents and purposes, having long since gradually disappeared. For nearly a generation the history of the Strict Observance is also that of Freemasonry over a great part of the continent of Europe and fewer details would have left a very blurred image of the subject.

The term Observata Lata—variously translated Laxe Observanz, Observance Relachée and Lax Observance—was used by the disciples of von Hund, to distinguish the other systems of Masonry from their own. Thus, the members of the English and Zinnendorff systems were regarded as of the Lax, those of the Templar (their own) as of the Strict Observance. Many writers, however, have fallen into the unaccountable error of calling the Lax Observance a schism established at Vienna in 1767—evidently confounding it with the Spiritual Branch of the Templars, or Clerical Chapter (Clerici Ordinis Templarii), founded by Starck in that year.

THE SWEDENBORG RITE

According to Ragon, Emanuel Swedenborg, in 1721, established a Theosophic Rite of Elected Cohens or Priests at Stockholm, consisting of seven Degrees, the last being Kadosh Templar, or Holy Man. The first four Degrees are said to have been symbolical of the First Temple, and ceremonially represented man's creation, disobedience, punishment, and pain of body and spirit; while the remaining three Degrees were symbolical of the Second Temple, and taught how man by a new holy and exemplary life might be restored to his primitive dignity. Samuel Beswick, an English Freemason, amplified these statements in a volume he published, entitled Swedenborg and Phremasonry, in which he stated that Swedenborg, in 1707, when attending the University of Lund, was initiated into Freemasonry at Lunden, Sweden, taking the Chapter Degrees in the Scottish Rite and affiliating with the Stockholm Chapter on his return home. He then goes on to say:

From the time of his initiation and receiving the other Degrees of the Order, the records of the Masonic Lodges in Sweden show that Swedenborg was a constant visitor to the Chapters of Lunden, Stockholm, Strasslund and Christianstadt, his visits to these Lodges having been traced through a period of about 30 years, up to 1740.

Some ten years after Swedenborg's initiation into Freemasonry, the character of the Order in England underwent a change, Operative Masonry being superseded by Speculative Masonry, while members of other trades and also of the professions, began to join it and, gradually, it began to assume the spirit and form it now possesses. Knowing that Swedenborg was intimate with King Charles XII, the Brethren in England solicited him to urge upon that monarch the desirability of a similar change in the Order in Sweden. Swedenborg accepted the mission and was successful in establishing Lodges and Encampments [i.e. Knight Templar Preceptories] in Sweden, under the sanction of royal authority but, being only temporary and without charters and the meetings being dependent upon the convenience of the chiefs, it fell into disuse after the death of Charles, whose life was suddenly terminated by a shot while conducting, in person, a siege under the walls of Frederickshall in the year 1718.

It is a very pretty story but, unhappily, there is no proof for any of the statements made by Samuel Beswick. Swedenborg was born at Stockholm on January 29, 1688, his father then occupying the position of Chaplain of the Horse Guards, becoming Court Chaplain shortly afterwards. In 1692 the father was appointed Professor in the University of Upsala and was promoted to the office of Dean of the University in 1694 and, in 1702, became Bishop of Skara, which appointment he held for thirty-three years. Before Emanuel Swedenborg's favourite sister, Anna, had completed her seventeenth year (she was sixteen months older than Emanuel) she married Dr. (afterwards Bishop) Eric Benzelius, Librarian to the University of Upsala. "It was about this time," writes G. Trobridge, "that he [Emanuel] entered upon his college course, and the probability is, though direct evidence is wanting, that he resided with her until he left the University in 1709."

Moreover, there is conclusive proof that Freemasonry was not introduced into Sweden until after 1731, at the earliest date; that it was forbidden throughout that country on pain of death in 1738; that there are no further traces of it, and then only faint, until 1740; and that it was not placed on a firm footing until 1752.

One other statement by Samuel Beswick must be quoted. In another part of his book he says :

On December 27, 1737, when the Brethren were assembled at the Festival of St. John, in the Rue de Deux Ecus, Paris, several arrests were made and some of the officers were imprisoned. Among the arrested was Swedenborg, who had been invited to be present. But, being only a visitor and a foreigner, he was released and admonished. He was at once placed under police surveillance, which gave him so much annoyance that, on March 12, 1738, he deemed it prudent to quit Paris.

This story is correct, save for the Swedenborg part. He was in Paris from September 3, 1736, to March 12, 1738, and he has left a very detailed account of his travels and visit; but he nowhere speaks of any Masonic acquaintances, nor does he mention having been arrested or placed under police surveillance. Dr. Tafel, the eminent Swedenborgian historian, points out that in Swedenborg's own private papers and manuscripts there is not a single reference to Freemasonry, nor any note whatever about his having visited any Masonic Lodge in any of the places mentioned by Beswick.

What, then, is the authority for the erroneous statements? This information is supplied by Dr. Tafel, in vol. iii of his Documents Concerning Swedenborg, in the following passage :

In the archives of the Chapter in Christiansand, there is an old book of records containing the Minutes of a Convention, or Lodge, held in Wittshöfle, June 5, 1787. King Gustavus III and his brother, Duke Charles of Sodermanland [Charles XIII], were present and the latter presided at the Lodge. Many Brethren from the southern part of Sweden, from Stockholm, Pomerania, Griefswalde and Stralsmund were present. The names of the officers that presided at the meeting are also given. Among other things, the minutes said that the first Brother of the Watch, Lieut.-Col. and Knight Hatzar Wedemar, upon this occasion, delivered a lecture on Masonry, which was listened to by all with great attention and interest. In this lecture he mentioned the writings of Assessor Emanuel Swedenborg and spoke of his career as a Freemason; that he visited Charles XII in Altenstadt, in order to have the high Order of Masonry introduced into Sweden; that Wedemar himself had visited the Lodge in Sweden, which Swedenborg joined at the beginning of the year 1706, and that the signature of his name is in the register of the Lodge. The minutes state further that the King and the Duke were both aware of the fact that Swedenborg had been a member of the Order and the same was also known to the other Brethren who were present. The Lodge which Swedenborg joined, and which bears his name, is No. 6, London. In the German work, called Latomia, which appeared in Leipzig, in the Department of Nice, there is an article relating all the particulars of Swedenborg's reception into the Order.

There never was a Lodge on the English register that bore the name of Swedenborg. If Lund or Lunden, in Sweden, is meant, there is no record that Swedenborg was ever a student at that University. All his biographers, including William White and Trobridge, the two principal authorities, agree that he was educated at the University of Upsala, where, in 1709, he graduated as Doctor of Philosophy, at the age of twenty-one years; and the Latin Dissertation, which he wrote for that degree, was printed and dedicated to his father in words of warm affection.

Another writer who has taken a line similar to Beswick is Reghellini di Schio, and, probably, the real explanation of the matter is to be found in the statement of Dr. A. Kahl, Dean of Lund, who writes :

The agreement between the dogmas of Freemasonry and the New Jerusalem has, no doubt, led Reghellini di Schio to the idea that Swedenborg was one of the most celebrated reformers among the Masons and had himself founded a Lodge of nine Degrees. The assertion, however, which is made in Reghellini's work, entitled La Maçonnerie considérée comme le résultat des religions égyptienne, juive et chrétienne lacks a historical basis. Swedenborg did not found, but some of his friends and disciples, Chastenier and Pernetz, have founded Masonic Lodges. And one result attained by their efforts is that within the ranks of Freemasonry they have attracted the ideas of men to the doctrine of the New Jerusalem, so that these doctrines have really exerted an influence upon the progress and development of the Order in Sweden as well as in other countries.

In the opinion of the late Dr. Carr, who made a special study of the various Rites (see The Freemason, October 3, 1925), the Swedenborgian Rite was founded by the Marquis de Thome, in 1783, as a modification of the Illuminati of Avignon, established in Avignon, in 1760, by Perneti, the Benedictine monk and Gabrinea, a Polish nobleman, who was a Freemason. This was largely based as to Rites and ceremonies on Swedenborg's teachings.

A point, worthy of consideration, is whether the Swedenborg Rite, as originally devised, was wholly the work of the Marquis of Thome, or whether it is not possible that some part was undertaken by Gustavus III, who, at the period of the revival and organization of Freemasonry, held, as monarch, the office of Vicarius Salomonis; his brother, the Duke of Sudermania, being Grand Master. Gustavus, unhappily, owing in a great measure to the absence of good home influences in his early days, fell a ready prey to charlatans and swindlers, such as Björnram, a disciple of Cagliostro; Haledin, another follower of Cagliostro, who had been sentenced to death for high treason, but who obtained ready audience of Gustavus, because he explained mesmerism in the light of the Swedenborgian philosophy; Ulfenklow—astrologer, chiromancer, geomancer, hydromancer, and spiritist; Palmstrich, "the true Theosophist by the grace of God" and alchemist, who lived in the perpetual hope of discovering the philosopher's stone; and Nordenskjöld, who persuaded the king to fit up a laboratory near Drottningholm for the making of gold. These and many other details are to be found in the histories of that period, particularly in Nisbet Bain's Gustavus III and His Times.

Practically all the authorities agree that the main features of the Rite are founded upon the doctrine of Correspondences, as revealed through Swedenborg's writings. Concerning the ritual, T. B. Whytehead, the well-known Masonic writer, wrote in The Freemason of March 5, 1881:

I have no knowledge of the Rite itself, other than that of having had the Rituals furnished to me some years ago, on payment of a guinea registration fee to a Lodge of the Order at Sheffield. The Rituals, I may add, are the veriest twaddle and the guinea was the worst spent money I ever disbursed.

The Rite was introduced into England in 1876, a Charter for the Supreme Grand Lodge and Temple for Great Britain and Ireland being granted by Col. W. J. B. McLeod and others of the Supreme Grand Lodge and Temple of the Dominion of Canada. The Lodge was declared and proclaimed at Freemasons' Hall, Manchester, on January 13, 1877 (see The Freemason, February 10, 1877), when John Yarker was appointed and installed as Grand Master; Kenneth R. H. Mackenzie, Grand Secretary; and Dr. Wynn Westcott was appointed Grand Senior Deacon. The Grand Lodge started with three subordinate Lodges, respectively at Manchester, Bristol and Baildon, but by August of the same year the number had increased to eight. The Rite, however, had but a short existence in England.

According to Beswick, the first Lodge in America was organized in February 1859, in the old Kane Lodge-room on Broadway, New York. It consisted, he says, of six Degrees, the first three corresponding to the first three of Craft Masonry and followed by: 4, Enlightened Freemason, or Green Brother; 5, Sublime Freemason, or Blue Brother; and 6, Perfect Freemason, or Red Brother. He also states that all the higher officers of the Lodge were Swedenborgians, although the Order was thrown open to all Masons of merit, without regard to their religious belief. Yarker, in Arcane Schools, p. 490, gave the credit for the introduction (he calls it "revival") of the Rite in the United States and Canada to Beswick himself. It may be added that the authorities of the Swedenborg Society disclaim any knowledge of or connexion with the Rite.

THE RITE OF MEMPHIS

The following are the authorities consulted: Mackey, s.v. Memphis; Mackenzie, s.v. Mizraim; Woodford, s.v. Memphis [from the pen of John Yarker, who should be the best authority. His statements with regard to the foundation of the Rite in 1814 and the participation therein of Grand Master Marconis, senior, cannot be accepted unquestioned. It seems impossible to pass over the testimony of Rebold, who was an actor in some of the occurrences related, also personally acquainted with Marconis, junior—even trying in 1852 to obtain the recognition of the Rite by the Grand Orient of France. To the objection that Marconis protested against Rebold's version and promised a refutation, did he ever attempt to keep his promise? if so, where can the refutation be consulted?]; Allgemeines Handbuch der Freimaurerei, s.v. Memphis, Marconis de Nègre, etc.; Em. Rebold, Histoire des Trois Grandes Loges, Paris, 1864, pp. 411 et seq. and pp. 592 et seq.; A. G. Jouast, Histoire du Grand Orient de France, Rennes and Paris, 1865, pp. 464 et seq.; J. How, Freemasons' Manual, 1881, pp. 359, 360, Sketch of the History of the Ancient and Primitive Rite, passim.

Jacques Etienne Marconis was initiated in the Rite of Misraim at Paris April 21, 1833, being then twenty-seven years of age; he was expelled therefrom June 27, 1833. Removing to Lyons, he founded in 1836 a Lodge of this same Rite, Benevolence, under the name of Le Nègre, a nickname which had been conferred on his father on account of his dark complexion. Concealing his identity under this pseudonym, he was advanced to the 66th Degree of Misraim; but being ultimately discovered, was once more expelled May 27, 1838. There is, however, no reason (says Rebold) to assume that the cause of these exclusions reflects upon his moral character.

He then applied himself to fabricate the Rite of Memphis and, as that of Misraim counted 90 Degrees, he resolved to give his 95, which number was afterwards increased to 97, if we include the office of Grand Hierophant, which he appropriated to himself. This title, however, he declared had been held by his father—Gabriel Matheu Marconis (de Nègre)—whom he claimed to have succeeded—one of the items of the legendary history which he constructed at this time to endow the Rite with a slight flavour of antiquity. His first efforts to establish the Rite in Belgium were fruitless but, in 1838, he founded a Lodge at Paris, Disciples of Memphis; a Grand Lodge Osiris, in 1839; a Chapter Philadelphians; and a Lodge, Sages of Heliopolis. In 1839 he published the Statutes and founded two Lodges at Brussels. On the persistent demands of his rivals of Misraim the police closed his Lodges May 17, 1840. In 1848, the political situation being more favourable, he set himself once more to work and, in 1849, founded and revived three Lodges, a Council and a Chapter, in Paris; but the Belgian Lodges could not be galvanized into life. He removed to London in 1850 and, after much trouble, succeeded in founding a Lodge in 1851, naming F. J. Berjeau as Grand Master for Great Britain. In 1851—December 23—the French police once more forced him to close his Lodges. In consequence, the seat of government was transferred to London in 1853, many celebrated French refugees joining the Rite for a time; among others Louis Blanc. The membership, however, deteriorating in quality, Berjeau dissolved the association and Marconis thought it prudent to decline responsibility for its past acts. In 1850 and 1854 a Chapter and a Council had been established in New York. In 1852 Marconis induced Rebold to attempt to persuade the French Grand Orient to recognize the Rite, but the negotiations failed. In 1860 Marconis proceeded to New York to supervise matters there and, on July 14, established a Grand Lodge at Troy, in the State of New York, under the style of Disciples of Memphis. So far Rebold, but according to How, J. F. Marconis, Grand Hierophant, inaugurated the Rite in person, at New York, in 1857 and, afterwards, in 1862, chartered it as a Sovereign Sanctuary, by which body a Charter was granted on January 3, 1872, for another Sovereign Sanctuary in and for the British Islands, whose officers were duly installed October 8 in the same year. The Degrees of the Rite, we learn from the Knepb (the official organ) were nominally and temporarily reduced from 95 Degrees to 33 Ceremonies, by omitting the rest of those conferred only in name. Rebold tells us, that some members of the Lodge, established at London in 1851, formed themselves into an independent Grand Lodge of the Rite—the Grand Lodge of Philadelphians—also that the members were refused recognition as Masons by the Grand Lodge of England October 24, 1859. In 1862 Marshal Magnan, Grand Master of France, issued a circular to all Masons—dissenters from Grand Orient. Marconis, on the part of one of his dormant Lodges, demanded recognition and affiliation; it was granted December 30, 1862, from which date his Symbolic Lodges formed part of the Grand Orient and the whole system was supposed to come under the supervision of that Grand Body. As, however, the Grand Orient never made any arrangements for granting Warrants for Chapters, Councils, etc., of this Rite, it became practically extinct from that day, although some few Lodges professed to adhere to the system till, in 1868, the last two remaining Lodges gave up the pretence and frankly embraced the French Rite. The Rite, under the designation of Ancient and Primitive, was till recently worked, though feebly, in America, Rumania, Italy and Egypt; according to an official statement, repeated in every number of the Knepb (now defunct)—“France [having] abandoned the Rite and the Hierophant, J. E. Marconis, 33-97°, having died in 1868, Egypt took full possession. The Craft Grand Lodge, our Ancient and Primitive Rite and the Ancient and Accepted Rite, executed a Tripartite Treaty to render mutual aid and restored the Sovereign Grand Mystic Temple—Imperial Council General 96°, presided over by a Grand Hierophant, 97°.” But to judge from the Knepb, the various nationalities did not appear to work together very harmoniously. In that publication John Yarker was described as Most Illustrious Grand Master-General, 33-96° and, in 1875, the Sovereign Sanctuary of which he was the head, sanctioned the communication of the Degrees of Misraim to members of the Rite of Memphis, the former having no separate governing body in this country.

THE RITE OF MISRAIM

As regards the institution of this Rite, there is some difference of opinion among the authorities, the principal of which are the following: Allgemeines Handbuch der Freimaurerei, s.v. Bédarride, Bégue-Clavel, Joly, Misraim; Mackey and Mackenzie's Encyclopædias; Kenning's Encyclopædia, s.v. Misraim; G. Kloss, Geschichte der Freimaurerei in Frankreich, vol. ii, pp. 32-38, 53-55, 150-54; Rebold, Histoire des trois Grandes Loges, pp. 573 et seq.; Clavel, Histoire Pittoresque de la Francmaçonnerie, 1843, p. 214. The discrepancies, however, extend over only a few years and there is virtual unanimity in dating its introduction into France at about the year 1814. Some attribute it to Bédarride; others maintain he was merely the chief propagator. The exact date of origin being of minor importance, it will be sufficient if we follow the account of Bégue-Clavel, himself a member as early as 1810 of the 89°.

In 1805 a Grand Orient was founded at Milan and, shortly afterwards, a Supreme Council of the Ancient and Accepted Rite. A certain Lechangeur was admitted to the so-called High Degrees, but being refused any share in the control of the highest, in revenge manufactured the Rite of Misraim, a system of 90 Degrees, of which he, of course, became the head. Three Brothers Bédarride of Avignon, the home of Hermeticism, were amongst others admitted by him or his substitutes. Michel Bédarride on December 3, 1810, received the 73° and, on June 25, 1811, the 77°. Marc Bédarride the 77° on January 3, 1810. Lechangeur would not give them the 90°, but a rival camp had already been formed under a certain Polacq at Venice, who conferred the 90° on Michel September 1, 1812. Lechangeur dying, appointed as his successor Theodore Gerber of Milan, who gave Michel a Warrant of Propaganda October 12, 1812. Joseph Bédarride now joined his two brothers and the scene was transferred to Paris in 1813, where several members were enlisted. Here they found rivals in Garcia and Decollet, who had arrived some time previously. The Bédarrides, however, gained the protection of Count Muraire and conferred the Degrees (honorary) on a great many members of the Ancient and Accepted Rite. By these means they crushed their rivals. Fernig, one of the chief men of the Ancient and Accepted Rite, received the 90° in 1818; Thory, of the Grand Orient, the Supreme Council 33° and the Scots Philosophic Rite, in 1815; Count de Cazes, Minister of Police and Duke Bernhard of Saxe-Weimar, in 1817. In the list of 1821-1822 we find the Duke of Sussex, Grand Master of England, the Duke of Leinster and the Duke of Atholl.

In 1816 the Grand Lodge of the Rainbow was founded in Paris and, as a fresh convert, Ragon, founder of the Parisian Lodge Trinosophes, a celebrated Masonic author, may be mentioned. Joly and Bégue-Clavel, equally celebrated as authors, had been enlisted much earlier. Morrison of Greenfield was also for a time a member. It is unnecessary to follow the history of this Rite in detail. From the very first, all the money went into the pockets of the three brothers and accounts were never rendered, because they declared that the receipts were not sufficient to pay the interest on the original outlay. At the time of Marc Bédarride's death in 1846 this debt was supposed, according to his statement, to have swollen with compound interest to 131,793 francs; but no deductions had apparently ever been made for fees received. Of course the brothers were continually at strife with their disciples. In 1816 Joly headed a rival Grand Body of the Rite and tried vainly to induce the Grand Orient to acknowledge and incorporate it. De Grasse-Tilly, however, the head of the Ancient and Accepted Rite and others supported the Bédarrides, who ultimately vanquished Joly's party. Lodges were established in Holland, but suppressed by Prince Frederick, Grand Master of the Netherlands. In France; however, they succeeded in establishing quite a number of Lodges. In 1820, 1821 and 1822 the three brothers travelled all over Europe to introduce their Rite—they had meanwhile become bankrupt and this commerce constituted their whole source of income—establishing a dozen and more Lodges in France and Switzerland, besides innumerable Councils. In 1822, for having inadvertently contravened an unimportant police regulation, they were, at the instance of the Grand Orient, refused permission to assemble and the Rite became dormant throughout France. After the Revolution of 1830 the brothers Marc and Michel obtained leave to reopen their Lodges; but although they succeeded in their efforts, there was then little life in the system. The greater part of the prominent Masons—some few of whom have been mentioned—had long previously retired from the Rite; most of them had only had the certificate of the 90° conferred on them without ever assisting at a meeting of the members; and the character of the brothers Bédarride was, by this time, tolerably well known. At length Michel, the last surviving brother, feeling his end approaching, appointed Dr. Hayère as his successor on January 24, 1856 and bequeathed to him the claim against the Rite, by this time reduced to 77,000 francs, on condition of his paying his debts. Hayère on March 29, 1856, cancelled the bond in favour of the association, which, on its part, paid off Bédarride's debts, amounting to some 5,000 francs. Relieved of this incubus and under the honourable rule of its new Grand Master, the Rite once more lifted up its head; the quality of its members improved; and, although not wielding much influence, became an independent body in France and a rival of the Grand Orient and of the Supreme Council 33°. It also obtained a more or less precarious footing in some other countries.

EMPERORS OF THE EAST AND WEST

It is perhaps not a matter of great importance whether this system was merely a development of the Chapter of Clermont or a totally distinct organization. The Chapter of Clermont was founded in 1754. In 1755, the Grand Lodge of France admitted the superiority of the Supplementary Degrees—owing, it may be supposed, to the influence exercised in that body by the Chapter members. In 1756 the Knights of the East arose. In 1758, we first hear of the Emperors, whereas the Clermont Chapter is no longer mentioned. The probability is—it must be remembered that in the absence of contemporary documents early French Masonic history can be carried no higher—that the Chapter of Clermont composed of the higher classes, ruled the Grand Lodge; that in 1756 the plebeian Knights were erected as a counterpoise, outbidding the Chapter in the number of Degrees, but rejecting the Templar connexion; that, in 1758, the Chapter added further Degrees and developed into the Council of the Emperors of the East and West, Sovereign Prince Masons, Substitutes General of the Royal Art, Grand Surveillants and Officers of the Grand Sovereign Lodge of St. John of Jerusalem. Their system also took the title of Heredom of Perfection. The very name of Emperors looks like an attempt to outbid the Knights and East and West like an improvement on East only. In 1762 the Knights formed an improved Council, comprising many officers of Grand Lodge and appear to have ousted the Emperors from the supreme power. The Emperors, although not possessing so many of the elective officers of Grand Lodge, yet numbered among themselves some of the highest of those nominated by the Grand Master, the Count de Clermont; for instance, Chaillon de Jonville, the Grand Master's Substitute General; and Lacorne, his Substitute Particular. In consequence of this defeat Lacorne appears to have formed a dissenting Grand Lodge, with which the Emperors sided. It lasted, however, only a few months. A reconciliation was effected under Jonville and Lacorne disappears from the scene. In 1765 the elections in Grand Lodge favoured the Emperors. Quarrels arose and the most demonstrative—apparently on both sides—were expelled in 1766, about the same time as the Grand Lodge sought to put an end to all bickering and strife by a decree of August 14, 1766, forbidding its Lodges to practise the Chapter Degrees. The Emperors, thus left in possession of the field, managed to get this decree annulled on October 2, 1766 and then proposed a fusion of their Council with the Grand Lodge. All efforts in that direction were, however, rendered void by the compulsory closing of Grand Lodge in February 1767. Meanwhile, if we are to believe copies produced by De Grasse-Tilly some fifty years later—the originals have never been seen—the Sovereign Council of Paris united, in 1762, with their own offspring, the Sovereign Council of Princes of the Royal Secret at B——, to formulate in that city the Grand Constitutions of the system, or Rite of Perfection, or Heredom, or of Emperors of the East and West, for all these names refer to the same association. According to these Statutes the Rite was built up of 25 Degrees in 7 classes: the first class comprised Freemasonry; the second, 5 additional Degrees; in the fourth class, 13°, we find Knight of the Royal Arch; in the fifth class, 15°, Knight of the East; 17°, Knight of East and West; 18°, Sovereign Prince Rose Croix; and the 25° and last of the seventh class was the Sovereign Prince of the Royal Secret. The other Degrees may here be omitted. These Constitutions are still acknowledged by the Ancient and Accepted Rite 33° as the groundwork of their present system.

The account of the above quarrels is given on the authority of Kloss who has devoted astonishing patience to the elucidation of the matter. It would be more satisfactory if the name of Brest-de-la-Chaussée was not found as a member of both organizations and that of Daubertin among the expelled Brethren; Daubantin, probably identical with him, being one of the principal members of the Emperors. Again, Labady was also one of the expelled, yet he is afterwards found working for the Emperors. It is certain, however, that the Emperors retained sufficient influence, in 1766, to propose a fusion in the October sitting of Grand Lodge and that the Knights from that time lose their importance as a body.

In 1772 the Grand Lodge having resumed work under the supreme authority of the Duc de Chartres, at the same time Grand Master of the Emperors, a commission was given to four members of the Council, among them Labady, their Grand Secretary, to propose again a fusion of the two systems in the next general meeting of Grand Lodge, which fusion was finally effected on August 9, 1772. But about this time two Grand Bodies were formed in France out of the members of the Grand Lodge, viz. the Grand Orient and the Grand Lodge. The latter maintained that it was the original authority. The Emperors sided with it and, as far as can be ascertained, worked their Supplementary Degrees under its authority. The last heard of the Emperors consists of some circulars issued in 1780 inveighing against all Degrees not included in their own system. They had, meanwhile, changed their title to Sovereign Council Mother-Lodge of Excellent Masons, formerly called Scottish Mother-Lodge of the French Grand Globe. The French Revolution, no doubt, put an end to them, as it practically did to the Grand Lodge itself, of which they formed part—they were, however, soon succeeded by their Americanized offspring, the Ancient and Accepted Rite 33°.

KNIGHTS OF THE EAST

The only real attempt to arrive at the true facts concerning this, one of the earliest systems of "improved" Masonry, has been made by Dr. Kloss. Thory, Mackey and Woodford have almost entirely overlooked the separate existence of these Knights—"Sovereign Princes of Masonry"; either confusing them with certain special Degrees of other systems, or treating them as an offshoot of the Emperors of the East and West. Even the usually diffuse Handbuch is excessively meagre in the information which it supplies. Yet if Kloss's extensive and minute researches are to be given their just weight, it is to the rivalry between the Knights and the Emperors that must be attributed the sorrowful picture of discord presented by the Grand Lodge of France, 1760-80.

In 1755 the Grand Lodge of France admitted the superiority of and the privileges claimed for, the so-called Scots Masons. It may not be far wrong in ascribing this concession to the influence in Grand Lodge of the members of the Chapter of Clermont, established the previous year, 1754. From all that is known of this Chapter, it was probably composed only of the high nobility, courtiers, military officers and the élite of the professions. Under these circumstances one might expect to find a rival association formed by the middle classes and less highly placed officials. In 1756 such an association was instituted, calling itself Knights of the East, Princes and Sovereigns of Masonry. At first its separate subdivisions were termed colleges, taking their title from their president; the chief college being that of Valois at Paris. Who this Valois was is still undiscovered; but it appears almost certain, from the few names that have survived, that the membership of the Knights was recruited in great part from the lower middle class. Titled members, such as the Baron Tschoudy, may be met with, but are exceptions. Article 2 of its Statutes provides that the high position of Sovereign shall be held for a year by each Brother in turn. Article 7. In like manner as the Scottish Masters are the Grand Superiors of the Masonic Order, so are the Knights of the East, the born princes of the complete order. Article 8. A travelling Knight of the East may, where no Lodge exists, dispense the light of the first six Degrees to a Master Mason. From this it may be concluded that there were at least seven Degrees beyond the Master's; or, at least, ten in all, thus improving on the Chapter de Clermont by three Degrees.

In 1762 a quarrel arose in the College Valois, which finally led to its deposition from the position of ruling body and to the establishment of a Sovereign Council of the Knights of the East. Pirlet, a Parisian tailor, was, apparently, the prime mover of this revolution. The following Officers of the Grand Lodge of France were members of this council: the Grand Keeper of the Seal, Brest de la Chaussée; the President; one of the Grand Wardens; the Grand Orator; the Secretary General; and the Grand Secretary. Kloss produces other reasons for believing that this date marks the decline in Grand Lodge of the influence of the aristocratic Emperors, established 1758 and the rise of that of the middle-class Knights. In 1764, Pirlet had already deserted the new Council to become a leading member of the rival Emperors. In 1766, however, the Knights would appear to have been once more beaten by the Emperors, when many of their members were expelled. The Council revenged itself by issuing a circular to all Lodges, conjuring them to cease working Templar Degrees. The Emperors were probably a continuation of the Chapter of Clermont and certainly did work Templar Degrees. The Knights evidently did not. In 1767 the quarrels of the two parties reached a climax and, in the same year, the government issued an edict dissolving the Grand Lodge altogether. From that date the Knights, as a body, cease to wield any great influence though many of their members play important parts at a later period.

THE ILLUMINATI

The secret society of the Illuminati of Bavaria is connected with the Masonic Brotherhood by the feeblest thread imaginable. Nevertheless some space must be devoted to the consideration of its history, because its suppression entailed the extinction of Freemasonry throughout Bavaria and a great part of Southern Germany, a blow from which, after the lapse of a century, the Fraternity had not recovered.

Professor Adam Weishaupt was born at the university town of Ingolstadt in Bavaria, February 6, 1748. He attended the schools there, which were directed by the Jesuits—expelled in 1773—but instead of becoming their disciple acquired a bitter hatred of the Order and of its aims. In 1772 and 1775 he was appointed to important chairs in the university in place of his former teachers and this fact, together with his well-known disapproval of their doctrines, earned him the implacable enmity of the followers of Loyola, to whose intrigues he was incessantly exposed. He then conceived the idea of combating his foes with their own weapons and forming a society of young men, enthusiastic in the cause of humanity, who should gradually be trained to work as one man to one end—the destruction of evil and the enhancement of good in this world. Unfortunately he had unconsciously imbibed that pernicious doctrine that the end justifies the means—erroneously ascribed to the Jesuits—and his whole plan reveals the effects of that teaching. His disciples were gradually to be prepared for the great work and those who were deemed fit to be admitted. Each novice knew none of his companions, only his immediate teacher. After the proper schooling he was advanced a step and learned to know others, till he himself became a teacher. Throughout the whole system a course of espionage prevailed,—each member reported on the others to his immediate superior, who reported again higher up; oral and written confession to one's superior was inculcated; and, finally, all the threads converged in Weishaupt's own hands. He subsequently confessed that he had determined to use the weapons of his enemies, but which he meant to employ for good purposes only. He does not appear to have foreseen that he was creating an imperium in imperio—a dangerous secret society—which, had it increased, might have been as great a foe to all good government as the Jesuits themselves, an engine which he was not personally strong enough to direct, whereas if the control fell into the hands of unscrupulous leaders, its effects were bound to be inexpressibly mischievous. The man himself was without guile, ignorant of men, knowing them only by books, a learned professor, an enthusiast who took a wrong course in all innocence and the faults of his head have been heavily visited upon his memory in spite of the rare qualities of his heart.

The first members of the new society were enrolled May 1, 1766 and, at that time, none of them were Freemasons, although Weishaupt confesses that he had conceived a very high estimate of the Craft. In the early part of 1777, however, he was initiated in a Strict Observance Lodge in Munich—Lodge of Caution—and it is therefore not surprising to find that he afterwards destined the Craft to play a very subordinate rôle in his system. One of his followers, Franz Xaver von Zwackh—initiated November 27, 1788—is said to have proposed to utilize Freemasonry, to which Weishaupt agreed, arranging that all the Areopagites or leaders of divisions in the first series should pass through the Degrees of the Craft and, if capable, be further initiated in the so-called Scots Degree. For those who proved unworthy of further trust this was to be the end. They were not to be allowed to suspect any further development. The elect, however, were to pass on into the directing Degrees. So far, the operations had been confined to Southern and Roman Catholic Germany; but, in 1780, the Marquis Costanzo von Costanzo, a Privy Councillor of Karl Theodore, Elector of Bavaria, was deputed to carry the propaganda into North Germany. In Frankfort he made the acquaintance of the Baron von Knigge—a Saxe-Weimar Privy Councillor, a celebrated novelist and a lovable enthusiast, who was gifted with a most ingratiating address (born 1752; died 1796). Knigge was initiated at Cassel in 1772 and received the high Templar Degrees in 1779, which he found disappointing. Costanzo revealed the existence of the Illuminati to him and he entered heart and soul into the spirit of the project. It is remarkable that all the prominent members of this association were estimable men, both in public and private life. Knigge was under the impression that the society was of some standing, not the creation of yesterday. His enthusiasm made converts in every direction of the better class of Masons, who were rapidly becoming tired of the Strict Observance and its aimless pursuits. These converts, after some time, naturally demanded of Knigge the Rituals, etc., of the new Freemasonry, when he found, to his consternation, that Weishaupt had so far only perfected the Minerval Degrees, or those preparatory to the Craft which, as above said, was to act as a filter and reservoir for the advanced Degrees. Weishaupt had, however, made a large collection of materials which he unreservedly placed in Knigge's hands for elaboration. Knigge worked at these and, meanwhile, at the Wilhelmsbad Congress, made another important convert of Bode, of whom something is said in another connexion. The Rituals completed, Weishaupt and Knigge quarrelled over the details and the consequent retirement of the latter in 1784 was the first deadly blow to the organization. At this time the system was arranged as follows :

- A. Nursery.—1°, Preparatory Literary Essay; 2°, Novitiate; 3°, Minerval Degree; 4°, Minor Illuminatus; 5°, Magistratus.
- B. Symbolic Masonry.—1°, Apprentice; 2°, Fellow Craft; 3°, Master; 4°, Scot—divided into Major Illuminatus and Directing Illuminatus.
- C. Mysteries.—1°, Lesser; a., Priest; b., Prince; 2°, Greater; a., Magus; b., Rex (these latter were never completed).

By this time the association had created a great stir. The Masonic Rosicrucians and the suppressed Jesuits made open war upon it in public print and by private intrigue. The good intentions of the leaders were skilfully repressed; the dangerous organization of the society was as skilfully revealed. The first mutterings of the ominous thundercloud of Revolution were already making themselves heard across the French frontier and statesmen were fully justified in dispersing the society of the Illuminati, although all its enemies' accusations of revolutionary tendencies may confidently and absolutely be disbelieved. A rejected candidate, Strobl, a publisher, printed a pamphlet in 1783 denouncing the society; the Lodge of the Three Globes issued a circular warning Masons against it in the same year; several professors and men of learning, who had seen the impracticability and danger of the scheme, publicly recanted about the same time. On June 22, 1784, an Electoral edict suppressed not only the Illuminati, but likewise all Freemasonry throughout Bavaria. Both Masons and Illuminati obeyed and even offered to produce all their papers as a proof of innocence. They were not afforded the opportunity of clearing themselves. A second edict followed, March 2, 1785, although it is an historical fact that both societies had scrupulously obeyed the first. Then followed an era of persecution; the unfortunate accused were denied the privilege of trial and, with the exception of those very highly placed, languished for years in prison. Weishaupt was forced to fly, leaving his wife in childbed and took refuge with Duke Ernest II of Saxe-Gotha, a Freemason, to whom he became Councillor, dying in 1830. Costanzo was cashiered and exiled to Italy; Zwackh fled. The Illuminati ceased to exist and, with them, Freemasonry in the South of Germany. This is the only reason which renders them of interest. Their influence, such as it was, came to an end and no trace of it ever reappeared. But this influence must not be appraised too highly. No writer claims a larger membership than 2,000 for the society. On its roll, however, there were some of the greatest names of the age, though its whole existence extended over less than ten years.

THE PHILALETES, OR SEARCHERS FOR TRUTH AND THE PHILADELPHIANS, OR PRIMITIVE RITE OF NARBONNE

The multiplicity and confusion of rites and systems in France and throughout the continent of Europe gave rise, circa 1770, to a curious effort to probe their value, the outcome of which was an apparently new combination of Degrees under the above titles. The Paris Lodge of the Amis Réunis was constituted April 23, 1771 and, shortly afterwards, directed a commission of its members to draw up a plan of operations to assist them in ascertaining the truth. This plan was ready in 1775, from which date the Lodge took the title of Philaletes, or Searchers for Truth. Their system comprised twelve classes, to each of which a ceremony of admission was attached. The first three classes consisted of the three Degrees of Freemasonry; the 12th and last was called Master of all Grades. But the Brethren refused to recognize the last nine classes as Degrees; they were merely societies for the study of all known Masonic Degrees and their object was to establish Freemasonry on a clear and sound basis. That the higher classes became ultimately tinged with a pronounced touch of alchemy, Theosophy, Martinism and Swedenborgianism, must be ascribed to the tendencies of the times, not to the intentions of the founders. Among the prominent members may be mentioned Court de Gabelin, the Landgrave Frederick Louis of Hesse-Darmstadt, Baron Gleichen, Count Stroganoff, Tassen de l'Etang, Willermoz and, above all, Savalette de Langes, Keeper of the Royal Treasure, the life and soul of the whole movement. In the course of a few years the Lodge affiliated upwards of twenty Lodges and Chapters to its system and formed a remarkable library of works especially rich in Rituals and hermetic writings.

In 1780 a somewhat similar society was formed at Narbonne, which took the name of Philadelphians, Lodge and Chapter of the Primitive Rite. It was established by a Chevalier Pen, Grand Officier de l'Orient des Free and Accepted Masons, in the name of the Supérieurs généraux majeurs et mineurs de l'ordre des Free and Accepted Masons. Who Pen was, whence he obtained his wonderful title and authority, are unknown; but, from the use of English words in the above designation, it is reasonable to conclude that he represented his authority as derived from some supposed English body. The Narbonne Brethren divided their system into three classes, comprising all the known Degrees. They were unattached to any Grand Orient and founded no subordinate or daughter Lodges. In 1784 they concluded a Concordat with the Philaletes of Paris, which declared that the two systems followed the same object under similar although not identical forms.

In 1784 the Philaletes issued invitations to a Masonic Convent in Paris.

One hundred and twenty-eight prominent Masons—of whom only twenty-eight belonged to their own system—were invited to appear and return answers to ten questions of Masonic interest. The Convent lasted from February 15 to May 26, under the presidency of Savalette de Langes, without, however, much furthering the object in view. From March 8 to May 26, 1787, a second and equally fruitless Convent to answer thirteen questions was held. From this time the system appears to have become contaminated with tendencies towards magic, etc. and to have lost its pristine vigour. We hear of it again in 1792, at which date De Langes was still alive. After his death Roëttiers de Montaleau, one of the foremost Masons of France, vainly endeavoured to galvanize it into fresh life. The French Revolution utterly dispersed its members and their splendid library was destroyed. In 1806 a large number of its more valuable books and manuscripts were discovered by Thory and purchased for the Mother-Lodge of the Scots Philosophic Rite.

The Narbonne Philadelphians survived the Revolution and, in 1806, affiliated with the Grand Orient. From that date the Rite ceased to be worked. The Lodge itself was still in existence in 1810, but is now extinct.

THE NEW OR GOLD ROSICRUCIANS

This association, which invaded and, for some twenty years, perverted Freemasonry—(1770-90 circa)—must not be confounded with the Rose Croix Grade found in so many systems of Ineffable (?) Masonry, neither is there any strong reason to connect its first beginnings with the isolated adepts or small coteries of alchemists who existed (especially in South Germany) both before and after that time. It is more probable that at first some few dabblers in Hermeticism, failing to transmute the metals into gold according to the rules of the art, decided to procure in a still less legitimate, but more practical manner, a transfer of the latter into their own pockets from those of their victims. The movement arose in South Germany about the year 1756. Mysterious hints were thrown out and, unfortunately, among the first to be deluded were some enthusiastic and well-meaning Freemasons. Gradually the plan grew more detailed. Grades were manufactured, initiatory ceremonies invented, fees established and a widely reaching system developed. Each new Brother knew only his "Master"; in return for his hard cash he received foolish chemical formulæ. If his own knowledge led him to hint at their worthlessness, he was told to be less forward and behave himself properly and, like a good child, ask no questions. Occasionally he was advanced a Degree, perhaps became the head of a circle and, if of no further use, was never raised any higher, so that he could not say that the pretended knowledge of the "Unknown Fathers" was a fraud. If too importunate, his superiors ceased to answer his letters. In the slang of the system "he lost his Father." If he showed himself unscrupulous as well as importunate, he was admitted behind the scenes and helped to swindle others. Absolute obedience in all things was enjoined. The whole plan of operations was directed to foster superstition and the subjection of the human intelligence. Hence the enmity of these Rosicrucians towards the Illuminati of Bavaria.

The Rosicrucians, of course, gave out that they had been the originators of Freemasonry; that the Craft was designed as a nursery for adepts; that in the Higher Degrees the symbols would receive their true interpretation and so on; that, ultimately, the true adept would not only be able to make gold, brew the elixir of life, command spirits white, black and grey, but would absolutely incorporate himself with God and partake of the knowledge, prescience and power of the Deity. Every ten years the Fathers were supposed to meet and decide what was to be revealed during the following decade. Unfortunately the times were propitious, alchemy was still believed in, mesmerism was at its height and the Templar descent theory was commencing to prove unsatisfactory. Hundreds of the best men in Germany were deluded into joining, along with scores of the worst. Some of each class were disappointed, but some were buoyed up even unto the end. Those of the first class retired in grief or disgust; those of the second—from being pigeons became rooks. Yet a third class, without actually sharing the pecuniary spoils, worked the system to secure influence with the princes of Europe and thus provide good posts for themselves and friends. Wöllner was apparently one of this class, although most writers give him a still worse reputation.

The first active apostle of this system was J. G. Schrepfer, an ex-hussar, of good manners and boundless impudence, but without education and possessed of a violent temper. In 1768 he opened a coffee-house in Leipzig; in 1772 held a Scots Lodge at his house and based on it the Rosicrucian Degrees. His forte was "calling spirits from the vasty deep"; and they came. Their appearance was so realistic that, shortly previous to Mrs. Schrepfer becoming a mother, the materialized spirit was observed to be in a decidedly interesting condition. Schrepfer and his doings were treated with contumely by the Minerva Lodge of Leipzig and Schrepfer, in his arrogance, insulted the Lodge. Now Prince Karl, Duke of Courland, was a member of the Lodge and a highly placed military officer withal. He caused Schrepfer to be conducted to the guard-house and soundly cudgelled, taking a stamped receipt for the punishment—which was printed in the newspapers. But, in 1773, both the Duke and his friend Bischofswerder became converts and the Duke and the Seer were in the habit of promenading the open places arm in arm. In spite of his successes, however, Schrepfer spent his money too freely to become rich he quarrelled once more with the Lodge; a judicial inquiry by the members threatened exposure; and, on October 8, 1774, he gave his last séance; invited the Brethren to dinner; took a walk with them in the woods in the cool of the day, stepped aside and blew out his brains.

C. N. von Schröder (not to be confounded with F. L. Schroeder) joined in 1773 and, through him, the Lodges in Russia and Poland were corrupted. As he was never advanced to the highest Degrees, he must be regarded as having been more dupe than knave.

In 1777 the system obtained a footing in Prussia. Bischofswerder was a companion in arms of the Crown Prince Frederick William and obtained for Wöllner in 1782 the position of political teacher to the Prince. At the same time he made a Rosicrucian of him. Wöllner, who was Scots Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of the Three Globes, became the head of the movement in North Germany and, through his exertions, the whole system of the Three Globes was won over to the new cause. He even induced the Crown Prince to become a Rosicrucian, to the immense delight of the sect.

But the end was not to be avoided. From 1785 complaints of bad faith grew louder and invaded the public prints. Schröder rode post from St. Petersburg to Wöllner in Berlin, in order to procure some elixir for the Rosicrucian Schwarz, who was sick unto death. After much delay he obtained a precious bottle and posted back. Schwarz was dead without the medicine, but some animals to which it was administered died from its effects and an analysis proved that the smallest dose must inevitably be fatal to human life. The results were published by the indignant Schröder and helped to swell the storm of general dissatisfaction. The leaders published a circular, advising all Brothers to wait for the next general meeting in 1787—but that never took place—for the Unknown Fathers, seeing the beginning of the end, ordered a general silanum or cession of work, which immediately took effect in South Germany. Frederick William II—who had meanwhile ascended the throne—and Wöllner contrived to prop up the decaying edifice for a time in the Prussian States, but it gradually succumbed to destiny and disappeared entirely after the king's death in 1797.

THE GROTTO

The full title of this Order, which is open to all Master Masons, is the "Mystic Order of Veiled Prophets of the Enchanted Realm." It was founded in 1889 by Hamilton Lodge, No. 120, Hamilton, New York and the Grand Council was formed in the following year. The head of this Council is known as the Grand Monarch. Like the Mystic Shrine it, at one time, encountered severe criticism, even opposition, from the Masonic authorities, but the objectionable features have, of late years, been removed. It is unknown outside the United States.

THE SCIOTS

The Ancient Egyptian Order of Sciots is of Californian origin and, like the Grotto, is open to all Master Masons. It was founded in 1905 as a luncheon club where the members could discuss, unhampered by Lodge rules, the practical application of Masonic teachings. Its organization is akin to that of the Rotary movement, as only one "Pyramid" can be organized in any town. The presiding officer is known as Pharaoh, and all branches are governed by a Supreme Pyramid, whose principal officer is called the Supreme Pharaoh. This, also, is limited to America.

NEGRO MASONRY IN THE UNITED STATES

HAROLD V. B. VOORHIS

Negro Masonry in the United States dates its "official" existence from a Charter—known to Masonic historians as the Prince Hall Charter—granted by the Grand Lodge of England (Moderns) on September 29, 1784. It is made out for "African Lodge, No. 459" (see Freemasons' Calendar for 1785 listing 1784 Lodges and John Lane's Handy Book to the Lists of Lodges, page 96) and is extant, having been seen by the writer in October 1931.

Prince Hall was a coloured minister, born in Bridgetown, Barbados, West Indies on a date believed to be September 12, 1748. He came to the Colonies, Boston, Massachusetts, in March 1765, and soon after arrival became a leader among a group of "free" Negroes residing in the Colony. In 1775 (March 6 is the date often stated) he, with fourteen of the group, obtained the degrees of Freemasonry in a Lodge attached to one of the British regiments then encamped near Boston. Certain historians have stated that the Lodge was No. 58 on the Irish Register, but this has never been substantiated. Upon removal of the regiment to other territory, the officers of the Lodge attached thereto delivered to their Negro Brethren a "Permit" according them the privileges of attending divine service, including the celebration of the Feast of the Saints John, and the burial of their deceased, as Masons, but with no authority to confer any Degrees. This was in accordance with a Masonic custom of the period.

For about eleven years these coloured Brethren continued to gather upon various occasions and then they decided to Petition the Grand Lodge of England for a Charter of their own so that they could not only meet but become a regular Masonic Lodge and confer Degrees. Much discussion has ensued among Masonic historians as to whether this action resulted from the non-acceptance of the Negro Brethren into the white Lodges or whether the Negro Brethren resolved to set up a Lodge independent of them. This discussion, however, in nowise alters the facts.

The first overtures towards the receipt of a Charter were in the form of a letter sent by Prince Hall to William Moody, a Master of a London Lodge, on March 2, 1784. The letter was apparently successful in conveying the desires of the Negro Brethren through the proper channels because within six months from the date of the letter a Charter was granted by the Grand Lodge of England. Because of the loss of the original fee in transit and difficulties attending the receipt of this information and in sending a second fee, the Charter did not actually arrive in Boston until three years later. Then, on May 6, 1787, they assembled for the first time as a Chartered Lodge in what was termed "The Golden Fleece" located at 20 Water Street.

To trace the complicated organisation and progress of Negro Masonry through the labyrinth of new memberships, new Lodges, Grand Lodges and National Grand Lodge efforts from the date of their first Charter, and later their date of a declaration of independence in 1791, cannot be done within the compass of this digest. It is far more complex than the advance of white Freemasonry and infinitely more difficult to present—due to situations having no parallel elsewhere. Up to this point there is nothing particularly unlike other Masonic procedure of the time and the Lodge appears to have carried on like any other Masonic Lodge for about four years—everything being, "Masonically regular."

On June 21, 1791 a "General Assembly of the Craft" (Negro) was held at "The Golden Fleece" when, without any authority under its Charter nor permission from the Grand Lodge of England, a Grand or Mother Lodge, independent and sovereign, holding jurisdiction in other States and countries, over Negroes, was formed—recognising at the same time the original Grand Lodge of England as the Mother of the Craft throughout the world.

This action and the subsequent reaction upon both white and Negro Freemasonry in the United States (and elsewhere) has never been thoroughly understood by the majority of Masons because of the involved technical, jurisprudence and ancient custom matters connected with the subject. Several volumes would be needed to cover these matters fully. The action itself has caused formal discussion in several white Grand Lodges but no change in the situation ever resulted. This phase has practically no relation to the formation of the Negro Masonic organisations themselves, for in spite of the non-recognition by white Freemasons or Grand Lodges, Negro Masonry has continued its growth along with the former.

On March 29, 1797, Prince Hall, as Grand Master of "African Grand Lodge," established six years before, first used his power of Grand Master by granting a Dispensation to form a new Lodge—African Lodge, No. 459 in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. On June 24, of the same year a Warrant was issued for the Lodge and on the following day Hiram Lodge, No 3 in Providence, Rhode Island was Warranted. The issue of these two Warrants appear to be the only “ official ” acts of Prince Hall, as Grand Master, outside of Massachusetts. He continued in the office, however, until his death which occurred on December 7, 1807.

On July 24, 1808, one Nero Prince was elected Grand Master and the name of the Grand Lodge was changed to “ Prince Hall Grand Lodge ” in honour of their leader and first Grand Master. It is claimed that Nero Prince was a Russian and returned to his native country in 1811, but a search through the biographical material of the period reveals nothing to confirm this.

There are no further Records of any activity in the Prince Hall Grand Lodge from 1808 to 1824 but from external sources we find that on June 8, 1810, Union Lodge, No. 2 was Chartered in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania by the Prince Hall Grand Lodge, that Laurel Lodge, No. 5 in the same city was Chartered by them in 1811 and also Boyer Lodge, No. 1 in New York City on February 16, 1812. Subsequently others were Chartered in different cities but these are pointed out to show that from 1791, the time of the declaration of independence and formation of African Lodge into a Grand Lodge, at least five Lodges were Warranted by them before 1813, the year the United Grand Lodge of England was established and African Lodge, No. 459 (renumbered 370 in 1792) was erased, along with many others, from the English Grand Lodge Roll of Lodges.

The next actual Record of African Lodge is found dated January 5, 1824, when the Masters and Wardens Petitioned the Grand Master of the United Grand Lodge of England for recognition and a new Charter. Receiving no reply by June 18, 1827, the Lodge declared its position again by publishing in a Boston newspaper that they “ declare themselves free and independent of any Lodge from this day and that we will not be tributary or be governed by any Lodges than that of our own.” By this restatement of their former declaration of independence (i. e. 1791), the Lodge, as an individual Lodge announced to the Masonic world that it was irregular to all other Lodges then existing.

No particular change in the state of things resulted from this declaration and Negro Masonry continued its growth along the same lines as had been in operation prior to this re-affirmation of independence.

On June 24, 1847 an entirely new complication appeared. A Body styling itself the “ National Grand Lodge of North America, Ancient and Accepted York Masons ” was formed on that date. Delegates met in Boston, Massachusetts from the Prince Hall Grand Lodge, the First African Independent Grand Lodge and Hiram Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, the latter two being rival organisations, and the Boyer Grand Lodge of New York.

It appears that the Hiram Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania was becoming so powerful that the First Independent Grand Lodge had fears for its very existence and consequently enlisted the Massachusetts Grand Body in an effort to ward off the impending dissolution. As to the Boyer Grand Lodge of New York—when its Representatives returned to their Grand Lodge it refused to join the National Grand Lodge. This caused a schism in the New York Body, the outcome being a revision of the Boyer group in 1848 under the title “ United Grand Lodge of New York.” The dissenters erected another Body titled the “ National Union Grand Lodge.”

The National Grand Lodge immediately ran into difficulties. Various Jurisdictions became successively affiliated with it but in many instances this caused dissensions, as in the case cited in New York and several independent Grand Lodges were set up, thus making two and sometimes more Negro Grand Lodges in many States.

After a number of Conventions—Baltimore, Maryland, 1865; Wilmington, Delaware, 1869; Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, 1873; Louisville, Kentucky, 1874 and others—there appeared no amiable solution of the difficulties in sight. The Prince Hall Grand Lodge then called a Convention in Boston, Massachusetts in 1875 and this was followed by another convened in Chicago, Illinois, on September 4, 1877 (this by the individual members of twenty-one Grand Jurisdictions) and the National Grand Lodge was practically terminated, after a turbulent existence of thirty years. There are remnants of this organisation still in active existence, however, in several States, but their numbers are continually declining and visitation is denied by Prince Hall Bodies or Bodies affiliated with them.

Although the first Negro Lodge was established in Boston, Massachusetts in 1784, the Grand Body is dated as of June 24, 1791. A quarter of a century elapsed before the next Negro Grand Lodge was established—in Pennsylvania on December 27, 1815. Then came another lapse of thirty years and we find the third and fourth Grand Lodges established—New York and Maryland in 1845. From then on the organisation of State Grand Lodges became a matter of continued succession with only a few years between formations:

- 1848—District of Columbia and New Jersey
- 1849—Ohio and Delaware
- 1855—California
- 1856—Indiana and Rhode Island
- 1863—Louisiana
- 1865—Michigan and Virginia
- 1866—Kentucky and Missouri
- 1867—Illinois, South Carolina and Kansas
- 1870—North Carolina, Florida, Georgia, Tennessee and Alabama
- 1872—Mississippi
- 1873—Arkansas
- 1874—Connecticut and Ontario, Canada
- 1875—Texas
- 1876—Colorado
- 1877—West Virginia
- 1887—Iowa
- 1893—Oklahoma
- 1894—Minnesota
- 1903—Washington
- 1919—Nebraska
- 1920—Arizona
- 1921—New Mexico
- 1925—Wisconsin

This gives a Negro Grand Lodge in 37 States, the District of Columbia and in Ontario, Canada. In Idaho, Maine, Montana, Nevada, New Hampshire, North Dakota, Oregon, South Dakota, Utah, Vermont and Wyoming, where no Grand Lodges of Negro Masons exist, there are only about 6500 male Negroes combined, an average of about 600 to the State. Only 1 per cent of the male Negro population is in these States which have no Grand Lodges. While an accurate list of Lodges and members is not available a fairly close estimate would indicate about 9000 Lodges and 500,000 members in the 39 Grand Jurisdictions.

In addition to Craft or Blue Lodges, Negro Masonry has extended to nearly all of the branches of Freemasonry and its allied Orders. Many Royal Arch Chapters and Commanderies of Knights Templar as well as Scottish Rite Bodies exist. Only one Council of Royal and Select Masters (Ohio) has come to our attention, however. The Shrine and Eastern Star are fully organised among Negroes and several side Degrees, some of them now dormant among white Masons, also exist.

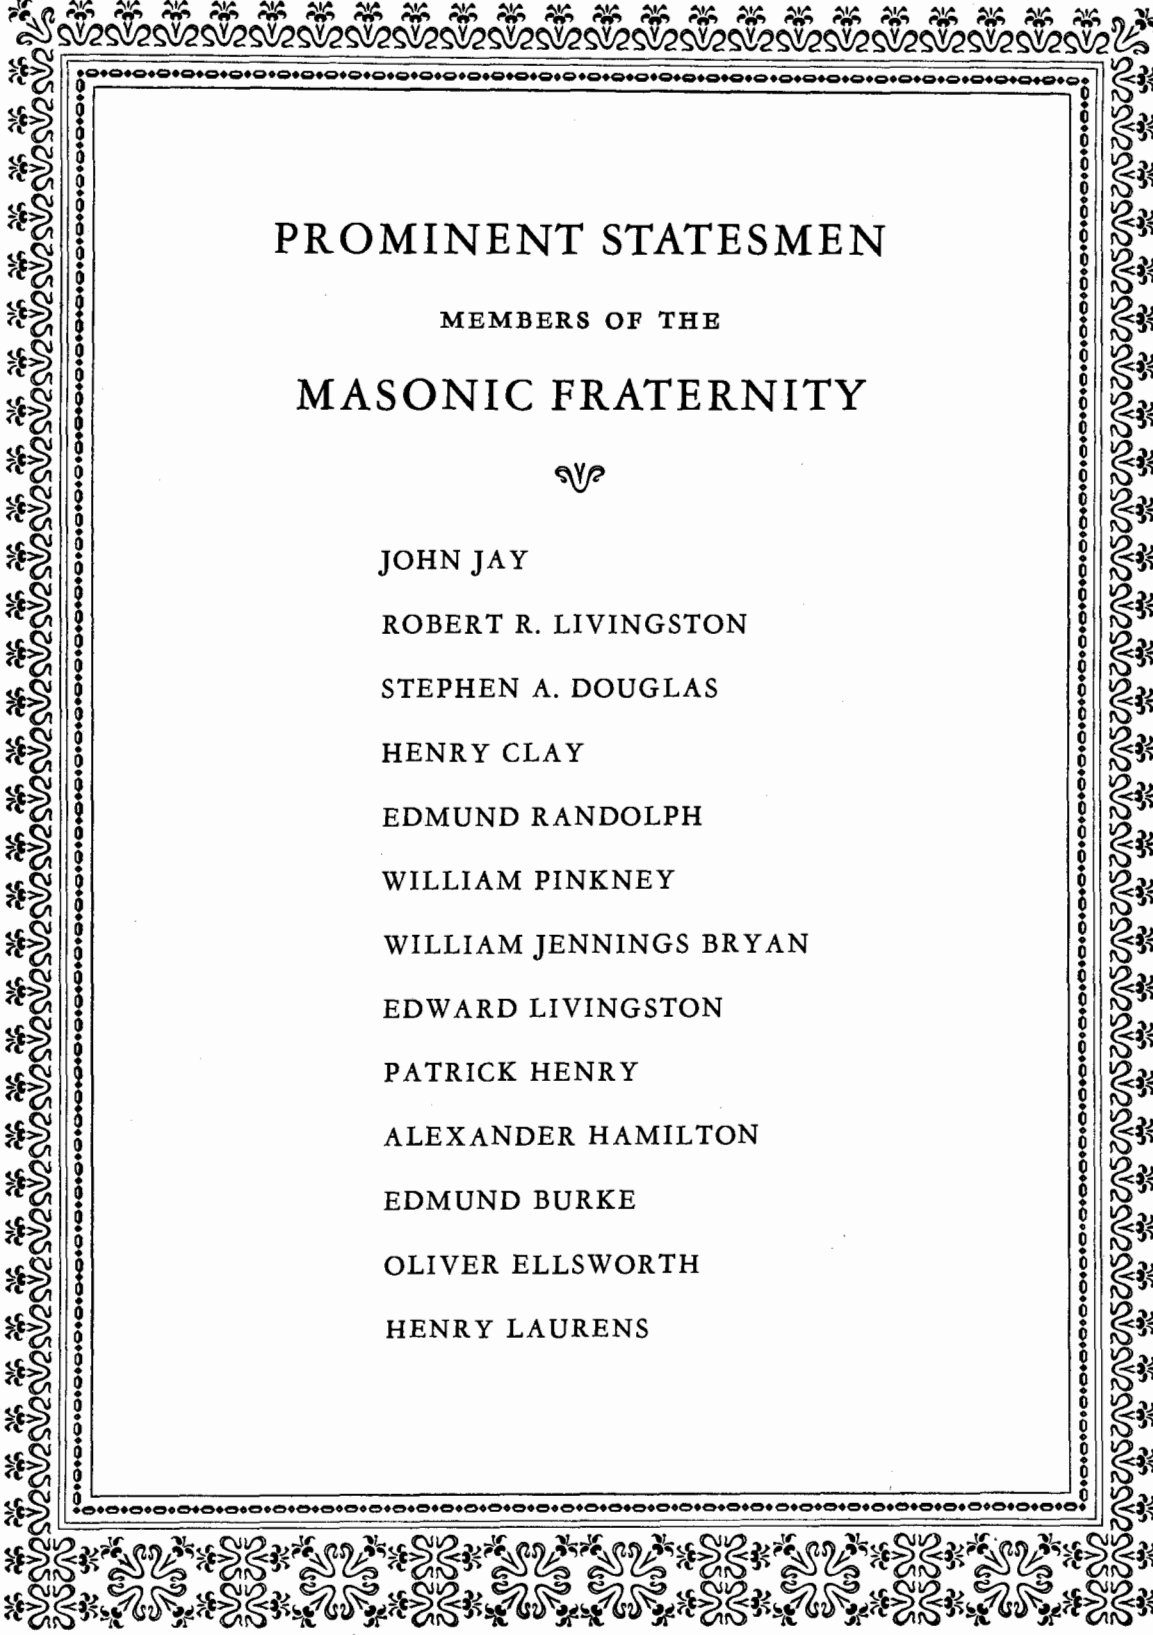

This digest would not be complete without mention of Alpha Lodge, No. 116, F. & A.M. of Newark, New Jersey, the only recognised Lodge of Negro Masons in the United States, being a subordinate of the Most Worshipful Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons of New Jersey (white). This Lodge was originally a white Lodge but shortly after its establishment on January 19, 1871 it Initiated several Negroes and eventually became entirely Negro in its membership, now consisting of about seventy-five Brethren. While visitations to other Lodges in the State by its members is sometimes made, the activity of its members is, for the most part, confined to its own Lodge. A complete history of the organisation and its existence appeared in Nocalore, the official organ of the North Carolina Lodge of Research, No. 666 in the Vol. II, Part 3, p. 143, compiled by the author of this digest.

There have been several instances of white Brethren in coloured Lodges and some of coloured Brethren in white Lodges but for the most part Negro Masonry has been confined within its own limits—a system which seems to be best for all concerned and one which has, in the hundred and fifty years of its practise, worked to the best advantage of the two races.

GOULD'S HISTORY OF FREEMASONRY

FOREWORD

THE intimate connection between Freemasonry and the founding and development of America is fascinating and illuminating, not only to the Brethren of the Craft but to all who are interested in the history of the building of the civic life of North America. Neglected by the writers of history, because unrealised and unknown, the spirit and ideals of this ancient Fraternity have played a mighty part. Herein, for the first time, is to be found the first real picture showing how Freemasonry and its teachings and influence were a vital part of the early days—the establishment and growth—of the States and Provinces of the United States and Canada. Far more potent than the wars of which the historian writes at length, in the crystallising and fixation of the fundamentals of North American civilisation, were the tenets of Freemasonry. One has but to follow the men whose names appear in these pages, for history is but the record of the lives and influence of men.

Never before has the history of American Freemasonry been presented as in this work. No one person could do it. For each Jurisdiction, some leader in the Craft, imbued with its spirit and a student of its history, has been chosen to tell the story of that Jurisdiction. The tale has thus been told by experts who will be recognised as such by the Brethren of the Grand Jurisdictions of which they write. All of them are nationally and some internationally known and acclaimed.

Bro. J. Edward Allen and I have made the selection of the co-authors but we have left them unhampered except by limitations of space. Theirs is the credit for research and the responsibility for conclusions. We are grateful for their co-operation, given freely and without financial reward, but merely that the true story may be told of the Fraternity they love and serve.

MELVIN M. JOHNSON.

FREEMASONRY IN ALABAMA

INTRODUCTORY

THE existing Masonic Grand Bodies in Alabama were formed on the dates following:

The Grand Lodge on June 11, 1821.

The Grand Chapter on June 2, 1827.

The Grand Council on December 13, 1828.

The Grand Commandery on December 1, 1860.

The Council of Anointed High Priests on December 8, 1869.

The earliest Bodies of the Scottish Rite in Alabama were formed at Mobile in December 1867.

Red Cross of Constantine, Saint Dunstan's Conclave, instituted at Birmingham on September 25, 1925.

These dates will furnish us with convenient points of departure in sketching the history of Freemasonry in Alabama.

SYMBOLIC MASONRY

Masonry in Alabama, of course, preceded the formation of the Grand Lodge. Masons were among its earliest settlers. The settlement of Madison County, lying north of the Tennessee River, began feebly in 1805 and, on August 29, 1811, a Dispensation was issued by the Grand Lodge of Kentucky for the earliest Lodge in the State. This was Madison Lodge, No. 21, at Huntsville. Its Officers under the Dispensation were Marmaduke Williams, Master; John C. Hamilton, Senior Warden; and William Harrison, Junior Warden. Charter was granted August 28, 1812, and the first Officers under the Charter were Lewis Watson, Master; Thomas Fearn, Senior Warden; and John J. Winston, Junior Warden. It still exists as Helion, No. 1, at Huntsville.

From 1812 to the organisation of Grand Lodge on June 11, 1821, fourteen other lodges were formed. They were,

Friendship, No. 6, at Mobile. Chartered by the Grand Lodge of Louisiana, September 6, 1813; forfeited July 1, 1820;

Friendship, No. 65, at St. Stephens. Chartered by the Grand Lodge of North Carolina about 1815; forfeited in 1816;

Alabama, No. 21, at Huntsville. Dispensation issued by the Grand Master of Tennessee, April 6, 1818; Charter granted October 4, 1818;

Washington, No. 23, at Hazel Green. Dispensation issued by the Grand Master of Tennessee, July 6, 1818; Charter granted October 6, 1818; surrendered in 1829;

Eureka, No. 16, at Blakely. Charter granted by the Grand Lodge of Louisiana, March 27, 1819; forfeited previous to June 1821;

Alabama, No. 51, at Claiborne. Chartered by the Grand Lodge of South Carolina, June 25, 1819;

Rising Virtue, No. 30, at Tuscaloosa. Dispensation issued by the Grand Master of Tennessee, August 2, 1819; Charter granted October 5, 1819;

Halo, No. 21, at Cahaba. Dispensation issued by the Grand Master of Georgia, February 21, 1820; Charter granted January 24, 1821; forfeited in 1872;

Moulton, No. 34, at Moulton. Dispensation issued by the Grand Master of Tennessee, May 2, 1820; Charter granted October 4, 1820;

Franklin, No. 36, at Russellville. Dispensation issued by the Grand Master of Tennessee, October 3, 1820; surrendered December 8, 1824;

Tuscumbia, No. 40, at Courtland. Dispensation issued by the Grand Master of Tennessee, March 3, 1821; Charter granted December 18, 1821; forfeited January 9, 1834;

Farrar, No. 41, at Elyton (now Birmingham). Dispensation issued by the Grand Master of Tennessee, March 6, 1821;

St. Stephens, at St. Stephens. Dispensation issued by the Grand Master of North Carolina, April 12, 1821; forfeited in 1834;

Marion, at Suggsville. Dispensation issued by the Grand Master of Georgia, May 28, 1821; Chartered December 18, 1821; forfeited in 1878.

Nine of these, viz.: Halo, Madison, St. Stephens, Rising Virtue, Alabama, No. 51, Farrar, Alabama, No. 21, Moulton, and Franklin (or Russellville) Lodges, after due notice to all, participated in the Convention which convened in the hall of Halo Lodge, at Cahaba, on June 11, 1821, and formed the Grand Lodge of Ancient Free and Accepted Masons of Alabama, with Thomas W. Farrar, of Elyton, as Grand Master and Thomas Amis Rogers, of Cahaba, as Grand Secretary.

Washington, No. 23, Tuscumbia, No. 40, and Marion did not attend the Convention. Washington never adhered but the other two, Tuscumbia and Marion, accepted Charters December 18, 1821.

Those who participated in forming the Grand Lodge, so far as the proceedings disclose, were Thomas W. Farrar, John Brown, and Bartholomew Labuzan, all of Elyton (Birmingham); Israel Pickens and Benjamin S. Smoot, of St. Stephens; Constantine Perkins, Thomas Owen, and Dugald McFarlane, all of Tuscaloosa; William B. Allen, John H. Thorington, David McCord, Thomas O. Meux, Horatio G. Perry, Luther Blake, John Cox, Thomas Amis Rogers, and Robert B. Watson, all of Cahaba; Gabriel Moore, David Moore, Clement C. Clay, John M. Leake, and Frederick Weeden, all of Huntsville; Anderson Hutchinson and Lewis B. Tully, of Moulton; George W. Owen, John Murphy, and James H. Draughan, all of Claiborne; Seth W. Ligon and George Kreps, residence unknown; John S. Fulton, of Russellville, and the Rev. John B. Warren and John Elliott, of Mobile. There was also present a Bro. Davis.

Of the fifteen Lodges above mentioned, seven derived from the Grand Lodge of Tennessee; two from that of Georgia; two from that of Louisiana; two from that of North Carolina, and one each from Kentucky and South Carolina. Both of the Lodges from Louisiana ceased to exist before the formation of the Grand Lodge, as did one from North Carolina.

The Lodges participating in the formation of Grand Lodge hailed thus: from Tennessee, four; Georgia, two; Kentucky, one; North Carolina, one; and South Carolina, one. This is sufficient evidence of the orthodox character of the Freemasonry of Alabama.

On June 15, 1821, the Lodges participating in the formation of the Grand Lodge surrendered their old Charters or Dispensations and received new Charters with numbers as follows:

- No. 1, Madison, at Huntsville,
- No. 2, Alabama, at Huntsville,
- No. 3, Alabama, at Claiborne,
- No. 4, Rising Virtue, at Tuscaloosa,
- No. 5, Halo, at Cahaba,
- No. 6, Moulton, at Moulton,
- No. 7, Russellville, at Russellville,
- No. 8, Farrar, at Elyton (now Birmingham),
- No. 9, St. Stephens, at St. Stephens.

Lodge No. 10, under the new Grand Lodge, was Chartered on December 19, 1821, under the name of Mobile; became defunct in 1831;

Lodge No. 11 was Chartered January 1, 1822, at Montgomery, under that name; still active;

Marion, at Suggsville, accepted a Charter on December 18, 1821, and became No. 12; now defunct;

Tuscumbia, No. 40 became No. 21 on December 21, 1824, on the roster of the new Grand Lodge; now defunct;

Washington, No. 23, at Hazel Green, Chartered by the Grand Lodge of Tennessee, ceased to exist in 1829, by surrender of its Charter, without ever becoming a constituent of the Grand Lodge of Alabama. Thus is accounted for all of the original fifteen Lodges in Alabama.

To-day, Madison, No. 1 and Alabama, No. 2, at Huntsville, exist by virtue of their consolidation in 1824 as Helion, No. 1.

Alabama, No. 3 is now at Perdue Hill, Monroe County, and Rising Virtue, Moulton, and Farrar still exist at their original sites. Thus we see that of the nine Lodges forming the Grand Lodge six are still in existence. The three dead ones are Halo, at Cahaba; Franklin, at Russellville; and St. Stephens. Two of the three were located at former but now dead capitals of the State; the towns of Cahaba and Old St. Stephens no longer exist. Russellville is a prosperous town in the northwest corner of the State and now has a live Lodge under the same name, but as No. 371.

The aspiring little city in which the Grand Lodge was formed has passed away, and we venture to quote here a description of its rise and fall from Mrs. Fry's "Memories of Old Cahaba" (1908):

When the General Assembly convened at Huntsville the following year (1819), the Commissioners reported that they had selected a locality at the mouth of the Cahaba River for the capital and by that Legislature of 1819 the town of Cahaba was incorporated, lots laid out and a location for the government buildings selected by Governor William Bibb, who appointed Luther Blake, Carlisle Humphreys and Willis Roberts to hold the first town election.

Cahaba at this early day was not only the capital of the State, but was also the seat of justice of Dallas County, and soon sprung into an important business and social centre, despite its unfortunate geographical location. Lying in a valley, the Alabama River in front, with the Cahaba River flowing around the northwestern and northern portions of the town, and Clear Creek on the west, the place is almost surrounded by streams of water, which become swollen torrents and subject it to heavy overflow during the wet season.

In 1820, Cahaba had two newspapers, a land office, State bank, stores, private boarding houses, hotels, schools and churches, we presume, though there is no mention made of a church until later on.

In 1822, a large amount of public land was sold in Cahaba at public outcry. Lands in the vicinity of the town brought $1.25 an acre. In a few weeks these same lands were worth $60.00 and $70.00 an acre, and in a few months could not be had at any price. There was a great demand for city lots, and it has been stated that unimproved lots in the central portion of the town in 1822 sold as high as $5,025, and that the sale of 184 lots amounted to over $120,000, which amount was added to the sum set aside by the Legislature for government buildings.

The Capitol was a solid square brick structure, two stories high, surmounted by an imposing dome, said to be similar in appearance to the old Capitol building at St. Augustine, Fla., which was erected in the same year. On either side of the broad hall that ran through the centre of the first floor were the executive and state offices. The second floor, composed of two large rooms, was occupied by the Senate and House of Representatives.

The town was now growing and continued to improve rapidly until 1825, when the largest flood ever known in the history of this country swept down the Alabama and Cahaba Rivers and completely inundated Cahaba. According to tradition the Legislature was in session when the flood came and the different representatives had to be rowed in boats and landed in the second story of the Capitol to reach the legislative halls. Many of the private residences and public buildings were injured by the overflow and, when a portion of the State House fell, Cahaba was no longer deemed safe as the seat of government, and at a meeting of the next Legislature, in January 1826, the capital was removed to Tuscaloosa.

Cahaba now became almost abandoned. Though it still remained the county seat of Dallas County, many of the most influential inhabitants moved away and the town rapidly declined. Many of the houses were torn down and moved to Mobile. Many of those left were unoccupied. Rare flowers bloomed in the lonely yards in neglected wild luxuriance. Beautiful climbing roses waved mournfully to the breeze from decaying galleries and the grass grew in the principal streets as though months had passed since foot had touched it. The place was lonely and deserted. And this a few months before was the gay capital of the State of Alabama, famed for its thrift and industry, its hospitality and its chivalry! A sad commentary on the uncertainty and mutability of human hopes, human endeavours and human ambition!

But those beautiful scenes are no more. All those noble, grand old people have passed away and their like will never be seen again, because the conditions and the surroundings that produced them are no longer a part of the South. They are gone never to return, and Cahaba, like Rome, must ever remain a Niobe of the nation, a mother bereft of her children, to whom our hearts still cling with loving enthusiasm in memory of her departed glory. Though long years have passed and the ruin is now perfect and complete, the site of the old town is still a lovely spot, where the pure, limpid waters gush unceasingly from the Artesian wells; where the flowers planted long years ago still bloom in perennial spring in the old-time yards; where the mocking bird still sings in the springtime and the Cherokee roses, full with blossoms, shed their snowy petals along the deserted streets; where the sweet breath of the China blossom is wafted by the night breeze; where the stars still shine in all their brilliant beauty and the moon rises in its old-time splendour enfolding the ruined town in its soft, mellow light and lovingly shadows the graves of the dead, who when living, were among the most refined, cultivated and intellectual people that ever adorned the State of Alabama.

A description of the other dead capital, Old St. Stephens, would read much like the foregoing.

It was among a people and surroundings like these that the Grand Lodge of Alabama had its beginning. It is not surprising that those who composed it were the best people of their day.

The Lodges formed during 1821 and prior thereto were located as follows: two at Huntsville; two at Mobile; two at St. Stephens; and one each at Hazel Green, Blakely, Claiborne, Tuscaloosa, Cahaba, Moulton, Russellville, Courtland, Elyton, Suggsville, Montgomery, Conecuh C. H., and Florence. A glance at the map shows that of these nineteen Lodges, seven were in the Tennessee Valley; seven were in the southwest (or Mobile) corner of the State; and one each at Tuscaloosa, Cahaba, Montgomery, Elyton (Birmingham) and Conecuh C. H. The two chief Masonic centres were the Tennessee Valley in the extreme north, and the Mobile Neck in the extreme south end of the State, with thin lines extending up the Alabama and Black Warrior Rivers, then two of the State's main avenues of travel and communication.

This may give a hint of the difficult conditions under which Masonry then existed in Alabama. The first five Annual Communications of Grand Lodge were held in Cahaba on the Alabama River, and then the meetings were held at Tuscaloosa, the new capital, on the Black Warrior for many years.

To reach either of these places from Mobile or the Tennessee Valley required wearisome travel by steamboat or over bad roads and occupied about two weeks of time going, attending Grand Lodge and returning home. Contrast this with the impatience with which we now give two or three days to the discharge of this duty.

Masonry in Alabama, as elsewhere, was very injuriously affected during the years 1830 to 1840 by the so-called "Morgan Craze," the agitation which grew out of the disappearance of one William Morgan from Batavia, New York, in 1826, allegedly abducted and murdered by the Freemasons because of his betrayal of their secrets. It is unnecessary to enter into that subject further than to mention the effects it had on Masonry in Alabama. For about two years its effects here were not marked. By 1829 the storm was being felt. In that year there were thirty-three Lodges in the State and of these the Charters of ten were declared forfeited at the Annual Communication in December of that year and representatives from only nine Lodges appeared the first day. The Committee on Foreign Correspondence alluded to the "anti-Masonic clamour and malignant opposition" prevailing in many States. Feeble Annual Communications of the Grand Lodge were held in 1830 to 1834. No further Communications were then held until December 6, 1836. For two years the light of the Grand Lodge went out, but on the last-named date the representatives of six Lodges and four other Brethren met at Tuscaloosa and revived the Grand Lodge. The Grand Chapter went to sleep from July 1830 to December 1837, and no Assembly of the Grand Council was held in 1840.

But by 1841 the storm had spent its force. The strong men had never weakened or lowered their flag. The timid began to venture back. In a few years all signs of the devastation had disappeared and Masonry, stronger for its trials, entered upon an era of progress that has never been halted, though severely shaken by the ravages of the Civil War.

In the year 1859 the Grand Lodge and its particular Lodges were legally incorporated by special Act of the Legislature, giving them a standing before the law not otherwise obtainable. Its Charter was materially but not radically amended in 1875 by another Act of the Legislature.

After many years of effort, finally the Grand Lodge in 1912 established a Masonic Home, at Montgomery, for the care of distressed Master Masons and their widows and orphans. It was formally opened on the 18th day of January 1913, with three girl children as inmates. While as usual with such institutions it has taxed the financial resources of the Grand Lodge, it has met in the main the expectations and hopes of its founders and supporters. Its burden is lightened by the maintenance of the Emergency (or Charity) Fund for the assistance of the distressed outside the Home. The utility and value of this fund as an instrument of relief has been fully proved.

Until 1903 the Grand Lodge had no printed manual or monitor of its own. For the written "Work" recourse was had to those of Webb and Cross or to monitors based upon them. In the year above named it promulgated a manual of its own, which also included the Constitution and Edicts. This book has gone through many editions and reprintings and has contributed much to the spread of Masonic knowledge among the Masons of the State. Webb's Monitor is, of course, its basis with many of Cross' changes and additions.

The history of Masonry in Alabama has not been replete with exciting or stirring events. Peace and harmony have at all times prevailed among the Craft, a condition favourable to its solid growth and prosperity. A long succession of able and devoted leaders (Grand Masters, Grand Secretaries, Grand Lecturers, Foreign Correspondents, etc.,) have assured it a firm and safe course at home and respect from abroad.

The Committee on Foreign Correspondence had its beginning in 1826, but its duties did not assume their present form till 1842. Prior to this latter date its reports were barren. The first real report was given in 1844 by Leroy Pope Walker, subsequently Secretary of War of the Confederacy. He reviewed twenty Grand Lodges in two pages and thus briefly cast the form for the future.

The office of Grand Lecturer began with the organisation of the Grand Lodge in 1821 and existed till 1857. It then became vacant and was not recreated till 1889. With the death of Bro. Angus M. Scott in 1915, the office again lapsed and has so remained though repeated efforts have been made to revive it. A system of District Lecturers has taken its place.

James Penn, Grand Lecturer from 1827 to 1834, may fairly be regarded as the father of the "Alabama Work."

Situated as the Lodges were in those days and under the conditions surrounding them, intercourse between them was of the most scanty nature and, Chartered as they were by five different Grand Lodges, it will be easily understood that among these early Lodges there was no uniformity of "Work." To add to the confusion no doubt every Lodge had members made in different States, each feeling and insisting that his Work was the best and most authentic.

Until 1826 there was no established "Work"; each Lodge followed the Work of the State from which its members chiefly hailed. But at the 1826 Communication, under date of December 15, we find this record:

Brother Penn offered the following resolution:

"Resolved that a working committee be appointed to consist of five brethren; who shall on Monday Evening next, exemplify the mode of work, which they may believe to be the most correct on the three First Degrees of Ma- sonry," which being carried, Brothers McFarlane, Penn, Wallace, Phister and Wooldridge were appointed said committee.

The proceedings for the next Monday, December 18, contain the following:

This being the day assigned for hearing the report of the working committee, Brother James Penn, from said committee, gave a splendid and most interesting exemplification of the mode of work agreed upon by said committee, in the three first degrees of Masonry, which was received with great and deserved applause.

So long as James Penn attended Grand Lodge, whenever the "Work" was exemplified, it was done under his direction. When, in 1846, he left the State his mantle fell upon the shoulders of James M. Brundidge, one of his initiates and pupils. From 1848 till his death on March 13, 1901, Bro. Brundidge was regarded as the last authority upon what was the proper "Work" for Alabama. He was without doubt the greatest ritualist Alabama Masonry has produced. Angus M. Scott, his pupil, was second only to Brundidge for length of service, for knowledge of the "Work," and for skill in imparting it. By their sweetness of spirit, their nobility of character, their purity of life, their charm of person and their ability as instructors, these three men left a lasting impression upon the Masonic Fraternity in this State.

The first standing Committee on Work was created in December 1842, and at no time since has the Grand Lodge been without such Committee. Sometimes its Chairman and the Grand Lecturer have been the same person, and sometimes not.

To the Grand Lecturers and their co-workers, the Chairman of the Committee on Work, must be accorded a large measure of credit for the progress of the Craft and its present prosperous condition in the State.

Among the members of the Lodges in 1821, and prior thereto, were the foremost business, professional, and public men of the day, embracing United States senators, members of Congress, governors, legislators, lawyers, physicians, ministers, educators, etc., etc. A hasty glance discloses the following:

Thomas W. Farrar, the first Grand Master, was a highly respected man and Mason. This is attested by the fact of his election to the highest office in the gift of his Brethren from among the distinguished body of men who composed the first Grand Lodge. He married Seraphine Bagneris, a French woman of high standing from Louisiana, by whom he had two sons, Du Volney T. and Du Vernay, and it is a tradition in his family that he and LaFayette were close friends and that the latter named Bro. Farrar's two sons. Descendants and relatives of Thomas W. Farrar reside in New Orleans, but they know little of him. It is regretted that our data are so meagre.

Thomas Amis Rogers (1792-1821), the first Grand Secretary, died during this year at the early age of twenty-nine years, yet he had served as a member of the State Constitutional Convention of 1819, and as secretary of the State Senate in 1819 and was secretary of state from 1819 to his death in 1821. He was a lawyer by profession and built the first court house for Shelby County.

We do not wish to convert this sketch into a biographical dictionary of the prominent men of Alabama of that period, but we must mention the following:

Marmaduke Williams (1774-1850), lawyer; member of Congress; member of Constitutional Convention of 1819; judge; brother to Robert Williams, governor of Mississippi Territory; married Agnes Payne, first cousin of Dolly Madison; many prominent descendants in Alabama.

Thomas Fearn (1789-1863), physician and surgeon; Gen. Andrew Jackson's personal physician in Creek War, 1813; member of Alabama "Secession Convention," 1861; member of first Confederate Congress.

John Brown, a soldier of the Revolutionary army; pensioned as such March 15, 1833.

Bartholomew Labuzan, a leading merchant of his day.

Constantine Perkins (1792-1836), lawyer; elected attorney-general of Alabama 1825; was under Andrew Jackson in Creek War of 1813.

Horatio Gates Perry (1795-1834), lawyer; served in both branches of the Legislature; circuit judge.

Gabriel Moore (1785-1845), lawyer; speaker of first Territorial Legislature of Alabama; member of Constitutional Convention of 1819; president of State Senate, 1820; member of Congress, 1822-29; governor, 1829-31; U. S. senator, 1831-37.

David Moore (1789-1845), family physician of Andrew Jackson; elected to Legislature thirteen times; State Senate, 1822-25; speaker of the House, 1841; extensive planter.

Clement Comer Clay (1789-1866), lawyer; congressman; governor; U. S. senator; served in Creek War of 1813; member of Territorial Legislature and of Constitutional Convention of 1819; author of Clay's Digest, 1843.

Frederick Weeden, distinguished physician and surgeon; soldier.

George Washington Owen (1796-1837), lawyer, studied in the office of Felix Grundy; partner of Governor John Gayle; speaker of the House, 1820; in Congress, 1823-29; mayor of Mobile, 1836.

John Murphy (1785-1841), lawyer; planter, governor, member of Congress; clerk of South Carolina Senate for ten years; member of Constitutional Convention of 1819.

Thomas Owen, lawyer; son-in-law of Marmaduke Williams and grandfather of Thomas McAdory Owen, founder and director of the Alabama Department of Archives and History.

Israel Pickens (1780-1827), member of North Carolina Senate, 1808-10; in Congress from that State, 1811-17; register of U. S. Land Office at St. Stephens, Alabama; member of Constitutional Convention of 1819; governor, 1821-25; U. S. senator, 1826.

Masonic membership in Alabama has been no less distinguished since 1821 than it was in that year and prior thereto. The names mentioned in this sketch, coupled with a reasonable familiarity with the history of Alabama, demonstrate what a large share Masonry has had in the settlement, founding, and building of the State. Nearly all of its leading men have been Masons.

In recent years the Masonic membership in Alabama has shown a marked decline. There are two main causes for this, the depressed financial conditions and the unwise facility afforded unworthy profanes for initiation during and following the World War.

CAPITULAR MASONRY

On March 21, 1823, a Grand Chapter of Royal Arch Masons was formed at Mobile by two Chapters. The Chapters participating were those at Tuscaloosa and Mobile. Two other Chapters then in the State, one at Cahaba and one at Claiborne, held aloof. This organisation had a precarious existence until September 1826, when the General Grand Chapter declared it irregular and recommended that another Grand Chapter be formed. Identified with this abortive attempt were prominent Masons of the day, among them Dugald McFarlane, Israel Pickens (then governor), and Nimrod E. Benson, as Grand High Priests.

On June 2, 1827, representatives of the four Chapters then in the State, working under the General Grand Chapter, to wit, Tuscaloosa, No. 1, at Tuscaloosa; Alabama, No. 2, at Cahaba; Mobile, No. 3, at Mobile; and Monroe, No. 4, at Claiborne, met in Mobile and formed a new Grand Chapter, adopted a Constitution and elected Officers. John Murphy (then governor) was the first Grand High Priest under this organisation. The Grand Chapter was not prosperous; it held meetings till July 8, 1830, and then went to sleep for more than seven years. There is no doubt this result was caused by the Morgan excitement.

Apparently under the stimulus of John C. Hicks, then Grand Master, on December 8, 1837, a meeting of Officers and representatives of the subordinate Chapters convened in the Masonic Lodge room at Tuscaloosa, at which it was resolved that a Grand Chapter be formed, "the former Grand Chapter of this State having failed to hold its constitutional meetings for the last seven years." The Grand Royal Arch Chapter was, thereupon, opened with John C. Hicks as Grand High Priest, and in this capacity he served for three years. He was succeeded on December 7, 1840, by Companion A. B. Dawson, of Wetumpka.

The period of 1823 to 1841 may be counted as marking one era in the history of Capitular Masonry in Alabama. Another is that from 1841 through the Civil War period, and the third and last is that from, say, 1866 to date. The first period was characterised by doubt and uncertainty. The earlier portion of the second period was one of prosperity, but during the latter portion of this second period Royal Arch Masonry in Alabama was shattered like everything else by the tragic shock of war. The third period has been one of varying but continuous success and prosperity. The latest complete statistics show nearly 10,000 members.

On December 8, 1869, a Council of Anointed High Priests for Alabama was constituted at Montgomery. George D. Norris was chosen President; Daniel Sayre, Recorder; Richard F. Knott, Master of Ceremonies. The Council has had a continuous and successful existence, though meetings were not held in 1882 to 1891, inclusive; 1894, 1897, 1898, 1900, and 1901. Since the latter date its Convocations have been held regularly and are well attended during each Annual Communication of the Grand Lodge.

CRYPTIC MASONRY

The Grand Council of Royal and Select Masters of the State of Alabama was formed at the Masonic Hall, Tuscaloosa, on the evening of December 13, 1838, by twenty-eight Royal and Select Masters, Gerard W. Creagh presiding, with F. C. Ellis as Recorder.

The others present were John C. Hicks, then Grand Master of Masons in Alabama; R. A. Baker, Charles Bealle, L. S. Skinner, E. W. Esselman, William Hazlett, Z. B. Snow, James Rather, J. D. Bears, Doric S. Ball, Carlo De Haro, Jacob Wyser, J. C. Van Dyke, Armand P. Phister, Walker K. Baylor, Major Cook, James G. Blount, James L. F. Cottrell (the successor in Congress of William L. Yancey), W. R. Ross, G. T. McAfee, John Cantley, A. B. Dawson, Rev. James H. Thomason, J. B. Norris, Carter R. Harrison, and William H. Payne. The proceedings are silent as to whence hailed these companions, though we know from other sources that most of them resided in and around Tuscaloosa.

A Constitution was adopted and Companion Creagh was elected "Thrice Illustrious General Grand Master." (The word "General" was eliminated from the nomenclature in 1846.) Of those participating, John C. Hicks, Armand P. Phister, and Walker K. Baylor were already prominent in the Masonic life of Alabama. To the well-known Bro. John Barker, of Scottish Rite fame, is accorded the honour of first sowing in Alabama the seeds of Cryptic Masonry.

The Grand Council held its Annual Assemblies regularly (except 1840) to and including 1860. The decline about 1840 was doubtless due to the Morgan excitement. The growth of the Grand Council during the period from 1840 to the Civil War was slow but steady. The records show one active subordinate Council in 1838; four in 1841; twenty-four in 1850, and sixteen in 1860. Other distinguished Masons who appeared in Grand Council during this period were James Penn, father of the Masonic "Work" in Alabama; David Moore, William Hendrix, William C. Penick, Lewis E. Parsons (subsequently governor and elected United States senator in 1865 but not seated), Sterling A. M. Wood, J. McCaleb Wiley, David Clopton (subsequently a justice of the Supreme Court), Nimrod E. Benson, James M. Brundidge, Alabama's greatest ritualist; Felix G. Norman, David P. Lewis (subsequently governor), Daniel Sayre (long Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge), Rufus Greene, Lewis B. Thornton, John A. Loder, distinguished lawyer, and others.

On the roll of members of Central Council, at Marion, was the name of the accomplished minister and writer Eugene V. Levert, and on that of Tuscaloosa Council the name of the distinguished educator, Frederick A. P. Barnard, subsequently president of Columbia College (now University), and the founder of Barnard College for Women.

The regularity of the formation of the Grand Council seems never to have been challenged. At the 1841 Assembly ministers of the gospel were exempt from dues, and "the original members of the Grand Council" were allowed to vote in the election of Officers. In 1843, 1845, and 1847 the Grand Council expressed its disapproval of the proposed transfer of the Cryptic Degrees to the Royal Arch Chapters. This question agitated the Grand Chapter for many years, the latest echo being heard in 1880. Alabama has at all times stood firmly for the independence of the Cryptic Degrees.

At the 1845 Assembly that master ritualist, James Penn, exemplified the Cryptic Degrees before the Grand Council and it was resolved that the subordinate Councils be enjoined to practise the same. Thus, Bro. Penn appears as the father of the Cryptic "Work" in Alabama, as he was of that of the Symbolic Degrees. In 1848 Dispensations were issued for Louisiana Council, No. 15, at New Orleans, and for Columbus Council, No. 16, at Columbus, Mississippi. These were never Chartered and ceased existence in 1851.

In 1849 it developed that an Officer acting under the authority of the Grand Consistory of Charleston, South Carolina, had conferred the Cryptic Degrees on Masons residing in Alabama, and that these companions had applied to and obtained from the Grand Council a Dispensation to form a subordinate Council, Izabud, at LaFayette. On discovering these facts the Dispensation of Izabud Council was withdrawn and demand made on the Consistory that the fees collected by its Officer be returned to the Brethren paying them. This demand was repeated several times, but never with any result.

Being unable even to get a reply from the Consistory, at the 1855 Assembly the Grand Council discharged its Committee and adopted a resolution that it had "exclusive jurisdiction over all subordinate councils in Alabama and over the degrees of Royal and Select Masters and that any attempt by the Grand Consistory of South Carolina, or any officer thereof, to establish Councils in Alabama or to confer these degrees will be regarded as an act of usurpation and unwarranted by Masonic usage." This was but another phase of the long controversy over the position of the Cryptic Degrees in the Masonic system.

In 1850 the New Masonic Trestle Board, by Moore, was adopted "for the government of the Grand and Subordinate Councils." The use of the term "adjourned" was disapproved and "assembly" instead of "meeting" was recommended.

At the 1852 Assembly, the distinguished ritualist and author, Companion J. W. S. Mitchell, was present and installed the Officers.

In 1854 the Grand Council adopted as the uniform of the Cryptic Degrees "a collar and apron of Tyrian purple, trimmed with gold."

In the 1857 proceeding it is noted that at the last Triennial of the General

Grand Chapter an effort had been made to form a General Grand Council but that the movement failed because several of the Grand Councils, among them that of Alabama, had no one present authorised to participate. At the next Annual Assembly, the Committee on Foreign Correspondence, through Companion Lewis B. Thornton, reported adversely.

In 1858 the Grand Puissant granted a Dispensation to form California Council, No. 38, at San Francisco.

At the 1859 Assembly a resolution was offered that no Council can be opened or work with less than nine Royal and Select Masters, and that those receiving said Degrees in a Council of less than that number would not be recognised. No action was ever taken upon the resolution, but Alabama has always adhered to the quorum of nine.

The history of the post-Civil War period of the Grand Council is quickly told. On December 8, 1864, the Civil War had nearly spent itself and on that date the Grand Council again convened at Montgomery with nine Councils represented. Only three of its Officers, however, appeared: James B. Harrison, Grand Puissant; Daniel Sayre, Recorder; and Thomas McDougal, Grand Sentinel.

By December 6, 1865, the war had become history; the Grand Council met with thirteen Councils represented and five of its regular Officers in place. The Recorder reported that Cryptic Masonry was reviving in Alabama, and expressed his hope that "our future should be steadily onward and upward."

This hope has been fulfilled with one marked exception. In 1880 the General Grand Council was formed and, in the same year, the Grand Council of Alabama ratified the general Constitution and became a member. Soon, however, a decline set in and by 1886 the state of Cryptic Masonry was so low that no Annual Assembly was held. At the 1887 Annual, the Grand Master reported to the Grand Council that "our numbers are now reduced to the minimum," and that all but three of the Councils in the State were dormant, and that these three were in a "very feeble condition." The Grand Master recommended that the Grand Council be dissolved and that the subordinates hold under the General Grand Council. This action was not taken, but, at the 1888 Annual, connection with the General Grand Council was dissolved, the resolution reciting that it was "detrimental to be subordinated longer to the General Grand Council." For the next seventeen years the Grand Council was an independent body.

In 1892 it was resolved that the Degree of Super-Excellent Master be conferred without charge on all Royal and Select Masters, members of Councils in Alabama.

Not till 1894 did the languishing condition of Cryptic Masonry show signs of reawakening. Conditions were further improved in 1895 and "hard times," incompetent presiding Officers in the Councils, and the scramble for advancement without knowing anything about the Cryptic Degrees were assigned as the causes of the low state of this branch of Masonry.

In 1898 the Annual Assembly met in the new Masonic Temple on Perry Street, Montgomery, where it has ever since been held.

By 1899 the country and Cryptic Masonry were again prosperous, and the latter has continued so in varying degrees ever since, though it is again feeling the effect of the present world-wide depression in business.

In 1905 the Grand Council renewed its membership in the General Grand Council and this relation has since been maintained to the advantage of both. From 6 Councils in 1904 with 357 members, the increase has been to 22 Councils with about 3000 members.

KNIGHTS TEMPLAR

This Concordant Order, though not technically a part of Freemasonry, will be briefly treated.

In the year 1860 there were five Commanderies in Alabama, all chartered by the Grand Encampment of the United States. They were Washington, No. 1, at Marion; Mobile, No. 2; Tuscumbia, No. 3; Montgomery, No. 4; and Selma, No. 5, with a total of about 150 members.

Charter for the first of these, Washington, No. 1, was refused in 1841 by the Grand Encampment, but was granted on September 12, 1844; then came Mobile, Tuscumbia, and Montgomery, and finally the Charter for the last, Selma, No. 5, was issued September 16, 1859. At the 1847 Triennial of the Grand Encampment there was authorized the issuance of a Charter to "Barker Encampment," at Claiborne, Alabama, as soon as it complied with the requirements of the General Grand Constitution, made proper returns, and paid all dues. This movement must have fallen through as no such body is shown on the roster for 1850 or any subsequent year of the Grand Encampment. This name affords evidence, however, of the popularity in Alabama of Bro. John Barker.

On December 1, 1860, in the Asylum of Montgomery, No. 4, the "Grand Commandery of Knight Templar and Appendant Orders of Alabama" was formed, under warrant from the Grand Encampment of the United States. Richard F. Knott, one of the most distinguished Masons of his day, was elected Grand Commander, a position he held for eight years. Washington, No. 1, then in a moribund state, did not participate. So the Order of Knights Templar had a brief but uneventful history in Alabama of about sixteen years before the formation of the Grand Commandery. The Grand Conclave of 1860 was held in regular course, but by 1862 the disruptions resulting from war had become so great that a quorum could not be obtained. It was not represented at the Triennials of 1862 or 1865 for the same reasons. Its history has been undisturbed except by the difficulties of the Civil War and Reconstruction periods, and its growth in numbers and influence has been steady. Able men have presided over it and served on its Committee on Foreign Correspondence. Their addresses and reports make the printed proceedings of great interest and value. On December 9, 1861, the Grand Commandery and its subordinates were incorporated by Act of the Legislature of Alabama. From its small beginning in 1860, with 5 Commanderies and only about 150 members, it now boasts 35 Commanderies with over 5000 members. Despite the present general financial depression, its future is bright.

THE SCOTTISH RITE

In 1865, Grand Commander Albert Pike reported the Scottish Rite membership in Alabama as "exceedingly limited," with no organisation of the Rite and no Inspector-General. In his allocution of May 1870 he said of Alabama:

In this State no attempt was made to propagate the Ancient and Accepted Rite, until, in December 1867, Ill. Bro. Batchelor established in Mobile the several bodies of the degrees up to the Kadosh. I have no report from Ill. Bro. Knott, Deputy for the State, of the establishment of bodies or of any initiation, nor have I had any communications from him for quite a year and half. I hoped to hear long ago of the establishment of the Rite at Montgomery, the capital of the State; and it ought not to be difficult, among the great number of intelligent Masons in Alabama, to find many worthy of initiation into the higher mysteries.

The 1872 Transactions of the Supreme Council show Mobile Lodge of Perfection, No. 1, with thirty-seven members; Mobile Council of Princes of Jerusalem, No. 1, with fifteen members; Mobile Chapter, Knights of Rose-Croix, No. 1, with ten members; and Mobile Council of Kadosh, No. 1, with eleven members. These were the earliest bodies of the Rite to be established in the State. In 1874 there were no reports from Alabama and in 1876 Grand Commander Pike reported the Bodies at Mobile as "lifeless and extinct."

On April 13, 1874, Alabama Lodge of Perfection, No. 1, at Montgomery, was Chartered, but in 1876 Grand Commander Pike reported it as giving "no signs of vitality." However, this body is still on the Roster of the Supreme Council and at present has 1109 members. It and the other Scottish Rite bodies now at Montgomery have erected there a magnificent temple. The other bodies of the Rite at Montgomery were chartered as follows:

Hermes Chapter of Rose-Croix, October 20, 1899, present membership 939; Mitchell Council of Kadosh, October 22, 1915, present membership 813; Holbrook Consistory, October 20, 1917, present membership 803.

The other Scottish Rite bodies in Alabama were Chartered as follows:

Birmingham Lodge of Perfection, October 20, 1897, present membership 3199; Birmingham Chapter of Rose-Croix, October 20, 1899, present membership 2811; Birmingham Council of Kadosh, October 20, 1899, present membership, 2691; Alabama Consistory, Birmingham, October 20, 1899, present membership 2642; Mobile Lodge of Perfection, October 24, 1901, present membership 2110; Mobile Chapter of Rose-Croix, May 21, 1903, present membership, 1802; Mobile Council of Kadosh, October 23, 1907, present membership 1692;

Mobile Consistory, October 23, 1907, present membership 1688; Dothan Lodge of Perfection, October 19, 1927, present membership 114.

The foregoing tables show that the Scottish Rite in Alabama is flourishing. The Birmingham and Dothan bodies are also housed in splendid temples.

Alabama has furnished two of the Grand Commanders of the Rite in the Southern Jurisdiction, viz.: James C. Batchelor and George Fleming Moore.

CONCLUSION

Masonry in all its branches is firmly established in the State. On the whole its course here has been peaceful and prosperous. Like everything else, the Grand Lodge and Masonry in general in the State have suffered during the past few years on account of bad business conditions and other causes, but it is confidently believed that the bottom has been reached and soon the Craft will be experiencing another era of prosperity. It is not Masonic to be pessimistic; Hope is one of the guiding principles of Freemasonry. Masonry has passed through these valleys many times and has always emerged wiser and stronger than before.

FREEMASONRY IN ARIZONA

HARRY ARIZONA DRACHMAN

ORGANISED Masonry came into existence in the Territory of Arizona on April 22, 1865. It was on that date that a Dispensation was issued by the Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons of California to form Aztlan Lodge at Prescott, Arizona. At the Annual Communication of the Grand Lodge of California, held on October 15, 1865, the Committee on Charters made the following report of interest to all Arizona Masons: "Your Committee has had under consideration the application of Aztlan Lodge for a continuance of its Dispensation until the next Annual Communication of the Grand Lodge. This Lodge is located at Prescott, in Arizona Territory, and the great distance between us and that locality, and the uncertain and slow means of communication, afford a sufficient reason why the Lodge's Records and Returns have not yet been received. Bro. Alsap, the Master of the Lodge, well says in his application: 'This is a small community, far removed from others, an advance post of the army of civilisation, fighting against barbarism, with a hostile and savage foe around, and depending upon our own armed hands for safety of life and property. I say it proudly, nowhere are the Constitutions of Masonry more cherished and loved, or its principles better or more nobly illustrated. The worthy distressed Brother here has ever found a friendly word and helping hand.' " With all this in mind, the Grand Lodge of California did continue the Dispensation of the Prescott Lodge until the former's next Annual Communication. The first three Officers named under the Dispensation were John T. Alsap, Worshipful Master; Hezekiah Brooks, Senior Warden; and Herbert Bowers, Junior Warden. Then, on October 11, 1866, the Grand Lodge of California having found that the Records of Aztlan Lodge had been creditably kept, granted it a Charter and assigned it as No. 177. The Officers who had been named in the Dispensation continued under the Charter.

The next Lodge to organise in the Territory was Arizona Lodge, at Phoenix, to which a Dispensation was issued by the Grand Lodge of California on August 9, 1879. Then, on October 16 of the same year, a Charter was granted to the Lodge and it was registered as No. 257. The first three Officers of this Lodge were John T. Alsap, Worshipful Master; Francis A. Shaw, Senior Warden; and Newell Herrick, Junior Warden.

Arizona Lodge was followed by White Mountain Lodge, at Globe, Arizona, the third Lodge to be organised in the Territory. This Lodge was issued a Dispensation from the New Mexico Grand Lodge on July 1, 1880. Because there was no two-story building in the town of Globe at the time, the Grand Lodge of California had refused to issue a Dispensation to form a Lodge there. For that reason the Brethren there petitioned the Grand Lodge of New Mexico, which allowed Lodges to meet on ground floors, provided they were safe from intrusion and properly tiled. The Altar, Pillars, Pedestals, Columns, and other Lodge furniture used by the Lodge were designed and put together by local carpenters. The Jewels were made of tin, from which they had been neatly cut by the local tinsmith, Bro. Jacob Abraham. Suspended on collars of blue ribbon, they presented a unique appearance. During the time the Brethren were awaiting news of the Dispensation from the New Mexico Grand Lodge, John Kennedy was induced to erect a two-story building. This was then readily accepted by the Masons, and leased by them for five years. In order that the Officers might familiarise themselves with the Ritual of the Grand Lodge of New Mexico, they occasionally met in lonely cabins on the high hills that surround Globe, or in the wilderness near by. The first meeting of this Lodge held under Dispensation took place on August 2, 1880, with the following Officers officiating: A. H. Morehead, Worshipful Master; Alonzo Bailey, Senior Warden; and Jacob Abraham, Junior Warden. Then on January 18, 1881, a Charter was granted to the White Mountain Lodge, Free and Accepted Masons, by the Grand Lodge of New Mexico. It was registered as No. 5.

The first quasi-Masonic organisation in Tucson was a Masonic Club which was organised on April 11, 1875. This, however, ceased to exist on February 3, 1876. Then, on October 19, 1879, the Tucson Masonic Relief Association was organised, the purpose of which was "to relieve distressed worthy Brother Masons, their wives, widows, and orphans, and to encourage social and fraternal intercourse among the Brethren." This organisation was also short-lived, for it lasted only until December 7, 1879. A few months later, on February 6, 1880, to be exact, the Masonic Association of Tucson was organised, with George J. Roskruge as President. On February 17 of the next year, this organisation became Tucson Lodge, under a Dispensation issued by the Grand Lodge of California. Its Charter was granted October 15, 1881, and the number 263 was assigned to it. The first three Officers of the Lodge were: Ansel M. Bragg, Worshipful Master; George J. Roskruge, Senior Warden; Abraham Marx, Junior Warden. The next Lodge to be formed in Arizona Territory was Solomon Lodge, at Tombstone, for which a Dispensation was granted by the Grand Lodge of California on June 14, 1881. The first Officers were: William A. Harwood, Worshipful Master; Benjamin Titus, Senior Warden; and Thomas R. Sorin, Junior Warden.

On February 5, 1882, Tucson Lodge, No. 263, sent the following letter to the four other Lodges in the Territory:

To the Master, Wardens, and Brethren

Brethren:

On Tuesday the 21st March next we will dedicate our new Masonic Hall, now in course of construction, and we extend a cordial invitation to the Officers and members of your Lodge to participate with us on that occasion.

We would also suggest the idea of forming a Grand Lodge at that time, there being now five Lodges in the Territory. If this suggestion meets with your approval, will you elect Delegates to attend for that purpose; and should the Grand Lodge be formed, Tucson Lodge will pay Delegates fees same as in California. At all events we will be happy to see any and all members of your Lodge present at the opening of the hall.

We have extended the same invitation and suggestion to all Lodges in the Territory.

Fraternally yours

Ansel Mellen Bragg, Master
George James Roskrugs, Senior Warden
Abraham Marx, Junior Warden

All the Lodges, excepting only Aztlan Lodge, No. 177, of Prescott, sent Delegates to the Convention. The following communication from Aztlan explains why that Lodge did not also sent Representatives to Tucson:

To the Master, Wardens, and Brethren of Tucson Lodge No. 263
Free and Accepted Masons
Tucson, Arizona

Brethren:

The Committee appointed by this Lodge at their last regular meeting to fully investigate the advisability and necessity of establishing a Grand Lodge in the Territory of Arizona and severing our connection with the Jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of California, have been in daily consultation and deliberation over the subject-matter in question and have come to the conclusion not to send anyone from this Lodge to represent us in the Convention to assemble at Tucson; that we do not believe in the " advisability and necessity " of forming a Grand Lodge in Arizona at this time; that the expense attending such a move will not be for the good of Masonry in this Territory; that it will cause a falling off of membership in all the Lodges in consequence of additional expense, and ultimately result in bankruptcy and the surrender of a majority of the Charters of the several Lodges now existing; that we believe it ill advised and premature.

Trusting you may fully realise your highest anticipations in your coming dedication and festivities, we are, Brethren,

Very fraternally yours,
Geo. D. Kendall, Past Master
Chairman of the Committee

Nevertheless the Representatives of Arizona Lodge, No. 257, at Phoenix, of Tucson Lodge, No. 263, at Tucson, and of White Mountain Lodge, No. 5, at Globe, met at Tucson on March 23, 1882. Representatives of Solomon Lodge U. D., of Tombstone, were also invited to take part in the deliberations of the Convention. Alonzo Bailey was elected Chairman, and George J. Roskruge was appointed Secretary. A Constitution was then adopted by the Convention, a Lodge of Master Masons was opened, and the following Grand Officers were elected and appointed: Ansel M. Bragg, Grand Master; John T. Alsap, Deputy Grand Master; Alonzo Bailey, Senior Grand Warden; William A. Harwood, Junior Grand Warden; Abraham Marx, Grand Treasurer; George J. Roskruge, Grand Secretary; Charles M. Strauss, Grand Chaplain; James A. Zabriskie, Grand Orator; Joseph B. Creamer, Grand Marshal; Josiah Brown, Grand Bible Bearer; James D. Monihon, Grand Standard Bearer; Thomas R. Sorin, Grand Sword Bearer; Francis A. Shaw, Senior Grand Deacon; Charles A. Fisk, Junior Grand Deacon; Benjamin Titus, Senior Grand Steward; William Tucker, Junior Grand Steward; William Downie, Grand Pursuivant; Solon M. Allis, Grand Organist; and James M. Elliott, Grand Tyler. The Master Mason's Lodge was then closed, and the Convention, having completed the business for which it assembled, was adjourned sine die.

The M.·W.·Grand Lodge, Free and Accepted Masons, of the Territory of Arizona was then opened in ample form on March 25, 1882. A resolution was passed that the M.·W.·Grand Master and V.·W.·Grand Secretary should endorse the Charters of the Lodges represented. Since Aztlan Lodge, No. 177, was not represented at the Convention, the following resolution regarding it was passed: "Resolved, That it should be properly represented to the Grand Master during the recess of the Grand Lodge that Aztlan Lodge now holden at Prescott, Arizona Territory, was a duly constituted Lodge, the Grand Master is hereby authorised to adopt the same course and make a similar endorsement on its Charter as on the Charters of the other Lodges in the Territory."

Upon receipt of the engrossed Proceedings of the Grand Lodge Communication of March 25, 1882, the M.·W.·Master of Aztlan Lodge wrote to the Grand Secretary. He referred to the resolution passed by the Grand Lodge regarding the endorsement of Aztlan Lodge's Charter, and objected to sending the Charter out of his control for that purpose. A second interesting letter to the same effect is also found in the Grand Lodge archives. It reads as follows:

Prescott, Arizona Territory
June 3, 1882

George J. Roskruge,
Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge
Free and Accepted Masons of Arizona
Tucson, Arizona Territory

Dear Sir and Brother:

Yours of the 31st May received to-day, and I hasten to reply so as to delay your work as little as possible.

Before I wrote my letter of the 29th I had read the Proceedings of the Grand Lodge, and judging from them that the Grand Master would want to see our Charter I used the language that you quote. I am still of the opinion that it would not be right for me to send you by express or otherwise our Charter. Comparing dates, it seems as if six days were the least number it could possibly take to send it to you and return, if all worked well. During this time we could not examine distressed Brethren who might apply for relief nor open our Lodge even for the burial of a Brother, should it unfortunately be our duty to do so.

I do not know of any section of the California law which bears on the case, and so I quote to you the words of Mackey: "I have no doubt that the Grand Master cannot demand the delivery of the Warrant into his custody, for having been intrusted to the Master, Wardens, and their successors by the Grand Lodge, the Master who is the proper custodian of it has no right to surrender it to anyone, except to that Body from whom it emanated."

It seems to me that the Grand Master can easily satisfy himself as to our being a regularly constituted Lodge, without seeing our Charter, and can then send us a copy of the endorsement under the Grand Seal and attested by you. With this we could work until such time as we might be able to present our Charter under the care of the Master or Warden.

I am desirous of facilitating your labours by all proper means, but the more I consider my duty under the circumstances the less I am inclined to send the Charter out of my control.

I enclose you therefore the Petition drawn in accordance with the Resolution of our Lodge, which please present to the Grand Master for his action.

With assurances of fraternal regard,

I am yours truly,
Morris Goldwater
Master of Aztlan Lodge No. 177

Although the Records do not show just how the Grand Master succeeded in endorsing the Charter, we do know that on June 14, 1882, the proper endorsement was made, and Aztlan Lodge, No. 177, being the oldest Lodge in the Territory, was registered as No. 1 in the list of Arizona Lodges.

The year 1882 was a time of hardship and danger in Arizona. The Territory had a small white population living in widely scattered communities. Although the Southern Pacific Railway had recently completed its main line across the southern part of the Territory, it was of little help to the inhabitants, since most of them lived in remote districts. Roads were little more than trails, and due to heavy mountain snows and summer storms, they were impassable much of the time. At all times there was also constant danger from roving bands of stage-coach robbers and Apache Indians. Travel on the main roads was done in either four- or six-horse Concord stage-coaches or in buckboards; on the mountain trails it was done by horseback or muleback. Danger of attack by marauding Indians made it necessary to do much of the travelling between twilight and dawn. And, of course, few comforts for the weary traveller were to be found at the journey's end. Therefore, it was under such trying conditions as these that the early Masons of Arizona managed to perfect the organization of the Grand Lodge and to attend the regular meetings of their local Lodges. Indeed, it was not until 1895 that northern and southern Arizona were connected by rail, thus making possible a steady increase in Masonic membership and in the number of Chartered Lodges throughout the Territory.

At the first Annual Meeting of the Grand Lodge, held in November, 1882, Bro. Morris Goldwater introduced a resolution for the appointment of a Committee of three to present to the Grand Lodge at its next Session the most feasible method of creating a widow's and orphan's fund. This was done and the Committee reported in November 1883, proposing the following plan for the creation of the fund: That each Lodge pay for each Master Mason borne upon its Rolls the sum of fifty cents per annum. The plan was adopted, and the first year's record of the fund shows that there was a membership of 350, and the sum of $175 in the fund. To-day, with a membership of 6685 there is to the credit of this fund $118,794. In 1918 the Grand Lodge created an endowment fund which now amounts to $161,459. The purpose of the funds was the erection and maintenance of a Home for aged and needy Masons, their widows and orphans. Although the Home has not yet been built, the aged and needy are generously taken care of with money from these funds. In 1922 a large Home with extensive grounds, located at Oracle, Arizona, was offered to the Grand Lodge on condition that it be used for the care and treatment of tubercular patients. The offer was accepted and the Grand Lodge has since maintained the Home for ambulatory tubercular patients, the large majority of whom come from sister Grand Jurisdictions. Although the Home is not now equipped with hospital facilities for the care of advanced cases, it is hoped that in the near future, with the aid of sister Grand Jurisdictions it may be made a permanent national Masonic tubercular sanitarium.

Of the early pioneer Masons, none undertook greater responsibility for the success of Masonry than Bro. George J. Roskruge, known as "Father of Masonry in Arizona," and Grand Secretary for forty-five years. Never discouraged by the great handicaps of adverse opinions and scant funds, he worked tirelessly and advanced money liberally to promote the growth and success of the Fraternity in Arizona.

Another eminent Mason was Marcus A. Smith, a member of Tucson Lodge, No. 4, who was for years delegate to Congress from Arizona Territory, and later United States Senator for a number of years until his death. Among those prominent in the Masonic Fraternity of Arizona to-day is Bro. George W. P. Hunt, a member of White Mountain Lodge, No. 3, of Globe, who has served as governor of the State for seven terms and was minister to Siam by appointment of President Wilson. Still other prominent Arizona Masons are Ralph Cameron, Past Master of Flagstaff Lodge, No. 7, a former United States Senator; Carl Hayden, Past Master of Tempe Lodge, No. 15, who was once a representative in the national Congress and is now a United States senator; Ygnacio Bonillas, Past Master of Nogales Lodge, No. 11, who was ambassador for the Republic of Mexico to the United States during President Carranza's term; and Dr. Andrew E. Douglass, Past Master of Flagstaff Lodge, No. 7, now a member of Tucson Lodge, No. 4, who is internationally known for his scientific work in astronomy and tree-ring research.

Since the formation of the Grand Lodge in 1882, with 5 Lodges, a membership of 274, and no cash resources, it has grown to 38 Lodges, having 6685 members and cash resources of $326,778.

Alexander G. Abell, Very Worshipful Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of California for years, did much to promote the order in Arizona. Hon. John Howard was largely instrumental in helping to organise the first Masonic Lodge in Arizona, which was at Prescott. The first recorded minutes of a meeting are without date. This, however, was in the year 1864, the Secretary being Lieut. Charles Curtis, of the United States army.

The meeting was held at the house of John N. Goodwin, then governor of the Territory, Mr. Goodwin being the presiding officer.

It was resolved to apply to the Grand Lodge of California for Dispensation to open a Lodge at Prescott. The name selected was Aztlan. John T. Alsap was chosen Worshipful Master; Joseph Ehle, Senior Warden; and H. Brooks, Junior Warden. Bro. John T. Alsap was afterwards the second Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons of Arizona. The petition was signed by nine Master Masons. As it was necessary to have a recommendation from the nearest Lodge, Joseph Lemon was selected to carry the petition to Santa Fe, New Mexico.

At the next meeting, which is also without date, $300 were subscribed for the purpose of procuring and furnishing a hall. Upon the return of John Lemon from Santa Fe, John N. Goodwin was chosen to present the petition to the Grand Master of California. This was done April 22, 1865, and the petition was granted.

Owing to the inability of Mr. Ehle to secure a demit from his Lodge, H. Brooks was named Senior Warden and Herbert Bowers, Junior Warden.

The first to apply for Degrees was Lieut. Samuel L. Barr, a Fellow-craft. The first named as affiliating members were N. L. Griffin, A. W. Adams, and Ned Pierce. September 30, 1865, the first regular Work was done. A. C. Noyes and J. G. Mitchell receiving the Entered Apprentice Degree and Lieut. Samuel L. Barr being raised to the Sublime Degree of Master Mason.

The first Lodge funeral held was on January 2, 1866, Stephen Lea, a member of an Oregon Lodge being the deceased.

On August 1866 the last meeting under Dispensation was held. The debts of the Lodge were all paid; the books, papers, and Dispensation were forwarded to California by Bro. Samuel L. Barr, and by a vote of the Lodge the Grand Lodge of California was asked to change the name of the Lodge from Aztlan to Arizona Lodge and to grant a Charter. January 21, 1867, the Charter arrived, but the name of the Lodge remained as Aztlan Lodge, No. 177. The Charter was brought from San Francisco, California, to La Paz by Charles N. Genung, and from La Paz to Prescott by Joseph R. Walker.

FREEMASONRY IN ARKANSAS

ANDREW J. RUSSELL

ALTHOUGH Arkansas is rich in Masonic lore, any one attempting to write or compile a comprehensive history of Freemasonry during its more than one hundred years of organised existence in the State is greatly handicapped by a lack of Records. The loss of the Grand Lodge's library by fire at three different times has made it impossible for the historian to be sure that his statements are absolutely authentic. In fact, much of the Arkansas Masonic history that does exist is based on tradition rather than on written records chronologically arranged. In order to offset this lack of documentary evidence, the Grand Lodge of 1871, realising the need of gathering and preserving Masonic data, appointed a History Commission for that purpose. During the next two years this Commission made reports on its findings, and by the time of the Session of 1873 it seems to have caught up with its work. The gist of its reports was, however, merely a recital of important features of the organisation of the Grand Lodge in 1838, supplemented by biographical sketches of Past Grand Masters.

Again, in 1927, the task of bringing such data up to date was undertaken. At the Session held that year, another History Commission was created. This second Commission has, with the assistance of the Grand Secretary, succeeded in restoring a complete file of all Proceedings except those for the years 1839 and 1840. Some of the earlier Proceedings were obtained only by making copies of data preserved in the libraries of other Grand Jurisdictions. Still other data that were gathered and are still being gathered give facts regarding the early history of the 730 Lodges (511 of which are still active), which have been Chartered by the Grand Jurisdiction. The task of procuring portraits of all Past Grand Masters was also undertaken. With only a few exceptions, that task is now complete. The collection of historic mementoes which has recently been brought together includes bound volumes of The Trowel, a Masonic publication edited by Past Grand Master George Thornburgh from 1886 to 1922, as well as many Masonic histories and encyclopædias in which references to Freemasonry in Arkansas are made. From those and the writer's own memories and associations, gained from attending every Session of the Grand Lodge held since 1886, he has gathered material for this brief sketch.

The tradition that Symbolic Masonry was introduced into Arkansas by the Spaniards in 1770, as suggested by one writer, is vague and independable. It is an historic fact, however, that following the expeditions of Hernando de Soto in the sixteenth century several Spanish settlements were made in that part of the Missouri Territory from which Arkansas Territory was afterwards carved. The first of those was at Arkansas Post. In the minds of many it is not improbable that Freemasonry existed in some form among the early pioneers of those first settlements, but the belief cannot be substantiated by authentic records.

Beginning with the indisputably authentic records, we, however, find that in 1819, Andrew Scott, a resident of Potosi, Missouri, was appointed by President James Monroe to serve as judge of the Superior Court of the Territory of Arkansas. After removing to Arkansas Territory and locating there, he and other members of the Fraternity in that region petitioned the Grand Lodge of Kentucky for Arkansas Lodge, to be located at Arkansas Post, then capital of the Territory. The Charter naming Robert M. Johnson as Worshipful Master was issued on November 30, 1819. Upon Judge Scott's departure from Potosi, the Officers and members of his Lodge there had deemed it advisable to surrender their letters of Dispensation, and in so doing they had requested the Grand Lodge of Kentucky to permit Judge Scott to retain the Jewels of the Potosi Lodge for the purpose of presenting them to the first Masonic Lodge to be established in the Arkansas Territory. The request was granted, and accordingly, upon the institution of Arkansas Lodge U. D. the Jewels which had formerly been used by his old Lodge in Missouri were presented by Judge Scott to the first Lodge in the new Territory.

Later, in 1821, when the seat of government was removed from Arkansas Post almost all members demitted from Arkansas Lodge, for they too were removing to the new seat of government. This made it necessary for the Lodge there also to surrender its Dispensation to the Grand Lodge of Kentucky, and again Judge Scott retained the Jewels for the purpose of presenting them to the next Lodge to be established in his adopted Territory. However, a period of fifteen years, from 1821 to 1836, appears to have elapsed before any further movement looking toward the establishment of new Lodges was undertaken. This was probably due to the "anti-Masonic excitement" which was raging with intense fury at about that time. In 1836, however, the year of the admission of Arkansas into the Union, the Grand Lodge of Tennessee was Petitioned for a Dispensation for a new Lodge to be located at Fayetteville, in Washington County. The Dispensation was granted, and the Lodge was called Washington Lodge. It was later Chartered as Lodge No. 82, with Onesimus Evans acting as its Master, James McKisick as Senior Warden, and Matthew Leeper as Junior Warden. Upon the establishment of this Lodge, Judge Scott again made good his promise concerning the Jewels. When the Charter was granted, however, it was accompanied by proper Jewels, and, at the suggestion of Judge Scott, the new Lodge presented the Jewels which he had brought with him from Missouri to Clarksville Lodge, No. 9, which meantime had been Instituted by the Grand Lodge of Arkansas. Then, in 1845, when the Charter of Clarksville Lodge, No. 9, was taken up, the Jewels were placed in the keeping of Franklin Lodge. Two years later they were placed in the archives of the Grand Lodge of Arkansas, where they were later unfortunately destroyed by fire.

In September, 1837, the Grand Lodge of Louisiana granted a Dispensation for Western Star Lodge, at Little Rock, designating Edward Cross as Master, Charles L. Jeffries as Senior Warden, and Nicholas Peay as Junior Warden. The Charter for this Lodge was issued on February 12, 1838, as Western Star Lodge, No. 43. Before January 6, 1836, a second attempt to establish Masonry at Arkansas Post had been authorised by the Grand Lodge of Louisiana, and a Charter had been issued to Morning Star Lodge, No. 42, of that place. But the attempt to revive Masonry there was almost futile, for as time passed the historic village, itself the first point of settlement and the first capital of the State, began gradually to disappear, leaving little trace of its Masonic activities.

The next Lodge to be established in Arkansas was granted a Dispensation by the Grand Master of Alabama on November 21, 1838. It was called Mount Horeb Lodge and was located at Washington, in Hempstead County. Soon after its establishment this and the other Chartered Lodges of the State called a Convention, which met in Little Rock on November 21, 1838, and after a six days' Session adjourned sine die. The total membership of all the Lodges in Arkansas at that time was about one hundred. The following copy of the Record, or rather, abstract, of the Convention's Proceedings was obtained by the Arkansas History Commission from the files in the archives of the Grand Lodge in Missouri.

NOTICE OF THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE CONVENTION THAT FORMED THE CONSTITUTION OF THE GRAND LODGE OF ARKANSAS
A.D. 1838 (A.L. 5838)

The Convention of the Ancient York Rites met in the city of Little Rock, Arkansas, in the month of November, in the year of Christ, 1838 (A.L. 5838), was composed of the following Delegates:

From Washington Lodge, No. 82, working under authority of the Grand Lodge of Tennessee, Onesimus Evans, Past Master, Washington L. Wilson, Robert Bedford, A. Whinnery, R. C. S. Brown, Samuel Adams, and Williamson S. Oldham.

From Western Star Lodge, No. 43, working under authority of the Grand Lodge of Louisiana, William Gilchrist, Past Master, Charles L. Jeffries, Past Master, Nicholas Peay, Past Master, Edward Cross, Past Master, Thomas Parsel, Alden Sprague, and John Morris.

From Morning Star Lodge, No. 42, working under authority of the Grand Lodge of Louisiana, John W. Pullen.

From Mount Horeb Lodge, working under a Dispensation from the Grand Lodge of Alabama, James H. Walker, Allen M. Oakley, Joseph W. McKean, and James Trigg.

Which Convention, on the 21st day of November, A.D. 1838, by unanimous consent of all Delegates, adopted a Constitution for the government of the Grand Lodge of Arkansas: Whereupon a Grand Lodge was opened in due and ancient form, and the Officers thereof were elected and installed according to the most ancient usages and customs of the Fraternity: When on the 27th day of November, aforesaid, the Convention adjourned sine die.

Attest: Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of Arkansas

Judging from this account the Convention must have resolved itself into a Grand Lodge, but if any Minutes were kept other than the above "Notice of Proceedings," they have been "lost in the rubbish of the Temple."

Elbert H. English, noted as a jurist as well as a Masonic scholar, served as Grand Master from 1849 to 1850. After an interim of nine years he was again elected in 1859. From that time on he was re-elected from Session to Session until November 1869, when he retired. Thus he served in that high Office during the entire period of the War between the States. Although his addresses to the Grand Lodge during his incumbency are models of excellence in diction and fraternalism, some of them are highly coloured with the bitterness which was fairly general at that time. Feeling impelled to espouse the cause of Secession it was only natural that he should employ his beautiful flow of English in its support. Although he ever eschewed the idea that he could be actuated by his political views, in his address delivered at the Grand Lodge Session of November 1861 he said in part: "I refer to these matters not in a political sense, or as mere political events, for Masonry does not interfere in affairs of a strictly political character—but I refer to them as great civil events—stern historical realities overwhelming in their immediate consequences and deeply affecting our entire people in all their relations, civil and social as well as political. . . . There are no voices to respond for a number of subordinate Lodges. Why are these Brethren absent? The answer is in every mouth, with all its thrilling and momentous associations! They have laid aside the gavel, the trowel, and the plumb-line, and taken up the sword. And this night their tents whiten many a plain, and their patriotic breasts help to form a living wall to protect eleven States of a once-glorious Union from the invasion and desolation of a man—if he may be called such—who now desecrates the seat first occupied by the good and great Washington. And who, as the fit representative of the party that placed him in power, has trampled in the dust the Constitution framed by the purest and best men that ever sat in council to organise a government. And may I be permitted to say that, if there is weeping in Heaven, Washington and his associates have wept over the ruin which his degenerate successor and his black-Republican confederates in crime and guilt have wrought!"

When the smoke of battle had finally cleared away, however, when victory had come to the other side and the domicile of the Grand Lodge had been returned to Little Rock, whence it had been removed to the Confederate seat of State government at Washington, in Hempstead County, Grand Master English seems to have had a different attitude. In his address made at the November Session of the Grand Lodge in 1865, a marked contrast in the tone of his words was very noticeable, for he at that time evinced his own resignation to the fate of war in the following words: " The terrible storm of war is over, the last faint echoes of its awful thunders are hushed, its angry clouds are drifting away, and the sun of peace once more smiles upon our desolated country. Many of our Brethren who met with us in former years and whose faces are familiar to us now sleep the long sleep of death, in their quiet resting-places, and their homes are left in mourning. They may have erred, but to err is incident to the frailty of human nature, and to forgive is not only Masonic but Divine. Let the broad mantle of Masonic charity be thrown over their errors, whatever they have been, and let their virtues be cherished in the memory of those of us who survive them. The unfortunate and deplorable civil commotion, which for four gloomy years afflicted our country, fortunately for Masonry it has no schism. The Masons of the United States now, as before the national troubles, constitute one great individual Fraternity. Leading Masons from every section of our extensive country have assembled at Columbus, Ohio, in the General Grand Chapter and the General Grand Encampment, since the close of the war, and, as in years gone, they treated each other as Brothers and Companions, transacted their Masonic business in peace and harmony, renewed their social and fraternal obligations around a common Altar, and have thus demonstrated to the world that Masons are bound together by ties which cannot be severed by civil strife or political conflicts. . . . There stretches from the stormy coast of the Atlantic to the calm and peaceful shore of the Pacific a fraternal chain of strong links, which, though unseen by the world, will do more than all else to reunite and strengthen the bonds of union between the Northern and Southern people, who during the last four years were unhappily at war about sectional questions."

In another address, made at the Grand Lodge Session of 1866, Bro. English said: " At the close of the war, no class of our population returned more readily, quietly, and cheerfully to the peaceful pursuits of life than did the Masonic Fraternity. . . . I repeat now, in writing, substantially what I said to the last Grand Lodge orally: In considering the claims of applicants for initiation, advancement, or affiliation, the physical, moral, and mental fitness of the applicant must alone be regarded. In other words, none other than the old and well-defined Masonic tests should be applied. No inquiry should be made whether he was born North or South, or was on one side or the other in the late war."

As a sequel, the significant fact remains that such a spirit of toleration exists among the members of the Craft in Arkansas as is not to be found in any other civic and moral institution of the State. Although the spirit of the Old South still exists there in legend and in song, no Mason attempts to use it to further his political ambitions. There is hardly a community or section of the State, however, that was not greatly affected by the great strife. Tales about thrilling experiences and narrow escapes from death have been handed down from father to son. Even now there are men still living who witnessed the mysterious freeing of certain prisoners of war after they had been condemned to death, the secret being that the prisoners were Masons. Some of their captors, having seen the Masonic sign of distress, immediately released the prisoners while their comrades were executed in accordance with the rules of war. It is also an historical fact that many men prominent in Arkansas politics have also been prominent in Masonry, but no governor, congressman, or United States senator of Arkansas has ever occupied the office of Grand Master. It may not be improper also to observe that while Arkansas has not elected a Republican to State office since Reconstruction Days, yet Republicans, and even veterans of the Union Army, have frequently been elected as Grand Masters of the Masonic Fraternity in this Jurisdiction.

The following historical highlights of Arkansas Masonry were gleaned from the Annual Proceedings now in the Grand Lodge Library of the Albert Pike Memorial Temple at Little Rock. They incidentally introduce the names of prominent Masons, whose complete biographies would indeed give a comprehensive history of Freemasonry in Arkansas. As has been said, following the third loss of the Grand Lodge library by fire, the Grand Secretary, Fay Hempstead, and the present History Commission have succeeded in restoring all Proceedings except those for the years 1839 and 1840. Those covering the period from the time of the organisation Convention held in 1838 up to 1851, have been supplied mainly by bound copies entitled Proceedings of the Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons of Arkansas: 1838-1851. The originals of these Proceedings are to be found in the libraries of the Grand Lodges of Alabama, Maine, Massachusetts, and Missouri.

The Session of 1841 convened at the Masonic Temple in Little Rock, which was, perhaps, the Hall of Western Star Lodge, No. 2, where it seems likely that all subsequent Sessions were held up to the time of the outbreak of the War between the States. During that period, meetings were held at Washington, the Confederate capital of the State. The Session of 1841 was presided over by Alden Sprague, Grand Master pro tempore. At that meeting Bro. Sprague was elected Grand Master for the ensuing year. Returns were then made from Washington Lodge, No. 1, at Fayetteville; Western Star Lodge, No. 2, at Little Rock; Morning Star Lodge, No. 3, at Arkansas Post; Mount Horeb Lodge, No. 4, at Washington; Clarksville Lodge, No. 5, at Clarksville; and Van Buren Lodge, No. 6, at Van Buren. During the Session it was also "Resolved, That Brother Edward Cross be and is hereby appointed a Delegate from this M. : W. : Grand Lodge, and is hereby requested and authorised to attend the Convention of the several Grand Lodges in the United States proposed to be held in Washington, D. C., in March next."

After recording a list of the Officers present at the next Session, which convened on November 7, 1842, this entry follows: "The Grand Lodge was opened in ample form, continued in Session until the sixth day of February, A. L. 5843, when the same was closed in ample form, during which Session the following elections, appointments, et cetera, took place." Two Charters were granted at that time. It was also ordered that the Grand Secretary should cause to be published an abstract from the Minutes, and that a copy of it should be sent to the several States "and to Texas." One copy of it was also to go to each of the several Lodges of the Grand Lodge of that republic.

At the Session of 1843 a Committee which had been appointed at the previous Session reported that it had "settled the difficulty said to exist in Van Buren Lodge, No. 6, to the great satisfaction of all concerned and in accordance with the ancient usages and customs of the Fraternity." Thus, apparently, an end was made of what appears to have been the first trouble within the Grand Lodge. Several Communications from other Grand Jurisdictions were then read and filed.

The 1845 Session of the Grand Lodge took further note of a matter that had been discussed during the 1842 Session, namely the death of the Grand Jurisdiction's first Grand Master, William Gilchrist. At that time it was requested that subscriptions be taken "to erect a suitable monument over his remains." At that same Session the Committee of Foreign Correspondence submitted an extensive review of the Proceedings of the Grand Lodges in Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Iowa, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, Missouri, New York, North Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, and Wisconsin.

The next Annual Session, held on November 5, 1846, authorized "a Committee of three to prepare an act of incorporation for this Grand Jurisdiction and to present it to the legislature during its present session." It appears that the Committee carried out its instructions, and that the Grand Lodge authorized the Act to be included in its printed Proceedings of that year. Such incidents as this explain, perhaps, the reason for the long-drawn-out Sessions of this period, some of which lasted several weeks. The State Legislature was also in session during the same period. Those present at this Session levied a tax of one dollar on each non-affiliated Mason living in the State, and ordered subordinate Lodges to collect the tax and to report on it at the next Session. The money thus raised was to be spent "for charitable purposes." This Session also endorsed the idea of a General Grand Lodge. Early in the Session of the Grand Lodge of 1847, a resolution introduced and promptly passed on the second day repealed the "tax edict" of the previous Session. Thus it is clear that the non-affiliate, who is still a problem to almost every Masonic Jurisdiction, was a concern to the Grand Lodge of Arkansas even in those early days.

Previous to the Session of 1848 it may have been the custom for Grand Masters to deliver opening addresses, but if such had been the case it had not been customary to include the addresses in the Record. The Record of the 1848 Session, however, gives a complete version of Grand Master D. J. Baldwin's address, which was prefaced by these words: "Obedient to the custom, salutary in its tendency, which has obtained in the sister Grand Lodges of this nation, it is a duty incumbent on us at the opening of this Grand Communication to render thanks to the Great Jehovah for his wonderful goodness and enduring mercy to us and our Brotherhood during the past year, and to bring to your notice such matters as imperiously demand your special attention. Chosen and sent here for your sagacity, virtue, and wisdom, to adorn the great Masonic edifice within our bounds, your constituencies look to you for that result of your Labours which your capacity warrants and your disposition so fully guarantees." In this introduction Grand Master Baldwin dealt with the problems of the times, and seemingly with great understanding. Like Banquo's ghost that would not down, the Grand Master reported that "Van Buren Lodge, No. 6, has, for a peculiar local reason, ceased to exist, and its Charter, Jewels, and furniture are in the hands of our Grand Secretary." However, this Lodge is now a very lively corpse.

It was at this Session of 1848 that the Grand Lodge first advocated the establishment of a school for the blind in Arkansas. At that time steps were taken to provide for raising funds for the purpose. It is significant that the Arkansas Legislature soon thereafter established a school for the blind which is to-day one of the leading eleemosynary institutions in this commonwealth. Twenty-one Lodges were represented at this Session, which lasted twelve days.

Without any Minute of explanation, neither the Grand Master, P. P. Pullen, nor the Deputy Grand Master, George B. Hayden, was present at the opening of the 1849 Session. However, both were listed as being present at later sittings. Bro. E. H. English is recorded as having acted as the Grand Master pro tempore. Although Bro. English's name does not appear among those who were possible candidates for the Office of Grand Master, he was elected to that high position for the succeeding Session. Thus began in the Grand Lodge of Arkansas the career of one of the State's most illustrious Masons. At the next Annual Communication, thirty-two subordinate Lodges were represented. In his opening address Grand Master English stressed the need for education and advocated the establishment of a Masonic school. He also proposed that a uniform Code of By-Laws be adopted. The establishment of St. John's College was then recommended by the Educational Committee, and another Committee was named to apply for a Charter for the school. This Session also provided for a Grand Lecturer, and Bro. W. H. Sutton was unanimously named to fill the newly created Office. The Proceedings of this Session also contain a list of the names of members of the thirty-four subordinate Lodges in the State. The next year, at the Session of 1851, Grand Master E. H. Whitfield suggested that it would be expedient for the Grand Lodge to divide the State into four or more Districts. Thus was established the District system and the appointment of the District Deputy Grand Masters. The Committee which had been appointed to obtain a Charter for St. John's College also reported at this time and presented a Charter which had been granted by an Act of the Legislature. It had been approved on December 31, 1850.

Since the Session of 1852 celebrated the hundredth anniversary of the Initiation of George Washington into Freemasonry, it was ordered that "a block of marble of suitable size, with appropriate device and emblems, should be prepared and forwarded to the national capital to be placed in the Washington Monument just then being erected there." At the next year's Session, Bro. E.

H. English, Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Correspondence, submitted a report, at the conclusion of which he pointed out some of the leading subjects that had recently been engaging the attention of the Craft throughout the United States. Among those topics mentioned were the matters of appropriately celebrating the Initiation of George Washington, of erecting a monument to Henry Clay, of providing relief for the Brethren in California, of settling the disputes existing among the Brethren of New York, and of creating a General Grand Lodge. Commenting on these matters in general, the Chairman said: "In these important enterprises, it is to be hoped that Arkansas will not be an idle spectator, but that she will keep her lamps trimmed and her lights burning, and actively employ her growing energies in the great field of Masonic charity spread out before her."

At the 1854 Communication the Library Committee reported the purchase of thirty-five volumes of Masonic literature at a cost of $153. It is also interesting to note that Albert Pike was quite active in the Sessions of this period. Another interesting feature of the Session was the great amount of attention which was given at the time to the maintenance and progress of St. John's College. Indeed, more than passing notice should be given to the establishment of St. John's College. For years this college flourished under Masonic management. It was made possible by funds contributed by the Grand Lodge. State educational facilities not having yet been provided, it was the alma mater of many men who contributed much to the educational development of the State. Like many other pioneering projects, however, it went out of existence with the coming of endowed colleges and the establishment of State schools. The founding of this college is perhaps the outstanding contribution of Arkansas Masonry during the first fifty years of its Grand Lodge. Next year Grand Master Nathaniel G. Smith expressed his attitude toward the library in the following words: We have laid the foundation for a good library. This is a good work. Let us pursue it by adding to the collection of books and increasing it annually until we have such a library as our wants demand, one that comports with our standing as a Grand Lodge. The Bible says, 'give thyself to reading' and 'study to show thyself a workman that needeth not to be ashamed.' " Later in the Session of that year (1855) an appropriation of $200 was made for the library fund.

An interesting question has been raised regarding the address of the Grand Orator, George A. Gallagher, which was made at the Annual Communication of 1856. Since he began a most scholarly and able address by saying, "Ladies and gentlemen, Brethren," we to-day wonder how the "ladies" happened to be present, for the Order of the Eastern Star had not yet been introduced into Arkansas. The outstanding event in the Proceedings of 1857 was discussion of the codification of the By-Laws governing subordinate Lodges and a copy of the Constitution and the By-Laws governing the Grand Lodge.

The first substantial effort to establish a Masonic Widows' and Orphans' Home seems to have culminated in 1858, when Grand Master Luke E. Barber reported having held an Emergent Communication of the Grand Lodge at Pine Bluff, on June 24 of that year. At this Session it was appropriately noted that the Grand Lodge was then twenty years old, and that the number of Lodges had increased from 4 subordinate Lodges to 128. During the Session of 1859 Albert Pike was introduced as the representative to the Grand Lodge of Minnesota and the Grand Lodge National of the Spanish Republic of Santo Domingo. He delivered an address, which was perhaps his first active participation in the Grand Lodge of Arkansas. Another interesting event of this Session was the attitude expressed toward duelling. Despite the fact that duels were quite common and were still regarded as being the proper way for prominent men to settle their difficulties, the Grand Lodge of 1862 "Resolved, That no Mason who shall knowingly challenge or accept a challenge from a Mason shall sit in this Grand Lodge." Perhaps the outstanding feature of the Proceedings of 1863 was the record that a number of Travelling Lodges had been granted Dispensations to meet the exigencies of the war. Past Grand Master J. W. Sorrels has told the author of this article that he received the Masonic Degrees stationed in Madison County, Arkansas, with the Confederate Army, and that he was only nineteen years old at the time. The impressive event of the Session of 1869 was the retirement of Grand Master English after ten years of continuous service. A Past Grand Master's Jewel was presented to him at that time.

At the Session George Thornburgh, afterwards Grand Master and for years editor of the Masonic Trowel, made his appearance. From then on he attended every Session of the Grand Lodge until his death. George Thornburgh may be called the pioneer advocate of prohibition in Arkansas, for at the 1886 Session he urged the adoption of a resolution making it a Masonic offense punishable by expulsion for a member to keep a saloon for the sale of intoxicating liquors. At this Session a Committee on History was also appointed. Dr. E. R. Duvall was Chairman. This Committee made very interesting reports at subsequent Sessions in 1872, 1873, 1874, and 1875. They consisted mainly of short biographies of Past Grand Masters.

The main feature of the Past Grand Master's address delivered at the Annual Communication of 1873 referred to the national panic, brought about by the appearance of a cholera epidemic in the early summer and the outbreak of yellow fever in the autumn, which was climaxed by "one of the worst droughts ever known anywhere." Another event of this Session worthy of more than passing attention was J. R. H. Scott's presenting to the Grand Lodge the Apron worn by his illustrious father, Judge Andrew Scott.

A few days after the adjournment of the Grand Lodge of 1875, the Masonic Hall burned down, and much valuable property, unpublished Records, and many historic articles belonging to the Grand Lodge were destroyed. An interesting feature of the Session of 1875 was the Lodge's refusal to allow the Grand Treasurer $400 to reimburse him for that amount which he had lost through the failure of a bank. The reason given was that the Officer had deposited the money in his own name and not in the name of the Grand Lodge.

A spirit of optimism and rejoicing characterised the Session of 1876, America's centennial year. However, the Grand Master, Bro. M. L. Bell, spoke as follows in his address made at that time: "While we can but rejoice at the material prosperity of our State, the abundant crops and general peace and prosperity that reign through the land, can we congratulate ourselves upon equal progress in education and refinement, goodness and purity, among the people? . . . Amid our congratulations on our general prosperity as a State and a people, can we also rejoice in the success and prosperity of our work as Masons?"

Again, soon after the adjournment of the Session of 1877, the Masonic Hall was destroyed by fire and a valuable Masonic library as well as all Records, books, and papers pertaining to the Grand Secretary's Office were among the losses. One of the features of the Session of 1879 was the conferring of the Degrees on Arthur McArthur by special request of Magnolia Lodge, No. 2. At the time a captain in the United States Army stationed at Little Rock, Bro. McArthur afterwards became famous as a Brigadier-General of the Confederate Army, and as one of the principal generals in the Spanish-American War. He was a native of Little Rock.

The Session of 1888 featured the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the organisation of the Grand Lodge. John P. Karns was the only Brother present who had attended the Convention of 1838. Among the prominent visitors at this celebration was Joseph Eichbaum, Grand Master of Pennsylvania, and Michael Nisbet, the Grand Secretary of that Jurisdiction. The author of this article was also present, being only twenty-three years of age at the time.

The Session of 1892, presided over by Bro. C. A. Bridewell, was the first to be held in the Grand Lodge Temple that had been erected at the corner of Fifth and Main Streets in Little Rock. For the first time in the history of the Grand Lodge, it was able to meet in its own home. This was an occasion of much felicitation. This Session marked the beginning of the long and faithful service of John M. Oathout as Grand Lecturer. Bro. Oathout served from 1892 till his death in 1912. He was succeeded by Bro. Clark, who is still serving in that capacity, having already exceeded the record of Bro. Oathout in point of time.

As has already been pointed out, Arkansas has been favoured with a great deal of unusually fine Masonic material. The State has, indeed, produced some of the outstanding Masons of the world. If records had been preserved the history of Freemasonry in Arkansas would compare favourably with that of any other Grand Jurisdiction.

However, the limitations, both of authentic Records as well as space, are such that biographical sketches can be given for only a few of Arkansas's most distinguished members of the Craft. First, let us sketch the life of that great Arkansas Mason—Albert Pike.

Pike was born in Boston, Massachusetts, on December 29, 1809. In 1822 he attended Harvard University, and afterwards he taught school in Massachusetts for seven years. In 1832 he joined a trading party and made an expedition through Kansas, Missouri, New Mexico, and the Indian Territory. He reached Fort Smith, Arkansas, on December 10 of that year. There he resumed his profession as a teacher. Later he married Miss Mary Ann Hamilton at Arkansas Post. He also engaged in newspaper work at Van Buren and at Little Rock, and was admitted to the bar in 1836. Afterwards he was admitted to the bar of the Supreme Court of the United States. He received that advancement just when Abraham Lincoln and Hannabal Hamblin did. In 1846, during the war with Mexico, Pike raised a company of Arkansas cavalrymen and served as its captain under Archibald Yell, the Arkansas governor who resigned office to enter his country's military service. Bro. Yell, a Mason, was killed at the battle of Buena Vista, in 1847. Pike's account of the action at Buena Vista, as published throughout the State, aroused the ire of Colonel John S. Roane, who thought the report reflected unjustly on the Arkansas regiment. In consequence Colonel Roane challenged Captain Pike to a duel, and although neither was a "fire-eater," public opinion was such that Pike felt himself honour bound to accept the challenge. The duel was fought at a spot in the Indian Territory, just across the Arkansas River from Fort Smith, in August, 1848. Two shots were exchanged by each of the duelists, fortunately without injury to either. Their seconds refusing to interfere, personal friends who were present brought about a reconciliation. Pike and Roane afterwards became friends and companions. When Captain Pike was mustered out, he returned to Little Rock and resumed his law practice.

Bro. Pike was made a Mason in Western Star Lodge, No. 2, in July 1850. In 1859 Albert Pike became Grand Commander of the Scottish Rite of the Southern Jurisdiction. He also assisted in establishing the Scottish Rite Council in Arkansas, in 1853. That same year he was made Grand High Priest of the Royal Arch Chapter, and in 1865 he was chosen Grand Orator of the Grand Lodge. The fact that he never attained the position of Grand Master was perhaps due to his activities in legal and military pursuits. In 1853 Pike removed from Little Rock to New Orleans, probably with a view to practising law there. Apparently he did not secure an extensive practice, however, for he maintained himself by translating the Code Napoleon from the French, a translation which is still in use in Louisiana. Pike is rated as one of the most learned lawyers of his time. After residing in New Orleans for about five years, Pike returned to Little Rock, where he maintained his residence until 1868. Then he removed to Washington, District of Columbia, where he could be in closer contact with his Masonic duties. He resided there until his death on April 2, 1891.

Pike's thrilling yet disappointing career as a soldier during the war between the States is worthy of historical reference. Like many another Easterner who had cast his lot in Dixie Land, Albert Pike found himself in a dilemma when it became necessary to choose between his country as a whole and his State. As a boy he had heard of the glory of the Union, but as a man he was faced with the "sovereignty" of his State. Although he hoped against hope that Arkansas would not secede, when it did so he finally cast the die in its favour by saying, "Whatever I am, I owe it to my State." During the war he reached the rank of brigadier-general, and was put in command of a brigade composed largely of Cherokee, Chickasaw, and Choctaw Indians from the Indian Territory. When General Van Dorn ordered those troops to be taken into Kansas, Pike protested, for he did not think that the Indians should be required to fight except in their own Territory. But about that time the Federal troops under General Curtis invaded western Arkansas, and General Pike was required to join General Van Dorn. He did so just in time to participate in the battle of Pea Ridge, or Elkhorn, in Washington County, Arkansas. That battle was fought contrary to Pike's judgment and against his advice. It terminated unsuccessfully for the Confederates, who lost two of their ablest leaders, General McIntosh and General McCulloch.

This was the beginning of a very sad and disappointing period of Pike's life—due chiefly to a quarrel which arose between him and other Confederate commanders with whom he was associated. So serious did the differences of opinion become that Pike was ordered arrested. Finally, the disagreement culminated in Pike's retirement from the service during the early years of the war. To add to his troubles, Pike's large property holdings were confiscated by the Federal Government. At one time property of his valued at $20,000 was sold on the auction block. As a result he was almost penniless at the close of the war. But with the dauntless courage characteristic of the man, Albert Pike resumed his literary and legal pursuits and again amassed quite a fortune. In 1879 he relinquished the practice of law in order to give his entire time to his Masonic pursuits and literary productions. "Every Year" is his best known poem.

Among the many magnificent tributes which have been paid to Bro. Pike's memory, the following from Colonel Patrick Donan, of Fargo, North Dakota, is one of the most interesting. Colonel Donan said of him:

Albert Pike was a king among men by the divine right of merit. A giant in body, in brain, in heart, and in soul. So majestic in appearance that every passerby turned to gaze upon him and admire him. Six feet, two inches tall, with the proportions of a Hercules and the grace of an Apollo. A face and head massive and leonine, recalling in every feature some sculptor's dream of a Grecian god; while his long, wavy hair, flowing down over his shoulders, made a strikingly picturesque effect. The whole expression of his countenance told of power combined with gentleness, refinement, and benevolence. . . .

His legal practice brought him several fortunes . . . but his ear and heart and purse were ever open to the appeal of the needy or distressed and his benefactions were beyond enumeration. His bounty was reckless in its lavishness. In all the rush of his busy and eventful career, he found time to counsel and assist every worthy man or woman who came to him. He was peculiarly kind and considerate toward young people.

Glorious record of a glorious man! Great enough to succeed in nearly every line of human effort and ambition. A patient and faithful teacher, a brilliant editor, a lawyer of eminent ability and skill, an eloquent and impasssioned orator, a gallant soldier, a profound scholar, a poet whose verses tingle with pure Promethean fire that comes from heaven alone, a prolific author, a wise counselor, a patriot, and a philanthropist whose charity was broad enough to take in all mankind. God never made a gentler gentleman, a better citizen, or a truer man! He was in himself the highest and grandest embodiment of the virtues and graces of Freemasonry, a living exemplification of the exalted and exalting principles of our great world-embracing Brotherhood! He ran the whole gamut of earthly honours. He climbed Fame's glittering ladder to its loftiest height, and stepped from its topmost round into the skies. . . .

As had already been indicated, another of Arkansas' famous Masons was Elbert Hartwell English. A native of Alabama, Bro. English was reared on a farm. His education was such as he could obtain from the primary schools and academies of his day. He was admitted to the bar in 1838 and had some experience as a legislator. In May 1844 he removed to Little Rock, and soon thereafter was appointed reporter of decisions of the Supreme Court. In 1854 the General Assembly elected him chief justice of the Supreme Court, an office he held until his death excepting only a short period during the war between the States. Bro. English was made a Mason in Athens Lodge, No. 18, in Alabama, on August 25, 1842. Afterwards he affiliated with Western Star Lodge, No. 2, at Little Rock. In 1849 he was elected Grand Master. Following his reelection in 1859, he served for ten consecutive years, the longest period any one Grand Master has ever served. The founding of St. John's College was the outstanding accomplishment of his administration. Bro. English received all the Degrees of both the York Rite and the Scottish Rite.

Charles E. Rosenbaum, another distinguished Arkansas Mason, was born in St. Louis, Missouri, on January 1, 1855. He was educated in the public schools of his native city, and then in 1883 he moved to Little Rock, where he entered business. He was an active participant in both the York Rite and the Scottish Rite Bodies. He served as Grand Master from November 1914 to November 1915. His most distinctive service to Masonry came perhaps through his connection with the Scottish Rite Bodies, wherein he became a pioneer in the work of dramatising and adapting for presentation, with elaborate stage equipment and effects, Degrees which had hitherto, for the most part, been communicated only. For nearly forty years he was the directing genius of the Bodies of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite in the Jurisdiction of Arkansas, and in 1911 he was made one of a Committee to superintend the construction of the House of the Temple. He served as the Chairman of the Committee until 1915, when that wonderful structure was completed and dedicated in Washington, District of Columbia. Few men have devoted so much time to the work of Masonry or achieved positions of such prominence in all its branches as did Bro. Rosenbaum. His Masonic record is, indeed, an impressive one. February 25, 1931, closed the unblemished record of a long useful life crowned with joys of friendships and honours well bestowed.

A biographical sketch of Bro. Fay Hempstead forms the essential nucleus about which the history of the Masonic Fraternity in Arkansas has been builded during the past threescore and more years. Fay Hempstead came from a talented lineage, both paternal and maternal. While his father was a member of the Supreme Court of Arkansas, he wrote of its most widely quoted decisions on the law of descent and distribution.

Fay Hempstead was born in Little Rock, on November 24, 1847. He was educated in private schools and in St. John's (Masonic) College. Later, he studied law at the University of Virginia. In 1868 he entered upon the practise of his profession at Little Rock, a vocation from which he retired only in 1881, upon his election as Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of Arkansas. From then on he gave his entire time to his official duties and to literary pursuits.

On May 6, 1869, Bro. Hempstead was made an Entered Apprentice in Western Star Lodge, No. 2, at Little Rock. Step by step, he received all the Degrees of both the York Rite and the Scottish Rite, including the Thirty-third Degree. On November 23, 1901, he was coroneted as Honorary Inspector General. Bro. Hempstead's preferment placed him in the Chairs of almost all the local Bodies. For years he was also prominent in the Order of the Eastern Star. His service in all the Grand Bodies was distinctive. In addition to his record as Grand Secretary, he also served as Grand High Priest of the Grand Chapter of Royal Arch Masons in 1891, and as Most Illustrious Grand Master of the Grand Council in 1890. From 1899 he served as Grand Recorder of the Grand Council, of the Order of the High-Priesthood, and of the Grand Commandery. In 1906, Bro. Hempstead was elected Grand Steward of the General Council of North America. He also served as Most Puissant General Grand Master from 1921 to 1924. His address made in 1878, when he served as Grand Orator of the Grand Lodge of Arkansas, is to be found in the collection entitled Masonic Jewels.

Perhaps the highest honour within the gift of Masonry was conferred upon Bro. Hempstead at Chicago on October 8, 1908, when he was crowned Poet Laureate of Freemasonry, an honour which had up till then been bestowed upon only two others, Robert Burns and Robert Morris. Hempstead's literary, musical, and historical works are extensive. His poems have passed through several editions, and his essays and addresses have found a place in Masonic literature. His large collection of historical and biographical works includes volumes that touch upon all subjects of state.

The Session of the Grand Lodge held on November 17 and 18, 1931, was the occasion of the completion of Bro. Hempstead's fifty years of service as Grand Secretary. Grand Master Andrew J. Russell took special note of the Golden Jubilee, and appointed a Committee to prepare a programme to be given on that occasion. Among distinguished Masons of other Grand Jurisdictions present were M. · W. · E. E. Sykes, Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Louisiana, R. · W. · Milton W. Boyland, Grand Junior Warden of the Grand Lodge of Louisiana, and R. · W. · Isaac Cherry, Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of New Jersey. Telegrams and letters of felicitation came from several foreign Grand Jurisdictions and from almost every State in the Union.

Bro. Hempstead's response on this occasion, made without reference to notes or manuscript, is a classic piece of Masonic literature that really gives a bird's-eye view of the Craft in Arkansas during the last fifty years. It is quoted here because no one now living is more capable of drawing such a picture:

Most Worshipful Grand Master and Brethren of the Grand Lodge, Sisters, and Brothers:

I find myself utterly incapable of expressing the deep emotions which fill me on this wonderful occasion. I wish that I might find the words necessary to express to Bro. Harry H. Myers my appreciation of the kind things he has said to me, and to you, Most Worshipful Sir and Brother, and to the other Grand Lodge Officers for having projected this Jubilee Celebration, and to the Committee for having made this great occasion possible. I also feel deeply honoured to know that Brethren from other Jurisdictions are present, having made long journeys to attend this event. I can only express to them my pride and appreciation of their presence, and extend a word of welcome to them for their being in our midst.

When I give one glance at this magnificent assembly, I realise that you have assembled to celebrate an unusual event, the service of fifty years as Secretary to the Grand Lodge of Arkansas. When I look back upon the initial incident of entering upon this Office, it seems incredible to me that a half century of time has passed away. It seems so recent, as if it were yesterday, last week, last year, and yet I know that between that date and this, time with his velvet-shod feet, treading lightly, has rolled a half-hundred years into the abyss of the past.

A friend has said to me, "This is a far different world, no doubt, from what it was when you began in this Office." Yes, indeed! It is a far different world, and a far better one. In that fifty years the genius of man has simply run riot in the field of invention and advance. He has invaded the eagle's home and fashioned for himself the semblance of a bird. He soars into the sunlight and the clouds until the eagle becomes but a tiny speck beneath him, and having gained dominion of the upper air, he girdles the earth with his ventures! And men and women are daily vying with each other for newer records in altitude and speed. He has covered the earth with swift-moving vehicles which make transportation a plaything and travel an unceasing delight. He has plunged into invisible ether and seized upon sound waves through which, with the aid of electricity, in the telephone, the long-distance call, the wireless, and the radio, he sends his communications to far continents, as friend would speak with friend, and from aerial towers he broadcasts the human voice into millions of homes so that a man may sit in his home and listen to the king of England talking to his Parliament in London; a song sung in New York and a concert given in San Francisco. He has flooded the world with light, making darkness into daylight with the magic of the electric lamp. He has imprisoned the voice of music in a whirling disc that rivals the nightingale with floods of melody and song. He has put upon the screen, shadows that move and talk as if they were human and clad in the colours of natural life. These and countless other marvels and miracles have come to pass in that half-century flown, and possibly the end is not yet. Each year finds something new where all seems old. Each spring new verdure and fresh flowers crown the hills that have stood from everlasting.

All the years invent.

Each month is various to present
The World with some development;

And men, through novel spheres of Thought,
Still moving after Truth, long sought,
Will find new things when we are not.

And how has Masonry in Arkansas fared while these great features were in the making? Let us recall a few items by way of comparison. Then her Lodges numbered three hundred and forty-two; to-day they are five hundred and ten. Then her membership was approximately fifteen thousand; now it is approximately forty thousand. Then her revenue was around ten thousand dollars; now it is above sixty thousand dollars. These are material things, but they show through the light of comparison that in that time the Grand Lodge of Arkansas has not stood still or gone backward, but that her advance, if slow and creeping on from point to point, has been always forward.

And what have been the achievements of the Grand Lodge of Arkansas during those eventful years? Let us recall those which come readiest to the mind. First, we have established at Batesville a home for orphan children of Masons, which is the pride and glory of the Grand Lodge. Then, we have built in the State's tuberculosis sanitarium at Booneville, purely as a matter of charity, a ward for the more ample accommodation of children smitten with that disease. We have created a bureau for the payment of pensions to widows and indigent, aged Masons, which every month sends a measure of relief to numerous cases of need. We have created a Board of Finance, composed of able financiers who wisely conserve and administer our invested funds. A generous Bro., J. P. Hall, of Conway Line Lodge, No. 373, in Arkansas, but himself living at Bakersfield, Missouri, just across the line, has made a wonderful donation to the cause of higher education of which boys graduating from the Home are the beneficiaries, and which stands as a perpetual endowment for that noble cause. It is with the deepest sorrow that we relate that Bro. Hall departed this life within the past fortnight. For a time and in a limited way we furnished hospital service for the sick. We furnish lecturing for the Lodges. The Grand Lodge has been liberal in making donations for monuments to deceased Past Grand Masters. Since we have come into this splendid building, we have been more suitably housed than ever before, overcoming the disasters of three fires that have occurred within my knowledge. Here in this building, for the first time in our history, we are able to maintain an adequate library, which is gradually filling up with valuable and interesting books. Two features that have come into this library during the past year are specially worthy of note. One is a large album which I have had manufactured and beautifully bound, which I call a Portrait Gallery of Past Grand Masters; into which is gathered the portraits of all Past Grand Masters of the Grand Lodge, as far as obtainable, only a few of the earlier ones being lacking; and these being conveniently indexed so that reference to the portraits can be easily made, form a condensed history of the Grand Lodge as reflected in the portraits of those who have been its leaders. The other feature to which I refer is the gathering and having suitably bound memorial circulars issued by Grand Bodies of Arkansas for those who passed on into the Silent Land. And then, although it is not a subject which originated in the Grand Lodge, but is a subject to which she has made liberal donations of her funds, sons and daughters of members of our Lodges receive the benefit of our Educational Loan Fund projected by the Order of Knights Templar, the object of which is to aid young men and young women in making their way through college. The Grand Lodge of Arkansas did her part in the building of the George Washington National Masonic Memorial which is being erected at Alexandria, Virginia; and which will be dedicated in 1932. She did her part toward relieving cases of distress in the flood waters of 1927. She did her part in relieving cases of distress in the drought disaster of 1930; and in all of these features she has had the cordial coöperation and assistance of that noble band of workers, whose assisting hand the Grand Lodge of Arkansas gratefully acknowledges.

Not any of these features are of overwhelming greatness, but when put together, all are units in an united structure of achievements which furnish a fair exhibit of the aims and purposes of Masonry as carried out in these ways, of which, we have no cause to feel ashamed. I cannot claim to have had any direct connection with their origin and inception; but only that I have gone along with them step by step from the beginning.

The one feature of distress in contemplating these buried years is recalling the long list of those who were of us and with us, who walked and worked with us, who have passed on into the Silent Land. May it be that their spirits in the Vast, share with us the emotions of this hour.

Oh, if it be, that souls which once we knew,
Have prescience in them of the things we do,
Then may we think that from their realms of day
They look upon us in approving way;
And though their tongues are hushed forevermore,
They silent watch us from the other shore.

Brethren and Friends, in this supreme hour of my life I seem to be as one who stands on the tip of a mountain crest and looks pensively down upon the long valley beneath him. Valley once filled with roseate hopes which have now grown ashen and grey! Valley once filled with the glow of Youth and the fire of Ambition, which have now become chilled by the frosts of Age. But I do so with a calm serenity which makes me feel that I can adopt the words of our nation's chief poet when he said:

Time has laid his hand upon my heart gaily;
Not smiting it,
But as a harper lays his open palm upon his harp
To deaden its vibrations.

I assure you, Brethren and Friends, that he who stands in the sunset of life and sees the shadows lengthen, sees the sun descend below the slanting hills, may yet find sweet solace in dwelling upon " the days that are no more." And such I trust may be the case with me to the end.

As the day dies out in a golden gleam,
 And the red West glows with its parting beam,
 So would I, Friends, when it comes my lot,
 Wish to depart thus calmly; and not
 As the Old Year passes, sad and slow,
 Wrapped in the shroud of the Winter's snow;
 But rather in the starlight, fair and clear,
 Where the quivering discs of the stars appear.

He died in the spring of 1934.

In 1841 the General Grand High Priest of the United States issued his Dispensation to Far West Chapter of Royal Arch Masons, at Fayetteville, in Washington County, Arkansas. The petitioners for that authority were the Rev. Joel Haden, Samuel Harris, William Shoman, Onesimus Evans, Thomas J. Pollard, Richard P. Pulliam, Alfred A. Stirman, Thomas Bean, and Abraham Winery. The next year a Charter was granted to Far West Chapter, No. 1, by the General Grand Chapter of Royal Arch Masons. And thus Royal Arch Masonry was inaugurated in Arkansas.

On June 21, 1844, Union Chapter, of Little Rock, was established by a Dispensation issued by Joseph K. Stapleton, the General Grand High Priest of the United States, to George P. Lemmon as High Priest, Joseph Grubb as King, and C. J. Krebs as Scribe. On the following September 13, the Charter to Union Chapter, No. 2, was granted. Then followed the organisation of Friendship Chapter, No. 3, of Union County, and of Whitfield Chapter, No. 4, at Camden. On April 28, 1851, a Convention of the Chapters was convened for the purpose of organising a Grand Chapter for the State of Arkansas. These representatives were present:

Union Chapter, No. 2, represented by E. H. English, High Priest, A. Pike, King; C. J. Krebs, Scribe; Friendship Chapter, No. 3, represented by F. Courtney, High Priest, D. J. Baldwin, proxy for King, and W. H. Hines, Scribe; Whitfield Chapter, No. 4, represented by E. H. Whitfield, High Priest, C. C. Scott, King, and Jas. A. Warren, Scribe.

The Convention elected E. H. English to be Grand High Priest; Franklin Courtney, Deputy Grand High Priest; C. C. Scott, Grand King; A. Pike, Grand Scribe; L. E. Barber, Grand Secretary; and R. L. Dodge, Grand Treasurer. The Officers were installed by E. H. Whitfield. A Constitution was then adopted and Far West Chapter was then invited to unite with the Grand Chapter of Royal Arch Masons. The Convention then adjourned, and after one day's Session the Grand Chapter closed until its next regular Convocation. Since that time it has met annually, except during the years 1863 and 1864, when no meeting could be held because of the War between the States. Since the close of that conflict the Grand Chapter's Labours have been zealous and harmonious.

The growth, although slow, has been gradual. There are now 30 Chapters, having an affiliated membership of over 7000.

The first Council of the Order of High Priesthood in Arkansas was held at Little Rock on January 17, 1853. It was presided over by Samuel Reed, who served as President; William H. Field, who acted as Vice-President; and A. W. Webb, who served as Recorder. At that time, Companions English and Merrick were consecrated and anointed. The next Council convened on February 16, 1853. At that meeting Companion Barber was consecrated and anointed. The Councils continued to hold Special Sessions until the beginning of the War between the States, when they were discontinued. Then, on November 6, 1867, a Convention of High Priests was held at Little Rock. At that time Companion Barber acted as Chairman and Companion M. L. Bell Secretary. A Constitution was then formed, and a Council of High Priests for the State of Arkansas was organised. Companion L. E. Barber was elected President, with a full corps of Officers, as provided by the Constitution. As Royal Arch Masonry flourishes, so flourish the High Priests. The evening following the closing of the Grand Chapter of Royal Arch Masons is given over to the conferring of this Degree.

Council Masonry was introduced into Arkansas on April 25, 1853, by a Dispensation issued by Albert Pike, Deputy Inspector General of the Supreme Council of the Southern Jurisdiction, to R. L. Dodge, Luther Chase, and W. H. Sutton, all of Little Rock. The newly organised body was named Occidental Council. Then, on the Thirty-third Degree of Charleston, South Carolina. The next Councils organised were Adoniram Council, No. 2, of Camden; Cephas Council, No. 3, of Monticello; Friendship Council, No. 4, of Seminary, and Osiris Council, No. 5, of Fort Smith. On November 6, 1860, a Convention was called to meet at the Masonic Hall in Little Rock, on invitation of the Supreme Council of the Thirty-third Degree for the Southern Jurisdiction of the United States, for the purpose of forming a Grand Council of Royal and Select Masters. The following Councils were represented: Occidental Council, No. 1, of Little Rock, Luke E. Barber, Thrice Illustrious; R. L. Dodge, Illustrious Deputy; Thomas Parsel, P. C., and members, William G. Sutton, Henry H. Hays, and J. B. Groves. Adoniram Council, No. 2, of Camden, Edmund H. Whitfield, Thrice Illustrious. Friendship Council, No. 4, of Seminary, Samuel H. Bayless, Thrice Illustrious. Osiris Council, No. 5, of Fort Smith, R. M. Johnson, Representative. The Convention resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole, and proceeded to form a Constitution for the Most Puissant Grand Council of Royal and Select Masters of Arkansas. Then, after consultation, a Constitution was adopted. The Convention next proceeded to elect Officers. Those chosen were: Companion L. Barber, Grand Master; Companion E. H. Whitfield, Deputy Grand Master; Companion S. H. Bayless, G. I. M.; Companion W. H. Sutton, G. P. C. of W.; Companion R. L. Dodge, Grand Treasurer, and Companion E. H. English, Grand Recorder. There are now 1169 Council Masons in Arkansas. The Grand Council meets annually, immediately after the closing of the Grand Chapter of Royal Arch Masons.

Organised Templar Masonry was first introduced into Arkansas by a Dispensation to Hugh de Payens Commandery, dated December 20, 1853, and issued by W. B. Hubbard, Grand Master of the Grand Encampment of the United States, to Sir Albert Pike, Sir Percy C. Brockus, Sir John McDaniel, Sir H. H. Heath, Sir H. F. Loudon, Sir B. B. French, Sir A. W. Webb, Sir W. S. Brown, Sir John W. Sketo, and Sir Samuel Mitchell.

Sir Albert Pike was made Eminent Commander; Sir A. W. Webb, Generalissimo; and Sir J. W. Sketo, Captain General. Then, in October, 1856, a Charter was granted to the Commandery, which was known as Hugh de Payens Commandery, No. 1. The next Commandery organised was Bertrand du Gueselin Commandery, No. 2, at Camden. The date of its Dispensation was April 13, 1866. Its Charter was issued on September 18, 1868. This was followed by Jacques de Molay Commandery at Fort Smith. The date of its Dispensation was December 30, 1868, while the date of its Charter was September 22, 1871. The next Commandery to enter the field was Baldwin Commandery, No. 4, at Fayetteville. Its Dispensation was issued on April 28, 1871, and its Charter on September 22, 1871.

On March 23, 1872, pursuant to a call for a Convention to be held in Fort Smith, the Grand Commandery was organised. At that meeting the following Commanderies were represented: Hugh de Payens Commandery, No. 1; Bertrand du Gueselin Commandery, No. 2, and Jacques de Molay Commandery, No. 3. Sir L. E. Barber was elected President, and Sir Edward J. Brooks, Recorder. The Constitution was then framed, and the following Officers were elected: Sir Luke E. Barber, of Little Rock, Right Eminent Grand Commander; Sir Edward J. Brooks, of Fort Smith, Very Eminent Deputy Grand Commander; Sir Raphael M. Johnson, of Fort Smith, Eminent Generalissimo; Sir Samuel W. Williams, of Little Rock, Eminent Captain General; Sir William A. Sample, of Fort Smith, Eminent Prelate; Sir Walter O. Lattimore, of Fayetteville, Eminent Senior Warden; Sir Caleb H. Stone, of Camden, Eminent Junior Warden; Sir Roderick L. Dodge, of Little Rock, Eminent Treasurer; Sir J. W. Rison, of Little Rock, Eminent Recorder; Sir R. S. Crampton, of Spadra, Eminent Standard Bearer; Sir J. S. Looney, of Fayetteville, Eminent Sword Bearer; Sir Robert E. Salle, of Camden, Eminent Warden, and Sir James Tunnah, of Little Rock, Eminent Captain of the Guard. The Grand Commandery meets annually in May, and now has a membership of over 2500 in the 28 Commanderies.

FREEMASONRY IN CALIFORNIA

JOHN WHICHER

IT is quite impossible to write the story of pioneer Masons and Masonry in California in small compass, for it is interwoven with romance and fiction. Masons and Masonry were known in the Golden State long before the discovery of gold by John Marshall in January 1848. The pioneers were lured there not altogether by a desire for gold, but rather because of highly coloured stories told by returning trappers, who lauded California's genial skies and fertile lands that were to be had for asking. A few Masons came in the 1830's, but the trek to the new country did not fully begin until about May 1840. Then John Bidwell, of whom more will be told later in this sketch, organised a party in Platt County, Missouri, and the adjacent region, and presently he and his companions started on the long and perilous journey to the Pacific Coast. From that time until the discovery of gold in California in 1848, emigration from the East was constant. It was never again so spectacular, however, as during the decade immediately following the discovery.

So far as records disclose, the first Master Mason to make a permanent residence in California was Abel Stearns, who came from Salem, Massachusetts, and settled at the pueblo of Los Angeles in 1833. He had the distinction of shipping to the Philadelphia Mint, in 1842, the first gold mined in California. The dust and nuggets were purchased from miners who discovered and worked the mines in Placerito Canyon, near the San Fernando Mission in Los Angeles County. Singularly, the discovery of gold there in sufficient quantity to warrant shipment to the United States mint caused no interest at all beyond the locality where it was found. Pioneers were hungry for land, not for gold.

Besides Abel Stearns, there were, indeed, other pioneer Masons of pre-Grand Lodge days. Among them was Christopher Carson, the noted trapper and scout better known as "Kit" Carson, who carried the first overland mail from Taos, New Mexico, to military headquarters at Monterey, California, in 1842. Carson was born in Kentucky on December 24, 1809, and died at Fort Lyon, Colorado, on May 23, 1868. He spent many years of his life in California, having made his first visit there in 1829. He was with General John C. Fremont at the capture of Sonoma in 1846. Carson's last trip to California was made in 1853. Then he returned to Taos, New Mexico, where he was appointed Indian Agent, a post he held until the beginning of the war between the States in 1861. During the war he was first a colonel of the First New Mexico Cavalry, then later breveted brigadier-general. In 1854 he received his Masonic Degrees in Montezuma Lodge, No. 109, of New Mexico.

Associated with Carson was George Yount, a pioneer of 1831, who was the first American settler in Napa Valley and builder of the first fort in California, erected in 1841. He received his Degrees in 1850 in Benicia Lodge, No. 5, was Grand Bible Bearer from 1854 to 1864, and died on October 5, 1865.

Hillard P. Dorsey, at the time a Past Master, came to California from Mississippi in 1849. In 1855, as the first Master of Los Angeles Lodge, No. 42, he was expelled by the Grand Lodge for fighting a duel, something that was contrary to the Masonic regulations as well as the civil law of the Jurisdiction.

Benjamin D. Wilson, known as "Don Benito," came to California from New Mexico in 1841 and settled on a ranch on which the city of Riverside was subsequently established. He was one of the first initiates of Los Angeles Lodge, No. 42, and was mayor of the city in 1851. Mount Wilson is said to have been named in his honour.

Myron Morton, a captain in Colonel Stevenson's famous New York regiment, was a member of California's first Constitutional Convention. To him was delegated the task of phrasing the document.

In 1846 Robert Semple edited The Californian, the first newspaper published in the State. Having received his Degrees in Kentucky, he came to California in 1845 as secretary of the Bear Flag Party. Semple was president of the first Constitutional Convention, a body that not only formed the State government but also prevailed upon the United States to accept the former Mexican territory as a sovereign State. That took place on September 9, 1850.

Commodore John D. Sloat received his Degrees in 1800 in St. Andrew's Lodge, No. 3, of New York City. From 1844 he was in command of the Pacific Squadron of the United States Navy, and on July 7, 1846, he raised the American flag and took possession of California, in the name of the United States Government. A monument to his memory, standing in the presidio of Monterey, was dedicated by the Grand Lodge of California on June 14, 1910. Commodore Sloat died on November 28, 1867, at Staten Island, New York.

James Frazier Reed, organiser of the Reed-Donner party of emigrants at Springfield, Illinois, on April 15, 1846, and a comrade of Abraham Lincoln throughout the Black Hawk War, was an outstanding character among the early Masons of California. As first lieutenant of Captain Charles M. Weber's company of United States Rangers, of the Pueblo of San Jose, he helped to defeat the insurgent Californians at the battle of Santa Clara, on January 2, 1847, while he was on his way to procure relief for the starving Donner party near Truckee. He rescued thirteen persons, including three members of his own family, and later escorted them to Sutter's Fort at Sacramento. Reed donated six public parks to the city of San Jose in 1851. He was born in County Armagh, Ireland, on November 14, 1810, and died at San Jose on July 24, 1874. His Masonic Degrees were conferred in 1840, in Springfield Lodge, No. 4, at Springfield, Illinois.

Joseph Warren Revere, grandson of Joseph Warren and Paul Revere, was young lieutenant in the squadron commanded by Commodore Sloat, already mentioned. By order of the Commodore and Commander John B. Montgomery, of the sloop of war Portsmouth, he had the honour of lowering the Bear standard and raising the American flag at Sonoma, California.

John A. Sutter, famous as the builder and owner of Sutter's Fort, was elected to receive the Degrees in Marysville Lodge, No. 9, on September 1, 1853, though so far as is known he was never initiated.

Serving as a purser in the squadron of Commodore Sloat was a Mason named Rodman Price who afterwards became a member of California's first Constitutional Convention. Later he was elected governor of New Jersey.

One of the most interesting of the pioneer characters among early Masons of California was Colonel John W. Geary. After being discharged from service in the Mexican War, he came to California on the ship Oregon in 1849. When he landed at San Francisco on April 1 of that year he carried a commission granted by President Polk and making him postmaster of the town. Geary filled the place only fourteen days and then resigned. Since establishment of orderly government in San Francisco was just then being seriously considered by the citizens, Geary was elected as first alcalde, or mayor, at an election held the following August 1. He served as mayor until 1851, and then returned to his native State of Pennsylvania. Five years later President Pierce appointed him governor of Kansas Territory. There Geary had the unpleasant task of administering his office during the troublous days incident to discussion of the slavery question in that blood-stained Territory, and when James Buchanan was inaugurated as President he resigned and again returned to his old home. At the outbreak of the war between the States in 1861, he entered the Northern Army as a colonel. During the war he was wounded several times, and eventually he was given a commission as brigadier-general for gallantry in action. As commander of the Second Division of the Twentieth Army Corps, he took part in Sherman's memorable march to the sea, and upon the arrival of the Northern troops at Savannah, in 1864, he was appointed military governor of that city. Geary, who was elected governor of Pennsylvania in 1866, was probably the only American who ever had the distinction of having been governor of two States, in this instance, Kansas and Pennsylvania. Bro. Geary received his Masonic Degrees in St. John's Lodge, No. 219, of Pittsburgh, on January 4, 1847. Because he was just on the point of leaving for Mexico with his regiment, the three Degrees were conferred in one evening by Dispensation. In California, where he was active in Masonic Work, he assisted in formally organising California Lodge, No. 13, then under obedience to the Grand Lodge of the District of Columbia. He was its first Secretary.

The Brother to whom California Masonry is most indebted was Charles Gilman, who presided at the Convention which launched the Grand Lodge of California. In the spring of 1849 he came to San Francisco from Baltimore, and at once commenced active work among the Masons scattered throughout the city. He had been Grand Master of New Hampshire in 1830, and Grand Master of Maryland from 1842 until 1848. He was an active Inspector General Thirty-third Degree of the Scottish Rite Masons. From 1835 to 1849 he was Secretary General of the Royal Arch Masons and Grand Recorder of the Grand Encampment of Knights Templar of the United States. Not only was he learned in the civil law, but he was also familiar with Masonic law and custom. As presiding Officer of the Convention that formed the Grand Lodge, his knowledge of procedure was invaluable. Though he was logically the Mason to be selected as first Grand Master, he declined the honour in favour of his law partner, Colonel Stevenson, because his own Bro. Gilman died at Baltimore sometime in September, 1861.

The man to whom California Masons assigned the duty of administering the affairs of the Grand Lodge in 1850, Jonathan Drake Stevenson, was a colourful character. On January 1, 1800, he was born in New York City; he died at San Francisco on February 14, 1894. In 1821 he was made a Mason in Phoenix Lodge, No. 40, of New York City, and he became the Lodge's Master the following year. For many years he was private secretary to Vice-President Daniel D. Tompkins, who was a justice of the New York Supreme Court, and was governor of New York from 1807 until 1817. Bro. Tompkins was Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge in New York in 1806 and Grand Master in 1820. At the outbreak of the Mexican War in 1846 Bro. Stevenson, who had long been identified with the New York National Guard, was commissioned colonel of the First New York Volunteers, a regiment known as the New York Legion. He sailed for California with his regiment in September 1846, and arrived at San Francisco on March 5, 1847. There his troops were first to hoist the American flag over the old Mexican presidio. Colonel Stevenson established his headquarters at Los Angeles, and after the signing of the Treaty of Hidalgo, in 1848, his command was mustered out. As an officer he was a rigid disciplinarian, honest and just in all his dealings with his men. At his death he was buried not far from the place where nearly half a century before he had entered the Golden Gate with his soldiers, and where the Pacific chants a ceaseless requiem in honour of the first Grand Master of California.

Before the East heard of the discovery of gold at Sutter's Mill, in January 1848 one Charter and one Dispensation approving the formation of Masonic Lodges in Alta California had been issued. After 1848 and before the formation of the California Grand Lodge, others were issued as follows: (1) Western Star Lodge, No. 98, at Benton City, whose Charter, dated May 10, 1848, came from the Grand Lodge of Missouri. (2) San Francisco Lodge, empowered by a Dispensation from the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts granted sometime in 1848. This Lodge was never formed. (3) California Lodge, No. 13, at San Francisco, whose Charter was issued by the Grand Lodge of the District of Columbia on November 9, 1848. (4) Pacific Lodge, at Benicia, established under a Louisiana Dispensation dated June 5, 1849. (5) Davy Crockett Lodge, at San Francisco, established under a Louisiana Dispensation dated sometime in 1849. (6) Connecticut Lodge, No. 75, established under a Connecticut Charter dated January 31, 1849. (7) New Jersey Lodge, at Sacramento, established under a New Jersey Dispensation dated March 1, 1849. (8) Sierra Nevada Lodge, at Centerville (now Grass Valley), established under an Indiana Dispensation dated May, 1848. (9) San Francisco Lodge, whose Indiana Dispensation was dated sometime in May 1848, did not organise. (10) Pacific Lodge, at Long's Bar, established under an Illinois Dispensation dated sometime in October 1849. (11) Laveley Lodge, at Marysville, established under an Illinois Dispensation dated sometime in October 1849. (12) Richmond Travelling Lodge, whose Dispensation was issued by the Grand Lodge of Virginia sometime in 1849, was never organised. (13) La Fayette Lodge, No. , at Nevada City, held a Charter from Wisconsin dated sometime in 1850. (14) A Lodge to be established somewhere "in the mining district of California" was empowered by a Dispensation issued by the Grand Master of Ohio on March 5, 1850. Nothing at all is known about the fate of this Lodge. (15) Gregory Yale Lodge was empowered by a Dispensation issued by the Grand Lodge of Florida in 1849.

Peter Lassen is sometimes credited with having brought the first Masonic Charter to California, the Charter of Western Star Lodge, No. 98, but that distinction really belongs to Bro. Saschel Woods. Bro. Lassen was a pioneer of California who arrived here in May 1840. In 1847 he returned to Missouri for the express purpose of urging immigrants to come to his large estate in Alta California. Among the men who agreed to go with him were several Masons. They applied for a Charter from the Grand Lodge of Missouri, and that was granted as of May 10, 1848. In this Charter, Bro. Woods was named as Master and Bro. Lassen as Junior Warden. The Lodge was to be located at Benton City, on Lassen's ranch. Bro. Lassen was said to have been a member of Warren Lodge, No. 74, at Keytesville, Missouri, but he was neither versed in Masonic lore or Ritual, nor did he take any part in the organisation or subsequent Work of the Lodge. Bro. Saschel Woods, on the contrary, was active in Masonic Work. He was legal custodian of the Charter from the day it was issued, he presided at the first meeting of the Lodge held on October 30, 1849, he issued the first invitation to the California Lodges to hold a Convention for forming the Grand Lodge of California, he was California's first Junior Grand Warden, and he continued his Masonic activities until overtaken by ill health and financial reverses. Bro. Woods, who was a native of Kentucky, removed from there to Missouri in 1834. A minister of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church and a forceful public speaker, Bro. Woods warmly espoused the anti-Mormon cause. He took a conspicuous part in the Mormon war in Missouri. It was he who accepted the Mormon commander's sword at the time that leader surrendered. This sword Bro. Woods afterwards presented to Wakanda Lodge, No. 52, at Carrollton, Missouri, of which he was a Charter member and the first Chaplain, and it is still in possession of the Tyler of Wakanda Lodge. Saschel Woods died at Crescent City, California, on April 26, 1854. A monument erected by the California Grand Lodge marks his grave.

On the California Register, Western Star Lodge, No. 98, was made No. 2.

In May 1851, it was granted permission to remove to Shasta, where it still carries on. All that is left of what was once Benton City is a stone monument that marks the site where the Lodge was first opened. This stands along the State highway, seventeen miles north of Chico.

Though the further Masonic history of Peter Lassen has no place here, his activities as a promoter are so interesting as to merit relating. In 1851, with Isaac Roop, a Past Master of Western Star Lodge, No. 98, and others, Lassen removed to the Honey Lake Country, in the region that now forms northeastern California. Lassen was a bachelor; Roop, a married man having a daughter named Susan. In honour of Roop's daughter, Lassen gave the name Susanville to the town that the pioneers established. There the settlers took up land without any formality except law of their own making, and in 1856 they established a new territory and called it the Republic of Nataqua. With Lassen as president and Roop as secretary of the newly established State, a code of laws was adopted whose first section declared that "in as much as Honey Lake Valley is not within the limits of California, the same is hereby declared a new Territory," and fixed boundaries that enclosed a region extending 150 miles north and south and some 200 miles east and west, into Utah Territory, now the State of Nevada. Each settler was allotted 640 acres of land and one town lot. The western boundary of the new "Republic" was 35 miles east of the headquarters of Lassen and Roop. Settlers in the Carson and the Washoe valleys, whose lands were included within the paper survey, never knew they were a part of the new State. Nataqua had its own courts and peace officers and functioned as an independent government for several years. Finally, however, about 1859, it passed out of existence. Roop then went to western Utah, and later he became the first provisional governor of Nevada. Lassen continued to reside in Honey Lake Valley until he was killed—supposedly by Indians—in 1859. His memory is perpetuated by Mount Lassen, the only active volcano in the United States proper, by Lassen County, California, and by a granite monument near the huge pine tree under which he camped on his arrival in Honey Lake Valley.

James W. Marshall's discovery of gold in California, on January 19, 1848, set the world ablaze with excitement, and soon the great plains and mountains west of the Missouri River became the site of trails for seekers after the yellow metal. Masonic Lodges throughout the Eastern States were besieged with applications for Degrees made by those whose hearts were set upon going to the new El Dorado by the sunset sea, there to satisfy their greed for wealth. Like grist at the mill, Masons were ground out, so to speak, to meet the demands for human brotherhood, aid, and assistance on the journey to the wondrous new land. Grand Lodges and Grand Masters in the Eastern States issued Charters and Dispensations for Travelling Lodges so that Masons might be made en route. They were to organise Lodges after they reached their destination. The first Charter upon which a Lodge was established in California was granted by the Grand Lodge of the District of Columbia, and dated November 9, 1848.

This Lodge, known as California Lodge, No. 13, was to be located at San Francisco, with Samuel At Lee as Master, William Van Voorhees as Senior Warden, and Bedney F. McDonald as Junior Warden. Van Voorhees held a commission from President Polk that made him Assistant Postmaster General for California. At Lee was appointed postmaster of San Francisco. Lee, however, resigned his commission and did not leave Washington. John W. Geary was appointed in his place. Before leaving Washington, District of Columbia, Levi Stowell was installed as Master of the Lodge.

California Lodge, No. 13, was organised on October 17, 1849, with Levi Stowell as Master and John W. Geary as Secretary. Fees for the Degrees were fixed at $115, the charge for affiliation was $15, the dues were $4 a month. The Lodge held its first meetings in an attic at 726 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, a room so low at the sides that the Brethren had to move towards its middle when they arose, to keep from striking their heads on the roof timbers. The improvised Lodge Hall was lighted only by candles. Chairs were provided for the Master and Wardens, but all others present sat on boxes and benches. The Master's Pedestal was a pine box. A wooden shoe box, draped with an American flag and bearing the usual great lights of Masonry, served for an Altar. The lesser Lights were afforded by candles supported on wooden uprights. This Lodge, which participated in the formation of the Grand Lodge, is now Lodge No. 1 on the California Register.

The third Charter known to have been used in California was issued by the Grand Lodge of Connecticut at a called Communication held on January 30, 1849. The Lodge was named Connecticut Lodge, No. 76. Caleb Fenner was Master; James W. Goodrich, Senior Warden; and Elizur Hubbell, Junior Warden. When the Grand Lodge was organised, the name of Connecticut Lodge, No. 76, was changed to Tehama Lodge, No. 3. The room first occupied by the original Lodge was an attic at the corner of Fifth and J Streets. The second story of the building served as lodgings for persons whose sex and lack of morals made them ineligible for the privileges of Masonry. Naturally, the Lodge soon removed to more congenial quarters at a lower rental. Tehama Lodge, No. 3, now meets in the dignified Masonic Temple, of which it is part owner.

The fourth Lodge of California, known as La Fayette Lodge, held a Charter granted to J. F. Halsey, as Master, by the Grand Lodge of Wisconsin in the early months of 1850. Halsey and some other Masons from La Fayette County, Wisconsin, first settled at Nevada City. There the Lodge was organised and there it Worked until March 1851, nearly a year after the formation of the Grand Lodge of California. In May 1851 the Wisconsin Charter was surrendered. Members of the Lodge were then granted a Charter by the Grand Lodge of California. Known as Nevada Lodge, No. 13, this Lodge has had a continuous existence.

Besides the four Chartered Lodges already mentioned, several other Lodges operated before April 1850 by virtue of Dispensations issued by Grand Masters.

The earliest of these Lodges was New Jersey Lodge, whose Dispensation, dated March 1, 1849, bore the signature of Edward Stewart, Deputy Grand Master of New Jersey. Thomas Youngs, as Master, opened the Lodge at Sacramento on December 4, 1849. Immediately after the formation of the Grand Lodge, on April 19, 1850, the Brethren of New Jersey Lodge were granted a Charter as Merryman Lodge, No. 4, and two weeks later the name was changed to Jennings Lodge. Berryman Jennings, in whose honour the Lodge was named, withdrew his membership early in 1851, removed to Oregon, became Master of Multnomah Lodge, No. 1, at Oregon City, and at the organisation of the Grand Lodge of Oregon, on September 14, 1851, was elected its Grand Master. In October 1830, Jennings opened the first school in Iowa. In 1923 a bronze tablet commemorating the man and the circumstance was erected near Galland, some six miles from Keokuk, the site of the school. Bro. Jennings received his Degrees in Des Moines Lodge, No. 1, at Burlington, Iowa, in 1845. He withdrew in 1847, and when he arrived at Sacramento, in 1849, he affiliated with New Jersey Lodge. He continued as a member until his death, which took place in Oregon in 1888. Jennings Lodge, No. 4, surrendered its Charter on February 14, 1853.

The second Dispensation for a Lodge in California was issued by the Grand Master of Louisiana under date of June 5, 1849. This authorised D. B. Hyam, and others, to open a Lodge of Ancient York Masons at Benicia. The Brethren held their first meeting on March 6, 1850, and formally organised two days later, choosing the name Benicia Lodge. Benicia Lodge received a Charter from the Grand Lodge of California in 1850 and held its first meeting as a California Lodge on May 9 of that year. In May 1852 Hyam was elected Grand Master, and the following June he conferred the Degrees of Masonry without the sanction of a Lodge and in a house not devoted to Masonic uses. Then he pocketed the fees he had received. To this the Grand Lodge took exception at a special Communication held on August 17, 1852. Hyam's defense was that it was an inherent right of a Grand Master to make Masons at sight, and that he, as such an Officer, was above the law of Masonry and could do no Masonic wrong. The result of the deliberations of the Grand Lodge was that the doctrine claimed by Hyam was disavowed. In testimony of its position, the Grand Lodge adopted the following Regulations:

The Grand Master has no power to make Masons at sight, or at will, except in a regular Lodge by unanimous consent of the members present. . . . He is but the creature of the Grand Lodge, with no implied powers. It is competent for Grand Lodge to try its Grand Master for a misdemeanor in office, and deal with him as the nature of the offense may require.

A few years after this event took place, Hyam left California. He was last heard of in England as a discredited Mason.

Benicia Lodge, which still flourishes, has included among its members many makers of California history who have ranked high in the good work of upholding law and order and resisting evils incident to the gold rush of early days.

Davy Crockett Lodge was organised in San Francisco in the fall of 1849 by virtue of a Dispensation issued by an irregular Grand Lodge of California. The Brethren of this Lodge renounced their allegiance to the Louisiana Grand Lodge and Petitioned for a Charter under California obedience. This was granted on November 27, 1850, and the Lodge was known as Davy Crockett Lodge, No. 7. In August 1852, the Lodge's name was changed to San Francisco Lodge. Its Charter was revoked in 1859.

Sometime in May 1848 the Grand Master of Indiana issued a Dispensation for a " Travelling Lodge for California to be known as Sierra Nevada Lodge." The members of this proposed Lodge were residents of La Fayette, Indiana. They opened their Lodge at Centerville, now Grass Valley, California, in 1849, and there the Lodge continued in active operation until May 1852. It was then transferred to California obedience with the name of Madison Lodge, No. 23, and as such it is still Working.

Another early Lodge that expected to Work in California was to bear the name San Francisco Lodge. Proposed in Wayne County, Indiana, in 1848, the Lodge was to be located at San Francisco. But so far as is known, it never organised. The Officers named in the Dispensation were Henry R. Hannah, Master, John Prichett, Senior Warden, and Absalom Cunningham, Junior Warden. The only member of this proposed Lodge whose record can be traced was Henry R. Hannah, whose name appears on the Roster of Ophir Lodge, No. 33, at Murphy's Camp, Calaveras County, California.

Two Lodges, about whose activities little is known, operated by virtue of Dispensations issued by Grand Master Lavelly, of Illinois, and dated March 1849. One Dispensation was for Pacific Lodge, in which Past Grand Master Nelson D. Morse, of Illinois, was named as Master, Alexander Ewing, as Senior Warden, and L. D. Montgomery, as Junior Warden. The Brethren opened the Lodge at Long's Bar, Butte County, in 1850, where it continued until the fall of 1851. In 1852 Bro. Morse represented Butte County in the California Legislature. Later he returned to his home at Henderson, Illinois, where he died on February 9, 1854.

Among the distinguished men who were made Masons in Pacific was John Bidwell, a pioneer of 1840. Bro. Bidwell described the early home of this Lodge as being a log house rising some four feet above ground, whose dirt floor had been excavated deeply enough to permit one to stand. Altar and Pedestals were stumps of trees, the Lights were candles, and the Jewels were cut from tin cans. Bro. Bidwell's record looms large in the early history of California. Born in New York in 1819, he emigrated to Pennsylvania and Ohio with his parents. After teaching school in Ohio and Iowa, he went from Missouri to California in 1840. There he was grantee of the Colus (Colusa) Ranch in 1845, since he had become a naturalised Mexican citizen. In 1846 he ranked as major, under Stockton, in the California Battalion. Later Bro. Bidwell became a miner on Feather River, at Bidwell's Bar. He acquired the Arroyo Chico ranches, and there made his permanent home as a man of wealth and one of the foremost agriculturalists of the State. In 1849 Bro. Bidwell served as State senator in the first California Legislature. He was a delegate to the Democratic National Convention held at Charleston, South Carolina, in 1860, a delegate to the National Union Convention held in 1864, and a member of Congress from 1864 to 1867. As anti-monopoly candidate for governor of California, he was defeated in 1875. In 1890 he was again an unsuccessful candidate for governor, this time on the Prohibition Party ticket. In 1892 he became the first candidate of the Prohibition Party for President of the United States. In this campaign Bro. Bidwell's total expenses were only $300, that amount having been paid to Rev. E. B. Barnes, who went to the party's St. Louis convention in Bidwell's interest. Bro. Bidwell died at Chico, California, on April 5, 1900.

In March 1849 Grand Master Lavelly, of Illinois, also issued a Dispensation to Past Deputy Grand Master John R. Crandall as Master, and others, to form and open a Travelling Lodge in the Territory of California, to be known as Lavelly Lodge. The Lodge was organised at Marysville early in 1850, and continued in operation until the formation of the Grand Lodge the following April. Lacking a suitable hall, Lodge meetings were held in a tent. Bro. Crandall, of Lavelly, was Senior Grand Warden of the Grand Lodge of California in 1853, and for many years was active in the State's Masonic and civic affairs.

The antecedents of Gregory Yale Lodge, of Stockton, California, reach back into Florida Masonry. In his address to the Grand Lodge of that State, on January 14, 1850, Grand Master Thomas Brown reported that since the last annual Communication he had granted a Dispensation to W.: Bro. Gregory Yale, Master of Solomon's Lodge, No. 20, of Jacksonville, East Florida, to establish a Lodge in California. The Lodge thus provided for was organised at Stockton early in 1850, and continued to operate until about the time that San Joaquin Lodge, No. 19 was organised, some two years later. Then it ceased Work. No report on this Lodge was ever made to the parent Grand Lodge from which it sprang. Gregory Yale, original holder of the Dispensation, was a lawyer who removed to San Francisco in 1850 and there became associated with Albert Nunes, whose office was in Adobe B, on the Plaza. Bro. Yale joined with others to organise Occidental Lodge, No. 22, of San Francisco, in May 1852, though he withdrew from that Lodge on January 24, 1859.

The Dispensations and Charters thus far mentioned include all those for Lodges whose opening in California was proposed up to the time of the formation of the California Grand Lodge. As has been explained, some few of the proposed Lodges materialised. The Brethren of other proposed Lodges, who started to the new land of gold with high hopes of finding riches, may have been diverted to Oregon. Some may have perished from the privations that beset those who undertook the long journey across desert and sierra. On the whole, however, the hardy Masons who did reach their destination and set up Lodges became towers of strength in building here a decent civilisation. To them succeeding generations indeed owe much.

It is not generally known that representatives of some of the Lodges operating in California in 1849 and 1850, by virtue of Dispensations, formed a Grand Lodge early in the latter year. It seems that D. B. Hyam, whose Masonic reputation would stamp him as a sort of climber on the fraternal social ladder, was the guiding spirit in a Convention which met at Sacramento, in March 1850, solemnly organised "The Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Ancient York Masons of California," and adopted a Constitution. Immediately the Lodges Working under Charter protested, and the Delegates to the irregular Body promptly rescinded their action.

Soon after the irregular organisation passed out of existence, proceedings were begun anew and publicly in regular Masonic manner for the formation of a Grand Lodge. In behalf of the Lodges holding Charters, a call for a Convention to be held at Sacramento on April 17 for the purpose of forming a Grand Lodge "in the State of California" was published by Saschel Woods, Master of Western Star Lodge, No. 98, under date of April 5, 1850. It should be borne in mind that although the Constitution of the new State had been adopted on October 10, ratified by the people of the Territory on November 13, and proclaimed on December 20, 1849, Congress did not formally accept California as a part of the Union until September 9, 1850. In response to Woods's call, a Convention was held on the day fixed, in the Red House at Sacramento. It was attended by accredited representatives from the following Chartered Lodges: California Lodge, No. 13, of the District of Columbia; Connecticut Lodge, No. 75; Western Star Lodge, No. 98, of Missouri. The Leader in that Convention was Charles Gilman, who represented California Lodge, No. 13. Bro. Gilman was peculiarly well equipped to take a leading part in the work of forming a Grand Lodge, and to him was committed the preliminary work of organisation. The Delegates selected him to be the Chairman of the Convention. A Constitution consisting of only nine articles, and containing only basic Masonic law, was adopted, and on April 19, 1850, the Grand Lodge was formed and opened regularly, in strict accordance with Masonic law and usage. In this Grand Lodge Bro. Jonathan Drake Stevenson, of California Lodge, No. 13, was Grand Master; Bro. John A. Tutt, of Connecticut Lodge, No. 75, was Deputy Grand Master; Bro. Caleb Fenner, of Connecticut Lodge, No. 75, was Senior Grand Warden; Bro. Saschel Woods, of Western Star Lodge, No. 98, was Junior Grand Warden; Bro. John H. Gihon, of California Lodge, No. 13, was Grand Secretary. Petitions for Charters were received and granted that same day. A Charter was granted to the Brethren of New Jersey Lodge, of Sacramento, which was from then on known as Berryman Lodge, No. 4. Benicia Lodge, of Benicia was Chartered as No. 5. The Grand Lodge was then closed in ample form, to meet semi-annually on the first Tuesday in May and in November.

From the humble beginnings of organised Masonry in California just recounted, the Grand Lodge now boasts nearly 150,000 members. The pioneer Brethren brought order out of chaos, and by following the dictates of and by stern Masonic morality they laid deep and strong foundations for stable government. One of the first standing resolutions the Grand Lodge adopted was against duelling; it provided for the expulsion of all who should use that method to settle personal disputes. Another resolution declared " that the stern morality of Masonry is practicable, that we pledge the influence of this Grand Lodge in sustaining it, and recommend that the members exemplify the same in their lives and conduct."

When the Grand Lodge was formed, the three Lodges under Charter had a combined membership of only 103. By November, 1850, seven additional Charters had been granted and the combined membership had increased to 304. At that time the fees exacted by the Grand Lodge were $100 for a Dispensation to form a Lodge, $50 for a Charter, $25 to the Grand Secretary for engrossing a Charter, $1.50 for each Degree conferred, $2 for each affiliate, and $2 semi-annually for each contributing member. Five dollars was fixed as the fee for a diploma, and for a copy of any document required of the Grand Secretary, a charge of 50 cents for each hundred words was charged. During the next ten years the number of Lodges increased to 128, the membership to 5055. All those Lodges except three were in the northern part of the State.

Because of the shift in population and the rapid decline of some of the mining camps, thirteen Lodges had surrendered their Charters before 1860, two others had been transferred to the Oregon Jurisdiction, and two other Charters had been revoked for cause. Since the organisation of the Grand Lodge, 678 Lodges have been formed, while 98 have become extinct by revocation or surrender of Charter, consolidation with other Lodges, or surrender of Jurisdiction. In November 1851 two Lodges were transferred to assist in the formation of the Grand Lodge of Oregon. Eight Lodges were transferred to Nevada in July 1865. Three Lodges were transferred to Arizona in March 1882, and in December 1912 three Lodges were transferred to form the Grand Lodge of the Philippine Islands. The three Lodges located in the southern part of the State during the early career of the Grand Lodge were San Diego Lodge, No. 35, organised in 1851; Los Angeles Lodge, No. 42, organised in 1853; and Lexington Lodge, No. 104, organised in 1855 at El Monte, a town at the end of the Old Santa Fé Trail. By 1870 the population of the southern counties of the State had begun to increase, and at that time many Lodges were formed. There are now 235 Lodges in the region south of the Tehachapi River, and of those 160 are located in Los Angeles County alone.

Of the many early mining camps, one only need be mentioned. Known as Columbia and located in Tuolumne County it was the largest in the State. It was popularly called the " Gem of the Southern Mines." Gold was discovered there in the spring of 1850, and within a month the rush of miners from nearby camps brought in a population of some 6000 gold-seekers. Every week brought more treasure hunters, and at times as many as 30,000 men madly dug for gold in the hills roundabout. As many as 15,000 miners lived within limits of the town. By the year 1865, however, Columbia was a dead settlement. In its heyday Columbia had 40 saloons, a long street where fandangoes were danced to the music of hurdy-gurdies, 4 English language theatres, 1 Chinese theatre having a stock company of 40 native actors, 3 jewelry stores, a bull ring, 143 faro banks having a combined capital of some $2,000,000, 4 hotels, 2 military companies, 2 fire companies, 3 express offices, 4 banks, 4 newspapers, 2 churches, a Sunday school, a division of the Sons of Temperance, and Columbia Lodge No. 28 of Masons. The principal bank, a building whose steps were of white Columbia marble and having mahogany counters, belonged to D. O. Mills. The bank's capacious scales could weigh $40,000 worth of gold dust and nuggets at one time. The mines, lying within a radius of three miles, produced and shipped a hundred and a quarter million dollars worth of gold before they were exhausted. In Columbia, the Masonic Lodge was a power in maintaining order and decent government. After the gold fever had died down and the mines were exhausted, however, the membership of the Lodge fell to a low mark. In 1891 the old Lodge, which had been established in July 1852, consolidated with Tuolumne Lodge, No. 8, at the historic town of Sonora. There it still carries on. In the annals of the Grand Lodge of California are to be found stories of many mining towns long since vanished. Of them all, Columbia was indeed most notable.

ILLUSTRIOUS MASONS OF CALIFORNIA

Though names of all distinguished California Masons cannot be mentioned in this short sketch, in addition to those which have been noted the following are of consequence. Alexander G. Abell. Born in New York City on June 29, 1818. He arrived in San Francisco on November 6, 1847, from Honolulu, where he had served as United States Consul since 1844. Made a Mason in Federal Lodge, No. 1, at Washington, District of Columbia, in 1852. Affiliated with California Lodge, No. 1, on January 5, 1853. Master of that Lodge from 1855 to 1857. Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of California from May 19, 1855, until his death on December 26, 1890. Bro. Abell was known in Masonry both as a Warwick and a Bismarck. During his long years of service he was the dominating character of the Grand Lodge.

George W. Baird. Admiral in the United States Navy. Affiliated with Naval Lodge No. 87, at Vallejo, in 1870. Withdrew to Washington, District of Columbia, in 1872. Died in 1931.

Lawrence Patrick Barret. Distinguished as an actor. Raised in Oriental Lodge, No. 144, at San Francisco, on July 19, 1870. He continued his membership in that Lodge till his death in 1891.

John Mills Brown. Surgeon General of the United States Navy. Master of Naval Lodge, No. 87, in 1871. A Grand Master from 1875 to 1878. Died at Washington, District of Columbia, on December 7, 1894. He was surgeon aboard the U. S. S. Kearsage in its memorable battle with the Confederate cruiser Alabama.

✓ Luther Burbank. Born in Massachusetts. World famous horticultural experimentalist. Made a Mason in Santa Rosa Lodge, No. 57, in 1921. Died on April 11, 1926.

Thomas Hubbard Caswell. Born on August 10, 1825, at Exeter, Otsego County, New York. Lawyer. Settled in Nevada City in 1849. Made a Mason in Nevada Lodge, No. 13, in June, 1851. Master of the Lodge from 1868 to 1869, and from 1870 to 1871. Grand Lecturer in 1873. Grand Commander of the Supreme Council of Scottish Rite Masons, Southern Jurisdiction of the United States in 1895. Died November 13, 1900.

✓ Samuel Langhorne Clemens, known to the world as "Mark Twain." Made a Mason in Polar Star Lodge, No. 79, at St. Louis, Missouri. Was in California during the 1860's, and on February 8, 1865, acted as Junior Deacon of Bear Mountain Lodge, No. 67, at Angels Camp. Angels Camp is the scene of Mark Twain's famous story of "The Jumping Frog of Calaveras County."

Joseph B. Coghlan. Admiral in the United States Navy. Received much unfavourable renown through newspapers and magazines for his recitation of a poem entitled "Me und Gott," which ridiculed Emperor William II of Germany. Master of Solano Lodge, No. 229, at Vallejo, in 1887. Died on December 5, 1908.

✓ James G. Fair. Of "Comstock Bonanza" fame. Received his Masonic Degrees in 1858 in Bear Mountain Lodge, No. 76. Secretary of that Lodge in 1861. Treasurer from 1862 to 1864. Withdrew from the Lodge in 1869 and ceased all further Masonic activities.

William D. Fair. Junior Warden of California Lodge, No. 1, in 1850. Lawyer. At the opening of the war between the States, Bro. Fair was a strong supporter of the Confederacy. Because this attitude caused a decline of his law practice, he committed suicide on December 27, 1861. On November 3, 1870, Bro. Fair's widow, Laura D. Fair, shot and killed Alexander Crittenden, a prominent lawyer. Her acquittal on the ground of "emotional insanity" introduced a new type of defense into criminal practice.

Stephen J. Field. Raised in Corinthian Lodge, No. 9, at Marysville, in 1850. In 1866 he was made a life member of the Lodge because of his liberal donations. A brother of Cyrus West Field, projector of the first cable to be laid across the Atlantic Ocean. A member of the first California Legislature, in 1850. Prepared a code of mining, civil, and criminal laws which was generally adopted by Western States. Justice of the Supreme Court of California in 1857 and chief justice in 1859. In 1863 he was appointed to be an associate justice of the United States Supreme Court. He resigned that post in April, 1897. Born at Haddam, Connecticut, on November 4, 1816, and died at Washington, District of Columbia, on April 9, 1899.

James Clair Flood. Member of the "Comstock Bonanza" banking firm of Flood and O'Brien. Made a Mason in Golden Gate Lodge, No. 30, in 1852. Died in 1889.

John Hays Hammond. World famous mining engineer. Raised in Oriental Lodge, No. 144, at San Francisco, on June 20, 1893.

James William King. Member of California Lodge, No. 1. Banker. Editor of The San Francisco Bulletin. Shot by James P. Casey on May 14, 1856, and a week later died. Casey was hanged by the San Francisco Vigilance Committee immediately after the burial of King.

Thomas Starr King. Born at New York City on December 16, 1824. Died at San Francisco on March 4, 1864. Received his Master's Degree on August 17, 1861, in Oriental Lodge, No. 144. Pastor of the First Unitarian Church of San Francisco from April 1860 until his death. By his zeal and eloquence Thomas Starr King was foremost among those who succeeded in keeping California in the Union at the time of the war between the States, and in stimulating subscriptions to the funds of the Sanitary Commission during that war. He was instrumental in raising $566,000 from citizens of San Francisco. Upon hearing of Bro. King's death, the California Legislature of 1864 adjourned for three days, after resolving "that he had been a tower of strength to the cause of his country." A bronze statue of the patriot in Golden Gate Park, at San Francisco, and a statue in the Hall of Fame, at Washington, District of Columbia, memorialise his devotion to humanity and to the Union. He was at one time Grand Orator of the Grand Lodge of California. His best epitaph is written in the hearts of his Brethren.

John William Mackey. Of "Comstock Bonanza" fame. Made a Mason in Forest Lodge, No. 66, at Alleghany, California, in 1858. In 1862 he withdrew to Escorial Lodge, No. 7, of Virginia City, Nevada. Born on November 28, 1831, at Dublin, Ireland. He died in 1903.

Nelson A. Miles. General in the United States Army. Raised in February, 1888, at the age of forty-seven, in Southern California Lodge, No. 278, of Los Angeles. Died on May 15, 1925, at Washington, District of Columbia.

William Smith O'Brien. A member of the famous gold-mining and banking firm of Flood and O'Brien, of the "Comstock Bonanza." With John W. Mackey he made a fortune out of his interest in the Comstock mines. Made a Mason in Golden Gate Lodge, No. 30, in 1852. Was Secretary of the Lodge in 1853. Died in 1878.

Lester A. Pelton. Member of Gravel Range Lodge, No. 59, at Camptonville. In 1879 he invented the Pelton water wheel, a successful innovation in hydraulic engineering, since adopted by engineers throughout the world. In 1929 a monument having the form of a water wheel was erected at Camptonville in his honour.

Leland Stanford. Received his Masonic Degrees in Ozaukee Lodge, No. 17, at Port Washington, Wisconsin. Withdrew, and removed to Cold Springs, near Placerville, California, in 1852. From 1853 to 1855 he was at Michigan Bluff. He was at Sacramento from 1855 till 1874, when he took up his residence at San Francisco. Leland Stanford was the chief political agent and one of the incorporators of the Central Pacific Railroad. He was governor of California from 1861 to 1863 and United States senator from California from January 1885 till his death on June 21, 1893. He founded Leland Stanford Jr. University as a memorial to his deceased son.

William G. Walker. Made a Charter member of Texas Lodge, No. 46, at San Juan Bautista, on October 25, 1853. Withdrew from the Lodge in 1855. Organised the Walker invasion of Nicaragua in 1855, and became president of the republic he established there. In November 1853, he seized the town of La Paz and proclaimed the Republic of Lower California. Walker's aim was generally believed to be the conversion of the border states of Mexico into a slave-holding republic. In May 1854 Walker and his "cabinet" returned to San Francisco. There he was indicted by a grand jury, tried, and acquitted. In May 1855 Walker embarked on his Nicaragua enterprise, but after two years he was compelled to leave that country. He went to New York, and subsequently made another invasion of Central America. This time he fell into the hands of the Honduras military authorities, was tried, condemned, and shot on September 25, 1860. Edmund Randolph, then a resident of Sacramento, was associated with Walker in his unsavory escapades.

THE CALIFORNIA RITUAL

One of the first matters to engage the attention of the Grand Lodge of California in 1850 was Ritualistic uniformity. The Officers of the several Lodges having come from different Jurisdictions, naturally held divergent views and were jealous of the infringements of others. At the first Communication, a Committee was appointed whose members were instructed to compare their knowledge and "report the proper mode of Work." The result was that, in 1853, Isaac Davis, who had learned his Work in Ohio, was appointed Grand Lecturer. Undoubtedly he used the Barney Work, since Barney had been Grand Lecturer of Ohio from 1836 to 1843. Bro. Barney was an enthusiastic Ritualist, who, while living in Vermont in 1817, went to Boston and there learned the Preston Work as taught by Bro. Gleason. In 1843 Barney attended a conference at Baltimore, and on his return home the Grand Lodge of Ohio adopted the Work as approved by the Baltimore Conference. In the main, California has adhered to the old Barney Ritual.

MASONIC RELIEF IN CALIFORNIA

Masonry in California has fairly justified its claims as an upholder of the principles of Brotherly Love and Relief, and in these matters its record is worthy of the best traditions of our Institution. Before the organisation of the Grand Lodge, the Brethren of the pioneer Lodges were actively engaged in relief work rendered necessary in the years 1849 and 1850 by the poverty and sickness following the rush of gold-seekers to the new El Dorado. In the wake of those lured by tales of wealth, came deadly Asiatic Cholera. In Sacramento as many as a 150 new cases of cholera a day were reported, and to the credit of our pioneer Brethren, all these were cared for, irrespective of the affiliation of the stricken.

In the fall of 1849 and during the following spring, members of Sacramento Lodges, who numbered only 69, contributed $32,000 towards the support of a local hospital and gave of their time and funds for general relief besides. Tuolumne Lodge, No. 8, of Sonora, which had been Chartered in November 1850, and had only 41 members, expended $4500 in two years, not a dollar of which went to its own members. A survey made in 1852 showed that in only one case had relief been demanded by, or paid to, a member of a California Lodge. During its formative years, the Grand Lodge adopted a law, which is still part of its Constitution, stipulating that "the funds of a Lodge are trust funds set apart for the payment of its necessary expenses and for the special calls for charity for which it was instituted," and that "each Lodge shall see to it, even if it require all its funds and property, that the needy Brethren of its own membership and neighbourhood are not suffered to want or to be made a burden to others." And this law applies equally to distressed widows and orphans.

Our Masonic treasuries have never been avaricious. No Lodge may charge less than nine dollars a year for dues, most of them do charge twelve dollars. Each initiate must pay twenty-five dollars toward the support of the two Homes maintained by the Grand Lodge—one Home, at Covina, for the care and education of dependent children, the other, at Decoto, for the care of aged dependent Masons, their widows and mothers. These Homes represent a capital expenditure of some $2,000,000 for buildings, and a yearly maintenance cost of some $200,000. In a single year 230 children and 368 aged men and women were cared for out of these funds. A clubhouse for young men and women attending the State University is maintained at Berkeley, and another at Los Angeles. In California there are 14 organised Boards of Relief, which in a recent year expended $95,520. Of this amount the Lodges composing the Boards and California recipients contributed $58,140. Though unobtrusively carried on, this work of relief is a monument to Masonry. It is known only to those whose sorrows and distresses have been assuaged by the helping hand and open purse. An Endowment Fund for the benefit of the Masonic Homes was created in 1910. Although this fund increases only slowly, it now amounts to some $700,000. Only the interest accruing to this fund may be used.

FREEMASONRY IN COLORADO

HARRY L. BAUM

LIKE most of the rest of the West, Colorado was settled as a result of the discovery of gold. The existence of the precious metal in what is now Colorado was definitely determined in August 1849, but no deposits of consequence were discovered until April 1858, when a party of traders led by O. O. Cantrell brought to the outside world evidence of the presence of gold in washings from the sands of the South Platte River, near the present site of Denver. Further confirmation was furnished by O. O. Russell and O. O. McFadden, who at about the same time found gold in the sands of Cherry Creek, also near the present site of Denver. Reports of those discoveries, gradually made known through the newspapers, resulted in the westward migration of many venturesome persons who were in quest of riches. Fairly substantial numbers of them began to reach Colorado during the latter part of 1858. As was usually the case in such circumstances, town sites were laid out near several places where gold had been discovered, but only two of those towns ever developed. They were Auraria, on the west bank of Cherry Creek, and Denver City, on its east bank. The two were rivals for supremacy in size and population. In the spring of 1859 those towns began to grow rapidly, and in April 1860 they were united under the name and government of Denver City. Transportation from the eastern centres of population was, of course, only by means of ox-cart or wagon, on horseback or on foot. Those pretentiously styled cities, which were the first objectives of gold-seekers, consisted of only a few straggling log cabins—without windows, with dirt roofs and floors—the rudest of furniture, and none of the comforts common to those settled regions from which the adventurers had so recently departed.

One hardly can fail to be impressed with the importance of the Masonic Lodge in the life of such communities. And, indeed, we find pioneer Freemasonry to have possessed unique characteristics and to have been filled with a wealth of the best of Masonic attributes. Here, in a vast wild country hitherto unpopulated by white settlers, were gathered persons totally unknown to one another, untrammelled by any tie of home or family, unrestrained by the civilising influences to which they had been accustomed. They found themselves completely thrown upon their own resources—for food and shelter, for protection, for government, and for social intercourse.

It was natural that under such circumstances people should look about them for others whose preferences were like their own. How human it was and how very indicative of the values of fraternity, that many of those men found themselves congregating as Masons almost as soon as they arrived at the scene of their intended activities. At first they met informally without Warrant or Dispensation. Later, they went through the form of opening Lodge and examining applicants for admission to their meetings. Occasionally a burial was conducted with Masonic rites, though the historian wonders where Jewels, Columns, Aprons, and other paraphernalia were obtained for the purpose. It must be assumed that at least a Bible was to be found among the Brethren assembled on such solemn occasions! Since those pioneer Brethren were holding forth without even a vestige of regular authority, it is conceivable that they may have considered one of the Great Lights sufficient for their purpose. Of course, no Degrees were conferred at any of those meetings, such foregatherings having been mainly an expression of the Brethren's desire to see once more the form of the Lodge, to listen to the familiar words of the Ritual, to prove and to know one another Masonically, and to be able to afford relief to distressed and needy who found themselves amidst such strange surroundings. Thus the Lodge of those days was a social and fraternal centre of great value to the community and to the men who participated in the fellowship it had to offer. Here, through Masonry, and without the trials which in such circumstances must ordinarily be used to prove worthiness, men came to know each other as trustworthy, dependable citizens. Here too, along with others of like persuasion, might men renew in spirit the obligations taken before a common altar.

The first such meeting of which there is record was held in Auraria on November 3, 1858, in the cabin of Henry Allen, which stood on the west bank of Cherry Creek. It is best described by one of the participants, Bro. J. D. Ramage, in a letter he wrote in 1896, nearly forty years later.

On the evening of the 3d day of November, 1858, the first informal meeting of Masons was held in the cabin, I think, of Henry Allen. I arrived in Pike's Peak, as it was then called, on the 2d of November . . . and having heard that I was a Mason, they invited me to attend.

I accompanied Bro. Allen to his abode, and there found Bros. W. M. Slaughter, Charles Blake, Dr. Russell, Andrew Sagendorf, and, I think, George Lehow. These Brethren, together with Bro. Allen and myself, made the first seven Masons, according to my knowledge and belief, who ever met in Colorado having in contemplation the application for a Charter, and a seven who stuck together, as Masons should do, through thick and thin. . . . In the meantime we decided to form an informal Lodge for mutual fellowship, and for the purpose of practising Lodge Work, so that when we received our Charter we would be able to take hold properly. We agreed to meet every Saturday night, and as our object in locating in Colorado was to get gold . . . we decided that any ideas concerning the country we were in, news of any mines we should discover, or any information which might be beneficial to the Brethren, Masonically or financially, would, at the next meeting, be given to the Masons there assembled. We had some very pleasant meetings.

From time to time we increased our membership. On the 27th of December, St. John's Day, we concluded to have a supper in honour of the festival—a work of no small difficulty. We had flour, pork, coffee, beans, and so on, and a scarcity of even some of those things. Those who were so disposed went out hunting, and returned with some game in time to prepare it for the feast. . . .

We had great difficulty in finding something to cover our festal board with. Somebody informed us that a Mormon, his wife and daughter, had lately come to town, and taking for granted that where there were women (a scarce article in that country in those days) there we would surely find tablecloths, we called on the old lady and she informed us that, while she did not possess what we desired, she had some nice, clean bed sheets, and we were welcome to them.

We were now provided, and ready for the supper. We accordingly met. There were in all twenty-six in number, and notwithstanding our hurried preparations, there probably never was a happier or pleasanter meeting of such a Body of Masons.

The meetings of this group of devoted Masons finally resulted in the submission of an application to the Grand Lodge of Kansas for a Dispensation to form a new Lodge to be called Auraria Lodge U. D. In the meantime, on May 6, 1859, O. O. Gregory's discovery of rich deposits of placer gold started a veritable stampede to the region of the Gregory diggings. Those were situated high in the mountains, in what is now Gilpin County, some forty miles northwest of Denver. Three towns were immediately laid out in Gregory Gulch, as the locality had been called in honour of the discoverer. Of those, Mountain City was the settlement adjacent to the Gregory discovery. Central City was situated somewhat above it, and Black Hawk just below it. In the course of their rapid growth, however, the three became one populous settlement, straggling down the gulch and extending up the mountain slopes for some distance on either side. There the remains of those towns still stand, almost depopulated. They are reminders of the glories of other days and of the fame that once was theirs. In early days, though, a population of more than 20,000—almost exclusively male—was crowded into a few square miles of terrain almost vertical. And all were bent upon finding gold or profiting from others' discovery of it. Here, during the frantic rush for treasure, the Masons, many of whom had participated in the meetings at Auraria, conceived the idea of building a Masonic Temple. Its construction is best described in a letter written by Bro. William M. Slaughter, in which he recounts the experience as he remembered it in 1896.

About the first day of June, 1859, there had assembled in and around Gregory Gulch, where Central City and Black Hawk now stand, fully twenty thousand men, and it was decided that there ought to be a rallying-place for Masons, hundreds of whom were to be found among this vast crowd. A consultation of those known to each other as Masons was held at Slaughter and Sopris's cabin, and it was resolved to build a Lodge Room. The word was passed about among all those claiming to be Masons, and about the 15th of June a site was selected for the Lodge Room, which was on the south side of Gregory Gulch. . . . Work was begun immediately, and the ground leveled for the building, and from fifty to one hundred men with horses and ox-teams were cutting and dragging logs for the new Temple, which, as near as I now remember, was about thirty feet square. . . . Within two or three days the walls were up, and chinked and plastered with mud inside and out. A pole roof covered with pine boughs, and this covered with several inches of earth, completed the Lodge Room building. The three Stations were made of pine logs, sawed the proper height, hewn and sunk into the ground, with a shorter block of the same material planted by it for a seat. The Secretary's desk was the end gate of a wagon-box, nailed on top of a post set in the ground and covered with a piece of wagon-cover canvas, with a block of wood for a seat. I do not remember the exact date of the first meeting in the new Lodge Room, but I think it was about the twentieth of June, 1859. I shall never forget that first meeting on the mountain side.

Word had been passed about among the Masons of the several camps that a Masonic meeting would be held that night at dusk, and as the hour arrived the trails and paths leading towards the Temple began to be lined with Masons, gathering together to meet each other, from distant States and countries, for the first time in this wild place amid the pine woods on a lone mountain side. Four men (Masons) armed with rifles and revolvers stood on guard, one at each corner of the Temple, and one at the outer door also. At the outer door there was also a Receiving Committee, to whom each visitor was introduced, or made himself known if he was unacquainted with anyone. If he desired examination as to his standing as a Mason, he was at once placed in the charge of an Examining Committee, of whom there were not less than ten or more appointed to wait on visiting Brethren who were unknown to any known Mason. Scores of visitors were known or had proved themselves Masons, and of course were vouched for. There were over two hundred visiting Brethren whose names were entered upon the Journal, or Roll of Visitors, as it was called at that first meeting. A meeting was held once each week for over three months. These meetings were of course informal, and were held for the purpose of forming acquaintance with each other.

As an interesting sequel to the account given in Bro. Slaughter's letter, we add here the transcript of an entry in Book A, at page 59, of the Records of Gregory Mining District, Arapahoe County, Kansas Territory, now Gilpin County, Colorado.

Know all men by these presents that we, Wm. M. Slaughter, John Hughs, and Joseph Casto, a building committee appointed by the Free and Accepted Masons, do this day preempt one block for the purpose of erecting a Masonic Temple, June 12, 1859.

The Temple proposed by those fervent pioneer Masons was probably never used for the meetings of a regularly Chartered Lodge. As testified by Bro. Slaughter, however, informal meetings were held there weekly for more than three months, from June 20, 1859, until the approaching bad weather compelled the members to return to Denver City and Auraria for the winter. At Auraria the first Lodge was formed, and there the first regular meeting was held when, on October 1, 1859, the members of the original group received their Dispensation from the Grand Lodge of Kansas, which authorised them to organise Auraria Lodge U. D. This they did on October 18, 1859, with Henry Allen as Worshipful Master. The Lodge's Records, still preserved, show that it met regularly from that date on.

Here, then, we have the record of the first Masonic Lodge and the first Masonic Temple in a region that included much more than merely the present State of Colorado. Really, this was the first permanent Lodge, still working as such, and the first Temple, in a vast territory that included nearly half the area of our county. Bounded by New Mexico on the south, it extended from a thin line of settlements along the Pacific Coast, where Lodges were first established in 1848, to the Missouri River, along whose banks some of the early Lodges of Kansas and Nebraska were situated.

Strangely, however, Auraria Lodge was not the first to be Chartered in the region, nor was it one of the three that later joined to form the Grand Lodge of Colorado. In February 1861 that part of Kansas Territory which later became Colorado was segregated. The Territory of Colorado was organised at the same time. Since the procedure which usually followed under such circumstances was the organisation of an independent Grand Lodge, this action was promptly taken by the Brethren of Colorado. As had been explained after Gregory's discovery of gold was made known, the first objective of the gold-seekers was the region adjacent to Gregory's claim. The route there led from Denver City and Auraria across the Platte River, then due westward almost fifteen miles to a point where it entered the mountains just where Clear Creek flows out. Here Golden City was built, later to become the first capital of Colorado. And here, on February 18, 1860, Golden City Lodge U. D. was organised, under Dispensation from the Grand Lodge of Kansas. Bro. Isaac E. Hardy was Worshipful Master, Bro. Eli Carter was Senior Warden. These and the other Officers were installed by Bro. John Hughs, who was deputed for the purpose by Auraria Lodge U. D. Golden Lodge, which was Chartered by the Grand Lodge of Kansas on October 17, 1860, as Golden City Lodge, No. 34, became Lodge No. 1 on the Roster of the Grand Lodge of Colorado. The two other Lodges which joined with Golden City Lodge, No. 34, to form the Grand Lodge of Colorado were Summit Lodge, No. 7, of Parkville, and Rocky Mountain Lodge, No. 8, of Gold Hill, both of which had been Chartered on June 5, 1861, by the Grand Lodge of Nebraska.

On August 2, 1861, the following Brethren met in Golden City in the Hall of Golden City Lodge, No. 34: Bro. Eli Carter, Worshipful Master; Bro. I. E. Hardy, Senior Warden, and Bro. J. A. Moore, Junior Warden, of Golden City Lodge, No. 34; Bro. Charles F. Holly, Master, and Bro. John M. Chivington, Junior Warden, of Rocky Mountain Lodge, No. 8; Bro. James Ewing, Master; Bro. O. A. Whittemore, Senior Warden; Bro. S. M. Robins, Junior Warden, of Summit Lodge, No. 7. There they organised the Grand Lodge of Colorado with John M. Chivington as Grand Master, under "the name and style of the Most Ancient and Honourable Fraternity of Free and Accepted Masons of Colorado." This name the Grand Lodge bore until the Annual Communication of 1875. At that time a revised Constitution was adopted and the name was changed to "The Most Worshipful Grand Lodge of Ancient Free and Accepted Masons of Colorado."

Following the organisation meeting, the First Annual Communication was held at Denver City on December 10, 11, and 12, 1861, and at that time Bro. John M. Chivington was re-elected Grand Master. Six Lodges were represented, including, in addition to the original organisers, Nevada Lodge, No. 4, Denver Lodge, No. 5, and Chivington Lodge, No. 6. The former had worked under Dispensation from January 1861 until on October 15, 1861, it was Chartered by the Grand Lodge of Kansas as Nevada City Lodge, No. 36. The Lodge almost immediately surrendered its Kansas Charter, however, in order to become a member of the Colorado Grand Lodge. At the First Annual Communication of the Grand Lodge of Colorado it was Chartered as Nevada Lodge, No. 4, and at the time Andrew Mason was retained as Worshipful Master.

As has been said, Auraria Lodge U. D. did not participate in the formation of the Grand Lodge of Colorado. Unfortunately, this Lodge lost its priority because it never received its Charter from the Grand Lodge of Kansas. That the Charter was authorised, and was to have been issued as No. 37 on the Roll of the Grand Lodge of Kansas, is apparent from the Minutes of the Annual Communication of that Grand Lodge in 1861. At that time it was voted to grant a Charter to Auraria Lodge upon receipt of its Dispensation and the necessary returns if the Grand Secretary of Kansas should find those correct. The returns were received in October 1861, after the Annual Communication of the Grand Lodge of Kansas had taken place, but at the time Auraria Lodge told of its intention to surrender its Dispensation and to apply to the Grand Lodge of Colorado for another. Thus, Auraria Lodge lost its priority on the Roll of the Grand Lodge of Colorado by failing to apply to the Grand Lodge of Kansas for a Charter in 1860, the year in which Golden City Lodge, No. 34, did apply and was Chartered. So far as the Records disclose, Auraria Lodge never did apply for a Charter. Instead, it continued to Work under Dispensation from the time of its organisation in October, 1859. Whether or not this failure to apply was due to carelessness, or what other reason there may have been, is not certainly known, but the fact remains that Auraria Lodge was still under Dispensation at the time the Grand Lodge of Colorado was formed. After that took place, Auraria Lodge applied for a Dispensation and received it under the name of Denver City Lodge U. D., with Charles H. Blake as Worshipful Master. At the First Annual Communication it was Chartered under the name and number of Denver Lodge, No. 5, with Paris S. Pfouts as Worshipful Master.

Chivington Lodge, located at Central City under Dispensation from the newly-elected Grand Master, John M. Chivington, was Chartered at the First Annual Communication as Chivington Lodge, No. 6, with Allyn Weston as Worshipful Master, and Henry M. Teller as Senior Warden.

Of the three Lodges which participated in the formation of the Grand Lodge of Colorado, only Golden City Lodge, No. 1, has enjoyed a continuous existence. It still flourishes with just pride in its priority and in a long and honourable career. Rocky Mountain Lodge, No. 3, lasted only a short while, having surrendered its Charter at the Second Annual Communication of the Grand Lodge in 1862, because nearly all its members had left the district. At the Fifth Annual Communication of the Grand Lodge, held in 1865, Summit Lodge, No. 2, also returned its Records and surrendered its Charter for like reason. Considering the circumstances of time and place such developments were not at all surprising, for during those years of frenzied gold digging whole towns often declined and practically disappeared within a few months. Whenever gold was discovered in any given locality, a town often sprang into being as though by magic, thrived for a time, then as suddenly passed out of existence. The inhabitants rushed away as more promising gold fields were opened, or gradually drifted away as placer diggings were exhausted.

The three other Lodges which participated in the First Annual Communication and received their Charters at that time also merit mention here. Of those, all are still in existence. Nevada Lodge, No. 4, maintains itself in a deserted city, the mere shell of what was once a thriving community. Perched high upon the sides of furrowed and barren hills, its stores and houses vacant, its streets covered with weeds, its wooden sidewalks rotted and broken, Nevada City shelters only one human being, a devoted Brother who is Treasurer of the Lodge. Of the other forty-odd members whose names remain on the Lodge's Roll, a dozen or more still live so near that with the aid of members of Central Lodge, No. 6, and Black Hawk Lodge, No. 11, they are able to continue holding Communications in the old Lodge Room that still stands on the main street of this ghostly city hidden away in a fastness of the Rocky Mountains. Thus do these Brethren keep alive the spirit of a Masonry that flourished in the gold camps of the old West, a Masonry of the frontier that antedated both church and school, and flourished long before the advent of other uplifting and refining influences.

The second Lodge of the original early group, Denver Lodge, No. 5, is a direct continuation of Auraria Lodge U. D., as has been explained. This Lodge carries on the tradition established by those seven Masons who were first to meet together as such in this region. It still meets regularly on Saturday night, as did the pioneers, and thus preserves its existence as a Lodge uninterrupted since 1859. A very active Lodge, Denver Lodge, No. 5, is now one of the largest in Colorado with approximately 1200 members.

The last of the historic original Lodges, Chivington Lodge, No. 6, lives on now as Central City Lodge, No. 6, its name having been changed in 1866. That year the town of Black Hawk, which lay just below Central City, in Gregory Gulch, became the home of Black Hawk Lodge, No. 11. It was Chartered by the Grand Lodge of Colorado on October 1, 1866. Thus during the first ten years following the organization of the Grand Lodge of Colorado, the region in Gilpin County contiguous to the original gold diggings held Nevada Lodge, No. 4, Chivington Lodge, No. 6, and Black Hawk Lodge, No. 11, whose Rolls listed more than half the Masons in the Territory of Colorado. It is interesting to note that of the first twelve Annual Communications of the Grand Lodge of Colorado, half were held at Central City. Since that time the Annual Communications have been held in Denver, for with the decline of gold-mining activities the population of Gilpin County has shrunk and the Lodges there now include only a fraction of their former numbers. In spite of this, however, Central Lodge, No. 6, and Black Hawk Lodge, No. 11, continue to flourish and to perpetuate the traditions of the pioneer Masonry of Colorado. At present, Central Lodge, No. 6, has about 132 members who still meet in the Lodge Room in Central City that has been the Lodge's meeting-place since 1866. Black Hawk Lodge, No. 11, sister Lodge to Central Lodge, No. 6, and Nevada Lodge, No. 4, still continues an active existence. Each of these Lodges Works happily and efficiently with the assistance of co-operation of the other two.

next Chartered Union Lodge, No. 7. According to the Records, a Petition for a new Lodge to be called Union Lodge, No. 7, and a prayer that a Charter be issued to it at once, were presented to the Grand Lodge at its Third Annual Communication, held on November 2, 1863. The prayer of the Petitioners was immediately granted. Those Brethren among whom was the militant Unionist, John M. Chivington, a Past Grand Master, petitioned for a new Lodge to be called Union Lodge, and asked that a Charter be given them without any period of Dispensation. Such a request was unusual, to say the least, but it was granted nevertheless. To-day Union Lodge is distinguished for having been granted a Charter directly, and having never worked under Dispensation.

This singular circumstance explains itself when one recalls the period during which it took place. In those days civil strife between two sections of the nation was disrupting families, separating friends, and causing brother to hate brother. Even Colorado was not immune to those conditions. Here, even in Freemasonry, there was sufficient feeling to bring about the formation of a Lodge made up exclusively of sympathisers with the North. The Records show that all those Brethren except Bro. Chivington came from Denver Lodge, No. 5, which was at that time strongly tinged by Southern sentiment, as it seems. Yet in the Minutes of Denver Lodge, No. 5 we find an entry saying that the Brethren of the new Lodge were to be permitted to use not only the Hall of Denver Lodge, No. 5, but also its paraphernalia. How significant was this of the toleration practised under the restraining influence of Masonry! For we of to-day can scarcely estimate the fierce feelings engendered by the terrible conflict then in progress.

Of the other early Lodges in Colorado, only No. 8, No. 9, and No. 10 remain to be accounted for. One of these, Empire Lodge, No. 8, was another example of an abortive attempt to form a Lodge in the face of difficulties inherent in a rapidly shifting population. Chartered in 1865, this Lodge throve for a time and succeeded in maintaining a precarious existence for ten years. Finally, in 1875, it surrendered its Charter. Lodge No. 9 and Lodge No. 10 are interesting because they were the first to be Chartered outside of Colorado Territory by the Grand Lodge of Colorado. They were properly Montana Lodge, No. 9, and Helena Lodge, No. 10, in Montana Territory. Later they surrendered their Charters and became, respectively, Montana Lodge, No. 2, of Virginia City, Montana, and Helena Lodge, No. 3, of Helena, Montana, on the Roster of Lodges under the Jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of Montana. In precisely the same way, other Lodges in the State of Colorado also contributed to the formation of the Grand Lodge of Utah and the Grand Lodge of Wyoming, just as Kansas Lodges and Nebraska Lodges had earlier contributed to the formation of the Grand Lodge of Colorado.

When more gold, silver, and other metals were later discovered in the mountains of Colorado, other mining-camps sprang up, as before, and sometimes almost overnight. But no more Lodges were Chartered to die out with the towns that supported them. Instead, Colorado communities grew in stability as industries came in and the settlement of the State proceeded. Thus, the location of Lodges at an ever-increasing distance from original centres of population soon became the rule. First of those was Georgetown Lodge, No. 12, presently followed by El Paso Lodge, No. 13, at Colorado City, later removed to Colorado Springs. Then came Columbia Lodge, No. 14, at Columbia City, later removed to Boulder. Those were followed by Mount Moriah Lodge, No. 15, at Canyon City, and Pueblo Lodge, No. 17, at Pueblo. As time went on, many other Lodges were established. Most of the later Lodges thrived, and maintained their places on the Roster of the Grand Lodge of Colorado as the communities grew and reached maturity. Some early Lodges, originally in the Colorado Jurisdiction, came to be listed on the Rosters of other Grand Lodges as new States and Territories were formed.

But difficulties other than those of a shifting population and the varying fortunes of boom communities beset the path of Masonry in Colorado throughout its formative period. Great distances and the risks of travel in wild and sparsely settled country interposed serious obstacles. It was nothing unusual for Brethren to travel from ten to twenty miles, or even more, along mountain trails, sometimes in very inclement weather, to attend Lodge. The Brethren who attended the Annual Communications of the Grand Lodge frequently travelled much greater distances on foot or horseback, much of the way along almost impassable roads or trails. At the Eighth Annual Communication of the Grand Lodge, held in 1865, the Grand Master, Bro. Henry M. Teller, reported that he had granted a Dispensation to Canyon Lodge U. D., at Canyon City. Before doing so he had visited Canyon City and found that though there were only a few Brethren there, they had the ability and disposition to support a good Lodge. He learned also that the proposed Master and Junior Warden regularly attended the Communications of El Paso Lodge, although doing that required them to ride some fifty miles through almost uninhabited country. This seems to be at least a fair indication of more than passing interest on the part of those worthy Brethren. At the same Annual Communication, Bro. Harper M. Orahoad, Grand Lecturer, reported that he had visited nearly all the Lodges in the Jurisdiction. With the Grand Master, he had made preparations to visit the Lodges at Canyon City and Pueblo, both then under Dispensation, but the appearance of marauding Indians along the trail caused them to dismiss the visit as unsafe. It should be borne in mind that the proposed visit would have required a round trip horseback ride of some 400 miles through unsettled country. The intentions of the Grand Officers were undoubtedly good, even though the Indians unwittingly prevented carrying them out.

A somewhat darker picture shows that not the least of the difficulties of those pioneer Masons was the conduct of some of the Brethren. In those early times, as at others, this was the concern of the serious and constructive element in the membership. In the instance about to be cited, it is quite evident that the better element shrank neither from telling the wayward that their conduct was unbecoming their profession as Masons, nor from defining, in positive terms, the penalties to be exacted for further misbehaviour. At the Fifth Annual Communication of the Grand Lodge, held in 1865, the following resolution was adopted: "Resolved, That it shall be and is hereby made the imperative duty of the subordinate Lodges in this Jurisdiction to restrain, as far as possible, the Masonic crime of intemperance by trial and suspension, or expulsion, as the case may require, and for the faithful performance of that duty the said subordinate Lodges will be held accountable to this Grand Lodge."

That the young Grand Lodge flourished from the very start is shown by the returns that came in year by year. There has been a steady growth in number of subordinate Lodges from the original three to an active list of 148 out of a total of 169 that have been Chartered since the beginning. From an original membership of not more than 150, at the time of organisation in 1861, the Grand Lodge has grown to a present membership of about 34,000 Master Masons. And this out of Colorado's total population of 1,035,791 people in 1930! It is a remarkable fact that in only one year, 1875, has there occurred a net loss in membership in the Lodges under the Jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of Colorado.

Of the several concordant Masonic Bodies, the Royal Arch Masons first came to Colorado with Central City Chapter, No. 1. It received its Dispensation from the General Grand Chapter of the United States under date of March 23, 1863, and its Charter under date of September 8, 1865. The organisation of Central City Chapter, No. 1, was soon followed by that of Denver Chapter, No. 2. It received its Dispensation from the same source in April 1863, while its Charter was also dated September 8, 1865. Those first two Chapters were followed within ten years by the establishment of Pueblo Chapter, No. 3, Georgetown Chapter, No. 4, and Golden Chapter, No. 5, all of which participated in the formation of the Grand Chapter of Colorado on May 11, 1875, with William N. Byers as Grand High Priest. The list of Chapters then steadily grew until there are 51 active Chapters having a total of nearly 8000 members. It is significant that of the 53 Chapters of Royal Arch Masons thus far Chartered in Colorado all but one have survived. One other surrendered its Charter for the purpose of consolidation, when the towns of Colorado City and Colorado Springs were united under the latter name. At that time Euclid Chapter, No. 45, of Colorado City merged with Colorado Springs Chapter, No. 6, of Colorado Springs, under the latter's name and number.

The Commandery of Knights Templar was next in order of appearance in Colorado. Colorado Commandery, No. 1, was given a Dispensation under date of January 13, 1866, and was Chartered by the Grand Encampment of Knights Templar of the United States on September 18, 1868. Soon thereafter Central City Commandery, No. 2, was established with a Charter under date of October 24, 1868. These two Commanderies, joined by Pueblo Commandery, No. 3, formed the Grand Commandery of Colorado on March 15, 1876, with Henry M. Teller as Grand Commander. Thirty-six Commanderies out of a total of 37 originally established are still flourishing, with a total membership of over 4500 Sir Knights. Two Triennial Conclaves of the Grand Encampment have been held at Denver since the organisation of the Grand Commandery. Both were highly successful. The first, held in 1892, attracted some 75,000 visitors, all kinds included. The second, held in 1913, remains outstanding among Triennial Conclaves for the impressively beautiful decorations that graced the city at the time. Colorado Knight Templary is proud to have supplied the Grand Encampment of the United States with one Grand Master, Most Eminent George W. Vallery, who filled that post during the Triennial period from 1925 to 1928.

Cryptic Rite Masonry was first established in Colorado when the Grand Council of Illinois Chartered Central City Council as No. 54. This Council terminated its existence in 1875. It was, then, not until 1892 that Denver Council, No. 1, was placed under Dispensation by the Grand Master of the General Grand Council of the United States. Its establishment was soon followed by the organisation of 6 other Councils. All those Councils were Chartered in 1894 by the General Grand Council, and the Grand Council of Colorado was formed on December 6 of the same year. There are at present 15 active constituent Councils under the Jurisdiction of the Grand Council of Royal and Select Masters of Colorado, with over 2300 members.

The Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite was established in Colorado when Delta Lodge of Perfection, No. 1, was Chartered in Denver on January 26, 1877, by Illustrious Bro. Albert Pike, Grand Commander of the Supreme Council, Southern Jurisdiction. Soon afterwards, on April 11, 1878, Mackey Chapter of Rose Croix, No. 1, was established. The next two Bodies of the Scottish Rite were not Chartered until ten years later—Denver Council of Kadosh, No. 1, on September 3, 1888, and Colorado Consistory, No. 1, on the following October 17.

The Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite has flourished in Colorado in a very gratifying way. Its growth, like that of the York Rite, has been fostered by the labour of many loyal and willing workers. With Bro. Henry M. Teller, Thirty-third Degree, who was the first Inspector General, the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite carried on for many years under the usual handicaps of small membership and inadequate equipment. It had, however, one highly compensatory advantage. That was the inspiration afforded by the indefatigable industry of Bro. Lawrence N. Greenleaf, Thirty-third Degree, Deputy Inspector General under Bro. Teller. Due to Bro. Greenleaf's leadership and enthusiastic example, most early obstacles were surmounted. The present thriving condition of the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite, which now has 3 Consistories and 2 magnificent Temples, has of late years been attained under the stimulating supervision of Bro. Stanley C. Warner, Thirty-third Degree, Inspector General in Colorado. The second set of Bodies was Chartered in Denver by the Supreme Council in 1918, and the third set in Pueblo the following year. All the Bodies have greatly prospered. Though the membership of Colorado Consistory, No. 1, was 53 in 1889, the year after it received its Charter, now its membership is about 2400. The combined membership of the 3 Consistories of the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite in Colorado is over 6000.

So far as concerns active charity, Colorado Masons have never yet been convinced that it is wise to establish Masonic institutions of a charitable nature to care for dependents. The Minutes of the Twenty-eighth Annual Communication, held in 1888, reveal that a Committee was at that early date appointed to "present to this Grand Lodge some plan for founding a Masonic 'Widows and Orphans' Home." Since that time the subject has been exhaustively studied by various Committees of the Grand Lodge. The result of the investigations has been the adoption of the method now used in caring for dependents as the best under existing circumstances. Many subordinate Lodges have funds of their own which provide relief within certain limitations. In addition, and what is even more important, the Grand Lodge of Colorado has formed what is called the Colorado Masons Benevolent Fund Association. This Association is the repository of a steadily increasing fund, the income from which is used for all necessary charitable purposes. Known only to administrators of the fund, there comes to every dependent each month a check sufficient to meet his needs. Thus each recipient can continue to live as a respected resident of his community. He is adequately cared for, yet not publicly known as the recipient of charity. In such a fashion has Colorado Masonry been able to care for its widows, orphans, and dependent Brethren with satisfaction to all concerned and in an efficient and unostentatious manner.

Another organised activity, of a different nature, which has been carried on under the auspices of the Grand Lodge, is that of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Welfare Committee. It is engaged in the regular visitation and entertainment of sick and disabled Masonic war veterans who are being cared for in Government hospitals located within the State. The two such institutions—Fitzsimmons General Hospital, near Denver, and Fort Lyon Hospital, at Fort Lyon—together house some 2,000 patients, of whom about 200 are Masons, or dependents of Masons. Regular visitations are made to those men, and a wonderful service of sympathy, good cheer, and encouragement is rendered. Thus the welfare and happiness of these Brethren is looked after.

Names of distinguished men are almost always associated with the history of every Grand Lodge of Masons—names of men distinguished not only in Masonry but also in many other fields of endeavour. Of the many such which Colorado Masonic history records, that of John M. Chivington, outstanding Mason, preacher, warrior, first Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Colorado, must head the list. Bro. Chivington was a Methodist preacher who came to Colorado after having had extensive experience in his profession in Ohio, Illinois, Missouri, Kansas, and Nebraska. That he was active in the Masonic work of those States is proved by the fact that he was at some time or other a member of a Lodge in each of them, that he was Master of a Lodge at Wyandotte, Kansas, and at one time Grand Chaplain of the Grand Lodge of Nebraska. Later in his career he was sent to Colorado Territory as presiding elder of the Rocky Mountain District of the Methodist Episcopal Church. During the second year of this service, while he was Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Colorado, he offered his service to his country and entered the forces of the North. Refusing a proffered commission as chaplain, he was made a major in the First Colorado Infantry. He distinguished himself chiefly in the celebrated Apache Canyon fight, known in history as the battle of Glorieta, when he led 500 men in a rear attack upon the Confederate troops of General O. O. Sibley, who was attempting to invade Colorado from New Mexico. Historians say that this battle saved Colorado and her great gold deposits to the Union. For bravery shown at the time, Major Chivington was made a colonel, a rank he held until his honourable discharge from the army, in 1865. Another of Colonel Chivington's exploits was his leadership at the battle of Sand Creek. In that engagement with Indians, several hundred of them were slain, and the massacre of 174 white men, women, and children was thus avenged. Indian depredations from which Colorado settlers were suffering at the time were effectually ended by this victory. The historian must surely be aware that this devout and warlike clergyman truly believed the biblical exclamation, "Vengeance is mine, saith the Lord."

Another Brother of early days to whom Colorado Masonry is deeply indebted was M.: W.: Bro. Allyn Weston, first Grand Lecturer and second Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Colorado. Before removing to Colorado, Bro. Weston had for six years been editor and publisher of The Ashler, a Masonic magazine, of Detroit and Chicago. He was the first Master of Chivington Lodge, No. 6. Bro. Weston's greatest contribution to Colorado Masonry was emphasised by R.: W.: Bro. W. W. Cooper, formerly Grand Lecturer and in 1932 Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of Colorado, in his masterly analysis of the Colorado Work, its origin and descent. Bro. Cooper wrote as follows:

In the days we are considering, the Work used by a new Grand Lodge would be that which was known and favoured by some strong, forceful leader in the organisation, particularly if he possessed authority to regulate the matter. Allyn Weston was the outstanding leader in the Grand Lodge of Colorado in the first two years of its existence. Within four months after the organisation of the Grand Lodge, he was appointed its Grand Lecturer, whose duty it was to "cause the work of the several Lodges to be uniform," and he was the second Grand Master of Colorado. Past Grand Master Henry M. Teller, speaking in the Grand Lodge in 1910, said: "Weston was a remarkable man, a man of fine presence, fine education, and fine address, and a gentlemen in the best use of the term. I do not think it is an exaggeration to say that this man had great influence on the organisation, the upbuilding, and general character of Masonry in this Jurisdiction. He was a firm believer in the tenets of the Craft, a firm believer in the maintenance of strict order, and devoted to the great principles that underlie this Institution; and he impressed himself upon the Lodge for the year that he was Grand Master as I think no other man has ever done since."

When it is known that the first active Grand Lecturer and the second Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Colorado was a man of the character above described, there can be but one conclusion, and that is that Weston determined the system of Work that was required to be used by the Lodges under the Jurisdiction of the new Grand Lodge. And this conclusion is confirmed by a living and competent witness, an associate of Weston's and a participant in the Masonic affairs of the State since the year 1861. I speak of Most Worshipful Bro. Chase Withrow, who served as Grand Lecturer in 1864 and as Grand Master in 1866, and who, now in his ninety-first year, occasionally confers the Master Mason Degree. Brother Withrow has repeatedly stated in Grand Lodge and elsewhere that "the Work mostly used in the early days of Colorado Masonry was what was known as the 'Allyn Weston.'"

That this Work continued to be used after Weston left the State is shown by the Report of a Committee of the Grand Lodge upon a revision of the Work prepared by Grand Lecturer George E. Wyman, and adopted by the Grand Lodge in 1882, in which it was stated: "The Work presented by the Grand Lecturer is in its essential features the same as the 'Allyn Weston Work' so long used in this Jurisdiction."

Just which one of the many kinds of Work used in Michigan from 1844 to 1860, which Weston introduced into Colorado, it is probably now impossible to determine. Because of certain of its characteristics, there can be no doubt that it was a variety of the 'Barney Work' used in Michigan in the period mentioned."

In 1911 the Colorado Work was thoroughly and very competently revised by Bro. Cooper himself, the accomplished student of Masonic Ritual, whom we quote above. Of his own revision, Bro. Cooper has said: "Essentially, the Colorado Work remains as it was in 1861. No modern material was added in this revision, although some restorations were made that antedate in their origin Weston, Barney, the Baltimore Convention, and even Webb. Leaving out of consideration any Systems of Work in use in the United States prior to the year 1800, the line of descent of our Colorado Work appears to be fairly well defined. First we have Webb, then Gleason, then Barney, then some modified form of Barney as used in Michigan seventy-five years ago, then Weston, and finally the Colorado Work."

We must conclude, then, upon the most competent of modern testimony, that Bro. Weston was responsible for the purity and accuracy of the Colorado Work in its inception, whatever change it may since have undergone. We can trace the thread of influence of each unselfish worker who wove into the fabric of the future greatness of the Ancient Craft for which he laboured.

Among those other Colorado Masons who were great in civic life as well as great in Masonry, the name of Henry Moore Teller, third Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Colorado, stands pre-eminent. Beginning in 1863, he at first held the office for one year. Subsequently he was elected Grand Master each year from 1867 to 1872, inclusive, and thus served his Grand Lodge as Grand Master for seven years in all. Aside from Bro. John M. Chivington, only one other Mason has had the distinction of being elected to the Grand East in Colorado a second time. That honour was also conferred upon Bro. Webster D. Anthony, who followed Bro. Teller and served during the years 1873 and 1874. That Bro. Teller's associates in Masonry regarded him very highly is evident from his further Masonic record, which covered a period of more than fifty-four years. He was made a Mason in Illinois in 1858. In 1861, at the age of thirty-one, he came to Colorado. He was second Master of Chivington Lodge, No. 6, first Eminent Commander of Central City Commandery, No. 2, and first Grand Commander of the Grand Commandery of Colorado. He was coroneted Honorary Inspector General of the Thirty-third Degree in 1866. Appointed in 1882, he was the first active member in Colorado of the Supreme Council of the Southern Jurisdiction of the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite. He occupied this post for nearly thirty-two years, and rose to the position of Grand Prior in the Supreme Council in 1913. From this brief review it is clear that Bro. Teller was a Mason of many activities. No adequate catalogue of them is possible here.

For many years Bro. Teller was also a distinguished figure in the nation's civic life. Upon his arrival in Colorado, he established himself as a lawyer in Central City and quickly became the leader of his profession in the Territory. Soon thereafter he organised the Colorado Central Railroad, which later became a part of the Colorado and Southern Railroad. During the first five years of its existence he was president of the former. Having been appointed major-general of militia during the Indian troubles of 1863, he served in that capacity for three years. Upon admission of Colorado to the Union in 1876 he was elected to the United States Senate, where he served until 1883. He was then appointed to the Cabinet as Secretary of the Interior under President Chester A. Arthur, and at the expiration of the latter's term Bro. Teller returned again to the Senate. Altogether, he served as senator from Colorado for thirty years. During that time his outstanding accomplishments were indeed many, and one at least merits specific mention. This had to do with stating our nation's aims at the outbreak of the Spanish-American War. At that moment, the position of our government in the conflict could easily have been misunderstood by other world powers, and trouble leading to serious consequences might easily have been precipitated. Realising this, and recognising the seriousness of the situation, Bro. Teller introduced into the United States Senate the following resolution, which was adopted, thus removing all doubt as to the intention of our government:

“ Resolved, That the United States hereby disclaims any disposition or intention to exercise sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over said island (Cuba), except for the purpose of pacification thereof; and asserts its determination, when that is accomplished, to leave the government and control of the island to its people.”

Bro. Teller died in 1914. He had served his Lodge as Master, his Commandery as Eminent Commander for ten years, the Grand Commandery of Lawrence Nicholls Greenleaf.

Deputy Inspector General from 1878 to 1914. Initiated the movement which led to the organisation of the Scottish Rite Bodies in Denver.

Henry Moore Teller, 33°, P. G. M.

Third Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Colorado. First Sovereign Grand Inspector General of the Scottish Rite in Colorado. First Grand Commander of the Grand Commandery of Colorado.

Colorado as first Grand Commander, the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite as Inspector General for thirty-two years, the Grand Lodge of Colorado as Grand Master for seven years. In addition, he had served his country in some form of national public service for thirty-three years. This was a truly remarkable record for one man to leave behind him—the record of a great citizen and a great Mason.

The fairest shrine that can be occupied by any of the Masonic great must, after all, be within the hearts and memories of their Brethren. None more surely occupies that place than Colorado's poet laureate of Masonry, Lawrence N. Greenleaf. Masonic poet, editor, and publisher, Bro. Greenleaf was, in addition, a tireless worker both in the ranks of Masonry and in high places. Receiving the Degrees of Ancient Craft Masonry in Boston, in 1863, he affiliated with Denver Lodge, No. 5, that same year, then served his Lodge as Master in 1866, 1868, 1869, 1877, and 1878. He was High Priest of Denver Chapter, No. 2, for two years, and Grand High Priest of the Grand Royal Arch Chapter of Colorado in 1885. He was Grand Master of the Grand Council of Colorado in 1907, and for eighteen years he was Recorder of Colorado Commandery, No. 1. Bro. Greenleaf was friend and associate of such other great Masons as Bro. Albert G. Mackey, Bro. Albert Pike, Bro. Henry M. Teller, and Bro. Henry P. H. Bromwell, whose monumental work on Freemasonry was published by the Grand Lodge of Colorado in 1905. The publication of this volume was undertaken after the death of Bro. Bromwell. The literary ability of Bro. Greenleaf made him an important member of the Committee that carried the work through to completion. Bro. Greenleaf was elected Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Colorado in 1880, and served as Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Correspondence of the Grand Lodge from 1870 to 1878; again in 1882, and again from 1889 to 1917. In Denver, from 1893 until 1917, he published a Masonic magazine, The Square and Compass, while his writings, especially his poetry, gave him world renown in Masonic circles. To have written only one of his Masonic poems, "The Lodge Room over Simpkin's Store," would have been sufficient to assure him lasting fame among the Masons. It has been said of his writing, particularly of his poetry, that it expressed the very soul of Freemasonry. His correspondence reports, which extend over a third of a century, furnish the means for acquiring a Masonic education, since they touch upon nearly every phase of the Institution. Having received the Degrees of the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite by communication from Bro. Albert G. Mackey, Bro. Greenleaf's interest in that Body never flagged. He initiated the movement that led to the organisation of the Scottish Rite Bodies in Denver, and was chiefly responsible for bringing that about. At some time or other he was the presiding Officer in each of the Bodies. He served as Deputy Inspector General from 1878 until infirmities forced him to retire in 1914. During the difficult days of the formative period of the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite in Colorado, Bro. Greenleaf carried on through the era of indifference and small membership until he saw the fruition of his efforts in the magnificent growth and prosperity of that Body in the early part of the twentieth century. Our distinguished Brother died in 1922. For years he had held a position of respect and loving regard in the hearts of his Brethren, an enviable honour which his long and unselfish service amply justified. Preserved in his writings, his spirit will long serve as an inspiration to many Masons in years yet to come.

Another Colorado Mason whose name will long be remembered was M.:W.:Bro. Roger W. Woodbury, who is credited with an accomplishment of which Colorado Freemasonry is justly proud. He held the Masonic Memorial Exercises at Mount Vernon, Virginia, on the centenary of the death of Worshipful Brother George Washington. In response to a recommendation in the address of Grand Master William D. Wright, made at the suggestion and request of Bro. Woodbury, those exercises were formally inaugurated by the Most Worshipful Grand Lodge of Colorado in 1893. The enormous task of initiating and carrying through the plan was entrusted to a Committee consisting of three Past Grand Masters, Bro. Woodbury, Bro. William D. Wright, and Bro. William D. Todd. After corresponding for three years, this Committee succeeded in interesting enough Grand Lodges of the United States to insure the national character of the project. Having concluded that the exercises could only properly take place at Mount Vernon, George Washington's Virginia estate, the Grand Lodge of Virginia was then formally invited to arrange all details of the celebration. That Grand Lodge accepted the invitation, and gave acknowledgment to the Grand Lodge of Colorado for its inception of the idea and for the service it had performed. On December 14, 1899, the Memorial Exercises were carried out under the auspices of the Grand Lodge of Virginia. Practically every Grand Lodge in the United States participated, and the Grand Lodge of Colorado was accorded the place of highest honor among them in recognition of its service. The honour was even increased by asking M.:W.:Bro. Alphonse A. Burnand, then Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Colorado, to deliver one of the three addresses given on the occasion. The two other addresses were delivered by the Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Virginia and by Bro. William McKinley, President of the United States, respectively. The events of the occasion were later fully described by Past Grand Master William D. Todd, a member of the Committee. As Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of Colorado, he named this as "the most interesting, impressive, and important Masonic event of the last century." Bro. Roger W. Woodbury's mind conceived the plan of that fitting centenary celebration, his industry carried it out. To him belongs the greater share of credit for successful accomplishment.

Two other Past Grand Masters of the Grand Lodge of Colorado must be mentioned even in this short sketch. They were M.:W.:Bro. Chase Withrow and M.:W.:Bro. Earnest Le Neve Foster. The former was a person of outstanding interest to the Masonic historian for many years because he was the only survivor of early Colorado Masonry. During his lifetime Bro. Withrow had personally known every Grand Master of this Grand Lodge. He had been intimate and co-worker with Bro. Chivington, Bro. Weston, Bro. Teller, Bro. Greenleaf, Bro. Whittemore, Bro. Parmelee, and the other pioneers of the days when Colorado Masonry was founded. Bro. Withrow was first Master of Black Hawk Lodge, No. 11, in 1866, and at the same time he was Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Colorado. In 1916, on the fiftieth anniversary of his Grand Mastership, he was re-elected Master of his Lodge. Again he sat in Grand Lodge as representative of Black Hawk Lodge, No. 11, just half a century after he first presided as Grand Master. The death of this distinguished Brother in 1931 severed the last link that for so long had connected Colorado Masonry of to-day with the pioneer Masonry of Colorado's earliest years.

M.: W.: Bro. Earnest Le Neve Foster was long distinguished among Colorado Masons because of the many years of service he rendered to the Craft in nearly every sort of way. His name will chiefly be remembered, however, as that of the founder of the Colorado Masons' Benevolent Fund Association, as that of a contributor to the fund, and as that of a faithful and successful worker in the service of the Association. Bro. Foster was Grand Master in 1890. For nine years he was Grand Lecturer, and in addition he served other branches of the Craft in many Offices. Nearly all the last twenty-five years of Bro. Foster's life were devoted to the service of the Benevolent Fund Association; there he laboured without pecuniary reward until the very hour of his death. It was fitting that this worthy Mason's life should end as it did: Death came to him while he was on an errand of mercy to a beneficiary of the Fund. Bro. Foster died as he had long lived—occupied with the work of the Craft for which he had chosen to labour.

Mention of some few of the many other great Masonic pioneers and workers whose lives have served as inspiration and example to Masons of Colorado must be made here before this short article is brought to a close. These few are the five who have served the Grand Lodge of Colorado as Grand Secretary during its seventy years of existence. The Colorado Grand Lodge has indeed been fortunate in its choice of Grand Secretaries. All have been able and distinguished workers in the field of Masonry, itself an abiding strength and support. First of the Grand Secretaries was R.: W.: Bro. Oliver A. Whittemore, one of the organizers of the Grand Lodge, and later Deputy Grand Master. Bro. Whittemore occupied the office until 1865, when he was succeeded by R.: W.: Bro. Edward C. Parmelee, who held the position for thirty-five years, a career distinguished throughout by faithful and efficient service. At the death of Bro. Parmelee, a Past Grand Master, R.: W.: William D. Todd, succeeded him. Bro. Todd held the Office only three years. He was followed by an outstanding Masonic writer, a capable orator and a tireless worker, R.: W.: Charles H. Jacobson, who served as Grand Secretary until his death in 1921, a period of more than sixteen years. Since the death of Bro. Jacobson, this important post has been occupied by R.: W.: Bro. William W. Cooper, whose standing among present-day Masonic students and authors is generally well known.

Of great names such as those that have been mentioned, Colorado has had its full share. It stands indebted to those Brethren and to many living workers who to-day are ably serving the Craft with all their strength and will and heart. Though the historian cannot here mention all of those, he is nevertheless in duty bound to accord some words to the labourers in the ranks—no less worthy contributors to the success and prosperity of Masonry in this Jurisdiction. To them the Fraternity is often as deeply obligated as to those whose names shine forth more brightly from the pages of Masonic history. Without them the acknowledged great could have accomplished little. To them the debt can never be repaid, even in gratitude. They here receive posterity's tribute of honoured recognition—they who have been quiet and faithful workers in their day and generation.

Coming now to the present, we must not fail to say that the activities of Freemasonry in Colorado are to-day characterised by a perpetuation of all that is best of fraternal feeling, by a normal increase of numbers, and by steady advancement of the Craft's many interests. In the larger centres of population throughout the State, a number of beautiful buildings have been constructed for the housing of Masonic activities. Many worthy relief activities have been organised and carried on under the auspices of Masonic Bodies. Just as progress in any line of worthy endeavour is never without difficulty, however, so, too, Freemasonry in Colorado has not escaped its times of trial. Nevertheless it has thus far surmounted every obstacle. Accompanying the Craft's healthy growth there has been a widening and deepening of its power and influence for good. To the pioneer founders, credit for whatever progress has been made must first be accorded. Nothing could exceed the worth of their service. None could have sacrificed more freely or unselfishly than they. In days whose story now forms part of a great tradition, they were first to build. On the foundations firmly laid, they builded better than they knew. Since then, one well-formed stone after another has been slowly and carefully laid on others equally well formed, until now we can perceive a temple slowly rising on its firm and solid base. Truly this is an edifice not built by human hands. Rather, it is an imperishable monument to Faith, to Devotion, and to Love.

FREEMASONRY IN CONNECTICUT

WINTHROP BUCK

PREVIOUS to the year 1789 eighteen Lodges whose names and locations are known existed in Connecticut. Of those, eight received their Charters from the St. John's Grand Lodge situated in Boston, which was descended from the Grand Lodge of England. Six were Chartered by the Massachusetts Grand Lodge, also situated in Boston, which claimed authority from the Grand Lodge of Scotland. The remaining four, situated near the New York State line, obtained their Charters from the Provincial Grand Lodge of New York. The famous Army Lodge, known as American Union Lodge, had ceased operation, in 1783, and the authority of its Charter was not again used until Jonathan Heart reached Ohio with it. Although Chartered by the St. John's Grand Lodge, its membership was principally confined to Connecticut soldiers of the American line. There are traditions of one or two other Lodges, but they are only traditions.

The source from which the Charter members of those Lodges obtained their Degrees is in most cases difficult to ascertain. Masonic Lodges were frequently attached to British regiments that were on service in the struggle with the French for possession of this continent, and it is supposed that some men, like Israel Putnam, obtained their Light from such sources. A few Masons may have been initiated in England. A number of the members of American Union Lodge became Charter members of Lodges founded after the struggles of the War for Independence had come to a close.

In those days it was the custom among the Lodges to hold Conventions. Such a Convention met in New Haven in the house of Bro. Brown on April 29, 1783. Delegates were in attendance from Hiram Lodge of New Haven; St. John's Lodge, of Middletown; St. John's Lodge, of Fairfield; St. John's Lodge, of Hartford; St. John's Lodge, of Norwalk; King Solomon's Lodge, of Woodbury; St. John's Lodge, of Stratford; Compass Lodge, of Wallingford; Union Lodge, of Danbury; Wooster Lodge, of Colchester; St. Paul's Lodge, of Litchfield; and King Hiram's Lodge, of Derby. Twenty-one Delegates from those twelve Lodges were present. As a result of that Convention, regulations were adopted which were intended to make the proceedings of those Lodges more uniform and lead finally to the establishment of the Grand Lodge.

Other meetings were doubtless held in the succeeding years, but nothing further was accomplished until, at a meeting of Delegates held at Hartford on May 14, 1789, it was voted that the Committee of four there appointed prepare a systematic plan for forming a Grand Lodge, and that they report to a subsequent meeting to be held in New Haven on the following July 8. It is not stated what Lodges were represented at that meeting, or how many Delegates attended. We do know, however, that Frederick Lodge of Farmington, Hiram Lodge, of New Haven, and St. Paul's Lodge, of Litchfield, were among those represented.

On the date set, at least twenty-two Delegates met in New Haven. They represented Hiram Lodge, of New Haven; St. John's Lodge, of Middletown; St. John's Lodge, of Fairfield; St. John's Lodge, of Hartford; King Solomon's Lodge, of Woodbury; St. John's Lodge, of Stratford; Compass Lodge, of Wallingford; Union Lodge, of Danbury; Wooster Lodge, of Colchester; St. Paul's Lodge, of Litchfield; Frederick Lodge, of Farmington, and Montgomery Lodge, of Salisbury. Those twelve Lodges adopted a Constitution which, among other things, provided for semi-annual meetings. One such meeting was to be held in New Haven during October, and one was to be held at Hartford in May. Officers were chosen, and Pierpont Edwards, a Past Master of Hiram Lodge, became the first Grand Master. For some unknown reason St. John's Lodge, of Norwalk; Union Lodge, of Stamford; King Hiram Lodge, of Derby; Columbia Lodge, of Norwich, and St. Alban's Lodge, of Guilford, were not present.

With the institution of the Grand Lodge, Masonry seems to have begun to grow immediately. The first new Charter granted is thought to have been a result of the death of General Israel Putnam, which occurred on May 29, 1790. At that time many of his former companions in arms gathered to honour him with a Masonic funeral. After the ceremony they probably met around the refreshment table as usual, and there they may have discussed the advisability of having a Lodge nearer than Hartford or Colchester, fifty miles distant. At any rate, Moriah Lodge, No. 15, was Chartered at the October meeting of that year, with Jurisdiction in Windham County. At the next meeting, held in May 1791, all the original Lodges were represented except St. Alban's Lodge, of Guilford, and Columbia Lodge, of Norwich. In addition there were eight new members of the official family. In the May session of 1796, Grand Secretary John Mix announced that he had assigned numbers to the thirty-seven Lodges that had applied for Charters under the new Grand Lodge. Union Lodge, of Danbury, which was one of those that had taken part in the formation of the Grand Lodge, had not then applied. When it did apply, it was Made No. 40, a number that does not correctly indicate its age. By 1826 the numbers assigned had mounted to seventy, but no report was made at that time as to the number of members. No list of members was preserved by the Grand Secretary, and it is now difficult to trace membership in many of the Lodges of those days.

In no State where the political anti-Masons exhibited strength did the Masons afford a stronger resistance to those enemies than in Connecticut. Although there were seventy Lodges listed in 1826, as has been said the effect of "The anti-Masonic Excitement" was nevertheless soon felt. The records of the Grand Lodge Session held in May 1831 give no account of the number present, nor do they list the representatives. A quorum is merely acknowledged. The Officers, with the exception of the Grand Treasurer, R.: W.: Laban Smith, who had held Office since 1822 and was to continue to do so until his death in 1841, refused re-election, and a new corps was selected. Dr. Thomas Hubbard, of Pomfret, was the courageous Brother who accepted the Office of Grand Master. In 1832 an anti-Masonic convention was held in the State, and in it Henry Dana Ward of New York City was conspicuous. At the Annual Communication of that year, the Connecticut Grand Lodge followed the example of that of Massachusetts by adopting and publishing not only in the Masonic Proceedings but also in the newspapers, a "Declaration" of principles. Thus those Principles, bearing the signature of many of the best citizens of Connecticut, were broadcast over the land. In a measure this declaration tended to allay the anti-Masonic feeling, but it did not heal the wound that had been inflicted. Work was reported in a very few Lodges during 1833, but in 1841 only twenty-five Lodges were represented and only thirty-one made returns. At every Session delinquency was a source of constant vexation that resulted in the surrender and revocation of many Charters. In 1845 the improvement was more marked. It continued until, in 1865, eighty Lodges were listed. The religious phase of the movement lasted longer than the political phase and brought forth such rabid leaders as the Rev. Daniel Dow, of Thompson, as well as such loyal defenders as Joseph Emerson, of Wethersfield. When his church council gave him the choice of renouncing either his church or his Lodge, Deacon Terry, of South Windsor, is said to have remarked that since he knew several kinds of religion, but only one kind of Masonry, he preferred to cling to the latter.

The history of the Grand Lodge of Connecticut from 1850 onward is too much like that of other Grand Lodges to require great attention here. At the Annual Communication held in February 1935, the Grand Secretary reported the membership as being 39,700 and the number of Lodges listed as being 128. Most of the Lodges own their own buildings and are in good financial condition.

Symbolic Masonry in this State has suffered little from clandestine troubles. In 1803 the Grand Lodge issued a warning against the activities of a certain Joash Hall. Three Lodges are known to have been formed by that imposter, but they soon passed out of existence. The McBain-Thompson trouble of recent years affected Connecticut Lodges very little. The old records reveal a very consistent attitude of opposition to a General Grand Lodge, although the matter has frequently been brought up for discussion.

A great deal might be written about the remarkable Army Lodge, known as American Union Lodge, previously mentioned. Chartered by Deputy Grand Master Richard Gridley, of St. John's Grand Lodge, of Boston, on February 15, 1776, by order of Grand Master John Rowe, it moved about with the Colonial troops during the War for Independence, conferred Degrees upon soldiers of every rank, and welcomed distinguished Brethren, among them George Washington. Jonathan Heart, Master of the Lodge during the greater part of its military existence, carried the Charter with him to Ohio. There, under the same name, the Work of the Lodge was continued. This Lodge, together with Erie Lodge, No. 47, and New England Lodge, No. 49, which were Chartered by the Grand Lodge of Connecticut in 1803, was instrumental in forming the Grand Lodge of Ohio in 1808. Connecticut also had a hand in founding the Grand Lodge of Vermont, by Chartering Temple Lodge, of Bennington, in 1793, and Union Lodge, of Middlebury, in 1794. One Lodge having a Connecticut Charter obtained during the gold excitement of 1849 was among those that later formed the Grand Lodge of California.

On June 6, 1861, a Dispensation was granted to twelve Brethren belonging to the Fourth Connecticut Regiment of Volunteers, then about to leave for the seat of hostilities. The document, which was for a Lodge to be called Connecticut Union Lodge, No. 90, was signed by Howard B. Ensign, Grand Master. No returns were ever made, and no record of the Lodge's proceedings has ever appeared on the Minutes of the Connecticut Grand Lodge. The first meeting of that Army Lodge was held at Camp Ingalls, near Fort Richardson, Virginia, on Saturday evening, January 4, 1862. Then the Lodge was organized by the appointment of Officers, after which it proceeded to business. Three other Communications were held during that January, and the names of several candidates were proposed and accepted. One of them, George Ayer, was initiated as an Entered Apprentice at the Lodge's last meeting. That was the only Masonic Labour reported. One other petition for a Dispensation to organise an Army Lodge was refused. It was to be located with the Fifth Connecticut Regiment and to be known as Ensign Lodge, No. 91.

During those years of bloody strife which have become so notable in the history of the country, the Craft became exceedingly prosperous. It continued to be in a state of harmony largely because of the unusual activity in all departments of business which was stimulated by the immense military preparations and the reckless expenditure of public money. Hundreds were annually added to our numbers. This condition continued for several years after the cessation of hostilities, and at the close of the decade ending with 1870 there were a hundred Lodges on the Roll and a total membership of 13,072. This was a gain of 7,218 members in ten years.

Similar conditions were a result of the World War. Lodges were thronged with applicants and there were many requests to shorten the time of probation because our young men were going either to camp or abroad. Though honour rolls were erected in Lodge rooms and records were kept of the members' war service, no Travelling or Army Lodges were Chartered. The experience of Lodges throughout the country during the war between the States had taught Masons that on the whole the results of such Lodges were unsatisfactory.

In 1872, at the time of the great fire in Chicago, Connecticut Masonry extended charity in the form of funds for the destitute. When everything had been done that was deemed wise, there remained a balance in the fund contributed by the various Grand Bodies. This was distributed pro rata among the donors. Connecticut's share, which amounted to about sixty dollars, became a nest egg for the Masonic Charity Foundation. The fund grew, and in 1895 a large property was purchased in Wallingford and converted into a Masonic Home. During the thirty years that have passed since then, the old building has been replaced by a fireproof structure and additions have been made to the plant. These additions include an infirmary known as the Eastern Star Hospital. Connecticut Masonry now finances a charitable project valued at more than $900,000. In 1930 the cost of this undertaking to the Craft was $203,000. During that year the Mason's Connecticut Foundation was caring for 251 people at the Masonic Home and for 163 others elsewhere.

Connecticut followed up her contribution of $500 made in 1826 toward a monument to George Washington at Mount Vernon, by joining wholeheartedly in the support of the George Washington Masonic National Memorial. The State was also one of the prime movers in The Masonic Service Association. It endeavoured to do its part in the educational work of that organisation. In addition the Masons of Connecticut contributed freely toward alleviating the distress of the sufferers in Charlestown in 1886, of those in San Francisco in 1906, and of those who were in the Florida and Mississippi disasters during recent years.

Many men of national importance have encouraged and promoted Masonry in Connecticut. Mention of Israel Putnam has already been made. Although his Lodge membership is not certainly known, he was a Masonic resident of this State. Of like prominence was General David Wooster, Charter Master of Hiram Lodge, No. 1, of New Haven. This Brother was probably made a Mason in England about the year 1745. Upon his return to America, he obtained a Charter from R.:W.: Thomas Oxnard, Provincial Grand Master of St. John's Grand Lodge of Boston, under date of November 12, 1750. Thus he became the founder of duly constituted Masonry in Connecticut. All Masons regret that Benedict Arnold, of the same Lodge, did not always remain in as good standing as Bro. David Wooster. Oliver Wolcott held the office of Grand Master and Governor of the State at the same time. Of the first six Grand Masters, five have Revolutionary War records, and the sixth was the first chief justice of the Supreme Court of Connecticut. In more recent times such men as Gideon Welles, Secretary of the Navy under President Lincoln, Governor Thomas H. Seymour, Governor Morgan G. Bulkley, Governor John H. Trumbull, Senator Orville H. Platt, and Senator George M. McLean have been proud of their Masonic membership. It therefore behooves us to see to it that Connecticut Masons of the future will be proud that our names were upon the Records of the Lodge.

The Grand Chapter of Connecticut was organised in 1798. There is ample evidence to prove that even before that time semi-annual Convocations of the six Chapters then in existence were held to legislate for the good of the Craft. The first recorded Convocation was held in Hartford on July 5, 1796. On October 20, 1798, the six Chapters met in New Haven and organised the Grand Chapter of Connecticut. All but one of those Chapters had a Charter from Washington Chapter of New York City. It is likely that the other Charter also came from the same source, although this is disputed.

At a Convention held in Hartford on January 24, 1798, the Grand Royal Arch Chapter of the Northern States of America was organised. It embraced the States of New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and Vermont, and later became the General Grand Chapter. Apparently the Connecticut Representatives at first stood aloof, but by tactful diplomacy they were led to join in the deliberations and to unite with the others. In 1827 an Act of the State Legislature incorporated the Grand Chapter as "The Grand Chapter of the State of Connecticut."

Although some Chapters fell into a state of apathy and forfeited their Charters during the anti-Masonic period, most of the Charters were later restored and the Grand Chapter continued to hold Convocations. Since that time Capitular Masonry has normally progressed onward and upward. On May 1, 1934, Connecticut had forty-six Chapters and 14,400 members.

In its organised form, Cryptic Masonry began in Connecticut in 1818. In that year Jeremy L. Cross, claiming authority from the Grand Chapter of Maryland, established Councils in Hartford, Ashford, Norwich, New London, Colchester, Stamford, Kent, New Haven, Middletown, and Canterbury. The first of those, afterward called Wolcott Council in honor of its Thrice Illustrious Master, was Chartered on February 7, 1818. The others were Chartered in the order in which they are named above. Those, together with the Council established at Newtown in February 1819, organised the Grand Council at a meeting of their Representatives held in Hartford on May 18 and 20, 1819. At the beginning of the anti-Masonic period the number of Councils had reached sixteen, but at the close of the Grand Council held in May 1840 only six were in good standing. That, however, seems to have been the low point. The next year a Charter was restored, and from then on new Councils were added. Membership in General Grand Council of the United States was debated a number of times, but Connecticut has never joined that organisation. Conferences were held for the purpose of making the Ritual uniform, and the present Ritual is the result of the Annual Meeting of 1915. The Super-Excellent Degree was adopted in 1864. The Grand Council of New York was the result of three Councils Chartered by Connecticut in that State. The same is true of the Michigan Grand Council. At present twenty-four Councils make up the Grand Council of Royal and Select Masters of Connecticut.

In 1858 a Lodge of Perfection Chapter of Rose Croix and a Consistory were Chartered in Bridgeport by the then so-called "New York Supreme Council." These were followed by a Council of Princes of Jerusalem established in 1859. In 1864 a Lodge, Council, Chapter, and Consistory were Chartered in Norwich by the "Boston Supreme Council." After the union of the two Supreme Councils in 1867, Connecticut was allowed to retain both Consistories, although the policy of that period was to allow but one Consistory to each State regardless of the State's area of population. Later, Bodies other than Consistories were formed in Hartford, New Haven, and Waterbury.

The total Scottish Rite membership in Connecticut is now about as follows: Lodges of Perfection, 4153; Councils of Princes of Jerusalem, 4116; Chapters of Rose Croix, 4111; Consistories, 3979. In the Connecticut Council of Deliberation there are two Active Members of the Supreme Council of Thirty-third Degree Masons, and forty-two Honorary Members.

The history of Washington Commandery, No. 1, is the story of the beginning of the Templar Order in Connecticut. This Commandery claims to be the oldest Body of Knights Templar existing in the United States. It was the first organised at Colchester in July 1796 by virtue of that inherent right delegated to Knights Templar by ancient usage and conferred Degrees. Two meetings were afterward held by the same authority. On June 9, 1801, the members effected a permanent organisation and applied to the Knights Templar in London for a Warrant. That this was the first Encampment Chartered in this country is indisputably proved by the Charter. It was issued from the Grand Encampment of the United States over the signature of Thomas Smith Webb, then Deputy General Grand Master. The document recognises and establishes September 5, 1803, as the date of the London Charter. This is the only Encampment in the United States that ever received a Charter from the Grand Encampment of England. Meeting at various times in Colchester, New London, and Hartford, this Encampment finally became permanently located at the latter place in 1844.

The Grand Commandery of Connecticut was organised on September 13, 1827, having as its members Washington Commandery, No. 1, New Haven Commandery, No. 2, and Clinton Commandery, No. 3, the last situated in Norwalk. At that time there were only about a hundred members. Now there are 12 commanderies and over 6000 members.

FREEMASONRY IN DELAWARE

THOMAS J. DAY

THE first record of a Masonic Lodge in Delaware is that of Lodge No. 5, of and under the Jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, of which R.:W.:Bro. William Ball was Provincial Grand Master. On June 24, 1765, the Grand Officers granted a Warrant for a Lodge to be held at Cantwell's Bridge, a small hamlet in New Castle County, where the post-road crossed the Appoquinimink Creek, about twenty-one miles southwest of what is now the city of Wilmington, or, as was said in those early times, "within five miles thereof." This Warrant was the first to be granted by the Provincial Grand Lodge (Ancients) of Pennsylvania, for a Lodge to be held beyond the bounds of that Province. The Warrant Officers were: Bro. William Bradford, Worshipful Master; Bro. Peter Wyatt, Senior Warden, and Bro. Duncan Beard, Junior Warden.

A copy of the Minutes of that Lodge, covering the period from June 23, 1770, to December 27, 1787, is now in the archives of the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania. This Minute Book is of especial value to the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, for it also gives some information about the proceedings of that Grand Lodge, whose Minutes prior to July 29, 1779, are not known to exist. They were either lost or destroyed during the British occupation of Philadelphia in 1777 and 1778.

Lodge No. 5 was strictly a country Lodge, located in a sparsely settled agricultural region. Thus, in the entry made on the Minutes on June 23, 1770, it states that the "Lodge met this day on account of harvest, instead of the day in course!" The Minutes also show that Lodge No. 5 celebrated St. John the Baptist's Day in 1773, at Georgetown, Md., together with Lodge No. 6. Another entry states that on April 27, 1775, it was resolved to remove the Lodge to Bro. Thomas Sculley's, at Middletown.

During 1776 and 1777 quite a number of emergency Petitions were received from soldiers in the Continental Army. An item of the Minutes of September 27, 1777, says: "The confusion we were thrown into by the British Army landing at Elk prevented us from meeting on last month." Another item notes that Lodge No. 5 was one of the twelve Lodges represented on the memorable September 25, 1786, when it was decided to close forever the Grand Lodge then acting under the Warrant from the Grand Lodge of England, and to re-open it as an independent Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania. The Lodge No. 5 continued to be under the Jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania until January 30, 1816, when its Warrant was finally surrendered, five days before it had received a Warrant from the Grand Lodge of Delaware.

On December 27, 1769, another Warrant was granted by the Provincial Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, this time for a Lodge to be held at Christiana Ferry, now Wilmington, Delaware. The Warrant was registered as No. 14. It named Bro. Hugh McConnell, Worshipful Master, Bro. Jonathan Jordon, Senior Warden, and Bro. Joseph McGarraugh, Junior Warden. Two old Minute Books of this Lodge, covering the period from November 18, 1779, to December 16, 1784, are also in the archives of the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania.

During the early years of the American War of Independence, the Brethren of this Lodge suffered more or less. Their meetings were irregular, and the Records of the Lodge were either lost or destroyed. Meetings had to be held at various places. The house of Bezlin Bentley seems to have been used more than any other. At the meeting held on September 25, 1786, when the Provincial Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania ceased to exist and the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania was organized, Lodge No. 14 was represented by Bro. Francis Robinson, of Wilmington, a Past Master.

Lodge No. 14 applied for a new Warrant under the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania on November 29, 1788. This request was read before the Grand Lodge on the following December 15, whereupon it was ordered that the request be complied with. On January 20, 1789, the new Warrant was acknowledged by Daniel J. Adam, Secretary. Later, however, on September 15, 1806, the Warrant of this Lodge was vacated by the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania because its proceedings during the establishment of the Grand Lodge of Delaware were considered to have been un-Masonic.

On August 26, 1775, still another Warrant was granted by the Provincial Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania for a Lodge to be held in the town of Dover. The Officers appointed for this new Lodge were Mark McCall, Master; George McCall, Senior Warden, and Henry Bell, Junior Warden. The first meeting of the Lodge took place on October 11, 1775. It was held at a tavern known as the "Sign of General Washington." Eleven Brethren were present. Alexander Rutherford, a Past Master of Lodge No. 2, of Pennsylvania, was on hand to install the Officers. On that occasion three Petitions were received from men who had previously been initiated into a clandestine Lodge. Since the Petitioners were well known, they were severally elected, entered, passed, and raised, and regularly made Master Masons. The second Tuesday of each month was then selected as the time for holding stated meetings. This Lodge seems to have been very active in initiating new members, many of whom were soldiers in the Delaware regiment of the Continental troops. In October 1786 the Roster of the Lodge contained the names of 106 persons. The old Provincial Warrant was surrendered and renewed on May 31, 1787.

Although the Records of the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania do not state the day on which a Warrant was granted to Delaware Regimental Lodge, No. 30, the following memorandum is available:

The Warrant and Jewels on Hiram's Delaware Regimental Lodge were taken at the Battle of Camden, the 16th of August, 1780, by the British Troops, and supposed by some of Colonel Tarlton's Legion, they being in a waggon brought into Camden the day after the Action.

Said Lodge & in Camden Col. David Hall, Master
When Ye Waggon came in

The endorsement on the back of the memorandum reads as follows:

“ Letter respecting Jewels of Delaware Traveling Lodge, taken by the British 1780.”

Bro. George Purvis, Secretary of the Lodge at that time, was a native of Delaware. He was commissioned as a second lieutenant in Captain Patten's company of Colonel Hall's Delaware regiment of the “ Continental Establishment,” on April 5, 1777. Later he was promoted successively, first to a first lieutenant, then to a regimental adjutancy and captaincy. He served till the close of the war and became one of the original members of the State Society of the Cincinnati. Judging from the Certificate granted him by Lodge No. 18, on June 11, 1782, Bro. Purvis was made a Mason at a meeting of St. John's Regimental Lodge, held in the American Army's camp near Morristown. This Certificate is now preserved in the archives of the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania.

On June 23, 1800, a Warrant was issued by the Grand Lodge of Maryland to a number of Brethren at Laureltown, Delaware, for a Lodge to be known as Lodge No. 31. This Lodge took part in the organisation of the Grand Lodge of Delaware, and is now known as Hope Lodge No. 4.

At the Grand Quarterly Communication of the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, held on December 18, 1780, a Petition was received from some Brethren at New Castle, Delaware, members of Lodge No. 5, praying for a Warrant to hold a Lodge alternately at New Castle and at Christiana Bridge, both places being in New Castle County. This Petition was accompanied by a very warm recommendation in the Brethren's favor written by the Master of Lodge No. 5. This Petition was unanimously granted and a warrant was issued. The Officers named in the warrant were Bro. Joseph Israel, Worshipful Master, Joseph Killead, Senior Warden, and John Clark, Junior Warden.

Lodge No. 33, as the Lodge was called, was one of the twelve Lodges represented upon that memorable September 25, 1786, when the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania declared itself independent of Great Britain and all other authority whatsoever. The complete Roster of the Lodge contains fifty names. Twenty-eight members were admitted, nineteen were initiated, and three names appear on the list without any designation. On September 15, 1806, the Warrant for this Lodge also was vacated for un-Masonic conduct.

At the Quarterly Communication of the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania held on June 23, 1785, a Petition was received from several members of Lodge No. 18, praying for a Warrant to hold a Lodge at a place known as Duck Creek Cross Roads, about half-way between Wilmington and Milford. Later the name of the place was changed to Smyrna by an Act of the State Assembly. The Petition was recommended by the Officers of Lodge No. 5 and Lodge No. 18. It was unanimously granted, and Bro. Daniel Cummings was named Worshipful Master, Bro. Samuel Freeman, Senior Warden, and Bro. James Berry, Junior Warden. At that time Bro. Rutherford paid £15 in full settlement for the Lodge's Warrant. The Officers were installed on July 21, 1785, by Bro. Mark McCall, Bro. Duncan Beard, and Bro. William Bradford, according to the instructions received from the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania. This Lodge ceased to exist about the year 1791.

At a Communication of the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania held on May 28, 1794, a Petition from a number of Brethren was read. They prayed for a Warrant to hold a Lodge in the town of Lewes, in the County of Sussex, State of Delaware. The Petition being recommended, agreeably to the regulations of the Grand Lodge, it was unanimously granted, and the following Brethren were named as Officers: Bro. David Hall, Worshipful Master; Bro. John Clark, Senior Warden, and Bro. James Willey, Junior Warden. Bro. Jesse Green, Past Master of Lodge No. 10, at Georgetown, was then authorised to open a Lodge at Lewes and to install the Officers. This ceremony took place on June 24, 1794. The Lodge does not seem to have been very successful, and on April 7, 1806, its Warrant was declared vacated for delinquency.

On Friday, June 6, 1806, Representatives of a majority of the Lodges in Delaware met in the town hall, in the Borough of Wilmington. On that occasion four Lodges were represented: Lodge No. 31, of Laurelton, in Sussex County, under the Grand Jurisdiction of Maryland, was represented by Bro. Jesse Green, Past Master, while Lodge No. 14 of Wilmington, was represented by Thomas Stockton, Worshipful Master; Bro. John Sellars, Past Master; Bro. John Patterson, Past Master, and Bro. James Tilton, Junior Warden. Delegates from Lodge No. 33 of New Castle were Bro. John Crow, Worshipful Master; Bro. Evan Thomas, Past Master, and Bro. Maxwell Bines, also a Past Master. Lodge No. 96, of Newark, was represented by Bro. James Snow, Worshipful Master. Of the Lodges represented at this meeting, all except Lodge No. 31 were then under the Grand Jurisdiction of Pennsylvania.

The Communication was opened in due form, with Bro. Jesse Green acting as Worshipful Master and Bro. Thomas Stockton as Secretary. It was then resolved unanimously that the several Lodges of Ancient York Masons in the State of Delaware, there represented by Deputies properly authorised, considering it would prove generally beneficial to Masonry, ought to form a Grand Lodge within the State. This they did. Thus the Grand Lodge of Delaware came into being.

A Committee of Five having been appointed to prepare a set of Regulations for the government of the Grand Lodge, the meeting adjourned to meet at the same place at nine o'clock next morning. At that time all the Delegates who had been present at the first day's meeting, excepting only Bro. Bines, were in attendance. In addition the following Brethren attended: Bro. Isaac Stevenson, Past Master; Bro. Edward Roche, Past Master; Bro. John Hendrick, Senior Warden of Lodge No. 14, and Bro. William Pluright, Secretary of Lodge No. 14. The following Brethren served as Officers at that time: Bro. Jesse Green, Worshipful Grand Master; Bro. Evan Thomas, Senior Grand Warden; Bro. James Snow, Junior Grand Warden; Bro. Edward Roche, Grand Secretary; Bro. Thomas Stockton, Senior Grand Deacon; Bro. John Crow, Junior Grand Deacon, and David Robinet, Grand Tyler.

Thereupon the Grand Lodge of Delaware was opened in due form and with due solemnity, according to the ancient usages of Masonry. The Committee appointed to form a set of Regulations submitted its report, which, after being somewhat amended, was unanimously approved.

Warrants for the Lodges which organised the Grand Lodge were authorised as follows. The original number of each Lodge mentioned below was that inscribed on the Register of the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania. Lodge No. 14, at Wilmington, became Washington Lodge No. 1; Lodge No. 33 became St. John's Lodge No. 2, of New Castle; Lodge No. 96 became Hiram Lodge No. 3, of Newark; and Lodge No. 31, formerly under the Jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of Maryland, became Hope Lodge No. 4, of Laurelton, Sussex County, Delaware.

The first Grand Officers were then elected: Bro. Gunning Bedford, Jr., was elected to be Grand Master; Bro. Jesse Green, Deputy Grand Master; Bro. Joseph Israel, Senior Grand Warden; Bro. John McBeath, Junior Grand Warden; Bro. Thomas Stockton, Grand Treasurer; Bro. Edward Roche, Grand Secretary; Bro. John Sellers, Grand Marshal, and Bro. David Robinet, Grand Tyler.

The first Dispensation granted by the new Grand Lodge was issued on November 14, 1806, to William Huston, Ralph McConnell, and Thomas Harlin, for the purpose of holding a Lodge to be known as Hiram Lodge No. 6. This was at the Buck Tavern. A Charter was issued to this Lodge on June 24, 1807. At this Communication of the Grand Lodge, the Deputy Grand Master reported that he had conferred with the Grand Lodge of Maryland and found that the establishment of a Grand Lodge in the State of Delaware was well approved by them, and that they were eager to maintain friendly intercourse and correspondence with the new Grand Lodge.

The Returns from the five Lodges which were made on June 24, 1808, showed a total membership of 118. The amount due the Grand Lodge at that time was $135.52.

Gunning Bedford, Jr., the first Grand Master of Delaware, was a man of great distinction. Born in Philadelphia in 1747, he was educated at Nassau Hall, New Jersey, from which institution he graduated in 1771. He then studied law in Philadelphia, and later practised his profession in Delaware. He received his commission as colonel of the Continental Army from George Washington, with whom he was closely associated during the Revolutionary struggle of 1776. He was attorney-general of the State, and a member of the General Assembly of Delaware from 1783 to 1787, as well as a member of the Convention which framed the Constitution of the United States. He was a signer of that epoch-making document. It was largely through Bro. Bedford's efforts that Delaware, Rhode Island, and the other smaller States were put upon an equality with the larger States as far as concerned numerical representation in the United States Senate. Bro. Bedford was distinguished for his eloquence. In 1789 President Washington appointed him a judge of the United States Court for the District of Delaware, an office which he held until his death.

Bro. Bedford was a member of Lodge No. 14, under the Grand Jurisdiction of Pennsylvania. He received the Entered Apprentice Degree on March 21, 1782, the Fellow Craft Degree on August 10, 1782, and the Master Degree on September 11, 1782. His Lodge afterwards became Washington Lodge, No. 1, of Delaware. Bro. Gunning Bedford was elected most Worshipful Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Delaware on June 7, 1806, at the time of that Body's organisation and was re-elected in 1807 and 1808. Upon his death a Special Communication of the Grand Lodge was held, on March 31, 1812, for the purpose of attending his funeral. The Lodge assembled at the town hall in the Borough of Wilmington at four o'clock in the afternoon of that day, and proceeded from thence, by Lodges and according to Juniority, in procession to Market and Second Streets. Thence the procession preceded the hearse until the funeral cortege reached the Upper Presbyterian Church, where services were held. After that the Masonic Bodies went to the grave in the cemetery adjoining the church, and there Masonic funeral services were performed by the Deputy Grand Master and Grand Chaplain. The Masonic Honours were given by the Brethren.

Due to the growth and expansion of the city of Wilmington, this cemetery was later vacated; at the time the remains buried there were removed to other places. Since there were no relatives of Past Grand Master Bedford living at that time, the Grand Lodge of Delaware took charge of the remains of its first Grand Master, and on March 31, 1921, a hundred nine years after interment, the Grand Lodge held an Emergent Communication in the town hall, the very building in which that Body had been organised in 1806. From thence the Grand Lodge proceeded to the Masonic Home grounds, where the remains were re-interred. On that august occasion the solemn Masonic burial service was again followed. The monument that marked the first grave was then removed and re-finished. Again it marks the resting-place of the earthly remains of Bro. Gunning Bedford.

At an Adjourned Communication held on September 10, 1813, the following Resolution was adopted: "Whereas, the Grand Lodge, being duly impressed with a high sense of merits of the late worthy Brethren Captain James Lawrence and Augustus C. Ludlow, of the late American Frigate Chesapeake, Therefore be it Resolved, That an oration be delivered, commemorative of the character of those Brethren and in honor of their memories, and that there be a procession on the occasion, formed by the Grand Lodge and the several subordinate Lodges under its Jurisdiction." This event took place on September 25, 1813. The Grand Lodge led the procession, which was composed of members of the subordinate and visiting Lodges, together with Commodore Angus and other officers and seamen of the navy, a group of military men having arms reversed, men from the cavalry and the artillery, and citizens. They proceeded to the Hanover Presbyterian Church, where the oration was delivered by Bro. George Read, Most Worshipful Grand Master pro tempore. After leaving the church, the procession then returned to the town hall, where the participants partook of refreshments provided for the occasion.

On October 6, 1824, a Special Communication was held for the purpose of uniting with the citizens of New Castle County in escorting General the Marquis de Lafayette to Wilmington. At that time the distinguished Frenchman was making a tour of America. The Grand Lodge, escorted by the Brethren, proceeded to a point known as Prospect Hill, about two miles from Wilmington. There they joined the procession that had met the General at the State line. Returning in the procession to a point near the town hall, the Brethren opened ranks to the right and left, facing inward, and as Bro. Lafayette passed between them they gave him the Grand Honours. Entering the town hall, the distinguished guest was then greeted in an eloquent address made by the Most Worshipful Grand Master, Bro. J. Gordon Brinckle. In reply, Bro. Lafayette said in part: "Freemasonry is distinguished for the enlightened liberality of its principles, its inculcated toleration of religious opinions. And although, as a Society, Masons do not interfere with politics, they consider every member as a Brother and as standing on the same natural level." The members of the Grand Lodge were then severally introduced to Bro. Lafayette.

Later, on June 27, 1825, at the Communication held in Wilmington, General Lafayette was unanimously elected a member of the Grand Lodge of Delaware. At a Special Communication held on July 25, of that year, he visited the Grand Lodge and was there presented with a box made from an oak tree that had grown on the battle-ground of Brandywine. The box, containing Bro. Lafayette's Certificate of Membership, was presented by M.: W.: Bro. Arnold Naudain, Grand Master. In accepting the gift Bro. Lafayette said in part: "Of all the high gratifications I have experienced in my progress through my adopted country, my receptions by the twenty-four Grand Lodges of the United States have afforded me the greatest gratification. Accept, Most Worshipful Grand Lodge, my thanks for the honor you have conferred by enrolling me among your members." At this Communication General Lafayette, his son, George Washington Lafayette, and his secretary, M. Levasseur, signed the Charter of Lafayette Lodge No. 14.

On June 25, 1816, a Committee was appointed to visit the several Lodges of the State for the purpose of ascertaining their mode of Working, and of directing them in the Work. The Committee was also instructed to address a circular letter to the Lodges, enjoining promptness in the punishment of all un-Masonic misconduct, carefulness in the admission of new members, and the passage of such general regulations relative to the premises as they should think proper. Bro. James Rogers, Bro. James Dirickson, and Bro. William Hall formed this Committee.

“ It appears to this R.: W.: Grand Lodge that the tickets for the said election, which took place in the said Hiram Lodge, No. 6, on June 15, 1816, were formed and written out in the Lodge. The Grand Lodge considers this to be un-Masonic, and that every election so conducted ought to be considered void, and the above election is void.”

On January 18, 1819, it was “ Resolved, That a petition to the Legislature be drawn by J. Gordon Brinckle, and signed by Bro. James Millechop, Senior Grand Warden and Worshipful Grand Master pro tempore, on behalf of the Grand Lodge, praying the Legislature to strike out certain names from the list of Managers of a Lottery, authorised by the Legislature, for raising the sum of Fifteen Thousand Dollars for the purpose of erecting a Grand Masonic Hall in the Borough of Wilmington, and to substitute in their room the names of others.”

On January 25, 1825, a Special Communication was called for the purpose of attending the funeral of M.: W.: Grand Master Joshua Gordon Brinckle. The Grand Lodge, together with the visiting Brethren present, proceeded to the house of the deceased Brother, and from thence to the grave in Trinity churchyard, where the body was interred in Masonic form.

On June 27, 1840, a Stated Communication was held at Wilmington, with M.: W.: Alexander Porter acting as Grand Master pro tempore. The three Lodges represented were Lodge No. 9, Lodge No. 1, and Lodge No. 14. The total expenses were $47.50, and the receipts $72.00. At that time James P. Lofland was elected Grand Master.

A Special Grand Communication was held on October 26, 1850, with M.: W.: Bro. William T. Read acting as Grand Master. The object of the Communication was “ the interment of the remains of Bro. Commodore Jacob Jones.” The Minutes of the meeting read as follows:

At the request of a Committee of Arrangements, the M.: W.: Grand Master appointed Bro. George W. Claytor, Grand Scribe, to be Grand Marshal pro tem.

At High Noon, the Grand Marshal, accompanied by William Hemphill Jones, proceeded to the Railroad Depot to receive and escort the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania to the Masonic Hall.

At half past High Noon, the Grand Lodge of Delaware received the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania in due form, after which they were escorted by the Grand Marshal Pro Tem to the Delaware House, where they partook of a dinner provided for them. The Grand Lodge consisted of forty Members present.

At two hours past High Noon, the Brethren were formed in due Masonic order and proceeded under charge of the Grand Marshal to their place in the Procession, and thence to the cemetery, and there performed the usual Ceremony prescribed for the burial of a deceased Brother, after which they returned to the Hall, and the Grand Lodge was closed in Ample form.

From the day of the organisation of the Grand Lodge in 1806, up to the year 1828, eighteen Lodges were Chartered. The force and the effect of the blow given to Masonry throughout the Country by the anti-Masonic frenzy, which lasted for several years, affected the Grand Lodge of Delaware to the extent that the Charters of seven of the Lodges were surrendered, while the remaining Lodges merely existed and that was all. Since 1840, when Freemasonry took on new life, the Craft has continued to grow. Altogether thirty-three Charters have been granted, and twenty-two of those are in healthy condition, with a total membership of over 6000.

At the Annual Communication held in Wilmington, on June 27, 1866, a Resolution was adopted that provided for a Communication of the Grand Lodge to be held. At that time the Grand Lecturer of Maryland was authorised to appear before the Grand Lodge and exemplify the Work, as transmitted in his own Jurisdiction. At the Annual Communication held in October 1886, Bro. Thomas Davidson, Grand Master, called the attention to the lack of uniformity in the Work, and suggested that a Committee, of three members, should be established. The Grand Lodge approved the recommendation and increased the Committee to five, designating the M.:W.:Grand Master as Chairman. The other Committee members were then appointed, but for some reason very little was accomplished. In 1889 the regulation was changed and by adding to it the words, "who shall establish a Work for this Jurisdiction." In his address delivered in 1890, M.:W.:Grand Master James S. Dobb said in part: "We now have completed the opening and closing in all Degrees, and the Work of the first two Degrees, and have communicated the same to the Lodges in this city, and they are substantially proficient in the revised Work. The Work was completed in 1891, and to-day it is the same in all of the Lodges in the Jurisdiction. It is kept uniform through the efforts of a Grand Instructor. The Worshipful Master, Wardens, and Senior Deacon are required to pass an examination in the Work assigned to them before they can be installed into their respective Offices."

A notable event in the history of Delaware Masonry occurred at Wilmington on June 7, 1906, when the Most Worshipful Grand Lodge celebrated its one hundredth anniversary. With M.:W.:Levin Irving Handy acting as Grand Master, the Grand Lodge was opened in Special Communication at high noon. Distinguished guests from several other Grand Jurisdictions were first introduced and cordially welcomed, then, at two o'clock that afternoon, the Brethren assembled in the auditorium of the Masonic Temple where they were entertained with interesting and instructive addresses by Bro., the Honorable Jonathan P. Dolliver, United States Senator from Iowa, R.:W.:John L. Kinsey, District

Deputy Grand Master of Pennsylvania, and M.:W.:Bro. Levin Irving Handy, Grand Master of Delaware. At seven-thirty that evening the members of the Grand Lodge and the visiting Brethren assembled at the Masonic Temple. Then, under the direction of the Grand Marshal, they marched in a body to Turn Hall, where a sumptuous banquet was served. The M.:W.:Grand Master of the Delaware Grand Lodge acted as toastmaster, and many eloquent toasts were given.

At the time of its one hundredth anniversary the Grand Lodge of Delaware had under its Jurisdiction twenty-two Chartered Lodges having a total membership of 2772.

The Grand Lodge of Delaware was represented at the preliminary meeting held at Alexandria, Virginia, on February 22, 1910, for the purpose of organising The George Washington Masonic National Memorial Association. The Grand Lodge of Delaware has also been represented at every subsequent annual meeting of the Association. It has always been among the leaders in raising funds for this magnificent testimonial to "George Washington, the Mason," and to the Masonic Fraternity throughout the United States. At present it is second in the list for contributions per capita, having raised 222.8 per cent on the quota of one dollar per member.

The M.:W.:Grand Master of Masons of Delaware, Bro. Harold W. T. Purnell, granted a Dispensation to Lafayette Lodge, No. 14, to hold a Special Communication of the Lodge in May 1934 in this Memorial Temple, the request for this privilege having been granted by M.:W.:Bro. William Moseley Brown, Grand Master of Masons of Virginia; M.:W.:Bro. Harry Galbraith, P. G. M., and R.:W.:Bro. Harry W. Lowe and Harry F. Newlin, P. G. S. Wardens were appointed by the Lodge a Committee to make the necessary arrangements. May 15, 1934, was selected for this Special Communication. It was decided to confer the Master Degree upon a Candidate of the Lodge by a Degree Team composed of Past Masters. More than 250 of the Brethren from Wilmington and other parts of Delaware made the special trip, and an equal number from Washington, District of Columbia, and Alexandria, Virginia, were present. Both Grand Masters were in attendance. This was the first time the Master Mason Degree had been conferred in the Memorial Temple.

The question of providing a Masonic Home in Delaware, where indigent Brethren and their wives or widows might be well and comfortably cared for, was agitated for several years. At the Annual Communication held on October 5, 1910, M.:W.:Grand Master Edward B. Mode recommended that a Committee, to be known as the Masonic Home Committee, should be appointed, "with power to procure a Masonic Home for this Grand Lodge, at any time in their judgment they feel justified in so doing, provided they have sufficient funds pledged to pay for same in full, without placing any debit for purchasing such Home upon this Grand Lodge." This recommendation was approved by the Grand Lodge, and a Committee of Nine was then appointed to act, but little was accomplished during the year. Then, on October 5, 1911, the Grand Lodge appropriated all the Grand Reserve Fund and three-fourths of the Grand Charity Fund, a total sum of $3236, for the purpose of procuring a Home. Eight days later, at the Stated Communication of Du Pont Lodge, No. 29, a voluntary subscription was started. The other Lodges in the Jurisdiction immediately took similar action, with the result that at the next Annual Communication of the Grand Lodge, a Home situated about two miles from the city of Wilmington was dedicated. At that time it was announced that the Home would be ready for guests on November 1, 1912. Of the $16,932 which had been received by the Home Committee, $12,833 had been expended for the property and in making the necessary alterations. The Report made on October 1, 1913, states that there were at that time eight residents in the institution, four men and four women, and that the total valuation of the resources of the Home was $28,291. There were no liabilities. The total membership of the Grand Lodge at that Communication was 3358.

In 1921, upon the recommendation of M.:W.: Grand Master William J. Highfield, it was resolved to raise a fund of $50,000 to build additional quarters at the Masonic Home. A period of two years was allotted in which to raise this amount, and contracts amounting to $79,662 were negotiated to carry out the proposed additions and alterations. The new building was dedicated with appropriate ceremonies on May 30, 1923. The attendance at the dedication was estimated to be more than 5000 persons. More than $22 per member has been contributed by the Fraternity in Delaware to provide a Home for those members and their dependents who are unable to care for themselves.

The annual dues for the maintenance of the Home from its opening until the Annual Communication of the Grand Lodge, held in October 1933, were two dollars per member. At this Communication, owing to the increasing receipts from the Permanent Endowment Fund, an amendment to the by-laws was recommended by the Board of Managers of the Home reducing the annual dues for maintenance to one dollar per member. This amendment was approved by Grand Lodge and a refund of one dollar per member was made to the several Lodges for the year 1933.

The first guests were admitted in 1913. Since then over 100 guests have been cared for. Of those two have left to reside with relatives, and more than 60 have passed away. The average length of time that each guest has spent at the Home is four and a half years. One of the guests lived there more than fourteen years. The total valuation of the Home, including the Trust Fund, is $284,093.

With one exception only, all Delaware Lodges were represented in the military or naval service of the United States during the Great War. Of a total membership of 4250 in 1918, 352 were in the different branches of military service. Three of those were killed in France, and five died of illness.

Upon the recommendation of M.:W.: Grand Master William J. Highfield, made on October 5, 1921, a Resolution was adopted organising what is known as the Gunning Bedford, Jr., Memorial Masonic Scholarship. Its object is to assist Masons or their descendants who are financially unable to get a college education. Since the establishment of this scholarship, twenty-three young men and six young women have been assisted. The Grand Lodge levies an annual assessment of fifteen cents on each member in the Jurisdiction for the maintenance of this fund.

The first record of a Chapter of Royal Arch Masons in Delaware is found in the Minutes of Washington Royal Arch Chapter of Super-Excellent Royal Arch Masons. These Minutes tell of a meeting held on January 24, 1809, in the borough of Wilmington, under the authority of a Warrant from the Grand Lodge of Delaware for holding a Lodge in that borough under the name and title of Washington Lodge, No. 1. The Lodge was convened by special agreement. Six Companions present "having conferred, examined and approved each other and found to agree, proceeded to open, and did open, the Royal Arch Chapter with due form and solemnity." David Robinette was the first candidate. Chapters were later formed in the several Lodges, and on June 24, 1817, a Convention of Delegates assembled in the town hall at Wilmington for the purpose of organising a Grand Royal Arch Chapter. Six Chapters were represented. A Committee was then appointed. It reported "that it appears to the Committee necessary and expedient to form a Grand Royal Arch Chapter in this State," and recommended that a Committee be appointed whose duty it should be to report a Constitution at a future time. The Report was adopted and the Committee was at once appointed. The Convention then adjourned to meet at Dover on January 19, 1818. At that meeting the Committee reported a Constitution, which was adopted. Thereupon the Convention adjourned sine die, and the Grand Chapter of the State of Delaware was opened in due form with Companion J. Gordon Brinckle presiding. The Grand Chapter then elected its Officers for the ensuing year. Alexander Hamilton was elected Most Excellent Grand High Priest, and J. Gordon Brinckle Excellent Grand Secretary.

From then till 1833 the Grand Chapter held regular Stated Communications. There was then an intermission from 1833 until 1848. Nor are there any Records of any Convocations having been held between 1859 and 1868. In 1868, however, a Convention was held at Dover. The Grand Chapter was recognised on January 20, 1869, the General Grand High Priest of the General Grand Chapter installed the Officers, and on January 30, 1869, the Grand Chapter was enrolled under the Jurisdiction of the General Grand Chapter.

The centennial anniversary of the introduction of Capitular Masonry into Delaware was celebrated on January 16, 1918, at which time an interesting programme was given. The principal address was delivered by the Hon. Thomas R. Marshall, Vice-President of the United States. The Report of the Grand Secretary at that time showed four Chapters and a total membership of 1371. The Report for 1934 showed five Chapters and a membership of 1685.

The first Council of Royal and Select Masters, known as Gunning Bedford Council, No. 1, was organised at Wilmington in 1918. In 1933 a Council was also organised at Dover and at Georgetown.

On February 20, 1926, a Convention was held in Wilmington for the purpose of organising a Grand Council for Delaware. At that meeting Most Illustrious Companion Warren S. Seipp, personal representative of General Grand Master Bert S. Lee, presided. Representatives of the three Councils were present. A Committee on Constitution was appointed. It later reported that a Constitution had been adopted. At the first election held under this Constitution, Companion Harvey W. Bentley was elected Most Illustrious Grand Master, and Marshall M. Carpenter, Right Illustrious Grand Recorder. At the time of the organisation of the Grand Council the three Councils reported a membership of 225 Companions.

Early in 1868 several Sir Knights made application to Eminent Sir H. L. Palmer, Grand Master of the Grand Encampment of the United States, for a Dispensation to form a Commandery in Wilmington. The Dispensation was granted on March 10, 1868, and on September 18, 1868, a Charter was issued. The present membership is 700.

The first Body of the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite to be Chartered in Delaware by the Supreme Council of the Northern Jurisdiction of the United States was Wilmington Lodge of Perfection, which was Chartered on May 27, 1910. Then on February 24, 1911, Wilmington Council of Princes of Jerusalem was Chartered. The Chapter of Rose Croix received its Charter on March 24, 1911, and the Delaware Consistory was Chartered on March 20, 1912. Since the organisation of the Consistory, 25 members have received the Thirty-third Degree. The present membership is over 2000.

FREEMASONRY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

CARL H. CLAUDY

CREATED in 1790 by being carved from Maryland and Virginia, the District of Columbia, originally ten miles square, was divided by the Potomac River. In 1846 the Federal Government ceded back to Virginia the area originally taken from that State. Freemasonry came into the District of Columbia from those two States, but the influence of Virginia Masonry upon that of the District of Columbia was of less importance than was that of Maryland. Maryland Masonry was derived from Massachusetts (Moderns), England (Moderns), and Pennsylvania (Ancients). Unsubstantiated tradition also couples Masonry from Scotland and Germany to the Maryland Craft.

Of what may be termed Apocryphal Masonry in the District of Columbia, there are vestiges, but they rest at only a point or two upon any real evidence and are mainly supported by tradition. A Masonic Bible in possession of Potomac Lodge, No. 5, is inscribed, "A present from Mr. Colin Campbell to St. Andrew's Lodge, the 30th January, 1773, Bladensburg." Tradition credits a Rev. Bro. Thomas Balch, of Georgetown (District of Columbia), with possession of a diploma showing that his great-grandfather, Colonel James Balch, was made a Mason in "St. Andrew's Lodge" in 1737. No written evidence can be adduced, however, that any "St. Andrew's Lodge" ever existed in the territory which later became the District of Columbia. Nor has the Grand Lodge of England or of Scotland any records of a Lodge having been Chartered in Maryland as early as 1740.

Nevertheless, a certain weight must attach to this Masonic tradition, even though it is unsupported by a diploma or by records in the Grand Lodge of England or of Scotland. Certainly, Lodges existed in the Colonies in 1733. It is noteworthy, for example, that in 1931 the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania celebrated the two hundredth anniversary of Masonry in that State, though upon what evidence it is not necessary to inquire here. Early Lodges met by "immemorial custom" with no better authority than that of a number of Brethren getting together, tiling, opening, and meeting as a "Lodge." Fredericksburg Lodge, No. 4, of Virginia, then "The Lodge of Fredericksburg," did not procure a Charter until long after it was formed and had Worked—indeed, not for several years after it initiated, passed, and raised George Washington, in 1752-53.

That no Grand Lodge Records exist showing an early "St. Andrew's Lodge" in Maryland is no proof that such a Lodge did not exist. Indeed, the documentary evidence of the inscribed Bible is far stronger proof of the existence of a " St. Andrew's Lodge " than absence of other records is proof to the contrary. Masonic history in this country is replete with instances of " occasional Lodges," meeting under " immemorial custom," which later accepted Charters from newly formed Grand Lodges, or which, like " The Lodge at Fredericksburg," asked for and received Charters many years after the Lodge's formation. It is thus possible that " St. Andrew's Lodge " did exist and Work.

However this may be, Freemasonry not only existed in the District of Columbia when the District was created in 1790, but it was also even intimately and actively concerned with bringing the Federal reservation into being. The corner-stone of the District of Columbia—a real stone marker—was laid by Alexandria Lodge, No. 22. This Lodge was originally Chartered as No. 39 by the Provincial Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania. Later it was known as Alexandria Lodge, No. 22, under a Charter from the Grand Lodge of Virginia. Still later, it became known as Alexandria-Washington Lodge, No. 22. after the death of George Washington. Washington had been its Charter Worshipful Master. The Masonic laying of the corner-stone of the District of Columbia occurred on April 15, 1791. The following contemporary newspaper account of the ceremonies, dated April 21, 1791, is both short and quaint enough to quote in full:

Alexandria, April 21, 1791.

On Friday, the 15th inst. the Hon. Daniel Carroll and Hon. David Stuart arrived in this town to superintend the fixing of the first cornerstone of the Federal District.

The Mayor and the Commonalty, together with the members of the different Lodges [?] of the town, at three o'clock, waited on the commissioners at Mr. Wise's, where they dined, and, after drinking a glass of wine to the following sentiment, viz.: " May the stone which we are about to place in the ground, remain an immovable monument of the wisdom and unanimity of North America," the company proceeded to Jones Point in the following order:

1st. The Town Sergeant. 2d. Hon. Daniel Carroll and the Mayor. 3d. Mr. Ellicott and the Recorder. 4th. Such of the Common Council and Aldermen as were not Freemasons. 5th. Strangers. 6th. The Master of Lodge No. 22, with Mr. David Stuart on his right, and the Rev. James Muir [for many years an active Mason] on his left, followed by the rest of the Fraternity, in their usual form of procession. Lastly, the citizens, two by two.

When Mr. Ellicott had ascertained the precise point from which the first line of the District was to proceed, the Master of the Lodge and Dr. Steuart, assisted by others of their brethren, placed the stone. After which a deposit of corn, wine, and oil was placed upon it, and the company partook of some refreshments, and then returned to the place from whence they came, where a number of toasts were drank; and the following was delivered by the Master of the Lodge [Dr. Dick], and was received with every token of approbation:

" Brethren and Gentlemen: May jealousy, that green-eyed monster, be buried deep under the work which we have this day completed, never to rise again within the Federal District."

In what is now the territory of the District of Columbia (north of the Potomac River), the first Lodge to receive a Charter was "Lodge No. 9," Chartered by the Grand Lodge of Maryland on April 21, 1789, to be held at "George-Town, Maryland." This Lodge lived only a few years. It committed suicide, so to speak, by a very unusual method. "The Worshipful Lodge of Ancient York Masons, No. 9, in George-Town" issued a Dispensation to some of its members to form a Lodge at Port Tobacco, Maryland. Such an irregular proceeding, even if excused by difficulties of transportation and communication, was frowned upon by the Grand Lodge of Maryland, yet that Body confirmed the Dispensation by granting a Charter to St. Columbia Lodge, No. 11. The heavy loss in membership to "Lodge No. 9," due to the removal of its members to Port Tobacco to form the St. Columbia Lodge, No. 11, resulted in the death of "Lodge No. 9" in 1794. Before it ceased to exist, however, it was presided over by W.: Bro. Valentine Reintzel, later to become the first M.: W.: Grand Master of Masons of the District of Columbia. W.: Bro. Reintzel was to be further immortalised by receiving from the hands of W.: Bro. George Washington, then President of the United States and Past Master of Alexandria Lodge, No. 22, of Alexandria, Virginia, the gavel he had used at the laying of the corner-stone of the United States Capitol. This gavel is still the prized possession of the successor of "Lodge No. 9"—Potomac Lodge, No. 5, Free and Accepted Masons of the District of Columbia.

In the 1790's, Georgetown, District of Columbia, now and for many years quite as much part of the city of Washington as so-called Greenwich Village is part of the city of New York, was distant a long, hard journey from almost anywhere inside the limits of the present District. Actually, the eastern limits of the old town are within three miles of the United States Capitol. In terms of a bad road, wooded hills, and lack of illumination, the little town was in those days at least an hour's journey. These conditions, coupled with the near prospect of the laying of the corner-stone of the Capitol, resulted in certain Brethren desiring a Lodge nearer home. On September 6, 1793, they made formal Petition to the Grand Lodge of Maryland for a Charter. The Petition was granted and Federal Lodge, No. 15 (now Federal Lodge, No. 1, of the District of Columbia), came into being. Bro. Clotworthy Stephenson, one of the petitioners, and Senior Warden of the new Lodge, acted as Grand Marshal at the Masonic corner-stone laying of the United States Capitol on September 18, 1793. Bro. Collin Williamson, a Charter member of the Lodge and master stonemason of the Capitol building, in full Masonic regalia, personally superintended the laying of the stone by W.: Bro. George Washington, who acted as Grand Master of Maryland pro tempore.

History records a curious sidelight upon Ancient Craft Masonry of the early days in records of Bro. James Hoban, devout Romanist and ardent Freemason! He was the architect of the Capitol, an influential man in civic affairs, and an enthusiastic and potent force in the spread of Freemasonry in the District of Columbia in those formative days.

Brooke Lodge, of Alexandria, Virginia, was Chartered by the Grand Lodge of Virginia on November 29, 1796. Later it was to become Lodge No. 2 of the District of Columbia. "Two" is now a vacant number, Brooke Lodge having ceased to exist in 1833 during the anti-Masonic wave of "The Morgan Excitement."

Next on the list of pre-District-of-Columbia Grand Lodge Lodges is Columbia Lodge, now known as No. 3, though it was Chartered as No. 35 by the Grand Lodge of Maryland on November 8, 1802. Its early history is enriched by the fact that it joined with Federal Lodge, No. 15, in erecting the first Masonic Temple in the District of Columbia. This was the old Union Lodge Hall, long since torn down. Columbia Lodge's first Worshipful Master, Bro. Charles Jones, became the first Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of the District of Columbia.

Washington Naval Lodge, No. 41, Chartered by the Grand Lodge of Maryland on May 14, 1805, is now Naval Lodge, No. 4, on the District Grand Lodge register. This very active and vigorous old Lodge is justly proud of the fact that during its century and a quarter of life it has never suffered either a suspension or an arrest of its Charter. During "The Morgan Excitement" this Lodge held regular meetings, though they were unduly secret.

Potomac Lodge, No. 5, is naively proud of the fact that it has had four different dates of Warranty, three different names, and four different numbers! This statement can only be considered correct if it is admitted that continuous existence of a Lodge can be interrupted by periods of slumber, coma, and even death! "Lodge No. 9" was its first appellation and number, as already explained. As "Columbia Lodge, No. 19," many of the original members of "Lodge No. 15" received a Charter from the Grand Lodge of Maryland in 1795. This Lodge passed quietly out of existence in 1797, but the records it left have ever been precious material for this historian. Nine years later, in 1806, the Grand Lodge of Maryland—which certainly showed exemplary patience with the Brethren of George-Town—granted a Charter to Potomac Lodge, No. 43, with some reluctance.

This, then, is the present Potomac Lodge, No. 5, of the District of Columbia Grand Lodge, an organisation with historic traditions and one of the leaders in the movement for a District of Columbia Grand Lodge.

FORMATION OF THE GRAND LODGE

Agitation for the formation of a Grand Lodge in the District of Columbia was probably coincident with the setting aside of the area as a Federal reservation. It came to a head in 1810. On December 11 of that year, delegates from Federal Lodge, No. 15; Alexandria Brooke Lodge, No. 47; Columbia Lodge, No. 35; Washington Naval Lodge, No. 41, and Potomac Lodge, No. 43, met in Union Lodge Room on 11th Street, Northwest, the first Masonic Temple of the District, to consider the formation of a Grand Lodge. Alexandria-Washington Lodge, No. 22—of which, as Alexandria Lodge, George Washington was the Chartered Worshipful Master—was invited, since that Lodge was at the time within the then District of Columbia. But that old Virginia Lodge, though friendly and interested, refused to join in the movement. It was satisfied with its historic Charters from the Provincial Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania and from the Grand Lodge of Virginia, and did not wish to sever the ties, rightly considered as being almost hallowed, which bound it to Washington's home State. The delegates who were present did, however, determine that a Grand Lodge should be formed but, cautious, they returned to their several Lodges for further instructions and to await the appointment of delegates having power to act.

Authorised delegates met again at the Union Lodge Room, on January 8, 1811, and elected the first Officers of the Grand Lodge of the District of Columbia Free and Accepted Masons. Those were: Bro. Valentine Reintzel of Potomac Lodge, No. 43, Grand Master; Bro. John Kinkaid of Brooke Lodge, No. 47, Deputy Grand Master; Bro. Alexander McCormick of Federal Lodge, No. 15, Senior Grand Warden; Bro. Joseph Cassin of Washington Naval Lodge, No. 41, Junior Grand Warden, and Bro. Charles Jones of Columbia Lodge, No. 35, Grand Secretary.

The Grand Lodge actually came into being on February 19, 1811, for at that Communication the Officers who had been elected were installed. Bro. John Richards of Brooke Lodge, No. 47, was installed as Deputy Grand Master, however, in place of Bro. John Kincaid, who had died since the earlier meeting. Bro. John Davis, of Abel, a member of Washington Naval Lodge, No. 41, was installed as Grand Treasurer. The Roster was increased by the appointment of Bro. Daniel Kurtz of Potomac Lodge, No. 43, as Senior Grand Deacon; Bro. William O'Neale of Federal Lodge, No. 15, as Junior Grand Deacon, and Bro. Thomas Summers of Brooke Lodge, No. 47, as Grand Tiler. Warrants were also issued at this Communication. Federal Lodge became No. 1; Brooke Lodge became No. 2; Columbia Lodge became No. 3; Naval Lodge became No. 4, and Potomac Lodge became No. 5. The one other important act of the Grand Lodge at this Communication was the recommendation that the respective Lodges pay their dues to the Grand Lodges under which they had previously held Charters, and that a committee be formed to inform the Grand Lodges of Maryland and of Virginia that the Grand Lodge of the District of Columbia had been formed.

The official line was completed on May 21, 1811, by the election of Bro. Andrew T. McCormick as Grand Chaplain; of Bro. Thomas Arbuckle as Senior Grand Deacon; of Bro. Thomas Holliday as Junior Grand Deacon; of Bro. Nicholas L. Queen as Grand Marshal; of Bro. Francis Clark as Grand Steward; of Bro. Ninian Beall as Grand Sword Bearer, and of Bro. John McGill as Grand Pursuivant. Bro. Barney Parsons was then elected as Grand Tiler to take the place of Bro. Thomas Summers who had resigned. At this meeting, also, the "Committee on Communication and Correspondence" was authorised.

The Constitution was adopted on July 9, 1811, and a hundred copies were ordered to be printed. A Communication from the Grand Lodge of Maryland was read. It courteously and fraternally recognised the new Grand Lodge and permitted the Lodges formerly of its own obedience to retain their Charters. Between these two Grand Bodies this warm-hearted action cemented bonds of union which have ever since been of the closest and most fraternal character.

The Grand Lodge of the District of Columbia presently received good wishes from those of New York, New Jersey, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Ohio, Kansas, Tennessee, and England. The Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania was not satisfied at the time, however, and more than ten years were needed to complete the correspondence which finally resulted in full fraternal relations with the Grand Lodge of the Keystone State.

At present forty-five Lodges in the District of Columbia owe obedience to the Grand Lodge. The most recently Chartered is Semper Paratus Lodge, No. 49. There are, though, four vacancies in the list of Lodges; they are No. 2, No. 6, No. 8, and No. 13. Lodge No. 2 was Alexandria-Brooke Lodge; Lodge No. 6 was Union Lodge; it having been the first Lodge to receive its original Charter from the newly-formed Grand Lodge. Union Lodge No. 6 expired in 1835 after twenty-four years of existence. Lodge No. 8 was Evangelical Lodge, of Alexandria, Virginia, which had been Chartered on May 4, 1824. Unable to survive the anti-Masonic excitement of the period from 1826 to 1840, this Lodge died in 1843.

Lodge No. 13 on the register of the Grand Lodge of the District of Columbia was "California Lodge," which was Chartered on November 9, 1848, "to be held in the Town of San Francisco, Upper California." As may be imagined, this Charter was granted to an adventurous company of Masons who desired to carry Freemasonry with them to the far and unknown West during the gold rush of 1849. California Lodge, No. 13, adhered to the Grand Lodge of the District of Columbia until 1850. Then it united with other Lodges to form the Grand Lodge of California, on whose register it became Lodge No. 1. It furnished the first Grand Master and the first Grand Secretary of that great Jurisdiction. The Grand Lodge of the District of Columbia bade its daughter Lodge Godspeed in the new allegiance, and has ever since been proud that the magnificent Freemasonry of California first came to the Golden Gate from the District of Columbia.

Space does not permit a detailed history of the formation of the many daughter Lodges of the Grand Lodge of the District of Columbia. It must be related, however, that although the Grand Lodge had its early troubles, its periods of depression and discouragement, and its time of slow growth, especially during "The Morgan Excitement" and the decade immediately following, none the less it never ceased to meet nor did it ever suspend activities or become dormant. When, finally, it began really to grow and to prosper, it started a career of Masonic activity, high in its standards and unswervingly devoted to Masonic ideals, which was nothing less than fitting for the Grand

CORNER-STONE LAYINGS

The corner-stone of the United States Capitol was laid September 18, 1793, by W.: Bro. George Washington, who was Charter Worshipful Master of Alexandria Lodge, No. 22, and then President of the United States. Lodge No. 9, of Georgetown, played an important part in the procession and ceremonies on that occasion, and as has been noted, its successor, Potomac Lodge, No. 5, now treasures the gavel used by President Washington that day.

The corner-stone of the Washington Monument was laid July 4, 1848, by the Grand Lodge of the District of Columbia. M.: W.: Bro. B. B. French officiated. But this Grand Lodge was, figuratively, much more bound up with the great shaft to Washington's memory than the mere ceremonial deposit of the corner-stone implied. As early as 1825 the Grand Lodge of the District of Columbia had initiated the movement that looked to the erection of the mighty memorial. It had encouraged the building of the monument and had been intimately concerned with settling the troubles into which this project eventually fell. It is hardly too much to say that the Washington Monument would never have been constructed had it not been for the loyal encouragement and staunch support of the Masonic Fraternity throughout the United States of America.

There is a tradition that the corner-stone of the White House, home of the Presidents of the United States, was laid by Masons of the District of Columbia, but no contemporary accounts of any such event are to be found. Therefore it cannot be affirmed as a fact. In view of President Washington's interest in Masonry, however, and the fact that the corner-stone of the Capitol was laid by Masons only a year later, it is not unlikely that laying the corner-stone of the White House was also a Masonic affair.

Other important corner-stones laid by the Grand Lodge of the District of Columbia were that of the Smithsonian Institution; that of the House Office Building, upon the occasion of which Bro. Theodore Roosevelt uttered the famous phrase—"muck-raking"; that of the War College, and that of Continental Hall, home of the Daughters of the American Revolution. The participation of the Fraternity on the last-named occasion was highly appropriate, in view of the many patriots of the War for Independence who were Freemasons.

The Grand Lodge of the District of Columbia has laid the corner-stones of many Masonic Temples. The laying of that of the old Temple at 9th and F Streets, Northwest, still standing although no longer used by the Fraternity, must be especially noted, however, since at that ceremony Bro. Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, marched in the Masonic procession from start to finish in his character as a Master Mason.

GRAND VISITATIONS

A practice peculiar to the District of Columbia is the Grand Visitation annually paid to each Lodge in the Jurisdiction by the Grand Master and the Officers of the Grand Lodge. The District of Columbia is small enough to permit what would be impossible in a larger territory. Each Lodge is notified well in advance of the Visitation, which occurs in October or November. The Grand Master and his Officers are received with a colorful ceremony in which they take part. They then assume the stations and places of the Officers, and the Grand Secretary and Grand Treasurer review the Work of the Lodge Secretary and Treasurer. The Grand Master thereupon comments upon the Work of the Lodge as a whole. Another interesting ceremony then marks the retirement of the Grand Master and his Officers. Then, following an old custom, the Grand Master returns to the Lodge, closes it "in ample form," and remains as the guest of the Lodge for an evening of entertainment. The increased number of Lodges has made this pretty custom difficult, and in consequence several attempts have been made to abandon it. The Grand Lodge, however, has insisted upon continuing it. Because of the time required for these functions, the Grand Visitations are now often paid to two or more Lodges at once. The Lodges meet and open separately, then receive the Grand Visitation jointly.

MASONIC AND EASTERN STAR HOME

The corner-stone of this institution was laid May 17, 1905, by M.:W.: Bro. Lurtin R. Ginn, Grand Master, who used Washington's gavel, loaned for the occasion by Potomac Lodge, No. 5. A recent report of the President of the Home listed as guests thirty-seven women, seventeen men, twenty girls, and twenty-eight boys. The Home is supported by per capita contributions from Masons and ladies of the Eastern Star Chapters, by donations of money and other gifts, by interest on securities, and so on. The yearly income has exceeded $86,000. The Home possesses an endowment fund exceeding $167,000, most of which came from the proceeds of a yearly baseball game and field day. This method of creating an endowment fund was started in 1914 by Harmony Lodge, No. 17, at the suggestion of W.: Bro. Robert H. Young, son of "Uncle Nick" Young, a famous baseball player and president of the National Baseball League. Through his efforts Harmony Lodge, No. 17, challenged the Lodges of the entire Jurisdiction to select a competing team. The challenge was accepted, and on June 20, 1914, the team of Harmony Lodge, No. 17, was soundly beaten. From this field day the first contribution of $2942 was made to the endowment fund of the Masonic and Eastern Star Home. The field day was continued for fifteen years, during which the proceeds reached the substantial sum mentioned above.

THE SCHOOL OF INSTRUCTION

The Grand Lecturer, assisted by the Committee on Work and Lectures, conducts a weekly school of instruction during ten months of every year, in the Grand Lodge Temple at 13th Street and New York Avenue. Although especially designed for Officers of Lodges, this school is free to all Masons. An Emergent Lodge is opened and closed at every school session. Following that, all three Degrees are conferred in each of three Lodge rooms of the Temple. The cast is made up of Officers who desire instruction in the various parts. Only school instructors who hold a certificate of proficiency may rehearse the Degrees or give private instruction in the Esoteric Work. The certificates are held by very few persons. They are difficult to obtain, since a candidate applying for one must pass a practically perfect examination in all the Esoteric Work of the Jurisdiction. He is allowed error only to the extent of one one-hundredth of a per cent. As a result of this training the Work of the Lodges in the District of Columbia is of a carefully preserved uniformity. This is true of all Lodges except Naval Lodge, No. 4, which retains its old forms of Work in the Master Mason Degree, according to an agreement made when it came into the Grand Lodge. The differences between a Naval Lodge, No. 4, Third Degree and the Third Degree of the other District of Columbia Lodges are not many, but nevertheless they are jealously guarded by the Brethren of Naval Lodge, No. 4. A Regulation of the Grand Lodge provides that the lecture pertaining to any Degree must be given at the Communication during which the Degree is conferred.

MASONIC TEMPLES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Ancient Craft Masonry in the District of Columbia is housed in fourteen Masonic Temples. The Temple at 13th Street and New York Avenue, an imposing though somewhat ill-arranged building, contains three Lodge rooms, two auditoriums, a Commandery room, a Chapter room, and a basement banquet hall. Several particular Lodges own their own Temples, since the neighbourhood Lodge idea is popular in the District of Columbia. Some of the smaller Temples rent the first floor for commercial purposes and so are self-supporting. Others depend entirely upon Masonic use for their upkeep. The Southern Jurisdiction of Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite Masons owns the magnificent House of the Temple at 16th and S Streets, Northwest, one of the most beautiful existing structures devoted exclusively to Masonic purposes. Local Bodies of Scottish Rite Masons own and occupy the original House of the Temple at 433 3d Street, Northwest, an edifice hallowed by memories of Albert Pike, who lived and worked in it for so many years.

TEMPLE HEIGHTS

At the corner of Florida and Connecticut Avenues, Northwest, the Grand Lodge owns a tract of some nine acres on which it intends to erect a Masonic Temple in keeping with the dignity and beauty of Government buildings in the Nation's capital. The beautiful site is elevated and wooded. At the top of the hill is an old mansion, and right at hand is the so-called "Treaty Oak." Beneath the branches of this oak, so it is said, early settlers and Anacostia Indians, primitive inhabitants of what is now the District of Columbia, signed a treaty of purchase for the land on which the city of Washington was later built. During the summer non-denominational religious services are held in the shade of this mighty oak tree. Chairs are placed about the lawn, piano and pulpit stand on the porch of the mansion, and a different minister addresses the congregation each Sunday. Services are held under the auspices of some one Masonic Body or under the auspices of a group of Masonic Bodies. There is a Commandery Day, for example, a Scottish Rite Day, a Royal Arch Mason's Day, and so on. All services are conducted by the Grand Chaplain, with the approval and co-operation of the Grand Lodge.

DISTINGUISHED BRETHREN IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA GRAND LODGE

The long Roster of distinguished Masonic leaders in the District of Columbia includes the names of many men famous in literature and science, and in governmental, political, and social activities. To list all those names would be only to catalogue persons prominent in many lines of work who have lived and laboured in Washington for the past century and a quarter. A few names stand out so distinctly in the annals of the Craft, however, that even an account so brief as this must be considered incomplete without them.

Benjamin Brown French, Grand Master of Masons in the District of Columbia from 1847 to 1853 and again in 1868, left his mark on national as well as local Masonry. To the many high positions to which his Brethren called him he brought scholarship, culture, an easy style of writing, marked executive ability, active citizenship, and a reverent Freemasonry. Before becoming Grand Master of the District of Columbia—a position he finally relinquished only because he refused further service—Bro. French was District Deputy Grand Master of New Hampshire and later (1832-33) Grand Marshal of that Grand Lodge. From 1850 to 1855 he was Grand High Priest of Maryland and the District of Columbia. He finally refused to serve again. In 1850 he was Grand Recorder of the Grand Encampment of Knights Templar of the United States and General Grand Secretary of the General Grand Chapter of the United States. He held these offices until 1859, when he left them to become Grand Master of Knights Templar of the United States, a position he retained for six years. During this period he made a powerful impression upon Templary. All with whom he came in contact were inspired by his vigour and vision. In 1859 he received the Thirty-third and Last Degree of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite of Freemasonry of the Southern Jurisdiction. He was an active Inspector-General of the Supreme Council. Later he became the Grand Chancellor. In 1870, a few months before his death, he became Lieutenant Grand Commander. Bro. French's sane outlook, his masterly knowledge of Masonic law and precedent, and his ability as a leader, have never ceased to inspire. His name is perpetuated in the Jurisdiction he so well served, not only by his distinguished services but also by the title of Benjamin B. French Lodge, No. 15, which received its Charter from the hands of that Grand Master whose name it bears.

Any Jurisdiction having even the slightest vestige of a right to do so would like to claim Albert Pike, since that great poet, scholar, mystic, and Freemason left an indelible impress upon all branches of the Ancient Craft. The District of Columbia needs no better claim to Bro. Albert Pike than is given by his long residence there, by his intense interest in local Masonic affairs, and by the pride and veneration which the Jurisdiction has for the Mason who "found Scottish Rite Masonry in a hovel and left it in a palace." But Washington Commandery, No. 1, Knights Templar, has on its Roll the name of the great leader as one who was there Knighted on January 12, 1853, who acted as Recorder and remained in that position until January 9, 1856. In 1860 Bro. Pike handed to R.:E.: Sir Benjamin B. French the historic sword which the Grand Encampment presented to him after nine years service as its Recorder.

From the point of view of the Freemasons in the District of Columbia, what is of even greater importance is the fact that for three years Bro. Albert Pike was a member of Pentalpha Lodge, No. 23. He affiliated with this splendid Lodge on October 4, 1880, having come to it from Magnolia Lodge, No. 60, of Little Rock, Arkansas, of which he was a Charter member. As is well known, Bro. Pike received his Degrees in Western Star Lodge, No. 2, of Little Rock. He twice served Magnolia Lodge, No. 60, as Worshipful Master (1853-54) and later returned to it from Pentalpha Lodge, No. 23. He dimitted from the latter Lodge on January 1, 1883. Bro. Pike died a member of Magnolia Lodge, No. 60.

As Grand Commander of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite of Freemasonry for the Southern Jurisdiction of the United States, Bro. Pike was a familiar figure in Craft Lodges during his long residence in Washington. His striking beard, long and white, the hooked pipe that he rarely laid aside, his kindness, his benignant bearing, and his vast learning made him a venerated and beloved visitor wherever he might elect to spend an evening. During his later years Bro. Pike visited less and less, for it was then that he devoted himself to the preparation of those treatises on Freemasonry and Masonic philosophy which are his monuments.

The death of Bro. Pike, in 1891, was felt keenly by Masons of the city which had so long been his home. It was, indeed, keenly felt by Masons everywhere, for he belonged to the whole Masonic world rather than to any one Jurisdiction. Members of the Craft in the District of Columbia were privileged to have this great man and Mason among them for many years. As fellow townsman and as fellow Mason he was sincerely and truly mourned by all Brethren of all Bodies of the Ancient Craft.

Like the great Pike, Albert Gallatin Mackey, whose influence upon Craft Masonry has probably been more profound than that of any other Mason, was a resident of Washington for the eleven years that preceded his death. Bro. Mackey affiliated with Lafayette Lodge, No. 19, on January 5, 1871, after spending nearly twenty-five years as Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of South Carolina, during which time he was General Grand High Priest (1859). He was Past Master of Landmark Lodge, No. 76, in the Jurisdiction he served so long. During his membership in Lafayette Lodge, No. 19, he served the Grand Lodge in many unofficial ways. He was an honoured and venerated Chairman of its Jurisprudence Committee. On September 13, 1871, he affiliated with Washington Commandery, No. 1. Bro. Mackey was a habitual visitor of all Masonic Bodies. His capacity for Work was as enormous as his scholarship was profound. Any of his larger Masonic treatises might well be regarded as of sufficient scope to occupy one man for a lifetime. Yet Bro. Mackey produced a series of Masonic books of such quality that for many they are an authority of last resort.

As was Albert Pike, so, too, Albert Gallatin Mackey was intimately identified with the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite of Freemasonry for the Southern Jurisdiction. He served it as Secretary General for many years. Rooms of the old House of the Temple, now the Cathedral for the local Bodies of the Scottish Rite, in which Bro. Pike and Bro. Gallatin so long worked together, still breathe of those two great leaders, scholars, and constructive geniuses. The District of Columbia claims Albert Gallatin Mackey not only because of his membership in Lafayette Lodge, No. 19, and in Washington Commandery, No. 1, but also because of his intense interest in all local Masonic matters.

No account of Masons of the District of Columbia who have reached national prominence would be complete without mention of R.:W.: Bro. George E. Corson, General Grand High Priest of the General Grand Chapter from 1915 to 1918. In 1880 he was Junior Grand Warden of the Grand Lodge of the District.

M.:W.: Bro. Harrison Dingman, Grand Master of the District of Columbia in 1889, received many distinguished honours from the Craft he loved and served. In 1896 he was elected Imperial Potentate of the Ancient and Accepted Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine of North America. He became a life member of the Imperial Council of that Body.

Admiral George W. Baird, Grand Master of the District of Columbia in 1896, was probably better informed about Freemasonry throughout the world than any other man who ever served a Grand Lodge as Chairman of its Committee on Foreign Correspondence. M.:W.: Bro. Baird had travelled widely and made it a point to visit and investigate Masonic conditions in many foreign lands. This interest was undoubtedly an outcome of the fact that when a young man he had been initiated, passed, and raised in Lodge Tolerancia, No. 4, of Lisbon, Portugal. Following Bro. William R. Singleton as Fraternal Correspondent, Bro. Baird had a difficult task. Mourning throughout the Masonic world, particularly among Fraternal Correspondents, at the death of Bro. Baird in 1930, was testimony as to how well he had filled his difficult position. Bro. Baird's reviews were filled with homely wisdom and sound common sense. He was unyielding in his refusal to recognise sporadic and doubtful Grand Lodges, and his acumen, knowledge, and first-hand acquaintance with the Masonry of many lands served not only his own Grand Lodge but also all other Grand Lodges throughout the world.

Less well known to the Masons of this generation than his attainments and merit should have made him, Bro. William R. Singleton, Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of the District of Columbia from 1875 to 1901, was a Mason pre-eminently distinguished. No other person who has filled so important a position in Masonry for so long a time has ever been more noted for gentleness of character and for tolerating the opinions of others. With these qualities Bro. Singleton combined real Masonic scholarship. His collaboration with Bro. Albert G. Mackey and with Bro. O. O. Hughan were often praised by those Masonic scholars. Though Bro. Singleton's writings are perhaps little known to Masonic students of the present day, they have nevertheless left a profound impress upon the body of Masonic knowledge of his own time.

Few Brethren have rendered more valuable service to the Grand Lodge of the District of Columbia than did Bro. Kenton N. Harper, the distinguished historian. His monumental History of Freemasonry in the District of Columbia was published by the Grand Lodge as part of the celebration of its one-hundredth anniversary in 1911. Records of to-day that seem so secure to-morrow become data which are scattered and hard to find. Bro. Harper's tireless energy and resourcefulness, his patient delving into old records, his scholarship, and his marked ability as a writer, enabled him to produce a history of Freemasonry in the District of Columbia, and of the Grand Lodge, which must inevitably increase in value as the years go on. Bro. Harper twice served Naval Lodge, No. 4, his Mother Lodge, as Master (1896-97). He was elected Secretary in 1900 and a Life Member in 1905.

No Brother of to-day is better known to the Masonic world than is M.: W.: Bro. J. Claude Keiper, present Grand Secretary and Past Grand Master (1911) of the District of Columbia. As fifty-seventh Grand Master of the District of Columbia, he supervised the plan for celebrating the one-hundredth anniversary of the birth of the Grand Lodge. Further, he played a leading part in the celebration. Scarcely less important in the minds of all who witnessed the ceremony is the fact that, as Grand Master, he laid the corner-stone of the imposing and beautiful House of the Temple, home of the Supreme Council of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite of Freemasonry for the Southern Jurisdiction. He was editor and reviser of the Code of the Grand Lodge of the District of Columbia, a Code that has served as a model for many Jurisdictions. Since 1921 Bro. Keiper has served the George Washington Masonic National Memorial Association as Secretary-treasurer. He was one of the great driving forces behind the magnificent memorial that stands on Shooter's Hill near Alexandria, Virginia. Since 1927 Bro. Keiper has served as Secretary to the Conference of Grand Masters of the United States which meets annually in Washington, District of Columbia. He is the author of History of Washington Commandery No. 1: Knights Templar. Into this work he has woven a fascinating story of Templary in the District of Columbia.

Bro. Keiper's reputation rests upon more than his distinguished service to the Craft as business man and as Masonic leader. He not only has personal acquaintance and active communication with practically every Masonic leader in the United States, but he is also noted for his deep learning in Craft customs, precedents, and Jurisprudence. A speaker of note, his gracious language, sympathetic voice, and good articulation are embellishments of that wise counsel and inspiration contained in his addresses.

FREEMASONRY IN FLORIDA

WALLACE R. CHEVES AND ELY P. HUBBELL

FOR many years doubt and uncertainty overshadowed the origin of Freemasonry in Florida. Mackey's Encyclopædia of Freemasonry, in an edition as late as that of 1920, lists St. Fernando Lodge, at St. Augustine, Chartered by the Grand Lodge of Georgia in 1806, as the first Lodge. A previous American edition of Gould's History of Freemasonry mentions an earlier Lodge, and says that its origin is unknown though it may be the East Florida Lodge Chartered by the Grand Lodge of Scotland in 1768, "of which there is now no trace." Nevertheless there was long-persistent tradition to the effect that a Lodge of Masons Worked at Pensacola during the English occupation from 1763 to 1781. Happily all doubt about this matter was removed and all uncertainty respecting the origin and history of early Masonry in Florida was cleared up in 1898. Early that year there came into the hands of the late M.:W.: James M. Hilliard, then Grand Master, a rare old copy of Preston's Illustrations, a gift to the Grand Lodge of Florida from Bro. F. F. Bond, M.D., of Thorncliff, Brighthouse, England. On the title-page of the book was this inscription:

The gift of James Murray to St. Andrew's Lodge, No. 1, West Florida, June 27, 1776.

When this priceless old relic came to the attention of M.:W.:Bro. Hilliard, he appointed the late M.:W.:Silas B. Wright, then Deputy Grand Master, "as a special committee to prepare and report at this Grand Lodge (1899) all matters pertaining to this particular subject." This was the first quasi-authentic information that such a Lodge had ever existed in Florida. It was eagerly seized upon as a lead in unravelling the mystery of early Masonry in this State.

Knowing that the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania had Chartered many Lodges outside its own domain during the Colonial period, Bro. Wright sought the help of W.:Charles E. Meyer, Past Master of Melitia Lodge, No. 295, of Philadelphia, one of the Board of Editors of The History of the Ancient and Honorable Fraternity of Free and Accepted Masons and Concordant Orders, but without avail. Having made this failure, and being still unsatisfied, Bro. Wright appealed to the Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania. There he met with success beyond his fondest hopes. Some two years before that time, R.:W.:John S. Perry had uncovered some long-lost original documents dating back to the earliest history of organised Masonry in Pennsylvania, and probably to the earliest history of organised Masonry on the American continent. Concerning this happy incident we quote the following from Old Masonic Lodges of Pennsylvania: Moderns and Ancients: 1730-1800, compiled by the Library Committee of the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania.

Heretofore it was believed that at the burning of the Masonic Hall in Philadelphia . . . on the night of March 9, A.D. 1819 (A.L. 5819), that all the old records of the Provincial Grand Lodge . . . and the records of the present Grand Lodge, were destroyed. . . . Many of these old records and papers were saved on that eventful night, however, by the then Grand Secretary, R.:W.: George A. Baker, Jr., . . . and were listed and securely locked and sealed in six strong wooden boxes by R.:W.: Bernard Dahlgren, Bro. Baker's successor, in February, 1824. . . . These boxes were removed from Hall to Hall through the years . . . and lastly stored in one of the vaults of the new Masonic Temple at Broad and Filbert Streets in 1873. Here these boxes remained for years, unknown and forgotten . . . until 1896, when it occurred to Bro. John A. Perry, Deputy Grand Secretary, to open them and investigate their contents.

Among the old documents found in those boxes was a certified copy of the original Charter of St. Andrew's Lodge, No. 1, of West Florida, and other Florida Masonic records of the period between 1768 and 1783.* Bro. Perry kindly loaned all those Florida records and papers to Bro. Wright for examination, copying, and filing. That was done and the documents are now filed in the archives of the Grand Lodge of Florida. Together with Bro. Wright's exhaustive report they were published in the Proceedings of 1899.

The Charter of St. Andrew's Lodge, No. 1, of West Florida, dated May 3, 1771, was issued by the Provincial Grand Lodge of the Southern District of North America. It was signed thus: "James Grant, G. M.; William Drayton, D.G.M.; p.t.; Alexr McKenzie, S.G.W.; Fredk. Geo. Mulcaster, J.G.W.: David Yates, G.S. and John Faley, G.C." In this Charter it was set out that the Petitioners for a new Lodge at Pensacola were members of "Lodge No. 108 of the register of Scotland, attached to the Thirty-First Regiment of Foot of the British army, lately stationed at Pensacola, but recently transferred."

Since this was the first authentic information of the existence of St. Andrew's Lodge, as well as of the Grand Lodge that Chartered it, and since both documents were of undoubted Scottish origin, Bro. Wright applied to the Grand Lodge of Scotland for authoritative data. His request brought the following letter from R.:W.:D.: Murray Lyon, Grand Secretary, under date of March 17, 1898:

In searching our Grand Lodge records I find under date of 15th March 1768: "Having read a petition from James Grant, Esq., Governor of the Province of East Florida, Henry Cunningham, late Senior Warden of the Grand Lodge of Scotland, and many other brethren residing in the province aforesaid,

* The original letters and other papers coming from the Grand Lodge at St. Augustine were kept by the Lodge at Charleston, since the papers that were sent to the Grand Lodge at Philadelphia were certified as being true copies by John Troup, Notary Public. The facsimile of the Charter, now on file in Philadelphia, is so certified.

craving a Charter for holding a Lodge there by the stile and title of Grant's East Florida Lodge, and also entreating the Grand Lodge would appoint the said Governor James Grant Provincial Grand Master over the Lodges in the Southern District of North America, the Grand Lodge granted the desire of that petition, and authorised a Charter to be made out accordingly, and likewise a Commission appointing Governor James Grant, Provincial Grand Master over the Lodges in the Southern District of North America.

Aside from the Charter of St. Andrew's Lodge, these old documents include much other interesting matter that reflects the scrupulous care and attention which were given to the Masonic Institution in those early days.

When the Brethren of St. Andrew's Lodge were driven out of Pensacola in 1781 by the Dominican priests who accompanied the Spanish victors that occupied Pensacola by force of arms, most of them fled to Charleston, South Carolina, then occupied by the British. They took pains, however, to take their Lodge's Charter, together with all other records, including the Minutes of every Communication that had been held since the Lodge was organised. From Charleston, under date of February 9, 1782, their Master, W.: Thomas Underwood, the Junior Warden, H. Beaumont, the Past Master, John Simpson, and Bro. Thomas Pashley, Steward, communicated the fact of their plight to the Grand Lodge in St. Augustine. The Grand Lodge at St. Augustine acknowledged receipt of this communication under date of March 14, 1782, and authorized the writers to constitute and hold a Lodge at Charles Town, South Carolina, "under your Charter until it shall please God to restore you to the ancient seat of your lodge in West Florida, provided you have the Master and a sufficient number of members of the same to form a Lodge." This Dispensation was signed by "John Forbes, D.G.M.; David Yeates, S.G.W.; Henry Young, J.G.W.; and John Naley, G.S."

Before constituting themselves into a Lodge of Masons, however, those conscientious Brethren "summoned all the Masters of ancient lodges of Free and Accepted Masons, constituted and warranted in Charles Town," to examine into their regularity and their right to Work as Masons. This meeting brought a Clean Bill of Regularity signed by John Kenniburg, Master of Lodge, No. 106; George Carter, Paster Master of Lodge, No. 190; H. J. Rushworth, Master of Lodge, No. 90; Alexander Smith, Past Master of Lodge No. 190, and Jeremiah Wright, Master of Lodge No. 535. The Brethren then proceeded to meet in Charleston, South Carolina, and Work as a regular Lodge under a Florida Grand Lodge Warrant until, in the language of their special Dispensation, "it shall please God to restore you to the ancient seat of your lodge in West Florida." This was not to be, however, for by the Treaty of Versailles, made the next year, both the Floridas were ceded back to Spain by England. When the Spaniards again occupied St. Augustine, Masonry was driven out, as it had been from Pensacola in 1781. The Florida Grand Lodge then became extinct.

True to their steadfastness of purpose and unyielding devotion to the Masonic Fraternity, however, the Brethren of St. Andrew's Lodge turned to the Grand Lodge at Philadelphia for succor when they found themselves without a head. They surrendered their Florida Charter and all other records to it, and prayed to be re-Chartered under their original name and title. After careful inquiry the Philadelphia Grand Lodge granted their prayer. It did not Charter them as "St. Andrew's Lodge, No. 1, late of West Florida," as had been requested, but as Lodge No. 40.

Thus the first chapter of Florida's Masonic history closes. Masonry came with the English in 1768 and passed out with the return of the Spanish in 1783. But not for long, as time is measured. Several attempts were made to revive it during the four decades between 1783 and 1825. None of them was successful, however, until Florida became a territory of the United States. Bought from Spain in 1819 for $5,000,000, it was the best bargain our country ever made!

In 1825, Warranted by the Grand Lodge of Alabama, Masonry returned to Florida as a permanent institution. Confident, inspiring, and enduring, then took its proper place in the affairs of men and in the ranks of advancing civilization. As has been said, the history of early Freemasonry in Florida, and Florida's lack of Masonic history contemporary with that of other early settlements in the New World, are inseparably interwoven with prejudice and antagonism. The Floridas and Cuba were settled by the Spaniards. A settlement was made at Baracoa, Cuba, in 1511, and another at 1519. The first settlement in Florida was made at Pensacola on August 14, 1559, by 2000 Spaniards led by Don Tristram de Luna. Spanish explorers were nearly always accompanied by ecclesiastics and fortune-seekers, and it was they who decided the fate of Pensacola's first settlement. The latter did not find the gold of their dreams, and the former found the Indians more ready to lift their scalps than to listen to their sermons. Discontent soon spread and the settlement was abandoned in 1562. The first permanent settlement in Florida was made at St. Augustine in 1565. The first permanent settlement at Pensacola was made in 1696 by 300 Spanish soldiers and settlers led by Don Andres Arriola. He first built a "square fort with bastions" and named it Fort San Carlos. Afterwards it was called Fort Barrancas.

Except for a short period between 1719 and 1723, when Pensacola was occupied by the French, Spain uninterruptedly ruled and controlled both the Floridas and Cuba until 1762. Then the English led by Lord Albemarle took Havana. This incident gave rise to the introduction of Freemasonry into Florida. By the Treaty of Paris, made on February 10, 1763, Spain ceded both the Floridas to England. With the coming of the English, that same year, came Masonry. Its tenure, however, was not to be continuous until many years after its first advent. The Treaty of Versailles, made on January 28, 1783, reconstructed the political map of North America, the Floridas again became a Spanish possession. Since Masonry had come with the English occupation, so now it went when the Spanish reoccupation took place. Masonry awaited a more propitious season.

"Grant's East Florida Lodge, No. 143, on the Scottish register," located at St. Augustine, was Florida's first Masonic Lodge. It was Chartered by the Grand Lodge of Scotland on March 15, 1768. James Grant, its Master, was also commissioned Provincial Grand Master of "The Provincial Grand Lodge over the Lodges of the Southern District of North America," as it is attested by a copy of a letter from the Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of Scotland. The letter, sent to Bro. Silas B. Wright, is reprinted elsewhere in this article. So far as is known, that Grand Lodge Warranted only two Lodges. J. Hugo Tatsch's Freemasonry in the Thirteen Colonies says:

Its first warrant was issued to brethren who were members of St. George's Lodge No. 108, held in the Thirty-first Regiment of Foot, Pensacola, West Florida. The brethren founded St. Andrew's Lodge No. 1, at Pensacola, by authority of a charter dated May 3, 1771. The second warrant was issued in 1779 to Mount Moriah Lodge in the Thirty-fifth Regiment of Foot, stationed at St. Lucia, one of the Windward Islands. St. Andrew's Lodge was suppressed at Pensacola in 1781 by the Dominican Priests who came with the Spanish victors, but was revived at Charleston, South Carolina, two years later i.e. the next year.

By the vicissitudes of war and the machinations of European diplomacy, the whole of Florida again came under the control of Spain and the Roman Catholic Church in 1783. Masonry was then interdicted at St. Augustine, as it had been at Pensacola in 1781. Grant's East Florida Lodge No. 143 and the Grand Lodge of the Southern District of North America were suppressed. All records of both Lodges were lost. When this happened, St. Andrew's Lodge No. 1, of West Florida, then Working at Charleston, South Carolina, under special Dispensation from the Florida Grand Lodge, found itself without a head. In consequence it memorialised the Grand Lodge at Philadelphia to re-Charter it, as has been explained. On July 12, 1783, it was duly Chartered as Lodge No. 40, thereby severing the last link that joined the Masonic citadel to the Floridas. St. Andrew's Lodge, however, continued to function for more than a century after severing its connection with early Florida Masonry. Under the Philadelphia Grand Lodge it was known as Lodge No. 40. Later, in 1787, together "with Lodge No. 38 and Lodge No. 47, of Pennsylvania, and with Lodge No. 190 and Lodge No. 236, of the Athol Grand Lodge of England, it formed the Grand Lodge of South Carolina. . . . At the union of the Grand Lodges of South Carolina in Charleston in 1817, St. Andrew's Lodge No. 40, became St. Andrew's Lodge No. 10. It continued to Work until 1890, when it became dormant and was dropped from the Roll.

Thus the fledgling of Florida Masonry, after one hundred nineteen years of life, wrote "Finis" at the conclusion of its name and record.

There were several attempts to revive Masonry in St. Augustine, and one attempt to revive it at Pensacola, between the withdrawal of St. Andrew's Lodge, No. 1, in 1783, and the institution of Jackson Lodge, in 1825. None of them, however, was enduring. St. Fernando Lodge was Chartered at St. Augustine in 1806 by the Grand Lodge of Georgia. It became defunct in 1811. Floridian Virtue Lodge, No. 28, was established at St. Augustine in 1820 by the Grand Lodge of South Carolina. After a very short life it ceased to exist. Esperanza Lodge, established at St. Augustine in 1824 by the Grand Lodge of South Carolina, died the same year. Montgomery Lodge, No. 30, was Chartered at St. Augustine in 1824 by the Grand Lodge of Georgia. Though one cannot be certain when this Lodge became defunct, that must have taken place prior to 1829, for the following appears in the Proceedings of the Grand Lodge of Georgia for the year 1829 under the caption, "Districts": "District No. 9: Meridian Lodge, No. 30, Bainbridge; Washington Lodge, No. 1, Quincy, Florida; and Harmony Lodge, No. 2, Jackson County, Florida. Good Intention Lodge, No. 56 was established at Pensacola in 1809 by the Grand Lodge of South Carolina. It became defunct in 1827. And so, St. Augustine, the oldest settlement on the Atlantic seaboard, the birthplace of Florida Masonry, was not destined to be the home of the Mother Lodge of this Grand Jurisdiction. That distinction and honour was to go to Tallahassee, the home of Jackson Lodge, No. 1, which was Chartered by the Grand Lodge of Alabama in 1825."

The varied history of St. Augustine's Lodges and their resolute perseverance against recurring vicissitudes is of compelling interest. Their record may be without a parallel in the annals of the Masonic Institution. The first Lodge in St. Augustine was Chartered in 1768. The last Lodge, that is, the present Lodge, was Chartered in 1888. In the interim the town witnessed one Provincial Grand Lodge, and it saw twelve Particular Lodges come and go. Not one of them was able to withstand the process of change incident to the fortunes of war and of nations, or the legacy wrought by those mutations, until Ashlar Lodge, No. 98, came into being. It was Chartered by the Grand Lodge of Florida on January 18, 1888, and is now one of the ranking Lodges of this Grand Jurisdiction.

Such, in brief, is the chronicle of early Masonry in Florida. It was intermittent and unenduring, but in time it was to sweep aside every barrier and take its proper place in the scheme of social and moral uplift in a growing nation. And now we make our bow to the three Mother Lodges of this Grand Jurisdiction. They are Jackson Lodge, No. 1, originally Lodge No. 23, Chartered by the Grand Lodge of Alabama; Washington Lodge, No. 2, originally Lodge No. 1, and Harmony Lodge, No. 3, originally Lodge No. 2. The last two were Chartered by the Grand Lodge of Georgia.

A list of Officers and original Petitioners for Washington Lodge and Harmony Lodge, U. D., are not available. The Grand Secretary of Georgia says that those documents cannot now be found. The Minutes of the Grand Lodge of Georgia do record, however, that those Lodges were duly Chartered by the Grand Lodge of Georgia. The first was Chartered as Washington Lodge, No. 1, at Quincy, Florida, on December 2, 1828; the second, as Harmony Lodge, No. 2, of Jackson County, Florida, on December 8, 1829. Of Jackson Lodge, however, there is a complete record of the original Petition for a U. D. Lodge at Tallahassee, as well as a record of its being Chartered by the Grand Lodge of Alabama on December 19, 1825. These records were attested by R.:.W.:.

George A. Beauchamp, Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of Alabama, under date of October 26, 1931.

The original petitioners for a U. D. Lodge at Tallahassee were Robert Butler, Robert W. Williams, Isham Green Searcy, Ede Van Evvier, E. R. Downing, R. D. Jourolmon, David Thomas, William P. Duval, and B. D. Wright. The first three of those mentioned were named in the Dispensation as Worshipful Master, Senior Warden, and Junior Warden, respectively.

Jackson Lodge, U. D., was organized on June 3, 1825. It was Chartered on December 19, 1825, as Jackson Lodge, No. 23. When constituted, the following persons were installed as its first Officers: Robert Butler, Worshipful Master; Robert W. Williams, Senior Warden; Isham Green Searcy, Junior Warden; Romeo Lewis, Secretary; Samuel R. Overton, Treasurer; David Thomas, Senior Deacon; Robert D. Jourolmon, Junior Deacon; Edward Vanevour, Tyler. This Lodge, with Washington Lodge and Harmony Lodge, still carries on in unbroken continuity. The three formed the nucleus around which the splendid Masonic system in this State was erected. As measured by to-day's standard, their membership was small, but what they lacked in numbers they more than made up in courage, determination, and resourcefulness.

The movement to form an independent Grand Lodge in the Territory of Florida originated with Jackson Lodge, then Lodge No. 23. At the regular Communication of May 1830, Jackson Lodge passed a resolution inviting Washington Lodge and Harmony Lodge to appoint Delegates from each to meet with Delegates from Jackson Lodge on the first Monday of the following July for the purpose of forming a Grand Lodge. Accordingly, the Delegates of those three Lodges met in the Hall of Jackson Lodge, on July 5, 1830, and proceeded to the business for which they were called. Altogether the Delegates numbered twenty-seven. The following nineteen came from Jackson Lodge: Isham Green Searcy, David M. Sheffield, John Laudaman, William P. Duval, Robert Butler, Richard K. Call, Romeo Lewis, Lewis Willis, Thomas Monroe, John P. Duval, Robert W. Williams, Justinian F. Davis, James Hughes, James Bryan, Jr., Burr H. Duval, Thomas Brown, James G. Ringgold, William G. Burgess, and Richard C. Allen. The five Delegates from Washington Lodge were Henry Gee, Francis A. Cash, John Lines, James A. Dunlap, and Isaac Nathans. The three Delegates from Harmony Lodge were James W. Exum, William J. Watson, and Jacob Robinson. "The oldest Past Master present, John P. Duval, was elected to the Chair, and Thomas Monroe was appointed Secretary of the convention."

After calling the Roll the Convention proceeded to the business in hand with the decorum and punctilious technique peculiar to that day. Not a jot of precedent or "Ancient Landmarks" was overlooked or transcended by those pioneer Brethren.

Resolved. (First), That it is expedient for the convenience, interest, and prosperity of the Craft in the Territory of Florida, that a Grand Lodge be constituted. (Second), That three regularly warranted Lodges of Ancient York Masons are fully represented in this Convention, and, according to precedent and authority, they have a right to establish a Grand Lodge for the Territory of Florida. (Third), That a committee be appointed to draft a form of Constitution for the Grand Lodge of Florida and suitable by-laws and rules for the government of the same.

The Constitutional Committee was composed of Bro. Robinson, Bro. Searcy, Bro. Gee, Bro. Brown, Bro. Exum, Bro. Watson, Bro. Nathans, Bro. Lines, Bro. Butler, Bro. Call, and Bro. Duval, President of the Convention. The Convention then adjourned. It was to meet from time to time and day to day, until the Constitutional Committee should report. That occurred on Friday, July 9, 1830. With a few amendments, the report was adopted, and Bro. Brown, Bro. Searcy, and Bro. Dunlap were appointed to have the report, as amended, enrolled, certified, and signed by the Chairman.

Pursuant to adjournment, the Convention met on the following day and proceeded to the election of Grand Officers. The Grand Officers so elected and appointed were "installed according to ancient usage," and having completed its labours the Convention stood adjourned sine die. The Grand Lodge was then opened in ample form and on motion of Bro. Thomas Brown the rules and by-laws of the Grand Lodge of Alabama were adopted, "so far as they are applicable to the proceedings of this Grand Lodge." Bro. Cash, Bro. Searcy, Bro. Dunlap, Bro. Call, Bro. Butler, and Bro. Duval were appointed a Committee to prepare rules and a code of by-laws for the government of the Grand Lodge. Their action was to be reported to the next Annual Grand Communication. Warrants were ordered to be issued to the "subordinate" Lodges represented and to be numbered as follows: Jackson Lodge, No. 1; Washington Lodge, No. 2, and Harmony Lodge, No. 3. Those Lodges were directed to surrender their old Warrants to the Grand Secretary so that he might return them to the Grand Lodges from which they had been obtained. The Grand Secretary was directed to procure a Grand Lodge seal having "suitable devices," and to "draw on the Grand Treasurer for the amount of same." "The Grand Lodge was then closed in ample form, to meet again on the second Monday after the Annual Session of the Legislative Council of the Territory of Florida, as provided by the Constitution of the Grand Lodge." Thus was the Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons of the Territory of Florida, afterwards the State of Florida, started upon its way. It was a bulwark of strength for good, and a potential addition to the social and moral fabric of an advancing civilisation. Except for a few Indian trading-posts, the interior of Florida was at that time an unclaimed wilderness, inhabited by savages and runaway slaves. The fringe of settlements along its northern border comprised the southern outposts of advancing American civilisation. Into this environment came the Grand Lodge of Florida, an outgrowth of Jackson Lodge, Washington Lodge, and Harmony Lodge, and of the towns where they were located. Imbued with energy and vitality, this Grand Lodge entered upon its beneficent career.

The beginning of the Florida Grand Lodge was humble and its numbers were few. There were only three Composite Lodges having a total membership of 76. Now after over a hundred years of unbroken activity and service it enters upon its second century with an enrollment of 251 Lodges and a total membership of over 31,000. The Annual Grand Communication for 1930 was held in Tallahassee, by special action of the 1929 Grand Lodge. The chief object was to celebrate in a fitting manner the one hundredth anniversary of the Grand Lodge.

The unveiling exercises were participated in by the mayor of the city of Tallahassee, by the president of Stetson University at DeLand, and by the governor of the State together with many of his cabinet. Justices of the Supreme Court and Delegations from the Grand Lodge of Georgia, the Grand Lodge of Alabama, and the Grand Lodge of Louisiana also attended.

Appropriate historical tablets were erected in honour of the occasion as a memorial to deceased Past Grand Masters. Tablets contained the names of the first Grand Lodge Officers, Representatives of first Grand Communication from Jackson Lodge, No. 23, Washington Lodge, No. 1, Harmony Lodge, No. 2, and the names of present Grand Lodge Officers. On another tablet were the names of deceased Grand Masters.

The Grand Lodge met in the Hall of Jackson Lodge, No. 1, at Tallahassee, from 1830 to 1869, inclusive. Then it removed to Jacksonville and met in the Hall of the local Jacksonville Lodges until that was destroyed by fire in 1891. This left the Grand Lodge as well as the local Bodies without a home, but fortunately, during the preceding year, the Grand Lodge had authorised the purchase of a lot and the erection of a four-story Masonic Temple at Forsyth and Bridge Streets, in Jacksonville. This was to be used by both the Grand and local Masonic Bodies. The Temple was completed in 1892. The Grand Lodge held its first Annual Grand Communication in the Temple from January 17 to 19, 1893. In this structure the Grand Lodge and the local Bodies remained until January, 1909. Then they all removed to the present Grand Lodge Temple at Main and Monroe Streets. The sixth and seventh floors of this seven-story structure are used exclusively for Masonic purposes and are very well adapted to the purpose.

Until 1912 there was in Florida no organised system of administering Masonic relief. Each Lodge administered its own relief from its treasury. If that was inadequate, it called for help from other Lodges. At the Annual Grand Communication of 1912 a resolution was passed which forbade among the Lodges any solicitation for assistance, and which provided for a per capita tax of twenty-five cents upon each dues-paying member, the money thus raised to be administered by a Grand Lodge Relief Committee. This Committee still functions. From year to year it is provided with a supplementary appropriation.

In 1892 the Grand Lodge inaugurated a movement to provide a permanent home for indigent Masons, their widows, and their orphans. This was realised in 1918 by the purchase of suitable grounds and building at St. Petersburg. The establishment opened for guests the following year, and has been in continuous operation since that time. It is financed by a special per capita assessment against the membership of the Grand Jurisdiction. There are at present in the Home more than 130 children and adults. All are splendidly cared for, all seem contented and happy. The children are given a high-school education in the schools of St. Petersburg, and vocational training at the Home.

In connection with their work for the Masonic Home and other outstanding Grand Lodge activities, it is fitting to dwell briefly on the services of our two oldest and greatly beloved Past Grand Masters, M.:W.: Marcus Endel, Grand Master in 1893, and M.:W.: Elmer E. Haskell, Grand Master in 1907 and 1908. M.:W.: Bro. Endel enjoys the rare distinction of having attended fifty-five consecutive Annual Grand Communications of the Grand Lodge of Florida. In all that time he has ranked high in the Grand Lodge's Councils. He has served on the Masonic Home Board of Trustees since its creation in 1903. He has served on the Grand Lodge Committee on Work since it was created in 1879. Under his tutelage Florida's present system of Esoteric Work has grown up. We believe no similar Work is superior to this and that it has few equals. M.:W.: Bro. Haskell has seen nearly fifty years of service in the Grand Lodge. Always he has been at the forefront of every constructive movement. For many years he has been Chairman of the Board of Trustees of the Temple. For many years he was President of the Masonic Home Board of Trustees, and until 1929, when he had to resign because of ill health. Both Bro. Endel and Bro. Haskell are known, loved, and revered by the entire Craft of this Grand Jurisdiction.

Among the organisers of the Grand Lodge of Florida were persons of first rank in the political organisation and development of Florida Territory and the State of Florida. The Floridas were ceded to the United States by Spain on January 22, 1819, but the exchange of flags did not take place until 1821, at Pensacola on July 17, and at St. Augustine on July 10. General Andrew Jackson, Past Grand Master of Tennessee, who was later elected to honorary membership in the Grand Lodge of Florida, was the first and only provisional governor of the region. He resigned when the civil government was established by an Act of Congress on March 30, 1822. The two Floridas were united by that law.

William P. Duval (1784-1854), who was then United States judge for East Florida, was appointed as first civil governor by President Monroe. He served four terms, from 1822 to 1834. Bro. Duval, brother of our first Grand Master, was a Charter member of Jackson Lodge, No. 23, and one of the Petitioners for Jackson Lodge, U. D. As a Representative of Jackson Lodge, No. 23, he was also one of the Delegates to the Convention that formed the Grand Lodge of Florida. The Indian situation was troublesome and threatening when Bro. Duval assumed his duties as governor. All over the Territory the Indians were restless, surly, and bitterly resentful of the constant encroachment on their wild domain and the announced purpose of the whites to segregate them beyond the Mississippi River. Nevertheless, by means of tact, fairness, and square dealing with the wild men of the forest, Bro. Duval succeeded in maintaining friendship between them and the settlers. Not once during Bro. Duval's administration of twelve years was there a serious outbreak. Sadly enough, however, his regime was followed by years of bloody war.

Richard Keith Call (1791-1862), Grand Master in 1850, was the third civil governor of the Territory of Florida. He served two terms, from 1836 to 1839 and from 1841 to 1844. Bro. Call succeeded to the governorship at a troubled time. Since Indian outbreaks overshadowed all else, most of his first term was spent in military campaigns against the redskins. He was strongly attached to the Union, as his many letters show, "but when Florida seceded he bowed his head and went with his State." As a Representative of Jackson Lodge, No. 23, he was a Delegate to the Convention that formed the Grand Lodge of Florida.

Thomas Brown (1785-1867), Grand Master in 1849, was the second governor of the State after Florida was admitted to the Union in 1845. He served one term as governor, from 1849 to 1853. Bro. Brown was "widely known for the charity and hospitality he exercised," and his administration has been called an "era of good feeling." He represented Jackson Lodge, No. 23, as a Delegate to the Convention that formed the Grand Lodge of Florida.

Robert Butler (1786-1860), Grand Master in 1832, was Worshipful Master of Jackson Lodge, U. D., and the first Worshipful Master of Jackson Lodge of Florida. In political life he was for a time Adjutant General of the Southern Division of the United States Army, and surveyor-general in charge of the land survey of the Territory of Florida. "Bro. Butler, while not first Grand Master, might justly be considered the founder of the Grand Lodge of Florida." Bro. Butler's grandson, R.:W.:W. E. Lewis, has been a lifelong member of Bro. Butler's old Lodge, Jackson Lodge, No. 1. He is a Past Master of that Lodge, and for many years he has been R.:W.: District Deputy Grand Master of his Masonic District. Like his illustrious grandfather, he is loved and revered by all who know him.

Samuel Pasco (1834-1917), Grand Master from 1870 till 1872, was twice United States senator from Florida, from 1887 till 1899. He was president of the State Constitutional Convention of 1885 that drafted the Constitution under which Florida functions to-day. When he retired from the Senate, President McKinley appointed him counsel for the Isthmian Canal Commission. The opinions which he rendered in that capacity have been recognised and cited from then till now as being sound judicial utterances. Bro. Pasco's son and namesake, M.:W.: Samuel Pasco, of Pensacola, in 1931 was Grand Master in this Jurisdiction, a worthy son of an illustrious sire.

Albert W. Gilchrist (1858-1926), Grand Master in 1912 and 1913, was noted for his benevolence and charity. He was the prime mover in establishing a Masonic Home in this State. He headed the list of voluntary contributors with a donation of a thousand dollars, and gave much of his time and money toward instituting this philanthropic venture. At his death in 1926 he bequeathed to the Masonic Home almost his entire estate, appraised at that time as being worth considerably more than $100,000. He was an outstanding political figure in this State. He served four terms in the Legislature, was speaker of the House in 1905, and governor of the State from 1909 to 1913.

Dr. John Gorrie (1803-1855), whose statue in the Hall of Fame at Washington, District of Columbia, is one of Florida's contributions, was a Charter member of Franklin Lodge, No. 6, at Apalachicola. He wrote the Minutes of that Lodge as Secretary pro tempore. He was Treasurer of the Lodge during the first two years after it was organised on December 5, 1835. This old Minutes Book is now one of the prized possessions of the Florida Lodge, which received it as a gift from Apalachicola Lodge, No. 76. The neatness and diction of the old Minutes in the handwriting of Dr. Gorrie reflect the culture of the man. He was a practising physician, a contributor to medical journals, and the inventor of artificial cooling out of which have grown the ice-making and cooling systems that mean so much to the world to-day.

John P. Duval (1790-1855), first Grand Master of Florida, left a rich legacy to immortalise his name. He headed an altruistic institution of boundless possibilities and started it on its way down the centuries.

Stafford Caldwell, sixty-first Grand Master of Florida, left an equally rich legacy. He stabilised the business administration of the Grand Lodge and by means of his constructive financial policies he rounded out that Institution's first century of life. It would not be fair to the Masonry of this Grand Jurisdiction were not mention made here of the long, continuous, and efficient service rendered to the Craft by Wilber P. Webster. In 1890 he was made a Mason in Duval Lodge, No. 18, which no longer exists. He was a Charter member and first Worshipful Master of Temple Lodge, No. 23. At the Annual Grand Communication of 1896 he was elected Grand Secretary and served as such continuously up to 1934.

In 1926 after the destructive hurricane which devastated a portion of the East Coast and Lake Okeechobee region Cary B. Fish, who was Grand Master, took personal charge of distributing Masonic funds for immediate relief and rehabilitation and received and disbursed $114,236.97 at a cost of less than one per cent. In 1928 Leroy Brandon was Grand Master at the time of the hurricane on the East coast and in another part of the Okeechobee Lake region, and he delegated Past Grand Master Cary B. Fish to proceed to the stricken districts and take charge of the relief work. This time, Bro. Fish disbursed $107,622.14 at a cost of less than one-half of one per cent.

To make special mention of all members of the Craft who have distinguished themselves in business, and in professional, political, fraternal, and religious life would in itself require a volume. Limited space precludes a more extended account of these interesting details.

ROYAL ARCH MASONRY

The Grand Chapter of Royal Arch Masons of the State of Florida was formed at Tallahassee on January 11, A.D. 1847 (A. L. 2377), by Florida Royal Arch Chapter, No. 4; Magnolia Royal Arch Chapter, No. 16, and Florida Royal Arch Chapter, No. 32, when Companion Thomas Douglass was installed as Grand High Priest by Companion John P. Duval, Past High Priest. The following elective and appointive Officers were also installed on that occasion: Companion John P. Duval, Deputy Grand High Priest; Companion Harry R. Taylor, Grand King; Companion George W. Macrae, Grand Scribe; Companion John B. Taylor, Grand Secretary; Companion Edwin D. Nash, Grand Treasurer; Companion the Rev. Edwin T. L. Blake, Grand Chaplain. The Order of Priesthood was conferred upon Companion Thomas Douglass, Most Excellent Grand High Priest, and the Grand Secretary was directed to communicate with the General Grand Chapter of the United States and to seek membership. The Grand Chapter is now composed of 51 Subordinate Chapters having a total membership of nearly 7000.

ROYAL AND SELECT MASTERS

The Grand Council of Royal and Select Masters of Florida was formed at Tallahassee on January 12, 1858, by Mackey Council, No. 1; Columbia Council, No. 2, and Douglass Council, No. 3, all of which had been previously Working under authority from Charleston. The following Officers were elected and duly installed: Thomas Hayward, Grand Puissant; E. R. Ives, Deputy Grand Puissant; George F. Baltzell, Grand Thrice Illustrious; D. P. Holland, Grand P. C. of Work; Rev. C. E. Dyke, Grand Treasurer; J. B. Taylor, Grand Recorder; Rev. J. Penny, Grand Chaplain. There are now 21 Councils, having a total membership of about 1700.

KNIGHTS TEMPLAR

The Grand Commandery of the State of Florida was organised at Jacksonville on August 15, 1885, by Cœur de Lion Commandery, No. 1; Damascus Commandery, No. 2, and Olivet Commandery, No. 4. The election of Grand Officers resulted as follows: R.:E.: Sir William A. McLean, Grand Commander; V.:E.: Sir Charles McKenzie-Oering, Deputy Grand Commander; E.: Sir Wilber P. Webster, Grand Generalissimo; E.: Sir James W. Boyd, Grand Captain General; E.: Sir Charles R. Oglesby, Grand Prelate; E.: Sir William S. Ware, Grand Senior Warden; E.: Sir Thomas L. Watson, Grand Junior Warden; E.: Sir Irving E. Baird, Grand Treasurer; E.: Sir John D. Sinclair, Grand Recorder; E.: Sir Bingham H. Chadwick, Grand Standard Bearer; Sir James R. Keller, Grand Sword Bearer; Sir Charles A. Clark, Grand Warder; Sir Thomas B. Davis, Grand Captain of the Guards. Sir Knights W. P. Webster, Charles McKenzie-Oering, and J. W. Boyd were appointed as a Committee to frame a Constitution and By-Laws. Their report was unanimously adopted. There are now 36 Commanderies having a total membership of nearly 5000.

ANCIENT ACCEPTED SCOTTISH RITE

The first organised Bodies of this Rite in Florida were a Lodge of Perfection and a Council of Princes of Jerusalem, opened at Alligator, now Lake City, in April 1853, under Grand Commander John Henry Honour. In 1859 Edward Rutledge Ives, of Lake City, was crowned an active member of the Supreme Council. He organised a Lodge of Perfection, a Council of Princes of Jerusalem, and a Chapter of Rose Croix in that city. Those Bodies did not long survive, for it states in the Records of the Session held in South Carolina in 1874 that the Rite was yet to be planted in North Carolina and Florida. DeWitt C. Dawkins was crowned an active member of the Supreme Council in 1877, Judge William Allen McLean in 1895, and Dr. Olin Seamore Wright in 1917. The first permanent Lodge of Perfection was Chartered in 1892 at Ocala. Scottish Rite Degrees were first conferred in 1912, when Grand Commander James Daniel Richardson brought Workers to Jacksonville, and conferred the various Degrees from the Fourth to the Thirty-second. There is a Lodge of Perfection, a Chapter of Rose Croix, a Council of Kadosh, and a Consistory at Jacksonville, Tampa, Pensacola, Key West, Miami, and Lake Worth. In Ocala and in St. Augustine there is a Lodge of Perfection only. From a Body having only sixteen members in 1880, the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite in Florida has come to have some 7500 members.

FREEMASONRY IN GEORGIA

WILLIAM BORDLEY CLARKE

PRIOR to the year 1924 the early record of the Craft in Georgia was practically unknown. The result of failure to establish facts concerning the beginnings of Masonry in this State was the prevalence of traditions and assumptions and assertions, confusing and disconcerting to the seeker after dependable data. Article I of the Constitution of the Grand Lodge of Georgia adds to this confusion because it contains conflicting statements that cannot logically be reconciled with facts. For the guidance and satisfaction of the historian, documents relating to salient points of this early history have fortunately been discovered in the archives of the Grand Lodge of Georgia and of several early Lodges. With unvarying consistency concerning fundamental data these reveal facts and establish dates heretofore wanting. The documents have remained in the hands of the original owners since they were written, but the full value of their content has until now been overlooked and never before given to historians of the Craft.

Many valuable documents were lost because of the sieges of Savannah during the War for Independence. Other causes that contributed to the loss of valuable papers were the British surrender of the city to Americans, the removal of many British sympathisers to other parts of the country, and the fire of 1792 that destroyed the greater part of the town in which Georgia Masonry had its birth and where the Grand Lodge of Georgia met for many years after its organisation. Facts contained in the few remaining documents were not published until 1924. At that time, Solomon's Lodge, No. 1, of Savannah, the first Lodge of Georgia, issued a book entitled Early and Historic Freemasonry of Georgia. The publication of this work gave the first opportunity to learn facts about the beginning of the Craft in this State. At the Session of the Grand Lodge in 1927, the appearance of this book was followed by the distribution of a pamphlet entitled The Beginning of Constituted Freemasonry in Georgia. This made public for the first time facts concerning the organisation of the Grand Lodge in this State. These publications were the first attempts of Georgians to make known important facts of Georgia's Masonic history in any proper manner.

The first attempt to give an outline of the history of the Grand Lodge of Georgia was contained in the Abimon Rezon, compiled in 1857 by Committees authorised by the Grand Lodge, the Grand Chapter, and the Grand Council. In this book is a chapter entitled Memoranda of the Early History of Freemasonry in Georgia, written by M.:W.: William S. Rockwell, Grand Master of Georgia at the time. Those Memoranda, appearing in a volume issued with the sanction of the Grand Lodge of the State, have been accepted by the Masonic world as the official point of view of that organisation. A study of the statements made by M.:W.:Bro. Rockwell, and a companion of those statements with recently discovered documents, would immediately convince the student, however, that the author did not know that the contents of documents in the archives of the Grand Lodge of Georgia refute many of his assumptions, statements, and conclusions. Since the recent publication of these documents, Masonic historians have utterly rejected M.:W.:Bro. Rockwell's statements as being unsupported by facts.

Article I of the Constitution of the Grand Lodge of Georgia, which not only repeats the statements of M.:W.:Bro. Rockwell but also omits several fundamental facts concerning the organisation of the Craft and of the Grand Lodge, has been the object of much study by Masonic historians because it states that the Grand Lodge of Georgia has existed since 1733 by virtue of a Warrant issued in 1735. Masonic historians find it impossible to reconcile these two statements. In view of this, the present writer has attempted to determine the date of adoption of this Article of the Constitution, and has found that the Minutes of the Grand Lodge do not contain any record of the adoption of the Article. It appears to have been adopted in 1857, at about the time of the publication of the Abimon Rezon, and the historical record it contains appears to have been largely based upon the assumptions M.:W.:Bro. Rockwell sets forth in his Memoranda. The documents since discovered do not confirm the dates or other statements contained in the Article, and Masonic historians generally have challenged the statements contained in Article I of the Constitution of the Grand Lodge of Georgia upon the ground that they are largely incorrect assumptions not based upon facts or otherwise supported by evidence. Since the publication of the documentary evidence which consistently establishes the facts, steps have been taken by the Grand Lodge to reconcile the statements in Article I with the actual facts.

In this article it is not possible to state the various claims that have been made or to show the errors of them. Rather, the facts are merely presented so that they may speak for themselves. These facts alone reveal the complete story of Freemasonry in Georgia. Assumptions and unwarranted conclusions must be dismissed until such time as newly discovered evidence may furnish some grounds for considering them.

For many years it was believed that the first Lodge in Georgia had been organised in 1733. The ground for this erroneous notion was doubtless the change of calendar which occurred in 1752. Until then the year had ended on March 24, January, February, and March having been the last three months of the year. According to the old calendar, the Colony of Georgia was established with the landing of the colonists at Savannah on February 1, 1732. When the calendar was changed in 1752, February became the second month of the year instead of the eleventh month. Thus, according to the new calendar, the date of the founding of the Colony of Georgia was reckoned as February 12, 1733. After 1752 a novel method of showing the change of calendar came into use. Any date that fell in January, February, or March of a given year that preceded the change was indicated by showing that year and its immediate successor. The date of the establishment of the Colony of Georgia, for example, was written as February 12, 1732-3. This shows that the event occurred in 1732 according to the old calendar, but in 1733 according to the new one. This change of calendar and consequent method of recording dates, which has caused much confusion in Georgia, is responsible for the belief that the Masonry of Georgia came into existence in 1733. On the contrary, however the existence of documents showing the occurrence of important events in 1733-4 furnishes ample proof that Georgia Masonry was established in 1734.

The earliest reference to Masonry in Georgia is contained in the records of the Grand Lodge of England. At its meeting held on December 13, 1733 (new style), the following resolution was adopted:

Then the Deputy Grand Master opened to the Lodge the Affairs of Planting the new Colony of Georgia in America, and having sent an Account in print of the Nature of such Plantation to all the Lodges, and informed the Grand Lodge That the Trustees had given to Nathaniel Blackerby, Esq., and to himself Commissions under their Common Seal to Collect the Charity of this Society towards enabling the Trustees to send distressed Brethren to Georgia, where they may be comfortably provided for.

Proposed, that it be strenuously recommended by the Masters & Wardens of regular Lodges to make a generous Collection amongst all their Members for that purpose. Which being seconded by Brother Rogers Holland, Esq. (one of the said Trustees), who opened the Nature of the Settlement, and by Sr. William Keith, Bart., who was many years Governour of Pensilvania, by Dr. Desagulier, Lord Southwell, Brother Blackerby, and many others, very worthy Brethren, it was recommended accordingly.

This resolution is apparently responsible for the oft-quoted statement that Masonry existed in Georgia in 1733. Nothing in the resolution, however, indicates that there was a Lodge in Georgia at the time. The first colonists had not yet arrived. The resolution is clearly the first step in a movement to send distressed Brethren at some later time, after the Colony had been established. It is a historical fact that, because of conditions in the Colony after its establishment, any Brethren who might have been sent over with the first expedition would have found themselves seriously embarrassed because of lack of support. This is clearly shown by a resolution adopted by the Grand Lodge of England on March 18, 1734 (new style), which reads as follows:

Resolved, That all the Masters of all regular Lodges who shall not bring in their contributions to charity, do at the next quarterly communication, give the reasons why their respective Lodges do not contribute to the settlement of Georgia.

This resolution makes it seem probable that no Brethren had yet been sent to Georgia by the Grand Lodge of England. It is known, of course, that there were Masons with the first expedition of colonists, but it is also known that those Brethren came from that stratum of English society which permitted them to maintain themselves in their proper estate without help from private or public sources.

It is plain that nothing in the action of the Grand Lodge of England furnishes any basis for assuming that Masonry existed in Georgia in 1733. That the first Lodge of Masons in Georgia was organised at Savannah on February 21, 1734, is fully proved by documentary evidence. The present writer has discovered that evidence and brought the facts to light.

The following resolution appears in the Minutes of a meeting of Solomon's Lodge, No. 1, of Savannah, held on December 21, 1858:

As tradition has informed us that a Masonic Lodge (now Solomon's) was first organised in this city by General Oglethorpe February 10, 1733, we do dedicate Solomon's Lodge New Hall on the 10th of February next, being the 127th anniversary of the organisation of Masonry in Georgia.

This tradition had already existed in Savannah and in Solomon's Lodge for almost a hundred years before it was written into the Minutes of Solomon's Lodge. In fact the origin of it can be traced to a time before the calendar was changed in 1752. When the New Hall was dedicated on February 10, 1859, Mrs. Perla Sheftall Solomon presented Solomon's Lodge with a gavel made from a fragment of the oak under which General James Edward Oglethorpe opened the first Masonic meeting in Georgia. That took place where the town of Sunbury, in Liberty County, later sprang up. The meeting was held while General Oglethorpe was on a scouting expedition along the banks of the Altamaha River. Some two weeks later he returned to Savannah and Solomon's Lodge was organised there at that time.

In one of her letters Mrs. Solomon states that she received the information from her uncle, Sheftall Sheftall. He had obtained it from his father, Mordecai Sheftall. The records of Solomon's Lodge show Sheftall Sheftall to have been a member. Mordecai Sheftall was a member and Past Master of Solomon's Lodge, and Senior Grand Warden of the Provincial Grand Lodge. His father, Benjamin Sheftall, was among the first colonists who came to Georgia in 1733. In 1758 Benjamin Sheftall became Master of Solomon's Lodge. Where Mordecai Sheftall obtained his information may readily be conjectured. Undoubtedly he got it from his father, who was in Georgia at the time when General Oglethorpe organised the Lodge. Further, it is known that for more than forty years Mordecai Sheftall was next-door neighbor to Moses Nunis, who received his First Degree in the Lodge within three weeks after it had been organised by General Oglethorpe. It is hardly likely that, in the course of his Lodge visits and his daily life, Past Master Mordecai Sheftall would have failed to discuss Masonic matters with his father, Past Master Benjamin Sheftall, and with his friend and fellow Lodge member, Moses Nunis. Certainly, during those forty years, Mordecai Sheftall must have got from them some information concerning the organisation of Solomon's Lodge and the beginnings of the Craft in Georgia.

That Moses Sheftall was convinced of the truth of the information he had received, which he in turn gave to the Lodge, is further proved by his actions during the War for Independence. He was captured by the British during the first siege of Savannah and with other Masons confined in a British prison camp near Sunbury, where General Oglethorpe held the first Masonic meeting. During Sheftall's imprisonment, the day of the annual meeting of the Union Society fell out. This was a charitable organisation which maintained Bethesda Orphanage at Savannah. This orphanage, established by Rev. George Whitefield, co-worker with John Wesley, the founder of Methodism, is still maintained by the Union Society, and is the oldest institution of its kind in America. In order to preserve the charter of the Union Society its members had to hold the annual meeting on the prescribed date. Through the mediation of Masons among the British officers, Sheftall and his fellow colonial Masons requested and obtained permission to be escorted to Sunbury on the appointed date. There they held the annual meeting of the Union Society under that same great oak tree where Georgia Masonry had its birth. All these facts are matters of Georgia history.

According to the above account, the actions of those Brethren furnish convincing proof of the truth of the tradition they gave to Solomon's Lodge that its first meeting was held by General Oglethorpe among the great trees of the primeval forest along the banks of the Altamaha River, and that Solomon's Lodge was actually organised on February 10, 1733. It must be remembered that the colonists landed at Savannah on February 1, 1732 (old style), that is, on February 12, 1733 (new style). The problem is to determine whether or not the tradition refers to dates reckoned according to the old calendar or the new.

If February 10, 1733, refers to the new calendar, one year and eleven days must be subtracted from that date in order to reconcile it with the old calendar. When this is done, the date becomes January 30, 1732, which is two days before the date when General Oglethorpe landed at Savannah with the first group of colonists. Plainly, then, the date of the tradition must have been reckoned according to the old calendar. Since this is the case, allowance must be made for the difference between the two calendars. Thus, February 21, 1734, becomes the date upon which Masonry came into existence in Georgia. The Lodge organised by General Oglethorpe at Savannah, on that date, did not take a name until 1776. In that year it became Solomon's Lodge, a name under which it still exists. It is to-day generally recognised by Masonic historians as being the oldest of the remaining original English Lodges in America, since it has never discontinued or lost its original identity. While investigating the beginnings of Masonry in Georgia, the writer discovered some of the Minutes of Solomon's Lodge in the Library of Congress. The British had removed the documents from Savannah when they occupied that town during the War for Independence. When the Americans captured Savannah, towards the close of the war, the fleeing British refugees carried the Minutes to New York. The papers were later found in a collection of manuscripts that the United States Government purchased from Peter Force, a collector.

At a meeting of Solomon's Lodge the writer introduced a resolution identifying the Minutes as the property of Solomon's Lodge and requesting the United States Government to restore them to the rightful owner. Through efforts made by Bro. Walter F. George, United States senator from Georgia and a member of Vienna Lodge, No. 324, and by Bro. Charles G. Edwards, congressman from the First District of Georgia and a member of Landrum Lodge, No. 48, a joint resolution of Congress authorised the return of the Minutes to Solomon's Lodge. This resolution was approved by the House and Senate Committees on the Library and by the Librarian of Congress.

The documents include a Roster of members of Solomon's Lodge in 1757, the year when the Minutes were written. This bears the names of all members from 1733-4 to 1758, and gives the dates when each received his Degrees. The first initiates of the Lodge, that is, the first men to be made Masons in Georgia, are shown to have received the Entered Apprentice Degree in 1733-4. The way in which the dates are written proves conclusively that the Degrees were received during the months of January, February, or March 1733 (old style), 1734 (new style). This, then, is documentary proof that the traditional date of organisation—February 10, 1733—recorded on the Minutes of Solomon's Lodge, refers to the old calendar. According to the calendar now in use, the actual date of organisation was February 21, 1734.

The first name on the Roster is that of Noble Jones, a man of unusual ability, many of whose descendants still live in Savannah. One of the original colonists of Georgia, distinguished alike as the first doctor of medicine and the first man to be made a Mason in the Colony, a devoted patriot, and a prominent figure in early Georgia history, it is fitting that some outstanding facts about him should be set forth here.

An intimate friend of General Oglethorpe, Bro. Jones was naturally active in the military affairs of those days. In 1757 the General made him colonel of the first Georgia militia regiment to be organised, a command that still exists as the Georgia Hussars of Savannah. Nor was military leadership the only position of consequence to which Bro. Jones was appointed. Shortly after the colonists landed, General Oglethorpe commissioned him to oversee the construction of the settlement's first lighthouse, located on Tybee Island, at the mouth of the Savannah River. Bro. Jones further showed his interest in the Colony's welfare by tactfully negotiating with the Indians, in those dark days a constant menace to the colonists, and by building a fort as a protection against invading Spaniards coming from the south. Ruins of that ancient edifice still stand in Wormsloe Plantation, on the Isle of Hope, near Savannah, a tract originally granted to Noble Jones by the King of England and to-day the property of his descendants. As a colonial leader, Bro. Jones was a member of the King's Council during the governorship of Reynolds, of Ellis, and of Wright, and once he was the Council's president. When the original Colony was erected into a Province, he became judge of the first General Court and the first chief justice.

Sometime during the first three months of 1734, when General Oglethorpe was organising Solomon's Lodge, No. 1, of Savannah, Noble Jones was initiated into the Craft. Upon the General's departure from the Colony at the time of his final return to England, Bro. Jones succeeded him as Master of the Lodge, then the only one in Georgia. This position he held in 1756, as fragmentary records of the Lodge show. Since he was succeeded by Bro. Benjamin Sheftall in 1758, it seems reasonable to assume that he also continued as Master throughout 1757. In recognition of his service to the Craft, Lord Petre, Grand Master of England, appointed Bro. Jones to be Provincial Grand Master in 1774, as successor to Gray Elliot, who had left the Province to become Benjamin Franklin's associate at the Court of Saint James. No record indicates, however, that Bro. Jones ever received his Warrant. If he did so, then at least he never used it or even presented it to his Georgia Brethren at the time, for already his health was failing. He died on November 3 of the following year and his body was interred in beautiful Bonaventure Cemetery at Savannah.

Many Brethren do not understand how Lodges came into existence before the first Grand Lodge was organised. Before the days of the Grand Lodge of England the method of forming a Lodge without either Charter or Dispensation is now known as the "Old Customs." Until 1717 no Grand Lodge was in existence to grant Charters. Lodges then existing were (1) remnants of earlier operative guilds of Craftsmen; (2) voluntarily organised groups in military commands; or (3) a group organised wherever a minimum of seven Masons desired to form a Lodge. Any man regarded by the members of such a Lodge as being worthy to receive the Degrees was granted them without undue formality. No such thing as a demit existed. Lack of acquaintance with these facts has long confused many Brethren in Georgia.

When General Oglethorpe and a few of his officers were stationed along the banks of the Altamaha River, some of them desired to form a Lodge. They then did so without further ceremony. Upon their return to Savannah they definitely organised the Lodge, on February 21, 1734, and began conferring Degrees. Since at this time the Grand Lodge of England had already been organised, it was against the laws of that Body to organise a Lodge in such fashion. Nevertheless, the Grand Lodge of England invariably granted a Charter to a Lodge organised under such circumstances. Thus it was that the first Lodge in Georgia was organised according to the Old Customs.

General Oglethorpe himself seems to have been made a Mason in one of the Military Lodges of the British Army before the Grand Lodge of England came into being. He probably received his Degrees while an officer in the army of Prince Eugene, because in those days many British officers came from aristocratic families and were made Masons in the old guilds.

In the early days of the Grand Lodge of England engraved lists giving the name and location of the Lodges constituted under its authority were issued annually. The list for the year 1736 was the first to mention the Lodge at Savannah. Called the Lodge at "Savannah in the Province of Georgia," it is listed as No. 139. This Lodge, later known on the Roll of the Grand Lodge of Georgia as Solomon's Lodge, No. 1, was the second Lodge in America to appear upon such a list. On the list for the year 1737 the Lodge at Savannah continues as No. 139, though the date on which it was constituted is not mentioned. And on the list for 1737, Lodge No. 138 is mentioned as having been constituted on October 30, 1735, Lodge No. 140 as having been constituted on March 1, 1736. The date that appears on the list is March 1, 1735, but since this is according to the old calendar, the date really signifies one year later. Since the date of the founding of the Lodge at Savannah appears on the list between the two dates mentioned above, this indicates that it was constituted between October 30, 1735, and March 1, 1736. Here we have interesting proof of the truth of an old tradition concerning Solomon's Lodge. From the earliest days of Solomon's Lodge there has been a persistent tradition that General Oglethorpe obtained the Lodge's Charter from Viscount Weymouth in 1735, and brought it back to Savannah with him upon returning from his first visit to England after the establishment of the Colony. General Oglethorpe left Savannah on a visit to England on March 23, 1734. He sailed from Charleston, South Carolina, on April 7, 1734. Thus it is clear that he left Savannah somewhat more than a month after organising the Lodge which later became Solomon's Lodge. The records of the Grand Lodge of England do show that the Charter of the Lodge was granted in 1735 by Viscount Weymouth, Grand Master of England. Nearly two years elapsed between the organisation of the Lodge and the date when its Charter was granted. The laws of the Grand Lodge of England required the presence of the Master of the Lodge at the time it was constituted. It would seem that the delay of the Lodge in waiting for the return of General Oglethorpe must have been due to the fact that, being Master of the Lodge, it was necessary for him to be present when the Lodge was constituted. Here, then, is evidence that seems to corroborate another of the Lodge's traditions, namely, that General Oglethorpe was its first Master. On February 5, 1736, General Oglethorpe returned to Savannah. This date coincides with that shown on the 1737 list of the Grand Lodge of England as the date of constituting Solomon's Lodge. It also proves that the Lodge did receive its Charter upon the return of General Oglethorpe, and that it was duly constituted sometime between February 5 and March 1, 1736.

The action of the Lodge in applying to the Grand Master of England for a Charter seems to be conclusive proof that there was no Provincial Grand Master in Georgia from whom a Charter could be obtained. Thus, the action of the Lodge itself clearly refutes the statement in Article I of the Constitution of the Grand Lodge of Georgia that it has "existed since 1733." Had a Provincial Grand Lodge existed in Georgia before Solomon's Lodge applied for its Charter in 1735, the Provincial Grand Master would have granted a Charter to the Lodge. For the existence of a Lodge in the Colony does not at all prove that a Provincial Grand Master was also there. The present writer is convinced that the Grand Lodge of Georgia believed it necessary for a Provincial Grand Master to organise the first Lodge, and on that account states in Article I of its Constitution that the Grand Lodge has "existed since 1733 by virtue of a Warrant issued in 1735." This seems to be a reasonable explanation to account for the statement made in Article I, for it has been shown that the Lodge was organised according to the Old Customs and without semblance of "due constitution."

It will later be proved by documentary evidence that the first Provincial Grand Master of Georgia, Roger High Lacey, was granted his Warrant by Viscount Weymouth on December 2, 1735. This was eight days before General Oglethorpe left England with the Charter for Solomon's Lodge at Savannah. This seems to indicate that General Oglethorpe went to the Grand Master of England and asked that a Provincial Grand Master be appointed in Georgia in order that that Officer might constitute Solomon's Lodge under its Charter, which had been issued a short time before. The correct conclusion seems to be that the Charter and the Warrant of the first Provincial Grand Master of Georgia were issued at the same time by the Grand Master of England.

It is often said that the first Lodge in Georgia was Savannah Lodge. The name "Savannah Lodge" must have originated from designating the first Lodge on the English lists as "the Lodge at Savannah in the Province of Georgia." No record shows that a "Savannah Lodge" existed anywhere in Georgia.

The Lodge at Savannah did not take a name until 1776. Until 1774 it was the Lodge in Georgia, and consequently needed no name to distinguish it. In 1774 Unity Lodge was organised in Savannah, and thus the first Lodge was no longer "the Lodge at Savannah in the Province of Georgia." There were then two Lodges at Savannah, so the first Lodge took the name "Solomon's Lodge" in 1776, and has continued under that name until now.

Solomon's Lodge owns an interesting relic of the days of its organisation. This is a Bible presented to it by General James Edward Oglethorpe, the man who founded the Colony and organised the Lodge. The donor himself wrote on the flyleaf, "Presented by General Oglethorpe, 1733." Oglethorpe left Savannah for England on March 23, 1734 (new style), which was March 12, 1733 (old style). The fact that he wrote "1733" is evidence that the Bible was presented at the time the Lodge was organized and shortly before he left for England, since at that time the old year ended on March 25.

Although the autographed flyleaf of the Bible is missing, the Lodge has affidavits that it was stolen while the book was on exhibition at the Atlanta Exposition in 1881. That the Bible is a historical relic is attested by Robert Wright's Memoir of General James Oglethorpe, published in London in 1867, fourteen years before the autograph was stolen. Wright says that General Oglethorpe gave the book to the Lodge and that it is one of three existing relics of the General, all others having been lost when his English home, Cranham Hall, was destroyed by fire.

Solomon's Lodge owns a fine oil portrait of General Oglethorpe executed by Bro. Richard West Habersham from a miniature given by the General to his friend, James Habersham, a member of the Lodge and the painter's great-grandfather. The portrait has been reproduced to accompany this article.

Now that the circumstances surrounding the organisation of the first Lodge in Georgia have been reviewed, facts concerning the organisation of the Grand Lodge of Georgia, previously unknown, can now be brought to light to reveal a clear record for the first time.

All evidence that has been presented proves that Roger Hugh Lacey, the first Provincial Grand Master of Georgia, was not appointed for the purpose of organising or granting a Charter to the first Lodge in Georgia. The organisation of the first Lodge on February 21, 1734, does not indicate that Lacey was given a verbal Warrant prior to 1734, or that the Warrant was later confirmed by writing in 1735. This assumption was made by M.:W.:Bro. Rockwell in Memoranda, and is also implied in Article I of the Constitution of the Grand Lodge of Georgia, which says that the Grand Lodge of Georgia has existed "since 1733 by virtue of, and in pursuance of, the Warrant granted in 1735."

This assumption appears to be based not only upon the conclusion that Bro. Lacey organised the first Lodge in 1733 (old style) but also upon an error that appeared in the third edition (1805) of Thomas Smith Webb's Monitor. This book says that Masonry in Georgia dates from 1730. M.:W.:Bro. Rockwell quotes this statement in his Memoranda. Bro. Webb corrected the next edition of his Monitor and gave the correct date of Bro. Lacey's Warrant as 1735. M.:W.:Bro. Rockwell apparently did not see the corrected edition of the Monitor, and consequently laboured under a wrong impression.

In the light of all the facts that have been presented, historians generally refuse to accept as correct the statement contained in the Memoranda of M.:W.:Bro. Rockwell in Article I of the Constitution of the Grand Lodge of Georgia. The year 1735 is accepted as the time when Bro. Lacey received his Warrant.

The Colonial Records of Georgia contain no reference to Roger Lacey before the year 1736. In that year he was sent to the town of Augusta, Georgia, to establish a trading-post. He held a commission as captain of the Georgia militia. His death took place on August 3, 1738, and his body was interred with full military honours at Thunderbolt, near Savannah.

The records of the Grand Lodge of England do not show the appointment of Roger Lacey as Provincial Grand Master of Georgia. Since the appointment of a Provincial Grand Master was a prerogative of the Grand Master of England, which did not require the sanction of the Grand Lodge, the Grand Master of England often failed to report his appointments to the Grand Lodge.

What powers were granted to Bro. Lacey by his Warrant is not known. Apparently he had authority to name the Officers of his Provincial Grand Lodge, though he did not have power to name his own successor or to grant his Officers the power to name his successor. Later events clearly indicate that Bro. Lacey's powers were limited so that the Grand Master of England alone could name a successor to him. The exact date of the Warrant issued to Roger Lacey was long unknown because the document itself was thought to have been lost. Although it has remained in obscurity for about a hundred fifty years, the document bearing the date has all that time lain in the archives of the Grand Lodge of Georgia, unknown and unidentified.

While in the Office of the Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of Georgia searching for a document bearing an impression of the seal of the Provincial Grand Lodge, the present writer was asked to examine the seal of another document. Knowing the names of early members of the first Lodge in Georgia, and having knowledge of facts surrounding the principal events in the early history of the Craft in this State, enabled the writer to identify the document at once, and to explain the conditions that surrounded the writing of it. The preamble of the document, an unused Charter, reads as follows:

KNOW YE that we the Honorable Sir Samuel Elbert Esquire Right Worshipful Grand Master of all Masons in the State of Georgia and of all Lodges therein of the most Ancient and Sublime Degree of Royal Scotch Masonry of the Holy Lodge of Saint Andrew, and invested with the order thereof, Past Master of Solomon's and Unity Lodges in Savannah and Member of the Assembly of High Priests of the Royal Arch Brotherhood AND Sir William Stephens Esquire Right Worshipful Deputy Grand Master of all Masons in the State and of all Lodges therein of the like most ancient and sublime degree of Royal Masonry of the Holy Lodge of Saint Andrew and invested with the order thereof, Past Master of Solomon's Lodge aforesaid, Knight of the Red Cross and member of the Assembly of High Priests of the Royal Arch Brotherhood, AND by the concurrence of the Right Worshipful Sir Mordecai Sheftall, Senior Grand Warden of the State, Past Master of Solomon's Lodge aforesaid, Member of the Assembly of High Priests of the Royal Arch Order and Knight of the Red Cross and the Right Worshipful Sir James Jackson Junior Grand Warden of the State, Past Master and Master of Solomon's Lodge, Temporary High Priest of the Assembly of High Priests of the Royal Arch order and Sublime King of the degree of the most Noble order of Knights of the Red Cross in pursuance of the right and succession legally derived from the Most Noble and Right Worshipful Sholto Charles Douglass Lord Aberdour Grand Master of Scotland for the years of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and fifty-seven and one thousand seven hundred and fifty-eight and then Grand Master of England as will appear by his warrant bearing date the tenth day of October in the year one thousand seven hundred and sixty directed to the Right Worshipful Grey Elliott Esquire and renewing the warrant of the Right Worshipful and Most Noble Thomas Thynne Lord Viscount Weymouth the Grand Master of England dated the second day of December in the year one thousand seven hundred and thirty-five directed to the Right Worshipful Hugh Lacey, . . .

This Charter was issued on July 11, 1786, by the Provincial Grand Lodge of Georgia, to George Handley, for the organisation of a Lodge in Augusta. Except for the signature of the Grand Master, Major-General Samuel Elbert, the Charter is complete. Signatures of the other Grand Officers and the seal of the Provincial Grand Lodge are properly affixed to it. The authenticity of the signatures may be established by comparing them with signatures of the same Brethren on the Charter of Solomon's Lodge and on that of Hiram Lodge. Those Charters were granted one year later, after the Grand Lodge had cast off the Provincial Regulations of England and had thus become an independent Body.

The names of the Officers of the Provincial Grand Lodge of Georgia, and the Offices they held during this period, appear on the Minutes of Solomon's Lodge. They are as follows: Major General Samuel Elbert, Grand Master; William Stephens, Deputy Grand Master; Mordecai Sheftall, Senior Grand Warden; Brigadier-General James Jackson, Junior Grand Warden; James Habersham, Grand Secretary; George Handley, Grand Treasurer; Samuel Stirk and John Martin, Grand Stewards.

Minutes of Solomon's Lodge for 1785 show that George Handley, former Grand Treasurer, to whom the Charter was issued, removed to Augusta that year. He had been a member of the Lodge for several years. The Minutes also show that in 1787 he returned to Savannah and visited Solomon's Lodge, for he is designated as Master of Columbian Lodge in Augusta. Thus it appears that George Handley had written to the Provincial Grand Lodge of Georgia asking for a Charter for a new Lodge in Augusta, and that the Charter had been issued. For some reason or other, the Grand Master did not sign the Charter.

The Minutes of Solomon's Lodge for 1785 show that steps were just then being taken to have the provincial Regulations of the Grand Lodge of England set aside and to organise a new and independent Grand Lodge of Georgia. A reasonable explanation of Samuel Elbert's failure to sign the Charter is that he suggested to George Handley a delay in organising the new Lodge until the reconstitution of the Grand Lodge of Georgia should be completed. A Charter could then be obtained from an American Grand Lodge rather than from an English Grand Lodge. It must be remembered, however, that the War for Independence had just ended and that patriotic fervour was intense. That George Handley later obtained a Charter and organised the Lodge is proved by his appearance in Solomon's Lodge in 1787 as Master of Columbian Lodge, a new Lodge in Georgia.

This unused Charter is valuable to the Craft of Georgia since it is the only known document which says that the Warrant of Roger Lacey, first Provincial Grand Master of Georgia, was issued on December 2, 1735, by Viscount Weymouth, Grand Master of England. Also it is the only known document that gives the date of the Warrant of the second Provincial Grand Master of Georgia, Gray Elliott. That date is October 10, 1760.

This Charter is ample evidence that as late as 1786 there were documents in the archives of the Grand Lodge of Georgia which stated these important dates. The dates in the Charter differ in handwriting from the body of the document.

This would seem to indicate that James Habersham, the Grand Secretary, had to consult original documents to refresh his memory of the dates. The documents he consulted must have been the original Warrants of Roger Lacey and of Gray Elliott, or copies of those Warrants in the records of the Provincial Grand Lodge. Most of those documents seem to have been destroyed in Savannah's great fire of 1792, since only a few fragments remain.

Some have believed that there is a break in the historical record of the Grand Lodge of Georgia, due to a possible implication of the 1786 Charter of Solomon's Lodge. It might seem that the second Provincial Grand Master of Georgia, Gray Elliott, obtained his Warrant from Lord Aberdour while the latter was Grand Master of Scotland. Such an implication seems to be further strengthened by the fact that the exact date of the Warrant issued to Gray Elliott is not mentioned. The facts are established, however, by the Charter issued to George Handley, which gives the date of Gray Elliott's Warrant as October 10, 1760. Lord Aberdour was Grand Master of England at that time.

In Article I of the Constitution of the Grand Lodge of Georgia, the name of Major-General Samuel Elbert is omitted from the list of Provincial Grand Masters. This might seem to imply that Samuel Elbert was never legally made Provincial Grand Master of Georgia. Not one fact can be presented, however, to show that the name of Samuel Elbert should be omitted from the list of Provincial Grand Masters of Georgia.

Bearing in mind that many Provincial Grand Masters in America received Warrants containing a provision that empowered the Brethren to elect successors to Provincial Grand Masters in event of their removal from the Province or their inability to serve for some other reason, it is clear that Gray Elliott was given such a Warrant by Lord Aberdour. The Charter issued to George Handley proves this by the statement that "we, the Honorable Sir Samuel Elbert, Esquire, Right Worshipful Grand Master of all Masons in the State of Georgia and of all Lodges therein . . . in pursuance of the right and succession legally derived from the Most Noble and Right Worshipful Sholto Charles Douglass . . . Grand Master of England as will appear by his Warrant . . . directed to the Right Worshipful Gray Elliott, Esquire." This shows that Samuel Elbert was legally elected Grand Master under the authority contained in Gray Elliott's Warrant. It may readily be seen that when Gray Elliott left Georgia in 1774 to join Benjamin Franklin in representing the colonies at the Court of St. James, Bro. Elbert was elected by the Brethren as his lawful successor according to the authority contained in Bro. Elliott's Warrant, a method almost universal in America at the time.

It is true that in 1774 Lord Petre appointed Noble Jones to become Provincial Grand Master of Georgia, but the death of Bro. Jones in 1775, and his failure to use his Warrant, indicates either that he did not receive the Warrant before his death, or that illness prevented his taking the Chair. Bro. Elbert continued legally in office, while the outbreak of the War for Independence seems to have kept the Grand Master of England from making another appointment. It is unfortunate that the omission of Bro. Elbert's name from the list of Provincial Grand Masters in Article I of the Constitution of the Grand Lodge of Georgia has placed a blot upon the record of one so devoted to the service of the Craft. He was an intimate friend of General Washington, and a member of Washington's little Masonic staff in whose members so much faith and trust was placed. After serving with distinction through the bloody battles of the campaigns of the South, he was with General Washington at Yorktown as Quartermaster-General of the Continental troops.

In 1786 when Bro. Elbert surrendered the permanent appointments under the Provincial Regulations of the Grand Lodge of England, to organise the present Grand Lodge of Georgia, the Craft gave him the Jewel of a Past Grand Master and the honoured title, "Father of Independent Masonry in Georgia." At that time the Brethren did not question the legality of Bro. Elbert's position.

All facts thus far considered deal with the history of the Provincial Grand Lodge of Georgia from 1735 to 1786. In 1774 circumstances rapidly tended to develop a situation which was to have its bearing upon the history of the Grand Lodge. The War for Independence was at hand. The records of Georgia Masonry show that at that time and during the period of the war the Brethren tended to break away from the authority of the Grand Lodge of England, just as the patriots resolved to sever relations with the mother country. The scanty Masonic records of the Revolutionary period show that no definite break took place until the close of the War of Independence. In the December 21, 1786, issue of The Gazette of the State of Georgia, a colonial newspaper published at Savannah, a short article says that on the preceding Saturday representatives of the Lodges in the State met the Grand Lodge at their room in the coffee house. At that meeting permanent appointments under the Provincial Regulations of England were voluntarily abolished, and annual elections were decided upon. Major-General Samuel Elbert resigned the Chair, and William Stephens was elected Grand Master. Other Officers elected were: Brigadier-General James Jackson, Deputy Grand Master; Sir George Houstoun, Senior Grand Warden; Thomas Elfe, Junior Grand Warden; James Habersham, Grand Treasurer; Samuel Stirk, Grand Secretary. The newspaper article, with its statement that permanent appointments under the Provincial Regulations of England had been abolished, is further evidence that the Brethren had elected Bro. Elbert to succeed Gray Elliott. The Provincial Regulations in his Warrant authorised the election of his successors until the Warrant should be revoked by the Grand Master of England.

Subsequent to the meeting of December 16, 1786, at which the present Grand Lodge of Georgia was organised, it is clear from the Charter issued to Solomon's Lodge a few days after the meeting, that no final step in the re-organisation of the Grand Lodge was taken until 1796. In that year a Petition for the incorporation of the Grand Lodge was presented to the General Assembly of Georgia. The Act incorporating the Grand Lodge of Georgia was signed by the governor on February 6, 1796. In their Petition to the General Assembly, the Officers of the Grand Lodge stated that "there have existed, and still exist, in this State, divers Lodges or Societies of Freemasons on an ancient establishment, since the year 1735." Here, then, once more and finally, Officers of the Grand Lodge state authoritatively that no Grand Lodge or constituted Lodge of Masons had existed in Georgia before 1735. They knew that neither the first Lodge in Georgia nor the first Grand Master of Georgia had received any form of authority previous to that year. Details have been set forth in this article to show that an unbroken historical record from February 21, 1734, until the present time is based upon facts. In the past, Masonic histories have given small space to Georgia Masonry, for very little was known about it. This sketch first presents to students and historians of Masonry recently discovered facts which give Georgia a prominent place in the history of the Craft in America.

GEORGIA MASONRY IN HISTORY

Groups of Quakers, Lutherans, Puritans, Jews, Roman Catholics, and some few English high churchmen were to be found in the American Colonies during the early days. Those people had come to America to find that religious and political freedom denied them at home. In America each group largely continued the customs and living standards of the mother country. Because of religious and political differences among those groups, it was hardly to be expected that their interests could be so subordinated that the people would fuse into one body having a common interest. Nevertheless this thing was done. The story of the accomplishment is a highly interesting episode of American history. Though histories of the United States tell the story, they do not name the medium that brought about the fusion. The student of history should turn to the record of Freemasonry in America if he would find what he seeks. Freemasonry made possible the establishment of the United States as a great melting pot for the people of the world.

During the Colonial Period, Lodges were formed under the authority of the Grand Lodges of England and Scotland. Men of every faith were in them. Jews, Roman Catholics, Quakers, Anglicans, Lutherans, and Puritans were banded together. An abiding belief in a Creator was the foundation of their faith. The fact that all were bound together by a common faith, and that all had been persecuted for their belief, naturally encouraged in them a desire to practise the principles of religious tolerance. The only instrument offering them the opportunity to meet and encouraging the growth of their desires was Masonry.

Though it was not then permitted, and still is not, to argue religious questions in Masonic Lodges, nevertheless Masonry furnished the only opportunity these men had for gathering sympathetically about one Altar to express a common faith. In early taverns and about early Masonic banquet tables religious differences and religious ideals were often discussed informally. Since nearly all who met at such times had been persecuted, that made them friends and brothers in a common cause. The principles and teachings of Masonry aided and encouraged them in seeking tolerance and personal liberty. The universal desire to worship God according to the dictates of conscience was found to be one of Masonry's foundation stones.

At a later date the English Government's unjust attitude toward the Colonies became a topic of discussion. Since, as Masons, these men met to lay aside religious differences, there slowly developed a demand for the establishment of a nation founded upon the principles of personal liberty and religious freedom which they enjoyed in Masonic Lodges. So it came about that when the War for Independence began, the leaders in that great struggle were largely Masons. Further, the great pronouncements which established the right of this people to govern itself, to have free thought and speech, and to worship God as conscience dictates were largely products of Masonic minds. Masonry was the instrument that welded apparently unrelated groups into a nation having a single purpose, namely, the establishment of a country built upon Masonic principles and Divine truth as Masonry teaches it.

Of all the American Colonies, none was more influenced by Masonry than was Georgia. The establishment of the Colony was a direct outgrowth of Masonic influence. A Mason, General James Edward Oglethorpe visualised a Colony where honest though unfortunate men might have opportunity to start life anew. Though the trustees of the enterprise laid down rules which barred Jews and Roman Catholics from the Colony, the Masonic heart of Oglethorpe persuaded him to disregard that restriction. Immediately after the establishment of the Colony those persecuted people were freely admitted. From that first group of Jews have come many prominent citizens of the State.

In any review of Georgia history it is impossible to separate the factors that influenced the growth of the State from those that directed the growth of the Craft. Men active in developing Colony and State were also guiding lights of Masonry. From the time when the first Board of trustees for governing the Colony was organised in England, that has been true until this present day. As soon as the Colony was established, two of the trustees, Bro. Holland and Bro. Blackerby, called upon the Grand Lodge of England to aid in sending worthy and distressed Brethren to the Colony. Bro. Desagulier, who contributed so much to the Ritual of the Craft, added his support to the movement. General Oglethorpe, who was responsible for the details of colonial organisation, openly gave aid and encouragement to the Craft.

Less than a year after the Colony was organised, Oglethorpe's Masonic character became evident. Through his efforts and leadership the first Lodge was organised in Georgia. To this Lodge the General gave the Great Light of Masonry. Just as the Psalms are the voice of those ancient Jews who through David thanked the Great Creator for His blessings, for releasing His people from bonds of oppression, for leading them into a new country where they might begin life anew, so, too, the Psalms reflect the condition of the first Georgia colonists. Through the efforts of James Edward Oglethorpe, the Mason, they had been released from the debtors' prisons of England and given a new chance in a new world. Thus it was that in Georgia Masonic effort laid the ground work for an expression of Wisdom, Justice, and Toleration, words that later came to be a motto on the Great Seal of the State.

That the early Georgia Brethren were not unmindful of their obligation to the Supreme Architect is shown by their actions in public. Willie Stevens, secretary to General Oglethorpe, says in his journal that in 1736 the first Lodge held a procession on St. John's Day and publicly paraded to the church in Savannah. Some twelve Brethren, wearing Masonic regalia, were in line. Another interesting account of the first Lodge in Georgia is to be found in the diary of the great preacher, Rev. George Whitefield, co-worker with Rev. John Wesley, founder of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Whitefield says that on June 24, 1738, he was invited to preach to the Freemasons of Savannah and was cordially entertained by them. Under date of 1739, William Stevens again says in his journal that members of the Lodge in Savannah attended service at Christ Church and that they were addressed by Rev. Mr. Norris, who followed his predecessors' custom of addressing the members of the Craft once each year. From this it seems that Rev. John Wesley must have set the precedent, since he was the only predecessor of Rev. Mr. Norris. From the time of the arrival of John Wesley, Georgia's first preacher, members of the Craft in Georgia faithfully observed the customs of the Fraternity and dutifully paid public homage to God, the Supreme Architect.

Religious differences did not affect the Craft in Georgia. Among names of the first members of Solomon's Lodge appear those of Jews, Roman Catholics, Lutherans, and Episcopalians. Roman Catholics continued to become Masons until Pope Pius IX published an encyclical in 1857 which prohibited them from uniting with the Fraternity. Though few in number, Masons of colonial Georgia nevertheless laid a firm foundation upon Divine principles.

From 1740 till 1760 the Colony of Georgia passed through trying times. Historians seem to set small store by the fact that Georgia was the only buffer between the rich colonies of New England and the Spanish settlements of Florida. Prior to 1740 Spain had for some time been massing troops preparatory to making a determined attempt to destroy the settlements to the north. Fear and uncertainty beset Georgia colonists. They were fully aware that they would receive the first and strongest attack. Since at that time the colonists could obtain no labourers to work their farms, holdings were restricted to a size that a man and his family could work. Little profit could be made. Acts of the Colony's trustees in England were used by unscrupulous people for fomenting dissension. Even General Oglethorpe's character was assailed. Too, the warlike Indians were a constant menace. Merchants of South Carolina eager for the trade of Georgia colonists unjustly made false statements, and spread discord that caused the Colony's growth to suffer severely. During this period the Masonry of Georgia was also severely affected by conditions. Though fewer than ten names appear on the rolls of the Craft, the loyalty of that little group is indicated by the fact that during all those trying times they made regular reports to the Grand Lodge of England and regularly paid their dues to that Body.

The turn for the better came in 1749. During that year the Spanish menace reached a climax. In one of the bloodiest and most critical battles of early American history, a band of some 400 colonists and loyal Yamacraw Indians, under the inspired leadership and military genius of General Oglethorpe, met several thousand well-equipped Spanish troops at Bloody Marsh and annihilated them. This battle looms large in the military history of America.

As has been explained, warlike Indians were subdued by men directed by the military and diplomatic skill of Bro. Noble Jones, commander of Oglethorpe's militia. Imported slaves furnished labour for agriculture. Bro. James Habersham aided Rev. George Whitefield to build Bethesda Orphanage, now the oldest in America. Bro. Habersham also succeeded in getting the trustees of the Colony to pass laws requiring that slaves be humanely treated. When the first Provincial governor, Sir John Reynolds, arrived in 1751, he chose Bro. James Habersham, Bro. Patrick Houstoun, and Bro. Noble Jones to be members of his King's Council for the government of the Province. Bro. Henry Parker and Bro. John Graham had governed the Province prior to the arrival of Provincial Governor Reynolds. So soon as Governor Reynolds had started the machinery of Provincial government, new responsibilities fell upon members of the Craft in Georgia. Bro. Noble Jones became judge of the first General Court, as has been said. Bro. James E. Powell became judge of the first Admiralty Court; Bro. William Spencer became register of that Court; Bro. John Graham was lieutenant governor of the Province; Bro. Sir Patrick Houstoun was register of grants and receiver of quitrents; Bro. Charles Pryce was a leading lawyer; Bro. Charles Watson was a leader at the bar; Bro. John Graham, Bro. Gray Elliott, Bro. William Wright, Bro. James Edward Powell, and Bro. John Baillie were among the founders of the Presbyterian Church in Savannah. The Province became fully developed under Governor Ellis, who succeeded Governor Reynolds in 1757. Governor Ellis was received in state by members of Solomon's Lodge. They paraded to his home, where a public address was delivered. They had ships in the harbour fire a three-gun salute when they started from the Lodge Hall, another when they arrived at the governor's house, and still another when they left. Governor Ellis reported this celebration to the King of England. The Minutes of Solomon's Lodge carry a detailed record of the affair.

Sir James Wright, Past Grand Master of South Carolina, became Provincial governor in 1760. A man of exceptional ability, he furthered every opportunity for the progress of the Province. He appointed Bro. James Habersham to be president of his Council, and he made the following Masons members of it: Bro. John Graham, Bro. John Morel, Bro. James Parker, Bro. Benjamin Goldwire, Bro. Charles Watson, Bro. Gray Elliott, Bro. Sir Patrick Houstoun, Bro. Noble Jones, and Bro. James Edward Powell.

In Georgia, as in many of the other Provinces, the " Sons of Liberty " was organised at about that time. The organisation was led by Bro. Noble Wimberley Jones, Bro. Joseph Habersham, Bro. George Walton, and Bro. John Houstoun. This group banded together to guard the best interests of the Province against the unjust laws of the mother country. Steps which they took included protests against the Stamp Act, support of the Massachusetts Colony, whose "circular" voiced the grievances of all Colonies against the acts of England, and finally agreement to forbid the importation of taxed products into the Province. This group of patriots obtained the support of the Provincial Assembly, and thus aroused Governor Wright's wrath.

According to the usual procedure, the Assembly chose a speaker in 1770. Bro. Noble Wimberly Jones was elected. Because he was a leader of the "Sons of Liberty," Governor Wright refused to accept him and forthwith ordered another election. Again Jones was elected, this time unanimously, and again the governor refused to accept him. The Assembly's refusal to elect a speaker other than Bro. Jones and dissatisfaction with the English Government throughout the Province, led Governor Wright to dissolve the Assembly and go to England for a rest. Bro. James Habersham, president of the Council, directed the affairs of the Province during the governor's absence.

At the time events in Georgia were fast shaping themselves towards the outbreak of the War for Independence, and the majority of Masons in the Province were openly and actively sympathising with the patriots. Just after Governor Wright returned from England, the Boston Port Bill was passed by the English Parliament. Then the famous speeches of Edmund Burke and Lord Chatham awakened echoes in Georgia. On July 29, 1774, Bro. N. W. Jones, Bro. John Houstoun, and Bro. George Walton called a meeting of the citizens of Savannah to discuss the situation. Despite dire threats made by Governor Wright, citizens met, approved the Boston Tea Party, and endorsed the actions of Massachusetts patriots. Those present even agreed to contribute 500 barrels of rice to the Boston patriots. Among Masons who were active on the occasion were Bro. John Morel, Bro. H. Bourquine, Bro. Joseph Habersham, Bro. George Walton, Bro. N. W. Jones, and Bro. John Houstoun.

Following the meeting, Governor Wright circulated a protest throughout the Province. In it he belittled the action of the citizens. Because Georgians were apart from events that were inflaming northern patriots, because they were only slightly affected by those events, they showed little interest. Many Georgians who became ardent patriots as soon as they learned the facts even signed Governor Wright's protest at the time.

When news of the battle of Lexington reached Savannah, Bro. Joseph Habersham, Bro. N. W. Jones, Bro. George Walton, and Bro. James Jackson waited till nightfall and then broke into the powder magazine of the English. The powder was carried to a hiding place and later sent to Boston, where it was used by the Colonists at the battle of Bunker Hill.

During that troubled time many posts of honour and responsibility were held by the Masons of Georgia. Bro. James Habersham, Bro. John Graham, Bro. Gray Elliott, and Bro. J. E. Powell were counsellors. Bro. Noble Jones, Bro. Sir Patrick Houstoun, Bro. John Simpson, Bro. Thomas Vincent, Bro.

Edward Barnard, and Bro. N. W. Jones were members of the General Assembly. Bro. Charles Watson and Bro. Matthew Roche were provost marshals. Bro. Charles Pryce was notary. Bro. William Stephens, later Grand Master of Georgia, was clerk of the Assembly. Bro. James Whitfield was quartermaster. Bro. George Walton and Bro. John Houstoun were solicitors. Bro. Sir Patrick Houstoun was justice of the peace. Bro. Charles Pryce was deputy register and examiner in chancery. Bro. John Simpson was clerk of the House. Bro. Moses Nunis was searcher for the Port of Savannah. Bro. Samuel Elbert, Grand Master of Georgia, Bro. Joseph Habersham, Bro. George Houstoun, and Bro. William Stephens were captains of militia.

On June 17, 1775, at the meeting of those Savannah citizens who had decided to stand with the other colonists, Bro. John Simpson, Bro. N. W. Jones, Bro. Josiah Tattnall, Bro. John Graham, Bro. George Houstoun, Bro. J. E. Powell, Bro. Francis Courvoisie, and Bro. William O'Bryan were participants. The first Council of Safety, organised five days later, included the Grand Master of Georgia, Samuel Elbert; Bro. Joseph Habersham, Bro. George Walton, Bro. George Houstoun, and Bro. John Morel.

The first Provincial Congress met in Savannah on July 4, 1775, with Bro. George Walton as its secretary. The Congress took over the government of the Province and ordered the arrest of Governor Wright. Among the members of this Congress were Bro. N. W. Jones, Bro. Joseph Habersham, Grand Master Samuel Elbert, Bro. John Houstoun, Bro. Oliver Bowen, Bro. George Houstoun, Bro. John Martin, Bro. William O'Bryan, Bro. Matthew Roche, Bro. George Walton, Bro. John Morel, and Bro. William Maxwell. Bro. N. W. Jones and Bro. John Houstoun were two of the four delegates sent to the Continental Congress. There those delegates voted to make Georgia one of the Original Thirteen States.

Governor Wright, whose arrest had been ordered by the Provincial Congress, was taken into custody by Bro. Joseph Habersham of the Georgia militia. An interesting sidelight to this incident was an occurrence that took place after the governor had been made a prisoner in his own home. Since Wright had been the Grand Master of Masons in South Carolina, and since he was acquainted with Georgia members of the Craft, it was only natural that the Savannah Brethren should desire that the governor escape to the British forces. In order to encourage him to do so, they casually fired shots through his house until he became fearful for his safety. Presently he made a break to escape, and no attempt was made to detain him as he made his way to an English ship in the river. Thus the patriots were rid of a liability.

On July 10, 1775, a British ship laden with gunpowder was captured by American forces commanded by Bro. Oliver Bowen and Bro. Joseph Habersham when it arrived at the mouth of the Savannah River. This was the first naval capture of the War for Independence. Early the next year, on February 28, 1776, two English men-of-war and a transport sailed up the Savannah River and attempted to capture some colonial rice ships lying there. During the night, 300 English soldiers landed on an island in the river, then boarded and took possession of the rice ships. At once all adult males in Savannah were called to arms. Presently one of the British ships went aground in the darkness. Before it could be floated clear, it was fired upon by troops under command of Bro. Joseph Habersham, and many of its crew were killed or wounded. Then a rice ship was manned by troops under command of Bro. Oliver Bowen, Bro. James Jackson, and Bro. John Morel, and floated down past the rice ships that had been captured by the British. Set afire, this vessel drifted toward the British ships. The outcome of this little plot and counterplot was that six British-held rice ships were burned, three were captured, and two were set adrift by the American attack. Americans captured during the fight were at once released when the British learned that the patriots of Savannah had arrested all members of the King's Council and were holding them as hostages. Those arrests were ordered by the Council of Safety at the order of Grand Master of Masons, Samuel Elbert.

Bro. John Houstoun had by this time been elected first governor of Georgia by the newly formed Provincial Congress. With Bro. George Walton, Bro. Button Gwinnett, and Bro. Lyman Hall he attended the meeting of the Continental Congress at which the Declaration of Independence was written, and there the three men signed that immortal document. Bro. John Houstoun who was also in attendance at the meeting of the Continental Congress, was called back to Georgia just before the document was ready for signatures.

The year 1776 saw the beginning of actual warfare in Georgia. British troops in Florida began a movement northward, and although the Americans were greatly outnumbered they engaged the British at Midway Church, in Liberty County, and there fought a bloody but losing battle. In this engagement Bro. James Jackson and Bro. John Habersham distinguished themselves.

The British siege of Savannah took place on December 27, 1778, the Americans being commanded by General Howe, who failed to take the advice of Bro. George Walton, one of his colonels, that he should defend the rear guard of his troops. Colonel Samuel Elbert, Grand Master of the Masons of Georgia, was in command of the line troops. Although greatly outnumbered, the Americans ably defended the city until the British crossed an unprotected marsh in the rear and surprised them. The battle would have been a rout for the Americans had it not been for the courage of Bro. Samuel Elbert, Bro. George Walton, and Bro. Joseph Habersham. Bro. Elbert held his troops on the left until the right and centre had retreated safely. Bro. Habersham kept his guns in action until every one of his men was either killed or wounded. Bro. Walton kept his troops in line and so protected the retreating Americans. All three of these Brethren were severely wounded, and Bro. Walton carried a grape shot in his thigh until the day of his death, some years later.

After the capture of Savannah the British published a list of leading rebels on which appeared the names of Grand Master Samuel Elbert, Bro. John Houstoun, Bro. N. W. Jones, Bro. Mordecai Sheftall, the "Great Rebel" and Senior Grand Warden; Bro. William O'Bryan, Bro. George Walton, Bro. William Stephens, Deputy Grand Master and later Grand Master of Georgia; Bro. John Habersham, Bro. Sheftall Sheftall, Bro. Benjamin Lloyd, Bro. Samuel Stirk, later Grand Secretary; Bro. Oliver Bowen, Grand Steward; Bro. Joseph Habersham, and Bro. Sir Patrick Houstoun. Tradition tells that Bro. Sir Patrick Houstoun kept the Oglethorpe Bible hidden in his home to prevent its being carried away from Solomon's Lodge Hall by British looters.

A year later, with the aid of the French fleet, the Americans attempted to recapture Savannah. One of the bloodiest battles of the War for Independence was a result of this attempt. In this battle nearly all the Brethren named above again served loyally. After the disastrous siege of Savannah had been abandoned by the Americans, but only after thousands of men had been sacrificed, the patriots of Georgia joined forces with General Nathanael Greene and General "Mad Anthony" Wayne. Throughout the guerilla campaigns of those two leaders, whose troops bit steadily into the strength of the British in the South, Masonic Brethren served with distinction. The Minutes of Solomon's Lodge of Savannah contain references to meetings of the Lodge while its members were with the Continental troops. Largely through the military skill of Bro. General James Jackson, Junior Grand Warden, the city of Augusta was taken from the British. Letters and diaries still available tell of attempts on the life of this Brother by British spies. He it was who maintained the spirit of Georgia patriots during those dark months of privations and suffering. Bro. Jackson brought his troops into lower Georgia and struck telling blows at the British, who firmly held that part of the State. Using guerilla tactics, his men burned the property of the British governor, and so successful was this campaign that Governor Wright soon sought peace. The governor originated a clever scheme to sow discord among the ranks of the weary and starving patriots. He proposed to make peace on condition that the British retain property held by them, the Americans also to hold the property they occupied. This was tempting bait for the ragged patriot troops. Bro. George Walton destroyed the effectiveness of the proposal, however, by circulating a pamphlet he had prepared, which disclosed the cunning of the enemy. Governor Wright's peace offer was flatly refused.

By this time General Nathanael Greene had begun a campaign that was to result in clearing the South of the British. One of his most dependable commanders was General Samuel Elbert, Grand Master of Georgia Masons. General Greene's little army met the British at Briar Creek. In the ensuing battle the right and centre broke, but the left wing, under General Elbert, held firm until every one of his men was out of the action through capture, wounds, or death. Bro. Elbert himself was severely wounded, and while lying on the battlefield he gave a Masonic sign that was recognised and answered by a British officer, who dragged him to safety. Bro. Elbert was later released in an exchange of prisoners. He then went North and joined his friend, General Washington, who placed him in command of the central ammunition depot at Yorktown.

The patriots having cleared the State of British forces and being then in control of the situation, the British decided to evacuate Savannah in 1782. General Anthony Wayne selected Bro. Major John Habersham to enter the city and arrange the terms of surrender. The American troops voted for the officer whom they wanted to represent them and to receive the formal note of surrender, and this honour was given to Bro. General James Jackson, later Grand Master of Georgia Masons. After the surrender took place, command of the city was given to him by General Wayne.

Now that a Nation and a State had come into being, the activities of Masonic Brethren in the events that came with the establishment of government upon a sound basis forms an interesting episode. Bro. William Pierce, Bro. William Houstoun, Bro. George Walton, and Bro. Nathaniel Pendleton were delegates to Congress during the drafting of a Constitution for the newly formed United States. The Convention called in Georgia for ratifying the Constitution included Bro. William Stephens, Bro. Joseph Habersham, Bro. James Powell, Bro. George Handley, and Bro. Henry Osborne. Bro. John Houstoun became the first mayor of Savannah in 1790, and the eight mayors following him were also Masons.

George Washington visited Savannah in 1791. On the committee appointed to receive him on behalf of the people were Bro. N. W. Jones, Bro. John Houstoun, and Bro. Joseph Habersham. Bro. Habersham as Postmaster General of the United States, was a member of the Cabinet of the first President. The Grand Lodge of Georgia visited the President in a body to deliver their address of welcome. President Washington cordially received them and then spoke to them. The Master's chair of Solomon's Lodge Hall was in use at that time, and in it the President sat during the ball held in his honour.

To the glory of Georgia Masons they have served their State and Nation well. As servants of the Commonwealth they have rarely failed to impress the public with their pride in Masonic membership. Publicly acknowledging themselves as Masons, they have furnished the great majority of those who have given the State of Georgia its being. Aware of the intimate relationship between the history of the State and the history of the Craft, all citizens to-day recognise the two as inseparable.

To continue with the record of the Colony, Province, and State would be only to repeat an account of the way in which the members of the Craft have intimately written their names into our glorious history. A great majority of men who in later years have fought to lead our people in the path of right, who have died upon the field of battle, who have served ably and creditably in all the public activities of Georgia, have been loyal and interested members of the Craft. Nearly 70,000 of them now labour in the places of those few who made the beginning. They have not failed to uphold the record of the Fraternity in teaching Georgians the great principles of Brotherly Love, Relief, and Truth.

FREEMASONRY IN THE HAWAIIAN ISLANDS

JOHN WICHER

THE oldest Lodge west of the Missouri River is Le Progrès de l'Océanie Lodge, located at Honolulu, Island of Hawaii. It was organized in 1841 on the whaling bark Ajax, then lying in the harbour of Honolulu, Sandwich Islands, by Captain Le Tellier, master of the ship, who held a Commission from the Supreme Council of France "to set up Lodges in the Pacific Ocean and elsewhere in his voyages; to issue Warrants; to call upon the Supreme Council for Charters; to make Masons at sight; to forever be given the Grand Honours upon his appearance in any Lodge of his creation." The membership was originally composed of American, English, Irish, Scotch, French, German, Italian, Central American, and South American Masons, and the Work was restricted to the three Craft Degrees. The Lodge was granted a Charter bearing the date of April 8, 1842, and the title Le Progrès de l'Océanie Lodge, No. 124. The Lodge continued under French obedience until October 1905, when its original allegiance was surrendered to the Grand Lodge of California. It is still flourishing as Lodge No. 371. In 1916 the Grand Lodge of California gave formal permission to the Lodge to retain a part of the old French Ritual in the Third Degree.

During the early days of the kingdom of Hawaii, royalty was active in Masonic affairs. King Kamekameha IV received the Degrees of Masonry in Le Progrès de l'Océanie Lodge during January and February 1857. He was Master of the Lodge in 1858, in 1860, and in 1861. He died on November 30, 1863. His successor, King Kamekameha V, was also an active member, as was Prince Leleiohoka. David Kalakaua received his First Degree on March 25, 1859, on which occasion King Kamekameha IV acted as Master. The Third Degree was conferred upon him, on July 28, 1859, and he was elected Master of the Lodge on November 29, 1875. This Brother was crowned as King Kalakaua I on February 12, 1883. His Masonic Brethren were special guests at the coronation ceremony. He died in 1891. John Dominus, "Prince Consort," the husband of Queen Liliuokalani, was made a Mason in 1858 and served as Master of the Lodge in 1862, 1863, and 1867. Prince David Kawanakoa of the Kalakaua dynasty was made a Mason in 1900.

In September 1848, the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts issued a Dispensation for a Lodge at Honolulu, but the Lodge was never organized. Fire having destroyed many old archives of the Massachusetts Grand Lodge, nothing can now be learned concerning the final disposition of this Dispensation.

The first Lodge to be formed in the Hawaiian Islands by the Grand Lodge of California was Hawaiian Lodge, No. 21, at Honolulu. The Charter is dated May 5, 1852. The Lodge has had a continuous existence.

Stevenson wrote in January, 1899: ". . . H. M. [King Kalakana] (who is a gentleman of a courtly order and much tinctured with letters) is very polite; I may possibly ask for a position of palace doorkeeper."

At Wailuku, Island of Maui, a Lodge was formed on July 10, 1872, by Dispensation from the Grand Master of California, and a Charter was granted making it Maui Lodge, No. 223. The Charter was surrendered in 1877. In 1904 the Brethren on the Island of Maui secured a Charter from the Grand Lodge of Scotland and established the meeting-place of their Lodge at Kahului. This Lodge continued active until 1918, when, by permission of the Grand Lodge of Scotland, it transferred its allegiance to the Grand Lodge of California. Like all the other Lodges of the Hawaiian Islands, Maui Lodge, No. 472, is generous in its relief work.

Pacific Lodge No. 822 was organised in January 1895, by Dispensation from the District Grand Lodge of Queensland, Scottish Constitution, and was granted a Charter by the Grand Lodge of Scotland on August 1, 1895. In 1909 the Brethren reorganised as Honolulu Lodge, No. 409, under a Charter from the Grand Lodge of California. The next Lodge to be formed in the "Paradise of the Pacific" was Kilauea Lodge, No. 330, located at Hilo, Island of Hawaii. Its Charter is dated October 15, 1897.

The largest United States military reservation, Schofield Barracks, on the Island of Oahu, boasts of a splendid Lodge, Schofield Lodge, No. 443, under obedience to the Grand Lodge of California. Its Charter is dated October 14, 1914. The membership is almost exclusively composed of men in the armed service of the United States, and the meetings are very enjoyable. It is the only place on the reservation where the husbands of "Judy O'Grady and the Colonel's lady" can meet socially. It is true there as it was in Kipling's Mother Lodge; "Outside: Sergeant! Sir! Salute! Inside: Brother."

At Lihue, on the "garden isle," Kauai, is located Kauai Lodge, No. 589, Chartered by the Grand Lodge of California on October 15, 1924.

The last Lodge formed in the Hawaiian Islands was Pearl Harbour Lodge, No. 589, whose Charter is dated October 15, 1924. It meets at Honolulu, on the Island of Oahu.

The membership of the eight California Lodges in the group of islands comprising the Territory of Hawaii aggregates 1900, all masters of the peculiarly cordial hospitality for which the islanders are noted. Of rare beauty and infinite in its attractions, the land is aptly called the "Paradise of the Pacific." Though the social and economic problems there are difficult of solution because of the diverse interests of the polyglot population, the Territory's people generally are of the salt of the earth and its Masonry is honourable and influential for good.

FREEMASONRY IN IDAHO

JOHN H. MYER

JURISDICTION of the Grand Lodge of Washington, organised in 1858, at first covered the region now known as Idaho. Since it was easier to communicate with Oregon than with Washington Territory, the Masons of Idaho Territory found it preferable to act with Oregon Masonry rather than with that of Washington when they desired to organise Lodges. Consequently, upon the recommendation of Wasco Lodge, No. 10, of Oregon, and after the usual preliminaries, a Charter was issued on June 21, 1864, for the formation of a Masonic Lodge at Bannock, later known as Idaho City. This was called Idaho Lodge, No. 35. On June 20, 1865, the Grand Lodge of Oregon also issued a Charter to the Masons of Boise City for a Lodge to be known as Boise Lodge, No. 37, and on the same day it granted a Charter to the Masons of Placerville, Idaho, for a Lodge to be known as Placer Lodge, No. 38. On September 21, 1867, the Grand Lodge of Washington issued a Charter to the Masons of Pioneerville for a Lodge to be known in that Jurisdiction as Pioneer Lodge, No. 12. The Masons of Silver City, Idaho, received a Dispensation from the Grand Lodge of Oregon on July 21, 1866, and in 1867 they were operating under that Dispensation.

On December 16, 1867, at two o'clock in the afternoon, a Convention of the Free and Accepted Masons delegated by the several Lodges in the Idaho Territory assembled at the Masonic Hall in Idaho City. Their purpose was to establish a Grand Lodge for the Territory. George H. Coe, a Past Master, was called to the Chair, and P. E. Edmondston, Worshipful Master of Idaho Lodge, No. 35, was appointed Secretary. Acting upon a motion made by Bro. L. F. Cartee, a Committee on Credentials was appointed. It consisted of the following Worshipful Masters of Lodges represented in the Convention: P. E. Edmondston, G. W. Paul, George T. Young, and S. B. Connelly. On December 17 the Committee on Credentials found that Representatives of Lodge No. 35, Lodge No. 37, and Lodge No. 38, which were under the Oregon Jurisdiction, and the Representative of Lodge No. 12, which was under the Jurisdiction of Washington Territory, were entitled to seats in the Convention. The Committee also recommended that Bro. L. P. Mikkelson, Worshipful Master of Owyhee Lodge, then under Dispensation, be admitted to a seat in the Convention and to a vote, as an act of courtesy. At that same meeting, Bro. L. F. Cartee offered three resolutions that were adopted. The first of these was to the effect that the four Lodges were empowered to organise a Grand Lodge. The second to the effect that a Lodge of Master Masons be called for the purpose of organising the Grand Lodge. The third to the effect that an election of Grand Officers be held. The following Officers were then chosen: M.: W.: George H. Coe, as Grand Master; R.: W.: G. W. Paul, as Deputy Grand Master; R.: W.: A. Haas, as Senior Grand Warden; R.: W.: George T. Young, as Junior Grand Warden; R.: W.: S. B. Connelly, as Grand Treasurer; R.: W.: P. E. Edmonston, as Grand Secretary; R.: W.: I. B. Curry, as Senior Grand Deacon; R.: W.: John Merrill, as Junior Grand Deacon. The Constitution of the Grand Lodge of Oregon, with necessary modifications, was adopted for the use of this new Grand Lodge. Thus the greater part of four days was devoted to laying the foundation of the structure which was to grow and mature as the years passed.

Just 200 Masons were enrolled in the 5 Lodges, and of those 70 belonged to Idaho Lodge, No. 1. The non-affiliate was early given attention by the adoption of a resolution to the effect that failure to contribute an amount equal to the regular dues of a member would deprive him of all rights and privileges of membership.

The second session of the Grand Lodge was held on June 22, 1868. Because all correspondence had been destroyed by a fire, the address of the Grand Master was very brief. All Officers except Bro. Jonas W. Brown were retained in their original positions. He was elected to be Senior Grand Warden. The fee for affiliation was abolished, but the non-affiliate was requested to contribute an amount equal to the dues of a member.

In 1869 the Session of the Grand Lodge was held on October 4. The first Roster, published that year, showed an increase of seventy-nine members and recorded only two deaths. At this Session the most momentous legislation ever enacted by the Grand Lodge of Idaho was put upon the records. It was the result of a resolution offered by Bro. L. F. Cartee that the sum of one dollar be collected annually from each member and placed in a fund to be known as "The Grand Lodge Orphan Fund." Payments were "to provide an irreducible fund, the interest of which is to be applied to the support and education of orphans of deceased Brethren or children of indigent Masons whom this Grand Lodge may deem worthy of said Masonic assistance." The resolution was unanimously adopted. Two years later (1871) the Grand Master stated that he thought the measure premature, and suggested that the plan be abandoned. The Committee to which this matter was referred reported that the fund even then amounted to $432. Joseph Pinkham, Chairman of the Committee, insisted that the fund be maintained and that was done. At the end of another two years (1873), the Grand Master suggested in his address that the "Orphan Fund" be merged with the "General Fund." Again Bro. Joseph Pinkham saved the day. This time he showed that the "Orphan Fund" was not at all needed for other purposes. As long ago as 1906 the annual levy for this fund was reduced from one dollar to fifty cents per member. Now Idaho's "Grand Lodge Orphan Fund" amounts to more than $158,000.

Though temperance, first named of the Cardinal Virtues, should properly apply to all manner of excess, nevertheless, in Idaho, as elsewhere, it usually refers chiefly to the use of alcoholic drinks. In early days, when the main pursuit of Masons and others in Idaho was placer gold mining, conditions were favourable to the prevalence of the habits of gambling and liquor drinking. George H. Coe, Idaho's first Grand Master, was a wholesale liquor dealer. Jonas W. Brown, the second Grand Master, sometimes played cards and had also been known to drink some. Later in life, however, he became a total abstainer who wanted all others to refrain from drinking. In his annual address as Grand Master in 1872, Bro. Brown touched upon the topic of Masons as saloon keepers. The Grand Lodge supported his contention that a professional gambler and saloon keeper should not have been elected to the office of Junior Warden in any Lodge, though that had already been done. Then Bro. Brown issued an order stating that Masons engaged in the saloon business should dispose of their establishments or suffer the consequences of their failure to do so. The feeling caused by this order was general and pronounced. Many contended that, if a man were acceptable when made a Mason, then, regardless of his business, his status as a Mason was definite. Further, it was contended that the matter of putting a man out of the Fraternity, and keeping him out of it in the first instance, were two entirely different propositions. Many held to the theory that if a man had been good enough to be taken into the Fraternity, then he was also good enough to stay in it. The final result of all this discussion was that saloon keepers were gradually eliminated. Some sold their establishments then and there. Eventually death removed from the Order those who had seen fit to continue in the liquor business.

During the early years in Idaho Territory, the commonest medium of exchange was gold dust. This varied in value from one locality to another. It could be manipulated to personal advantage by the adept. Gold coin was difficult to obtain, and gold bars, though satisfactory for larger transactions, were useless in small ones. In consequence of these conditions, at the Session of 1874 it was "on motion ordered that the United States currency be the basis of account with the subordinate Lodges, and that the accounts of the Grand Lodge be kept in accordance therewith."

As early as the second Session of the Grand Lodge (1868), it was resolved "that the Most Worshipful Grand Master of this body be required to have a life-sized photograph of himself, as soon as practicable after Installation, for this Grand Lodge; and the Grand Treasurer is authorised to pay for the same upon presentation of an order by the Grand Secretary, who is hereby authorised to draw the same." The resolution has been faithfully complied with. The walls of the Masonic Temple in Boise, Idaho, now display portraits of the fifty-seven Brethren whom the Grand Lodge of Idaho has seen fit to honour.

In earlier days there was a rule that a Master or Warden of a subordinate Lodge might not enjoy a Grand Lodge elective office while holding one of the chief offices in his own Lodge. This custom was largely responsible for Bro. Stevenson's being four times elected Grand Master. When Grand Master in 1886, Bro. George H. Davis decided that the Masters and Wardens of Blue Lodges were eligible to hold office in the Grand Lodge, and that their election to the higher office vacated their tenure of office in the local Lodge. For the last thirty years promotion to elective offices has been customary. So, too, has advancement from the appointive offices. There is, however, no hard and fast rule about these matters. Until 1895 the office of Deputy Grand Master was appointive. At that time the Constitution was amended so as to make the office elective.

In 1917 the Grand Lodge adopted a uniform code of By-Laws for the use of its constituent Lodges. These By-Laws provide that a man who continues to be a non-affiliated Mason for a period of six months cannot sit in Lodge more than three times, unless he contributes an amount equal to the monthly dues of the Lodge which he visits. Nor can he appear in any Masonic procession or be entitled to Masonic charity. Nor shall he have Masonic burial. Further, if he continue to be unaffiliated, or refuse to contribute, he shall be deemed a drone in the hive of Masonry, a useless member of society, and unworthy of our protection as Masons. The By-Laws also decree that no Grand Officer, Past Grand Officer, or Past Master shall be represented in the Grand Lodge by proxy. No Mason except one who has attained to the Degree of Past Master, and is at the time a member of some Lodge in this Jurisdiction, shall be eligible to any elective Office in the Grand Lodge except that of Most Worshipful Grand Master. He may be elected from the Body of the Craft. Although this provision is as old as Idaho Masonry, the Office of Grand Master has always been filled without looking for material in the Body of the Craft. The By-Laws also stipulate a year's residence in the Jurisdiction before a candidate is permitted to petition for Degrees, and membership is restricted to a single Lodge.

In the early history of Idaho Masonry there was entire lack of uniformity in the Work. Among the various Lodges this was especially the case so far as pertained to the conferring of Degrees. In 1887 Bro. Davis, then Grand Master, submitted a resolution calling for an exemplification of a particular Work on the first day of the following Session. When the next Session met the Committee reported but no exemplification took place. It was some ten years later that Bro. Anderson, Grand Lecturer of California, visited Idaho and gave instructions which led to the establishment of uniform Work and the publication of a monitor. Since that time the office of Grand Lecturer has been maintained. It has been filled by eleven different Brothers, some of whom have served only a single term, though one of them, Bro. William B. Goodheart, has served thirteen years.

IDAHO'S GRAND MASTERS

George H. Coe, first Grand Master of Idaho Freemasonry, died of a cancerous infection on December 17, 1873. The record does not give the date of his birth. In an address of 1874 Grand Master Kennaly in part said: "It is the nature of our common humanity that, one by one, we should yield to the mandate of relentless death and enter upon the final rest. Not one of us may go forth from this meeting and not feel that, ere another, we may be summoned to join the innumerable caravan that moves to that mysterious realm where each shall take his chamber in the silent halls of death. In sadness I announce the death of our beloved brother, Past Grand Master George H. Coe, who died in the city of San Francisco on the 17th day of December, 1873. Bro. Coe, the first Grand Master of this Grand Lodge, served this Body faithfully for two terms. He possessed a generous heart that overflowed with kindness to his fellow men. As a presiding Officer he was dignified and impartial. His urbanity and gentlemanly manner endeared him to a host of friends. Green be his memory. You will need no incitement from me to place upon your records such a tribute as shall show your appreciation of his many sterling qualities as a man and Mason."

Jonas Warren Brown was elected Grand Master in 1879. He died on September 15, 1916, less than one day after the close of the annual session of the Grand Lodge for that year. The Committee appointed at the next session after Bro. Brown's death reported the following as having been written by him on July 11, 1916: "My father and mother, named Samuel Brown and Lydia Brown, were of North Danvers, Massachusetts. They moved to Roscoe, Coshocton County, Ohio, about the year 1841. They lived at Keokuk (Iowa), until the spring of 1853. I crossed the plains with an ox team in 1853, and stopped at Shasta for about one year. I then moved to Deadwood (California), near Yreka, and the following year I worked at mining. In 1855 I was elected county clerk of Siskiyou County, on the 'Know-Nothing' ticket. I was an old-line Whig in politics. I served as under sheriff under F. C. Horsley. I paid out $11,000 in surety notes, got broke, went to Sacramento Valley, and then to Florence, Idaho, to try again. A man who knew nothing about the business was elected county clerk, so he appointed me deputy with the understanding that he would go mining and would divide with me. I was afterwards appointed under sheriff. The treasurer got tired and appointed me deputy-treasurer, so I had charge of the whole thing. I ran the business of the county, and in the fall closed up the business of the county, having all debts paid and $400 in the treasury for the next year. My record for that year was very highly praised by courts and attorneys. Of that I am quite proud. I came across the country to Idaho City and arrived there on August 13, 1863. I lived in Idaho City nineteen years. Then, on October 2, 1882, I came to Boise. Here I have lived ever since. I united with the Methodist Episcopal Church when I was thirteen years of age. I am an acceptable member of it now."

Bro. Brown was born on June 27, 1825, at Roscoe, Ohio. In January 1849, he was made a Master Mason in Eagle Lodge, No. 12, of Keokuk, Iowa. Later he affiliated with St. John's Lodge of Yreka, California. Demitting from St. John's Lodge, he became a Charter member of Howard Lodge, No. 96. His membership in Idaho was first in Idaho Lodge, No. 37, under the Oregon Jurisdiction, then in Idaho Lodge, No. 1, and later in Boise Lodge, No. 2, both under Idaho Jurisdiction. In 1857 he received the Council and Chapter Degrees in Yreka, California, and the next year he received the Degree of Knight Templar in Sacramento. Later he helped organise Idaho Commandery, No. 1 at Boise. Space will not permit the inclusion of many other interesting facts that might be related about this extraordinary man and Mason.

John Kennaly, who was born at Niagara Falls, New York, on August 29, 1833, died December 13, 1918. Fifty-five of his sixty-two years in Masonry were passed in Idaho. In 1856 he was made a Mason in Milwaukee Lodge, No. 3, of Milwaukee, Wisconsin. Later he belonged, successively, to Prairie du Chien Lodge, of Prairie du Chien, Wisconsin; to Willamette Lodge, of Willamette, Oregon; and to Boise Lodge, No. 37, of Boise, Idaho. He was Master of the Boise Lodge while it was under Dispensation. He received the Degrees of Royal Arch Masonry in Wisconsin Chapter, No. 7 during October 1856, and took the Orders of Knighthood in Idaho Commandery during 1883. Bro. Kennaly was a genial gentleman, who delighted to regale the Brethren with the story of his life and experience. He was well versed in the Work of the Blue Lodge.

Lars P. Mikkelson, who in 1874 was elevated to the Office of Grand Master, died on May 28, 1876. Since he had been born in distant Scandinavia, Grand Lodge records are extremely deficient in facts regarding his early career. The Committee appointed at the time of his death referred to the words of Grand Master Kennaly as befitting the subject, and recommended that a memorial page in the Transactions of the Grand Lodge be set apart to Bro. Mikkelson's memory. That was done. In his annual address, Grand Master Griffin, a very close friend of Bro. Mikkelson's, said this, in part: " Bro. L. P. Mikkelson, my immediate predecessor as Grand Master of Idaho, died on May 28, 1876. He was so well known as a zealous and kind-hearted man, and as an upright citizen, that any attempt of mine to eulogise him at this time would be superfluous. We must all deplore the circumstances under which he died. Let us cherish the charitable hope that the rash act which terminated his earthly career was the devious fancy of a disturbed and distracted mind, and a muscle raised obedient to its impulse, rather than an act of premeditation and reflection."

James W. Griffin, who was elected Grand Master in 1875, was born at Sebec, Maine, on August 29, 1830. He died on July 27, 1885. The sea had an attraction for Bro. Griffin early in life, and before attaining manhood he was master of a vessel. In 1842 he was married, and for more than twenty years his wife was the companion of his voyages. In 1849 he sailed round Cape Horn, and the following year he retired from the sea. Bro. Griffin came to Idaho in 1864 and was for many years owner of the Overland Hotel in Boise. About 1850 he was made a Mason in Brooklyn Lodge, No. 285, of Brooklyn, New York. He became a member of Boise Lodge, No. 2 in 1868, and was its Master in 1870. He was Grand Treasurer for a period of five years.

Edward Augustus Stevenson, born on June 15, 1825, at Lowville, New York, lived for a time in Michigan. In 1849 he went to California by way of Cape Horn. There he was at different times alcalde, sheriff, Indian agent, and speaker of the House of Representatives. In 1863 he came to Idaho and followed the work of placer mining. He was twice elected to each house of the Territorial Legislature, and served four years as Territorial governor, having been appointed to that office by President Grover Cleveland. Bro. Stevenson's Masonic career began in California. He received the First Degree in Vesper Lodge, No. 84, at Red Bluffs, in 1857. Early in 1869 he received the Second and Third Degrees in Pioneer Lodge, No. 4, of Idaho, and in this Lodge he served as Secretary, as Junior Warden, as Senior Warden, and as Master. In 1874 he was appointed as Deputy Grand Master. He was elected Grand Master in 1876, 1877, 1878, and 1887. For many years Bro. Stevenson was Chairman of the Board of Trustees of "The Grand Lodge Orphan Fund." He was a member of Idaho Chapter, No. 1, Royal Arch Masons, and at the time of his death he was a member of Boise Lodge, No. 2, of Boise. It is said that Bro. Stevenson's funeral was the largest ever seen in Boise.

Charles Himrod, who was born at Burdett, New York, on November 4, 1842, came to Idaho in 1864, after crossing the plains on a mule. As a Mason he was raised in Shoshone Lodge, No. 7, on January 24, 1872. Later he became a member of Boise Lodge, No. 2, of Boise. He was Senior Grand Warden of the Grand Lodge in 1874. For four years he was Grand Secretary, and in 1879 he was elected Grand Master. From 1889 until 1917 he was Grand Treasurer. Then the infirmities of years compelled him to resign. Bro. Himrod had an unbroken record of forty-four years' attendance at the Grand Lodge. This record was surpassed only once in all the history of the Grand Lodge of Idaho. He had been High Priest of Boise Chapter, No. 2, Eminent Commander of Idaho Commandery, No. 1, and he was a life member of El Korah Temple of the Mystic Shrine. In civil life Bro. Himrod's career was varied and honourable. He served as mayor of Boise, Idaho, for four terms; as treasurer of Ada County for two terms, and as treasurer of Idaho Territory for two terms. He was a member of the seventh session of the House of the Territorial Legislature, and of the fourteenth session of its Council. For four years he was register of the United States Land Office, and county commissioner of Ada County for an equal length of time. At the time of his burial, on January 28, 1920, the Grand Lodge held an Emergency Session. There it was said, "We reverently laid his body in the grave, depositing therein the Masonic symbol of immortality, there to rest in the silent city where dwell so many of his old-time friends. There we left him until the day breaks and the shadows flee away."

Henry E. Prickett, who was born on February 1, 1829, in Fernshaw, County of Kent, England, arrived in the United States in 1836. In 1860 he started West and reached Idaho during the early days of the gold rush. Being a lawyer by profession, he became judge of the District Court at a time when the district judges composed the Supreme Court. He was Grand Secretary, Grand Orator, and Grand Senior Warden, before his elevation to the Office of Grand Master in 1885. He was buried with Masonic honours at Boise, Idaho, on July 16, 1885. "Brother Prickett was made a Mason in Jackson County, Wisconsin, about the year 1854. He was able, zealous, and conscientious in every office he held, whether it was political, judicial, or Masonic. His qualities gave him preference among his fellows."

Francis Edward Ensign, commonly known simply as Frank Ensign, was born in Painesville, Ohio, on March 4, 1829. He was made a Mason on May 1, 1853, in Wayne Lodge, No. 35, of Fort Wayne, Indiana. Bro. Ensign was in California as early as 1854. From there he came to Idaho in 1886. As a Chapter and Commandery Mason he helped organise Idaho Commandery, No. 1, of the Knights Templar. A lawyer by profession, Bro. Frank Ensign was highly esteemed by all who knew him. He died at his home in Hailey, Idaho, on May 5, 1908. "He was generous. His integrity, and the other sterling qualities of his character, will ever be cherished by his Brethren of the mystic tie. He was buried at Hailey, Idaho, under the auspices of the Masons, by Hailey Lodge, No. 16.

Lafayette Cartee was born on December 2, 1823, at Syracuse, New York. He died on September 2, 1891. This Brother was indeed an argonaut of California in 1849, and of Idaho in 1863. By profession a civil engineer, he was for fourteen years surveyor-general of Idaho Territory. He was a pioneer in the fruit growing industry of this State. On April 6, 1867, he affiliated with Boise Lodge, No. 37, of Boise, and in December of that year he was one of the leaders who formed the Grand Lodge of Idaho. Bro. Cartee was the Grand Lodge's first Grand Orator. He served as Grand Secretary for two years and as Deputy Grand Master for one year. In 1882 he was elected Grand Master. The Committee appointed by the Grand Master, at the Session of the Grand Lodge held a few days after Bro. Cartee's death in 1891, embodied this tribute in their report: "Noble Brother, we have laid you in the tomb, there to sleep under the fragrant acacia until the trumpet of the eventful morn shall summon us all into the presence of the Grand Architect of the Universe. Until then, dear Brother, until then, farewell."

Chester P. Coburn was born on May 3, 1832, at Rochester, Vermont, and died on October 17, 1911, at Lewiston, Idaho. Having travelled to the Pacific Coast by way of Panama, after ten years of life in California Bro. Coburn came to Idaho. He was one of the pioneers of 1862. In 1875 he joined the Masonic Fraternity and received his Degrees in Nez Percé Lodge, No. 10. Later he became a member of Boise Lodge, No. 2. He was a Royal Arch Mason and a member of Lewiston Consistory of the Scottish Rite. In 1883 he was Deputy Grand Master, and in 1884 he was elected Grand Master.

John A. Post, Grand Master, in 1885, and for a number of years postmaster at Boise, Idaho, ended his life in a sudden and untimely manner during the very year when he held this high Masonic office. In his first annual address, Grand Master Davis spoke as follows about the death of Bro. Post: "On the 8th day of August just passed, John A. Post, Past Grand Master, was instantaneously killed by the discharge of a gun in his own hands. A most careful investigation by a coroner's jury resulted in a verdict of accidental death. We mourn the demise of one who was endeared to us by many virtues. Bro. Post was possessed of many estimable traits of character. He was an earnest and devoted Mason, a kind husband, a loving father, a generous friend, and an honoured citizen."

At the Session of the Grand Lodge in 1882, the Deputy Grand Master announced the presence of Bro. George H. Davis, R.:W.:Deputy Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Minnesota. The distinguished Brother was cordially welcomed and was escorted to a position in the East. In 1884 Bro. Davis affiliated with Boise Lodge, No. 2. He was an Episcopalian minister and a man of signal ability. He was elected to the Office of Grand Master of Idaho in 1885, and re-elected the following year, thus holding the Office two terms without having held previous Office in the Grand Lodge. He demitted from Boise Lodge, No. 2, on July 6, 1889. After fulfilling his mission in Idaho Bro. Davis travelled in an easterly direction on his life's journey, and on January 9, 1907, he crossed over the river to that land whose beauties he had for years praised in many delightful sermons. The world is better for his having lived.

Born in Booneville, Missouri, on October 30, 1838, George Ainslie received his early education in Scotland and later attended St. Louis University. The year 1860 found him in Colorado. Two years later he was in Idaho. Having been educated in the law, Bro. Ainslie mingled law with politics early in his career. He filled the office of prosecuting attorney efficiently. He served two terms in Congress as a delegate from Idaho before the Territory was admitted to Statehood, and he was one of the most prominent members of the convention that framed a constitution for the State of Idaho. On January 29, 1868, a few weeks after the formation of the Grand Lodge of Idaho, Bro. Ainslie was made a Mason in Idaho Lodge, No. 1. He served his Lodge as Warden and as Master. In 1889 he filled the position of Deputy Grand Master, and he was elected Grand Master in 1890. He was a Royal Arch Mason and a member of Columbia Commandery, No. 2, of Washington, District of Columbia. For fourteen years he was one of the trustees of "The Grand Lodge Orphan Fund." Bro. George Ainslie was a fluent talker, a good reasoner, a devoted Mason, and a loyal friend. It were well if there were more like him.

Isaac C. Hattabaugh, who was born on an Indiana farm on December 24, 1851, died on December 11, 1927. When only twenty-three years of age he was made a Mason in Indiana, in Middle Fork Lodge, No. 304. In 1879 he was a member of Nez Percé Lodge, No. 10, of Lewiston, Idaho. He was Deputy Grand Master in 1887 and Grand Master in 1882. Bro. Hattabaugh was a Royal Arch Mason and a member of the Commandery at Moscow, Idaho. He was also a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of the Woodmen of the World, and of the United Artisans. In addition, he was a Charter member of the Elks Lodge at Moscow. He held his Shrine membership with Katif Temple, of Spokane, Washington.

James Alonzo Pinney was born on September 28, 1835 and died on February 4, 1914. In 1850 he was in California, twelve years later he was in Idaho, and from 1864 to 1872 he served as postmaster in Idaho City. For forty years Bro. Pinney was zealous in working for the interests of the people of Boise City, where he resided after leaving the mining regions of Boise Basin. He built the first modern theatre building in Boise and was five times elected mayor of the city. Originally an Iowa Mason, Bro. Pinney early identified himself with Masonry in Idaho. He filled both the Warden stations in Idaho Lodge, No. 1, and was Master of Boise Lodge, No. 2. He was a York Rite Mason, a member of the Scottish Rite, and a Past Potentate of El Korah Temple of the Mystic Shrine. In the Grand Lodge he was a Junior Warden, a Deputy Grand Master for one year, and Grand Master in 1893. In 1894 he was elected to be one of the trustees of "The Grand Lodge Orphan Fund," a post he retained until his death. Genial and generous, Bro. Pinney was loved and respected both as man and Mason during the full period of his eventful career.

Adelbert B. Clark was elected Grand Master in 1894. In 1901 the Appeals and Grievance Committee reported that they approved the action of Elmore Lodge, No. 30, with regard to the case of a certain Bro. Howie, but that they disapproved of the Lodge's action so far as concerned Bro. Clark. The report of the Committee read in part as follows: "In the matter of said Lodge versus Bro. A. B. Clark, wherein said Clark was found not guilty, we must say that we cannot agree with the conclusion arrived at by said Lodge. In our opinion, Clark was guilty of un-Masonic conduct as charged, and is rather entitled to punishment than was Bro. Howie. The evidence is certainly conclusive as to his guilt. It is another instance of the perversity of human nature, that one should be found guilty and the other not guilty, when the latter is proven guilty by his own letters and subsequent conduct, violating not only his written word but his contract with a Brother Mason. If it were possible, we should recommend some action be taken as to Clark, but as no appeal was taken on behalf of Elmore Lodge, No. 30, from the judgment in Clark's case, and we are informed that Clark has not only removed from the Jurisdiction of said Lodge, but from the Jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge, and that he demitted from Elmore Lodge, No. 30, we do not see that we now have any Jurisdiction over him, as we learn that he is now a resident of the State of Washington."

Isidor Samuel Weiler, known to nearly everybody as Sam Weiler, was born on October 1, 1851. He died on July 1, 1898, and was buried two days later in the Masonic cemetery of Boise, Idaho. Bro. Weiler's earliest years were spent in New York City, but as a young man he came to Placerville, Idaho, and there spent his early manhood. Amid such surroundings he developed many of those touches of character which seem to distinguish the denizens of a placer mining camp. He went much among the gold diggers, for as a mere lad he worked at distributing meat among the mining camps at the behest of his guardian uncle, Mark Schmidt, a butcher. With wares loaded upon a pack mule's back, Sam Weiler visited every mining party in the region. One of the most genial of men, Bro. Weiler attracted many friends. He was not only a member of the ninth Territorial Legislature, but also a member of the first State Legislature. After being made a Mason in Placer Lodge, No. 3, at Placerville, Idaho, he demitted and joined Mount Idaho Lodge, No. 9. He was a Royal Arch Mason and attained the Thirty-second Degree of Scottish Rite Masonry. In 1895 he was elected Grand Master. Bro. Sam Weiler had the proverbial "host of friends," both Masonic and non-Masonic.

George Dickson Golden, a native of England, was elected Grand Master in 1900 and died on May 17, 1901, while occupying that Office. The Grand Lodge was convened to officiate at his burial, which took place on Sunday, May 26.

Joshua M. Cowan was born in Massachusetts on March 23, 1851. In 1875 he came to Atlanta, Idaho, where he engaged in mining. Later he removed to Mountainhome, Idaho. The year of his departure from the "Old Bay State," Bro. Cowan was made a Master Mason of Pythagoras Lodge (Massachusetts). Later he affiliated with St. Johns Lodge, No. 15 (Idaho). In 1901 he was Senior Grand Warden, and in 1903 he was elected Grand Master. Bro. Cowan's funeral was held at Mountainhome on Sunday, August 10, 1919, the Grand Lodge having been convened for the burial rites. Bro. Arch Cunningham, acting as Grand Master, officiated on the occasion.

Albert W. Gordon, who was born at Marysville, California, was made a Mason in Ruby Lodge, No. 36, at Granite Mountain, Montana, in the year 1887. Bro. Gordon's Lodge membership was held in different Lodges. He was at one time affiliated with Kendrick Lodge, No. 29, of Kendrick, Idaho. He was a member of State Lodge, No. 68, at Tacoma, Washington, and later of Hiram Lodge, No. 36, at Nez Percé, Idaho. In 1904 he was elected Grand Master of Idaho. Bro. Gordon died at Spokane, Washington, on June 12, 1926, and that same day the Grand Lodge of Idaho conducted burial services at Hope, Idaho, with full Masonic honours.

William Carroll Whitwell, who was born in Tennessee in 1850, came to Idaho at the age of thirty-seven to be official physician at the Lemhi Indian Agency. While yet in his home State, Bro. Whitwell had become identified with the Masonic Fraternity. He was elected a Grand Master of Idaho in 1907, and three times he represented Lemhi County in the State Legislature. Yet throughout his whole life the honour which he most highly prized was his long service as a Master Mason. In 1918 Bro. Whitwell died at Salmon City, Idaho. Since the Grand Lodge was not notified of his death with sufficient timeliness, burial rites were conducted by the local Lodge of Salmon City.

Ezra A. Burrell was elected Grand Master in 1912. At the 1930 session of the Grand Lodge the following report was made: "On June 5, 1930, I received a message from Bro. F. N. Dryden, Worshipful Master of King Solomon Lodge of Montpelier, saying, 'I am advised that Past Grand Master Ezra A. Burrell died in California to-day.' Not having Bro. Burrell's address, I made further inquiry of Bro. Dryden as to particulars of address, death, and burial of the demised. I learned the address, but other particulars were not available. Two days later I received a message from the Masonic authorities of Los Angeles saying that Bro. Burrell was buried on June 7 with a private funeral."

John D. Bloomfield was elected Grand Master in 1916, after having successively filled the office of each of the Wardens, and after having been Deputy Grand Master in the Grand Lodge. Born in Peoria, Illinois, in 1870, Bro. Bloomfield came to Idaho in 1898 and was made a Mason in Nampa Lodge, No. 29, on September 12, 1903. For three successive years he served his Lodge as Master, and for seven years he was its Secretary. His Masonic record was a splendid one. Marked by ability and devotion, he was a Mason true and trusty, one of God's noblemen who left behind him an influence that will not soon die.

Andrew Lounsbury, who was born in Bangor, Maine, on November 1, 1845, was elected Grand Master of Idaho in 1918. Having enlisted as a soldier in the war between the States, he was present when General Robert E. Lee finally surrendered. As an upstanding citizen of his community, Bro. Lounsbury was the proud parent of three sons and three daughters. He served his county as sheriff and as treasurer. In 1886 he was made a Mason and five times he was Master of Cassia Lodge, No. 14. He was a member of the Scottish Rite and a Shriner as well. While still Grand Master, Bro. Lounsbury died on June 16, 1919. The Grand Lodge was convened by Bro. Arch Cunningham, Deputy Grand Master, on August 10, 1919, and on that occasion the death of Bro. Lounsbury was commemorated with full Masonic honours.

George Laird Shoup was born in Pennsylvania on June 15, 1836. After being educated in the public schools, he came into the West where he led a long and distinguished career as citizen, as soldier, and as Mason. He reached Colorado some time in 1859. During the war between the States he was in the military service of the North. At the conclusion of hostilities he was commissioned as colonel of the Third Colorado Cavalry. In 1864 he was a member of the Colorado Constitutional Convention, and later he was a member of the eighth and tenth sessions of the Idaho Territorial Legislature. He became a governor of Idaho Territory and later a governor of the State. At one time he was United States senator from Idaho. Bro. Shoup was made a Mason in Denver Lodge, No. 2 (Colorado), in 1863. Later he was a member of Lemhi Lodge, No. 11, of Salmon City, Idaho. Though he had not previously held any Office in the Grand Lodge, Bro. Shoup was elected Grand Master in 1889, since a ruling of the Grand Lodge of Idaho makes it possible to select the Grand Master from the Body of the Craft. Past Grand Master Shoup died on December 21, 1904, at Boise, Idaho. The Grand Lodge over which he had so ably presided conferred the funeral Rites.

George M. Waterhouse, a physician who had an extensive experience in general practice and hospital work, was born on October 7, 1860, at New Lebanon, Ohio. In all civic affairs, especially in those connected with medical and educational matters, he had an active interest. For four years he was treasurer of his county, and he served one term as regent of the State University at Moscow. Bro. Waterhouse was the first candidate elected in Weiser Lodge,

No. 23, having been raised on December 23, 1887. He was elected Junior Grand Warden in 1892; Senior Grand Warden in 1894; Deputy Grand Master in 1895, and Grand Master in 1897.

William R. Hamilton was born in Brant County, Province of Ontario, Canada, on July 16, 1866. He was made a Mason in Silver City Lodge, No. 13, of Silver City, Idaho, on June 9, 1900. In 1905 he was elected Junior Grand Warden, and in 1907 he became Deputy Grand Master. The next year he was chosen Grand Master. Bro. Hamilton's worth as a citizen was shown by his election as mayor of his home city for a third time.

Francis Jenkins, a native of South Wales, was born on March 12, 1850. He was made a Master Mason in Deadwood Lodge, No. 7 (Dakota Territory) on August 28, 1881, and later a member of Paradise Lodge, No. 17, of Moscow, Idaho. In 1912 he was elected Junior Grand Warden, and the next year he was made Senior Grand Warden. He became Deputy Grand Master in 1914, Grand Master in 1915. Bro. Jenkins was a York Rite Mason, a member of Cyrus Chapter, No. 2, of Silver City, and a member of Moscow Commandery, No. 3, of Moscow, Idaho. He was associated with the State University of Idaho, at Moscow, for many years.

Of the Past Grand Masters now living, the oldest in point of service is John Hunter. All his predecessors are deceased. Bro. Hunter was born in Paisley, Scotland, on July 5, 1850, and was made a Mason in Evanston Lodge, No. 4, of Evanston, Wyoming. In 1886 he was the first Worshipful Master of Portneuf Lodge, No. 18 (Idaho). He was the Senior Grand Warden of the Grand Lodge in 1887, and in 1888 he was elected Grand Master. Since 1883 he has been a Scottish Rite Mason of the Utah Jurisdiction. As a boy of thirteen years John Hunter accompanied his father, who in 1863 removed from St. Joseph, Missouri, to Salt Lake City, Utah. Since then he has passed his life in the Inter-Mountain Country, first in the transportation work of the United States Government, and later with the Union Pacific Railway. Bro. Hunter was still living in Salt Lake City, Utah, where he had resided for many years.

John H. Myer was born at Sing Sing, New York, on June 5, 1848. His family removed to Illinois in 1855. Having reached his majority, he set out for Idaho in 1870. In July of the next year, Bro. Myer was made a Master Mason in Placer Lodge, No. 3, of Placerville, Idaho. He is still (1931) a member of that Lodge. He became a Royal Arch Mason on March 7, 1873, and a Knight Templar on the same day of the same month ten years later. He is also a Charter member of El Korah Temple of the Mystic Shrine. In 1886 Bro. Myer was elected Senior Grand Warden, in 1890 he was appointed Deputy Grand Master, and in 1891 he was elected Grand Master. In civil life Bro. Myer has been a postmaster, a member of the Territorial Legislature, a prosecuting attorney, and a member of the Constitutional Convention. From among the original sixty-five members of the last-named body, Bro. Myer is to-day among some half-dozen survivors. Of a company of forty-two men who enlisted in the Nez Percé Indian War of 1877, he is now one of the two survivors.

Fred G. Mock was born in Cumberland County, Illinois, on November 24, 1861. On October 4, 1890, he was made a Mason in Burlington Lodge, No. 77, of Burlington, Colorado. He is still a member of Nampa Lodge, No. 29, of Nampa, Idaho, having been a member of that Lodge since the day it was Chartered. Of all Idaho's Past Grand Masters, Bro. Mock is probably the most widely travelled. He went around the world in 1926. In 1929 he travelled in South America, Africa, and northern Europe. He was elected Grand Master in 1896, having previously been Grand Lecturer.

George Hiram Storer was born in Nottingham, England, on February 17, 1860. He was initiated, passed, and raised in the Lodge at Corinne, Utah, in October 1884, and there received all three Degrees within a single month. The next year he became a member of Eagle Rock Lodge, No. 19 (Idaho). Bro. Storer, who is a York Rite Mason and a member of Lewiston Commandery at Lewiston, Idaho, was elected Junior Grand Warden in 1896, Senior Grand Warden in 1897, and Grand Master in 1898. This well-known Past Grand Master first reached Idaho in 1879. For a while he lived in Blackfoot, then in Idaho Falls. In earlier years he was first in the lumber business and later in the real-estate business. In 1896 he was elected treasurer of the State of Idaho. At present Bro. Storer resides in Southern California.

John Charles Muerman was born in Deerfield, Ohio, in 1865. He was made a Mason in Paradise Lodge, No. 17, of Moscow, Idaho, on June 22, 1893. In 1895 he was appointed Senior Grand Deacon, in 1896 he was elected Deputy Grand Master; he filled that Office again in 1898, and in 1899 he was elected Grand Master. Recognition of Bro. Muerman as a Mason of sterling worth was shown by his reaching the topmost round of the ladder within six years after becoming a Mason. He is a member of the Royal Arch Chapter at Moscow, Idaho, and of Washington Commandery, No. 1, and Alma Temple of the Mystic Shrine at Washington, District of Columbia. Bro. Muerman is a specialist in rural education, associated with the Federal Bureau of Education. Though his work has taken him to the Orient and elsewhere in distant lands, in all his travels he has never failed to remember his Masonic duties and obligations.

Jeremiah William Robinson was born in McLean County, Kentucky, on July 18, 1860. He was made a Mason in Carson Lodge, No. 132, of Elk City, Kansas, in 1886. Since 1892 he has been a member of Boise Lodge, No. 2, and he is, besides, a Thirty-third Degree Mason and a Knight Templar. Bro. Robinson was elected Junior Grand Warden in 1902, Senior Grand Warden in 1903, Deputy Grand Master in 1904, and Grand Master in 1905. Since 1910 he has filled the position of trustee of "The Grand Lodge Orphan Fund" with credit to himself and benefit to the Fraternity.

Victor Peterson was born in Sweden on April 16, 1880. That same year he came with his parents to the United States. He arrived on the Pacific Coast in 1905 and from then till now he has been at one time and another school teacher, placer miner and grain dealer. In 1902 he was made a Mason in Mag-nolia Lodge, No. 220, of Emerson, Nebraska. He is now a York Rite Mason, a member of Lewiston Commandery, No. 4, a Scottish Rite Mason, and a member of Lewiston Consistory, No. 1. He was elected Junior Grand Warden in 1920; Senior Grand Warden in 1921; Deputy Grand Master in 1922, and Grand Master in 1923. As an ardent Mason Bro. Peterson has always been active in Lodge Work.

Frank Knox, a native son of Idaho, was born in Boise, on June 1, 1878. He received the Third Degree on July 21, 1910, in Butte Lodge, No. 37, of Emmett, Idaho. Having held the Office of Grand Steward and of Deacon, he was elected Junior Grand Warden in 1921, Senior Grand Warden in 1922, Deputy Grand Master in 1923, and Grand Master in 1924. Bro. Knox is securely anchored to Masonry by his own acts and by inheritance, so to speak, his father, Douglas Knox, being at this time a Mason with a record of more than fifty years of activity. Bro. Frank Knox is a Scottish Rite Mason and a member of El Korah Temple of the Mystic Shrine. He has been absent from the regular meeting of his Lodge only once in the last fourteen years, and even on that occasion he was in attendance at the Grand Lodge.

David C. Chase was born in Johnsville, Ohio, April 26, 1853. After starting life as a newsboy, he later became a telegraph operator, and was active in the service of the Union Pacific Railroad during the early history of that company, at the town of Payette, Idaho. For many years he has been a merchant and fruit grower in the Payette Valley. Having been made a member of Washoe Lodge, No. 28, in 1892, Bro. Chase twice became Master of his Lodge. He was elected Grand Master in 1901, having already served one term as Senior Grand Warden.

Byron Defenbach, who was born at Rome, Wisconsin, on December 5, 1870, spent his early life in Kansas. He became a member of the Masonic Fraternity as soon as he attained his majority, and after holding membership in several Lodges, and serving the Grand Lodge of Idaho as Senior Grand Warden and as Deputy Grand Master, he became its Grand Master in 1910. Bro. Defenbach places himself in Masonry with these words: "I am a progressive in Masonic affairs and usually classed as an insurgent. I am opposed to Masonic interference and Masonic activity so far as concerns political or religious affairs. I hold that the Masonic field is exclusively the elevation, improvement, and refinement of the character of man himself."

I. Edgar Meek, who made the overland trip to Idaho with a team in 1882, was born in Philadelphia, Indiana, on February 16, 1859. He grew to manhood in Indiana and Kansas. Bro. Meek was made a Mason in Hope Lodge, No. 155 (Kansas). After being affiliated with several Lodges in Idaho, he became Grand Master in 1920, having filled the Office of Deputy Grand Master and of Senior Grand Warden during the years immediately preceding. He is now a member of Mount Moriah Lodge, No. 39, of Caldwell, Idaho.

Born on a farm in Madison County, Illinois, on July 29, 1860, Curtis F. Pike was educated in the country school of his neighbourhood, and later in the University of Illinois. As a young man he taught school for several years in Illinois, Colorado, and Idaho. On May 12, 1900, he was made a Master Mason in Vulcan Lodge, No. 103, of Hooper, Colorado. The following September he transferred his membership to Boise Lodge, No. 2, of Boise, Idaho, and since then he has been a member of that Lodge. In 1906 and again in 1917 Bro. Pike served as Worshipful Master of Boise Lodge, No. 2. He was elected Senior Grand Warden in 1911, Deputy Grand Master in 1912, and Grand Master in 1913. From 1918 to 1922, inclusive, he served as Grand Treasurer. He was elected Grand Secretary in September 1922. He is a Scottish Rite Mason.

Jay Glover Eldridge, who was born in Janesville, Wisconsin, on November 8, 1875, is a graduate of Yale University and is now Dean of the State University of Idaho, at Moscow. In 1918 he was with the American Expeditionary Force in France. Bro. Eldridge was made a Master in 1910, and elected Master of his Lodge, Paradise Lodge, No. 17, of Moscow, only five years later. As a York Rite Mason he is a member of Moscow Commandery, and as a Scottish Rite Mason he belongs to Calam Temple of the Mystic Shrine. He has served in the Grand Lodge as Junior Grand Steward, as Senior Grand Warden, and as Deputy Grand Master. In 1930 he was elected Grand Master. Since the inception of the Grand Lodge of Idaho, the Office of Grand Master has been filled by some who came from the one-room schoolhouse, and by some who have been graduated from the most renowned temples of learning in our country. Bro. Eldridge, of course, is to be numbered among those at the very forefront of the latter group.

By means even of those slight observations that the least mindful of us makes with the passing of the years, we are constantly reminded how the wisdom of sages and seers has throughout the ages crystallised into apothegms still pregnant with meaning though trite with century-old use. One such is the well-known phrase, "Tall oaks from little acorns grow." And indeed they do, figuratively as well as actually. On a December day of 1867, the Grand Lodge of the Free and Accepted Masons of Idaho came into being at Idaho City. Then it consisted of only 5 subordinate Lodges having a total membership of some 200 Master Masons. After the lapse of a short span of little more than half a century, this same Grand Lodge of Idaho numbers 10,396 Master Masons, 2469 Royal Arch Masons, 1482 Knights Templar, 2350 Scottish Rite Masons, and 2304 members of the Mystic Shrine. Time has indeed worked wonders with Freemasonry in Idaho. And certainly the end is not yet!

FREEMASONRY IN ILLINOIS

EVERETT R. TURNBULL

A DESCRIPTION of Kaskaskia, capital of the Illinois Country, written in 1810, said that it was then "a port town, and the chief one of Randolph County," that it contained "forty-five houses, many of them well built, several of stone, with gardens and large lots adjoining," and that it boasted "467 inhabitants, of whom 47 were slaves." From here, on March 9, 1805, seven Brethren of Kaskaskia and vicinity sent the following letter to the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania—a letter which shows the sentiments that actuated those Brethren of pioneer days.

To the R.: W.: Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, Greeting:

The subscribers, and many others of our Brethren in the counties of St. Clair and Randolph, beg leave to approach your Worshipful Body and state to you that they are far removed from those social enjoyments which they once as Masons have experienced; that from the growth of population many worthy and respectable Brethren have settled, and many more will soon come to this country; and that your suppliants, from a sense of duty incumbent on them as Masons and as men, to promote their mutual happiness, the happiness of their neighbours, and as far as in their power lies, humanise society; and furthermore, to impress on their memory what has long ago been written on their hearts.

Wherefore, your suppliants thus presume to approach your Worshipful Body and request that, if in your councils you think it expedient, your Worshipful Body will grant to your suppliants a Warrant, or if that can't be obtained, a Dispensation, authorising them to hold a regular Lodge in the town of Kaskaskia, appointing such of your suppliants to preside therein as may seem proper to your Worshipful Body, sending with the said Warrant your Constitution, all other necessary instructions, and the amount of expenses attending the same, which will be duly remitted by your suppliants, etc. etc.

J. Edgar Worshipful Master W. S. Lodge No 107
William Brundel Secretary of W. S. Lodge No 107

P.S. On the 18th September 1806 This Lodge was Instituted and the Officers Installed in Conformity with Warrant and Dispensation Granted for that Purpose by the Right Worshipful Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania Dated 2^d June 1806 and of Masonry 5806 as will appear by the Return heretofore made.
J. Edgar

In response to this request, the Dispensation was granted on the following September 24, and James Edgar was named first Master, with power to appoint the Wardens and other Officers. Bro. Edgar then appointed Rufus Eaton to be Senior Warden, and Michael Jones to be Junior Warden, and directed the two of them to select a name for the new Lodge. They reported "Western Star Lodge" to be their choice and the name was adopted. The first three petitions which the new Lodge received were from residents of Ste. Genevieve, a small town across the Mississippi River, in Louisiana Territory. Indeed, so many were the Petitions received in those days that the new Lodge was compelled to hold special meetings to take care of them. The Minutes record those meetings as "extra Lodge."

The Charter for Western Star Lodge was issued on June 2, 1806, and the Lodge was constituted on the following September 13 by Robert Robinson. The return for the year 1806 is now in possession of the Grand Lodge of Illinois. Although only nineteen names are entered on it, eighty-four members affixed their signatures to the By-Laws, which were adopted on June 24, 1808. This first Lodge in what is now Illinois was instituted, and frequently held its meetings in the first brick building erected for public purposes in the Mississippi Valley. The building, built in 1792, served first as a town hall, then as the meeting-place of the Territorial Legislature, and later of the State Legislature. Finally it was used as a court house until the removal of the county seat in 1848.

On December 27, 1806, a Petition signed by several Brethren of Western Star Lodge asked that Lodge to recommend the organisation of another Lodge at Ste. Genevieve, Louisiana Territory. The recommendation was granted although the formation of a second Lodge meant the loss of about half the membership of Western Star Lodge. The Dispensation for the new Lodge, known as Louisiana Lodge, No. 109, was granted on July 17, 1807, by the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, and James Edgar, Master of Western Star Lodge, was named proxy to institute the Lodge at Ste. Genevieve. Bro. Edgar performed that ceremony on November 14. The Wardens of the new Lodge were two of the first three Petitioners to Western Star Lodge. Likewise, when the Petition to organise St. Louis Lodge, No. 111, was circulated, three of the signers had also been members of Western Star Lodge.

The first Masonic funeral held in Illinois occurred on October 16, 1811. On that date, Robert Robinson, who had Constituted Western Star Lodge, was buried. Six years later, on November 2, 1817, James Edgar, the first Master, was also buried with Masonic ceremonies. As a token of mourning, the Brethren were directed to "wear a piece of black ribbon through the second and third button-holes of their coats for three months." On October 2, 1819, the Lodge suffered another loss when Bro. Michael Jones demitted. The Lodge passed resolutions of regret over losing such an active member. Since Bro. Jones had removed to Shawneetown, his attendance at Lodge in Kaskaskia entailed a journey of about a hundred miles across an unsettled region. Inasmuch as a Lodge had recently been organised at Shawneetown and he could meet the Brethren there without undergoing the hardship of the long journey, it was not surprising that Bro. Jones should demit.

Although there are no Records of the activities of Western Star Lodge from December 2, 1820, until its new Charter as Lodge No. 1 was granted, we know that it continued to exist and that it was represented in the first Grand Lodge of Illinois every year of its existence. We also know that the first Grand Master of Illinois was a member of Western Star Lodge, even though the Lodge was unable to sever its connection with the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania until November 30, 1826.

On February 14, 1827, the Grand Lodge of Illinois issued a Charter to Western Star Lodge as No. 1. Under that Charter the Lodge was Constituted on June 24, 1828, by Thomas Reynolds, Deputy Grand Master. But the Lodge was destined to disappear. The immediate cause of its closing was the failure of the Grand Lodge to acknowledge its Constitution and the installation of its Officers. The Record of the last nine meetings, those held between June 24, 1828, and February 7, 1829, discloses the truly pathetic struggle of a few faithful Brethren against overwhelming odds. Some nights only three members were present at the Lodge meetings. In one instance, a Brother was recorded as having served at one meeting as Treasurer, Senior Deacon, Junior Deacon, and Tyler. On February 7, 1829, the Lodge was closed forever, but it left its impress on Illinois nevertheless. That little band of Brethren furnished the State its first governor, one United States senator, two Supreme Court justices, four State senators, twelve national representatives, and many other State and Federal officers. In addition one member became attorney-general and congressman from Missouri, while still another served as Territorial governor and as United States senator for Wisconsin. Indeed, the record of Western Star Lodge is an example for all time. It always celebrated St. John's Day with a public procession, a banquet, an oration, and the Installation of Officers. The call of the widow was always answered, and the destitute were cared for. Western Star Lodge was the forerunner, the inspiration, the beacon light for the Masons of the Mississippi Valley. Its Temple is destroyed and even the site of it is unknown, but the Work of that pioneer Lodge still lives to point the way for thousands of later Lodges of the Middle West.

For ten years Western Star Lodge was the only Lodge in Illinois, but as Masons began congregating in other settlements they asked for Dispensations and other Lodges came to be Chartered. The early Lodges were Western Star Lodge, No. 107, at Kaskaskia, Chartered on June 2, 1806, by the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania; Lawrence Lodge, No. 34, at Shawneetown, Chartered in September, 1815, by the Grand Lodge of Kentucky; Libanus Lodge, No. 29, at Edwardsville, Chartered on October 6, 1820, by the Grand Lodge of Tennessee; Olive Branch Lodge, No. 5, at Upper Alton, Chartered on April 3, 1822, by the Grand Lodge of Missouri; Vandalia Lodge, No. 8, at Vandalia, Chartered on October 8, 1822, by the Grand Lodge of Missouri; Sangamo Lodge, No. 9, at Springfield, Chartered on October 9, 1822, by the Grand Lodge of Missouri;

Union Lodge, No. 10, at Jonesboro, Chartered on October 24, 1822, by the Grand Lodge of Missouri; Eden Lodge, No. 11, at Covington, Chartered on October 8, 1822, by the Grand Lodge of Missouri; Albion Lodge, No. 9, at Albion, for which the Grand Lodge of Indiana issued a Dispensation on March 12, 1822, and Hiram Lodge, at Brownsville, concerning whose Charter we have no record. Temple Lodge, No. 25, at Belleville, received a Dispensation from Tennessee on June 28, 1820, but its organisation was not perfected, and no meetings were ever held.

The first reference to the organisation of a Grand Lodge in Illinois is found in the Minutes of Western Star Lodge under date of November 16, 1820, at which time the Lodge concurred in a resolution from Libanus Lodge, No. 29, that it was expedient to organise a Grand Lodge. A Committee was then appointed to correspond with the other Lodges. An active correspondence was then carried on between the Lodges, and as a result a Masonic Convention was held at Vandalia, on December 9, 1822. This meeting was held at the same time as the Session of the State Legislature. Eight Lodges were represented, and twenty-four Delegates were present. The Presiding Officer was Thomas C. Browne, a Supreme Court justice, who was a Delegate from Lawrence Lodge, No. 34. Sangamo Lodge and Hiram Lodge were not represented. Hiram Lodge later became a member, however, but Sangamo Lodge never affiliated with the Grand Lodge. The following day a Constitution for the "Grand Lodge of Illinois Ancient Free and Accepted Masons" was adopted. Then, on December 11, the election of Grand Officers was held. Officers elected at that time were as follows: Shadrach Bond, Grand Master; John Y. Sawyer, Grand Senior Warden; William M. Alexander, Grand Junior Warden; Richard T. McKinney, Grand Secretary, and James O. Wattles, Grand Treasurer. From then on the Grand Lodge held its Communications at Vandalia, then the State capital, at the same time as the sessions of the Legislature were convened there. This was especially convenient, since many of the Lodge members were connected with the State government. The Grand Lodge Communications were held in the Senate chamber, and resolutions thanking the Senate for the use of the room were usually adopted. The Grand Lodge held its first meeting during December 1823. At that time it was formally organised, and its Officers were Installed by George C. Melody, Deputy Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Missouri. The complete reprints of the Proceedings for 1824-1826 are in existence. The Returns of January 1, 1825, from seven Lodges show that they had a total of 128 members. The other Lodges made no Returns at that time.

This first Grand Lodge of Illinois Chartered the following Lodges: Palestine Lodge, No. 10, at Palestine, on December 14, 1824; Greene Lodge, No. 11, at Carrollton, by Dispensation on December 14, 1824; Illion Lodge, No. 12, at Carlyle, on January 10, 1826; Frontier Lodge, No. 13, at Lewiston, on January 10, 1826; Strangers' Union Lodge, No. 14, at Fever River, now Galena, on January 1, 1827; Lafayette Lodge, No. 15, at Atlas, on January 7, 1826, and Cincinnatus Lodge, No. 16, at Shawneetown, on January 1, 1827.

The last-known Session of the first Grand Lodge of Illinois was held on January 3, 1827, for it, too, was destined to disappear. Just what caused its dissolution is not known, but it is supposed that the anti-Masonic wave that swept the country reached Illinois about that time. Nevertheless, that Grand Lodge numbered among its members many distinguished persons. A check of membership shows that it included two governors, one attorney-general, one State auditor, two secretaries of State, two State treasurers, seventeen representatives, six State senators, and several secretaries and clerks in the State Legislature. There were also among them two United States senators, two Supreme Court judges, and two Circuit Court judges.

After the closing of Western Star Lodge, Strangers' Union Lodge, No. 14, was the only one left in the State. Then, on June 11, 1829, this Lodge voted to return its Charter and to apply to the Grand Lodge of Missouri for a new Dispensation, "further proceedings on which is postponed until Thursday the 18th inst. at 4 P.M., when the Brethren are requested to give general attendance." With this action, Illinois became for a time a place of Masonic darkness. Nevertheless, there remained in the State many faithful members who waited patiently for the time when they could once more assemble about a Masonic Altar.

Masonic darkness continued in Illinois until December 6, 1834, when seventeen Brethren met at Quincy and Petitioned the Grand Lodge of Kentucky for a Dispensation to open and hold a Lodge. Accordingly, the Dispensation for Bodley Lodge was granted on August 31, 1835, and Bro. H. H. Snow was delegated to Institute it. Bro. Snow had been Deputy Grand Master of the first Grand Lodge. Dispensations for other Lodges rapidly followed, and Freemasonry again began to spread throughout the State. During the next five years the following Lodges were established, all by Dispensation: Franklin Lodge, No. 22, at Alton (November 9, 1836, Missouri); Equality Lodge, No. 102, at Equality (1836, Kentucky); Harmony Lodge, No. 24, at Jacksonville (October 4, 1837, Missouri); Temperance Lodge, No. 27, at Vandalia (June 30, 1838, Missouri); Columbus Lodge, No. 20, at Columbus (June 3, 1839; Missouri); Far West Lodge, No. 29, at Galena (March 23, 1839, Dispensation read in Lodge, Missouri); Mount Moriah Lodge, No. 33, at Hillsboro (August 17, 1839, Missouri); Springfield Lodge, No. 26, at Springfield (February 25, 1839, Missouri); Ottawa Lodge, No. 114, at Ottawa (December 19, 1839, Kentucky), and Friendship Lodge, at Dixon (November 6, 1840, Kentucky), Dispensation read in Lodge.

The first corner-stone laid by the Masonic Fraternity in Illinois was laid in Shawneetown on February 24, 1838. During the 1830's Shawneetown was the most active business centre on the Ohio River. Since an army post was located there, the government took charge of the river front and paved several blocks southward from the northeast corner of the town. This improvement was known as the "Public Works." Equality Lodge, No. 102, was invited to lay the corner-stone of this pavement. The ceremony was in charge of the Lodge's Master, Bro. Arnold B. Dake, a nephew of Benedict Arnold, who acted as proxy for the Grand Master of Kentucky. The stone was of sandstone and measured thirty-two inches by twelve inches by sixteen inches. Only one face of the stone was dressed, and on it a crudely chiselled inscription reads as follows:

The date on the stone is three days earlier than that given in the Record of the ceremony. Sometime during the 1880's this corner-stone was removed and placed in the Lodge Room of Warren Lodge, No. 14, where it still remains. The following year Equality Lodge, No. 102, laid the corner-stone of the Bank of Illinois at Shawneetown.

Early in 1839, Harmony Lodge, No. 24, sent a circular to the other Lodges in the State, asking for a Convention to organise a Grand Lodge in Illinois. The first Convention was held in Jacksonville, on December 27, 1839, and a second one met on January 20, 1840, at which time it was deemed advisable to meet again on April 6 of that year, and then formally to organise a Grand Lodge. In response to the invitation, "a Convocation was held in Masons' Hall" at Jacksonville, on the date stipulated. The Representatives present at that meeting were James Adams, of Springfield Lodge, No. 26; H. Rogers and H. Dills, of Bodley Lodge, No. 29; W. D. McCann, of Columbus Lodge, No. 20; John T. Jones (proxy) of Equality Lodge, No. 102; D. Rockwell, of Far West Lodge, No. 29, and W. B. Warren and A. Dunlap, of Harmony Lodge, No. 25. The object of the meeting having been fully considered, it was unanimously "Resolved, That the several subordinate Lodges of Ancient Free Masonry in the State of Illinois here assembled, represented by Delegates and proxies properly authorised, consider it as a matter of right and as conducive to the general benefit of Masonry that a Grand Lodge be established in the State of Illinois, and that they now proceed to establish, organise, and locate the same accordingly, to be known and designated by the name of the Grand Lodge of Illinois."

The Committee appointed to draft a Constitution and By-Laws then reported that it had performed that duty. After amendment, the Constitution and By-Laws were adopted, and Jacksonville was designated as the location of the next Grand Lodge. The ballot for Officers resulted in the election of Abraham

Jonas, of Columbus Lodge, No. 20, to be Grand Master; James Adams, of Springfield Lodge, No. 26, Deputy Grand Master; W. S. Vance, of Harmony Lodge, No. 24, Grand Senior Warden; H. Rogers, of Bodley Lodge, No. 29, Grand Junior Warden; W. B. Warren, of Harmony Lodge, No. 24, Grand Secretary, and A. Dunlap, also of Harmony Lodge, No. 24, Grand Treasurer. The Grand Secretary was then ordered to procure a seal, and the Grand Lodge was called to Refreshment until April 28. On that date, Labour was resumed and, "all but Past Masters having retired, a Convocation of Past Masters was declared and the M.:W.:Grand Master was installed by proxy and the Grand Honours paid him agreeably to Ancient Form and Usage. The Convocation was then dissolved, and the M.:W.:Grand Lodge was called from Labour to Refreshment until to-morrow morning at eight o'clock."

On the following morning the other Grand Officers were Installed. Jacksonville and Springfield Lodges then surrendered their Charters and received new ones, which were registered as No. 3 and No. 4, respectively. The Grand Secretary was also directed to issue Charters to Bodley Lodge as Lodge No. 1, to Equality Lodge as Lodge No. 2, to Far West Lodge as Lodge No. 5, and to Columbus Lodge as Lodge No. 6. Temperance Lodge, No. 27, received a Charter as Lodge No. 16, on December 10, 1842; while Friendship Lodge became Lodge No. 7 on October 6, 1841. Franklin Lodge became Lodge No. 25 in 1843. Although Ottawa Lodge, No. 114, received permission to unite with the Grand Lodge of Illinois in 1841, there is no further Record of it. There is, however, a Record of the Chartering of Occidental Lodge U. D. (Kentucky), on October 7, 1841.

On February 20, 1847, the Legislature of Illinois granted the Grand Lodge a special Charter under which it still operates.

When the Grand Lodge was only a year old, an event occurred that caused serious trouble. A Petition for a Dispensation to establish a Lodge was received from the Mormons in Nauvoo, Illinois. The Dispensation was issued on October 15, 1841, and the Lodge was Instituted on March 15, 1842. George Miller, Worshipful Master; Hyrum Smith, a brother of the Mormon "prophet," Senior Warden; and Lucius N. Scoville was Junior Warden. From the date when this Lodge was Instituted till August 11, 1842, when the Record was closed, 286 candidates were Initiated and 243 were Raised. The statement was made that "if this Lodge had been suffered to Work two years longer, every Mormon in Hancock County would have been Initiated."

The Lodge at Nauvoo refused to send its Records to the Grand Lodge for inspection, and since it was suspected of irregularities a special Committee was appointed to visit the Lodge and investigate its Work. Meantime the Grand Master had suspended all Work until the Report of the Committee should be received. Jonathan Nye, Past Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Vermont, who was a visitor at the Illinois Grand Lodge at the time, was elected to honorary membership, and granted a seat in the Grand Lodge of Illinois, and then was made Chairman of the special Committee appointed to investigate the Nauvoo situation. Other members of the Committee were the Grand Secretary, and Bro. H. Rogers. After investigation, the Committee reported that it had found "much to regret, much to deplore," but it recommended that the Dispensation for the Nauvoo Lodge be continued until the next Annual Communication of the Grand Lodge. The Grand Master then divided the Lodge into four Bodies by issuing Dispensations for Nye Lodge and Helm Lodge at Nauvoo, and for Eagle Lodge at Keokuk, Iowa. But this action did not help matters, for all four Lodges refused to abide by the rulings of the Grand Lodge. They were therefore declared to be clandestine, and their members were put under suspension. We know that the Mormons continued to hold meetings, however, for in 1844, St. Clair Lodge, No. 24, preferred charges against a member for wearing his Regalia and marching in a procession at the dedication of a Masonic Hall at Nauvoo. Grand Master Helm reported to the Grand Lodge that the subject had "excited no little discussion both in and out of this Body, and the action of the Grand Lodge in reference to it has been made the object of much animadversion, criticism, and remark. Several communications from eminent and honoured names in Masonry have been addressed to me, calling in question the correctness of the course pursued by you in relation to this subject, and strongly protesting against the prudence and propriety of allowing a Masonic Lodge to exist in Nauvoo."

Then, in 1845, another event occurred that for a time almost disrupted the Grand Lodge. A man of mixed African-Indian blood, having a duly signed Diploma which certified to his membership in another Jurisdiction, was permitted to visit Chicago Lodges a few times. About the same time Apollo Lodge, No. 32, received the Petitions of two men of mixed Anglo-Saxon and African blood. Although it was reported that "the proportion of African blood" was "evidently small," and that the Petitioners were men "reputed 'freeborn,' certainly of good report, and one or two entitled to vote by the laws of the State," the Committee on Petitions was directed not to report until an expression regarding the advisability of accepting the Petitions could be obtained from the Grand Lodge. The Delegate sent to obtain such an expression, failing to get an expression from the Grand Lodge, the Committee then reported favourably on the Petitions, and the men were accepted. When the failure of the Delegate became known, however, a resolution was adopted authorising the withdrawal of the Petitions. These facts then became generally known, and eighteen other Lodges passed resolutions regarding the matter. Some called for a Convention to reorganise the Grand Lodge; others demanded the resignation of the Grand Master for permitting such an outrage. One Lodge called a Convention of Delegates to meet in Peoria during April to consider the course to be pursued. Then Springfield Lodge, No. 4, addressed a Communication to the Grand Master, asking for the facts in the case. It remained, however, for Piasa Lodge, No. 27, to still the tempest with a dignified letter which deplored the precipitate action of the Lodges, and ended by stating "that the Proceedings of Springfield Lodge, No. 4, at their meeting of February 2, A.L.

5846, meet our cordial approbation and concurrence, and that their course in first communicating the charges to the Brethren implicated, and hearing what they had to say in their defense, before proceeding to pass judgment upon them, is perfectly honourable, fair, and Masonic, and worthy of universal imitation in all similar cases."

The matter was thoroughly debated in the Grand Lodge, the offending Chicago Brethren were reprimanded, and the Report of the special Committee was adopted. This Report closed as follows: "Resolved, That this Grand Lodge is unqualifiedly opposed to the admission of Negroes or mulattoes into Lodges under its Jurisdiction." Again in 1851, however, a Negro asked permission to visit a Lodge in Chicago, and presented a Certificate showing that he had visited Lodges in Kentucky, Missouri, Wisconsin, and Ohio. Despite the ruling of the Grand Lodge, he was examined and admitted as a visitor. The action was reported to the Grand Lodge. This led to the passage of a second resolution to strengthen that of 1846. It read as follows: "Resolved, That all subordinate Lodges under this Jurisdiction be instructed to admit no Negro or mulatto as visitor or otherwise, under any circumstances whatever. And be it further Resolved, That if any Lodge under this Jurisdiction hereafter violates this expressed will of this Grand Lodge, it shall be the duty of the M.:W.: Grand Master of this State at once to arrest their Charter."

In the year preceding the outbreak of the war with Mexico, the Grand Lodge had its first experience with Military Lodges. On October 4, 1847, seven Brethren, members of Company B, United States Mounted Volunteers for Mexico, Petitioned for a Dispensation for a Travelling Lodge. Although the Grand Lodge had authorised the Grand Master to issue such Dispensations, none was granted at that time. There was, however, an active Lodge connected with the First Regiment of Illinois Foot Volunteers, but it received its Dispensation from Missouri. John Ralls, Grand Master of Masons of Missouri, was colonel of the Third Missouri Volunteer Militia. On October 9, 1847, while in the field, he issued a Dispensation for Hardin Lodge, No. 87, and named Vantrump Turner as Master. This Lodge was named in honour of Colonel John J. Hardin, of the First Illinois Regiment, who had lost his life at the battle of Buena Vista. No Report of it was ever made, but the Dispensation is still in the archives of the Grand Lodge of Missouri. "It is on paper discoloured by age and bears evidence of considerable rough usage. How it came to be recovered, and the name of its custodian, will probably never be known."

Then, during the war between the States, fifteen Military Lodges were granted Dispensations by the Grand Lodge of Illinois. This action finally brought complaints from other Jurisdictions which objected to the Travelling Lodges accepting Petitions from soldiers who came from States other than Illinois. Consequently, at the Session of 1865 the Grand Master made the following report against the Travelling Lodges: "Most of our Military Lodges suspended Work, and, the War being closed, they ceased to exist—having done some good and much mischief." The Committee on the Grand Master's Address also said: "It is to be hoped that this experience will forever close the question of Travelling Lodges operating within regular foreign Jurisdictions." Thus ended an unfortunate phase of Masonry in Illinois.

Meantime, however, Illinois had some more experience in granting Dispensations to Lodges of a somewhat similar character. On March 17, 1849, the Grand Master of Illinois granted a Dispensation to Past Grand Master Nelson D. Morse, and six others, "to form and open a Lodge to be named Pacific Lodge, in any place in said Territory (California) where they may sojourn, or on the journey there where there is no Grand Lodge established." In discussing the Lodge which was finally established, Assistant Grand Secretary John C. Reynolds said: "Of the Labours, difficulties, and scenes which this Lodge went through, we have no Record, but the Dispensation, which now lies before us in three separate and distinct pieces, speaks of rough usage. The Lodge was in existence as late as October, 1851, at which time its last Return was made." We do know that twenty-seven Brethren were Initiated into the Lodge and that twenty-five were Raised. The last Return of this Lodge was made from "Long's Bar, Upper California." On the same date a similar Dispensation was granted for "Lavelly Lodge." The Dispensation was given to John R. Crandall, Past Deputy Grand Master, and others, but there is no further Record of it. Shortly afterward, the Grand Lodge suffered a singular misfortune. On February 20, 1850, a terrific explosion, followed by a fire, destroyed all the Grand Lodge Records, including the Minutes of the 1849 Communication. Consequently, on April 8, 1850, the Grand Master convened a Special Session of the Grand Lodge for the purpose of restoring the Records. This meeting has since been known as the "Grand Lodge of the Recovery."

During the first ten years of the Grand Lodge's existence, the question of educating the children of Masons was seriously considered. At one time it was proposed that the Grand Lodge of Illinois should unite with that of Missouri in supporting the Missouri Masonic College, but the suggestion was never carried out. Nevertheless, Macomb Lodge, No. 17, purchased the property which had formerly belonged to McDonough College and offered to repair the building and donate it to the Grand Lodge, provided the Grand Lodge would maintain an institution of learning there. Franklin Lodge, No. 25, also maintained a school for girls. This school was held on the first floor of Franklin Lodge's building. No extensive educational plan ever presented was satisfactory to the Grand Lodge, and the enactment of the free-school law, in 1855, made such a plan unnecessary.

The Ritual adopted by the Grand Lodge of Illinois was that agreed upon at the Baltimore Convention of 1843—a Convention at which Illinois was not represented because of its recent organisation and lack of money to pay the expenses of a Delegate. Nevertheless, in 1844, the Grand Lecturer, Levi Lusk, was sent to St. Louis to perfect himself in that Ritual. The next year John Barney came to Illinois and taught the same Work. These lectures were rehearsed before the Grand Lodge in 1845 and unanimously approved. At the Session of 1860, Past Grand Master Morris of Kentucky asked permission to lecture on Ritual. This was the beginning of the trouble with the Conservator's Association. In 1863 the true nature of this association was exposed by Grand Secretary Reynolds, who proved that its members were bound by an oath blindly to obey the orders of its head. The length to which it would go to carry out its purpose was shown in a letter to the Grand Secretary, which said: "Your position would be damaged by taking sides against us, and we don't need you for us." But threat to defeat him for re-election did not deter the Grand Secretary from defending the Standard Work, and the Grand Lodge sustained his position by adopting a resolution making expulsion the penalty for using the Ritual of the Conservator's Association. In fact, a signed agreement not to countenance the use of that Ritual was required of every Officer before Installation. So serious did the problem become that it was necessary to expel one Master and to suspend the Work of his Lodge for one year because the Lodge refused to obey the Grand Lodge resolution.

In 1870 the Grand Lodge, in company with the Committee for the Examination of Visitors, held three-day schools of instruction in several towns throughout the State. This was the beginning of a plan of instruction still in use. For more than sixty years now such schools have been the means of disseminating Ritualistic instruction. They are conducted by a Board of Grand Examiners, consisting of five members. To-day there are more than 500 commissioned Grand Lecturers in Illinois.

In 1887 the Grand Master was asked whether "charges could be sustained against a Mason who disbelieves the Bible and who does not believe in the God of the same." The Grand Master answered by ordering that a trial should be held and, if the charges were proved, the accused Brother should be expelled. The specifications included the charge of atheism, a disbelief in God on the part of the accused, and a denial of the Divine authenticity of the Bible, and accused the Brother on trial of ridiculing the Bible, of declaring some portions of it to be false, and of speaking contemptuously of it. The accused was acquitted of all charges but that of having ridiculed the Bible and of having held it in contempt. Although he was found guilty of those charges the Lodge of which the accused was a member refused to fix a penalty. Thereupon, the Grand Master promptly suspended the Lodge and reported its action to the Grand Lodge. The stand taken by the Jurisprudence Committee, of which Joseph Robbins was Chairman, was that "there is nothing to be gained in inflicting punishment upon those who have broken the law, which is at all comparable to the mischief of continued agitation of a question so dangerous to the peace of the Fraternity. Your Committee, therefore, recommends that the whole proceedings be regarded in fact, as it is in law, void ab initio, leaving all parties enjoying the same status as before the mischievous proceeding was begun."

This ruling was severely criticised by many reviewers. For example, Josiah H. Drummond, of Maine, called it the "most dangerous attack upon Freemasonry that has ever come to our knowledge, and all the more dangerous because it is made in the name of Masonry and by Masons who love Masonry.”

In 1872 still another disaster seriously affected the Masons of Illinois. At that time the great fire in Chicago destroyed the property and halls of eighteen Lodges. But other Lodges came to the rescue, and contributions amounting to $90,000 were received from various Bodies to relieve the necessities of the Masons whose property had been damaged. Fortunately, the Grand Tyler was able to preserve the Grand Lodge Jewels, and by so doing won the thanks of the Grand Lodge, as well as a sum of money for his act.

At the time of the organisation of the Grand Lodge, there were only ten Lodges in Illinois. Their total membership was about 150. The Grand Lodge's financial weakness is shown in the following statement made at the time by Grand Master Jonas: “A Brother rather more able than the most of us generously loaned it a Hundred Dollars to enable it to get along.”

Twenty-five years later there were 465 working Lodges, having more than 20,000 members, while at the time of its fiftieth anniversary, there were 675 Lodges and 43,930 members. By 1900 there were 837 Chartered Lodges and 139,271 members. The latest Report gives 1012 Chartered Lodges and a total membership of over 264,000.

In 1865 Grand Master Turner recommended that “steps be taken to found and establish a school for the education of the children of deceased and indigent Masons, and an asylum for aged, decrepit, and decayed Master Masons.” For a time, however, nothing was done. Then, in 1874, a resolution was adopted to appoint a Committee to inquire into the wisdom of establishing a Masonic Widows' and Orphans' Home. Two years later the resolution was referred to the subordinate Lodges for a referendum vote. It was decisively rejected. Thus, then, the first organised Masonic charity was a private venture. On March 11, 1885, the Illinois Masonic Orphans' Home was incorporated “for the nurture and intellectual and physical culture of the indigent children of deceased Freemasons of the State of Illinois and a temporary shelter and asylum for the sick or indigent widows of such deceased Freemasons.”

A four-story building surrounded by ample, well-shaded grounds was purchased in Chicago. The property was Dedicated by the Grand Lodge on October 7, 1886. It was managed by an Association, incorporated under the general laws of Illinois, whose membership was composed entirely of Masons. The funds were collected by membership fees and donations. In 1894 the Grand Lodge contributed a sum of $5000 to assist in the erection of an additional building. In 1900 the Finance Committee recommended an appropriation of $15,000 to this Home, but Past Grand Master Joseph Robbins, an opponent of organised relief, introduced a resolution to prorate all money in the treasury in excess of $30,000 back to the Lodges. The motion prevailed, and $85,344.22 was returned.

Then, on April 7, 1888, Robert A. Miller executed a will bequeathing 264 acres of land near Sullivan, to the Grand Lodge, upon condition that a suitable home for widows and orphans be erected upon it. He reserved a life-interest for his wife, however, but upon Mrs. Miller's death, on August 20, 1901, the Grand Lodge took steps to secure the title to the farm. The following year a Board of Trustees was organized. During the same year the Trustees of the Illinois Masonic Orphans' Home decided their property to the Grand Lodge on condition that the Home be maintained at or near Chicago. The Grand Lodge accepted the condition, sold the property in 1908, then purchased a tract of ground at LaGrange, Illinois, and erected new buildings there.

In 1909 the Grand Lodge directed the Trustees to erect a building at LaGrange, the cost of which should not exceed $100,000. The corner-stone of this building was laid on April 30, 1910. The children who were to be cared for there were moved into the building on the following March 15, but the dedicatory exercises were not held until June 24. The following year the city school board demanded tuition for all Home children attending the LaGrange city schools. This the Grand Lodge declined to pay, whereupon the school board brought suit. The Circuit Court held the Grand Lodge liable for tuition, but the case was appealed, and during October 1916, the Supreme Court reversed the decision. Having vindicated its right to use the public schools, the Grand Lodge has nearly every year since contributed largely towards the support of the LaGrange schools. In 1924 the Chapters of Chicago and vicinity contributed funds to build a wading pool at the LaGrange Home. This was to be a permanent memorial of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the organization of the Grand Chapter. In July of that year, "a basket picnic was held on the Home grounds at LaGrange to celebrate the completion of the memorial, which consists of a circular wading pool, sixty feet in diameter, a sand pavilion twenty by forty feet, with roof, and a handsome four-cup drinking fountain, suitably inscribed, showing the purpose of the memorial and the donors on bronze tablets, on a keystone in the centre of the fountain."

Constantly increasing demands have required the construction of additional buildings. In addition to the original building, three dormitories and a power plant have since been built. The institution now has about ten acres of ground and buildings, the estimated value of which is $685,427. Children living there are given a regular course in Bible study as well as in the common branches of school study. There is a printing plant which turns out very creditable work.

When the Grand Lodge acquired title to the Sullivan farm, architects were employed to draw plans for a series of buildings, and the sum of $25,000 was appropriated to commence work on a dormitory. The first building was completed, and on September 8, 1904, the Illinois Masonic Home was dedicated to the purpose for which it was intended. At the Session of the Grand Lodge held in 1915, an additional 200 acres adjoining the Sullivan property was donated to the Grand Lodge by Edwin C. Swain, a brother-in-law of Bro. Miller, upon condition that he be given a life annuity of $800. Swain, who was not a Mason, had passed his seventieth birthday at the time of making his donation.

Grand Chapter, in 1913, donated $50,000 to the Grand Lodge for the construction of a hospital. On October 3, of the following year, the corner-stone was laid by the Grand Lodge, and work proceeded rapidly thereafter. The building was dedicated on July 5, 1915, in the presence of perhaps the largest assemblage of Masons ever brought together in Illinois either before or since that event. The procession was more than two miles long, and many thousands witnessed the ceremony. In 1924 the Grand Lodge and Grand Chapter jointly provided $100,000 to pay for constructing an addition to the hospital. Every year the Grand Chapter has contributed $5000 for the upkeep of the hospital and has made, besides, several special donations to provide for needed facilities. The hospital is called the Royal Arch Memorial Hospital.

The property at Sullivan consists of the administration building, which is an imposing structure, two dormitories, and two hospital buildings. The whole is surrounded by beautiful lawns and flower gardens. Ten acres are used for lawn in which is planted a large collection of rare and beautiful flowers. The lawn is further beautified by shade trees, shrubbery, vines, flowerbeds, and a fountain. There is also a greenhouse, with hotbeds. The buildings are made of dark and light pressed brick, trimmed with Bedford stone and cement columns. They are three-story buildings, splendidly constructed, and are equipped with the most modern devices. The furniture and furnishings are the best that could be obtained for the comfort and pleasure of aged men and women. There is a five-acre fruit orchard. In the twenty-three acre garden berries, melons, and vegetables are raised for use in the Home. The Home owns as fine a dairy barn as there is anywhere in the State, and a herd of Holstein cattle which furnish milk and butter. It also possesses five libraries, containing more than 2000 books, which afford entertainment and relaxation for the Home guests.

The men living in the Home have formed a Masonic club which holds regular meetings twice a month, and which performs the Masonic funeral service for those who pass away. The average cost per member has been $32.10 per month. The appraised valuation of the property is $789.073. This sum does not include the value of the land.

The Illinois Masonic Hospital is a voluntary organisation composed of members of the Masonic Fraternity, of the Order of the Eastern Star, and of other allied Bodies in Chicago. The Association was Chartered on July 21, 1909, to provide free hospital service for members of the Fraternity and their families, who are without means to pay for such service. Donations were solicited, memberships sold, and picnics and other entertainments were promoted in order to raise money. At first the Association made other arrangements with hospitals to care for its patients. Thus the constantly increasing demands for service required all the funds of the Association, and the building of a hospital had to be deferred. On February 1, 1921, however, the Association accepted the offer of Chicago Union Hospital to purchase their property for $100,000. A campaign for funds was then started, and within six months' time a sum of $130,000 was raised. In 1925 an addition which cost $500,000 was added. This raised the capacity of the hospital to 150 patients. The physical property has an approximate value of $750,000. Accommodations not needed for the Work of the Association are available to other members of the Fraternity and to the general public, as paying patients. In a single year 3414 patients were admitted, of whom 374 were treated gratis. Of 1764 operations performed, 211 were done at no cost to the patient.

The government of the hospital is vested in two Representatives from each Masonic Lodge, each Eastern Star Chapter, or each other Masonic Body in Cook County, which cares to send such Representatives. The management is in charge of a board of twenty-one trustees, and the annual meeting is held in November. This institution has received official recognition through generous gifts from the various Grand Bodies.

The Eastern Star and Masonic Home is located on the west bank of the Rock River, about one mile from the centre of the city of Rockford. It stands on a beautiful hill which rises about twenty feet above the water's edge. The Home was built in 1922 and was dedicated on September 28 of that year. The building is of yellow brick with stone trimmings. The cost of the building and furnishings was $140,000, all raised by voluntary donations from the Chapters. An addition which cost approximately $90,000 was built in 1925. There are 128 rooms. Ninety guests can be accommodated. At the present time all rooms are occupied, and there is a long list of those waiting for admission. The remainder of the space is taken up with the administrative offices, a sun parlor, a hospital section, and servants' quarters. The expense of management is paid by a twenty cent per capita tax and from donations by Chapters and individuals.

Every applicant for admission must have been a member of an Illinois Chapter of the Eastern Star for two years, must be sixty-five years old, possessed of not more than $500, able to care for herself, and have no relative capable of caring for her.

For their helpless members, the Grand Chapter maintains a sanitarium at Macon. At the present time this institution has sixty-seven guests. Each member has a room of her own. Every effort is made to care for these invalids and make their last days comfortable. Members of the local ministerial association conduct religious services for them every Sunday.

The most eminent of early Illinois Masons was Shadrach Bond, the first governor of the State. Born on a plantation in Fredrick County, Maryland, in 1773, he came to Illinois twenty-one years later. In 1812 he was elected as the first Illinois Delegate to Congress. There he was instrumental in securing the passage of the "Right of Pre-emption," which permitted settlers to secure title to their land and opened the new Illinois Country to settlement. This act was called "the keystone to the arch of the prosperity and growth of Illinois." At the expiration of his term in Congress, Bro. Bond was appointed receiver of public money at Kaskaskia. About this time he moved from Monroe County to Kaskaskia. On November 27, 1810, the date of his marriage at Nashville, Tennessee, he manumitted 600 slaves he owned in Maryland. He was a captain in the military service against the Indians and in the United States Army during the War of 1812. When Illinois was admitted to the Union in 1818, Bro. Bond was unanimously elected governor. He was inaugurated on October 5, 1818, and served until December 5, 1822.

Bro. Bond was made a Mason in Temple Lodge, No. 25, of Reisterstown, Maryland. The date of his becoming a member is unknown, but we do know that the Lodge existed from 1797 to 1815. Bro. Bond's first visit to Western Star Lodge occurred on October 4, 1806, and at that time he petitioned for affiliation. He was elected to membership on December 27 of the same year. He served as Junior Deacon in 1814, and as Master in 1815, 1817, 1818, and 1819. December 11, 1822, he was elected Grand Master, in which office he served until the installation of James Hall on December 1, 1824. Bro. Bond was a regular attendant at the Grand Lodge, and always took an active part in its affairs. When General Lafayette visited Kaskaskia, on April 20, 1825, ex-Governor Bond responded to the toast in the following words: "General Lafayette: May he live to see that liberty established in his native country which he helped to establish in his adopted country." Bro. Bond died April 15, 1832, and was buried in the family cemetery at Kaskaskia. Later, however, when the Mississippi River began to wash away the land on which the cemetery stood, the remains of the deceased governor and his wife were removed to Evergreen Cemetery, at Chester. A monument was there erected to their memory by the State of Illinois.

Another distinguished Illinois Mason was Richard M. Young. In 1816, at the age of eighteen, he was admitted to the bar in Kentucky. The following year he removed to Illinois, and early in 1818 he was enrolled as a member of the Union County bar. His public life began when he was elected a State representative from that county. At the age of twenty-two he was the leader of the movement to establish the State bank. The debate was "a contest of intellectual gladiators" who had "few equals in the State, and victory was won by Young." At the age of twenty-three he was commissioned as colonel of the tenth Illinois Militia. He was also a member of the committee appointed by the Legislature to welcome General Lafayette when the distinguished Frenchman visited Kaskaskia. During those festivities it was said that "no couple shone more resplendently than Judge and Mrs. Young." In 1837 Judge Young was elected to the United States Senate, where he served six years. While in the Senate he was appointed one of the Commissioners to visit England to attempt borrowing $4,000,000 to complete the Illinois and Michigan Canal. On his retirement, he was elected Supreme Court justice, a position for which his profound and far-reaching knowledge of law particularly fitted him.

Bro. Young was raised on July 16, 1822, in Union Lodge (No. 10 Missouri; No. 8 Illinois). At the Constitution of Western Star Lodge, No. 1, under its Illinois Charter, on June 24, 1827, when the Lodge had returned to the "Court House and Lodge," he delivered an appropriate address. Then, in 1831, he removed to Quincy, and although busily engaged as Circuit Court judge, he attended the meeting and signed the Petition for the Dispensation of Bodley Lodge, No. 29. He remained a member of that Lodge until 1846, when, on his removal to Washington, District of Columbia, he demitted. He died in 1861, and was buried in the Congressional Cemetery in Washington.

Although the facts regarding Stephen A. Douglas's life are too well known to need repeating here, it is appropriate that his Masonic record be told. On April 20, 1840, Bro. Douglas received the Degrees in Springfield Lodge, No. 26. On the following December 28 he was elected Junior Warden. He was a regular attendant until April 19, 1841, when he resigned, having changed his residence to Quincy. In 1840, Bro. Douglas was elected Grand Orator of the Grand Lodge, but he was unable to attend the following Communication. Nevertheless, while acting as Circuit Court judge, he was a regular visitor to the Lodge whenever possible. He received the Degree of Mark Master on August 22, 1842, in Springfield Chapter, No. 1, and was exalted in Quincy Chapter, No. 5, on September 3, 1847. His Petitions to the Springfield Lodge and Chapter now hang framed on the walls of the Masonic Temple there.

Bro. Douglas died on June 3, 1861. Three days later the Grand Master, Ira A. W. Buck, "convened an Emergent Grand Lodge at Chicago, to pay such last sad rites as were in our power to his memory. Accompanied by the Lodges and Brethren of Chicago and from abroad, we repaired to the Hall, where the body lay in state, when the public ceremonies were performed, an oration pronounced by Bro. H. A. Johnson, and a procession formed, which occupied over an hour in depositing the evergreen upon the body, singing all the while the burial dirge. It was, for its majesty, significance, awe, and solemnity, the most imposing funeral pageant I ever beheld. Every feature of the face was natural, majestic, and imposing, even in death, and one could hardly resist the solemn impression that his spirit hovered over, hushed, and awed the vast throng into a mournful silence, to sobs, grief, and tears. In the meridian of life he is gone; of his public career I will not speak, for I should only repeat what you all know; his manners, talents, and endowments it is unnecessary to describe, for who, in all Illinois, has not seen the people's tribune—Stephen A. Douglas?"

Another outstanding Mason of Illinois was Joseph Robbins. He was born in Leominster, Massachusetts, on September 12, 1834, and was made a Mason at that place. On December 16, 1859, he affiliated with Quincy Lodge, No. 296, and was Master of it from 1863 to 1869, inclusive. He was also Master again in 1880. He first attended the Grand Lodge in 1863, and with one exception only he attended forty-six consecutive Sessions of that Body. He was Grand Orator in 1869, and served as Grand Master in 1876-1877. He was Master of his Lodge when the Grand Lodge adopted the resolutions condemning the Conservators' Association and prohibiting the use of its Ritual under severe penalties. Bro. Robbins believed that the "privileges and prerogatives of an individual Lodge could not be controlled by the Grand Body," and refused to stop the use of the prohibited Ritual. In consequence he was called before the Grand Lodge and suspended for a period of twelve months " for contumacy and disobedience of the resolutions of the Grand Lodge and the lawful edict of the Grand Lodge." But after " suitable explanations and acknowledgments " had been made, the penalty was stricken from the Record. He was also a member of Chapter, Commandery, and Consistory.

Bro. Robbins's great record as an outstanding member of the Craft was made during the thirty years he prepared the Reports on Fraternal Correspondence. His writings on Masonic law and usage brought him a world-wide reputation as a master of Masonic jurisprudence. He died on July 19, 1909, at which time universal tribute was paid to him. The Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Queensland said: " He was looked upon in the Masonic world as the greatest authority on Masonic jurisprudence, and who had contributed probably more than any other living Mason of his time towards the upholding of the Ancient Landmarks and good government of the Craft generally."

Illinois Masonry was also fortunate in having among its membership the famous General John A. Logan. Although he was made a Mason in Mitchell Lodge, No. 85, he demitted the following year to affiliate with Benton Lodge, No. 64. Lack of space prohibits any mention of his public life, but none is needed here. As commander-in-chief of the Grand Army of the Republic in 1868, he issued his famous order establishing Memorial Day. This he considered the most important act of his life. At memorial services held in his honour, F. M. Cockrell, ex-Confederate General and United States senator from Missouri, said: "Among all the great and distinguished volunteer officers during the late war, it is no disparagement of any of them to say that General Logan was the greatest and most distinguished. Courageous, fearless, energetic, untiring, generous, and dashing, he was the beau ideal of the American volunteer soldiery. As a representative and senator in the Congress of the United States he was incorruptible, faithful, diligent, and laborious, and was earnest in his convictions and forcible and aggressive in their advocacy." General Logan lived a stormy life and it seemed a fitting end to his career that his last journey with his old comrades should be made in a storm. His temporary resting-place was in a vaulted tomb in Rock Creek Cemetery, in Washington, District of Columbia. When the remains of General Logan were laid away, " the procession was more than a mile in length. The veterans of the Grand Army of the Republic made a superb appearance. Though the snow and water were ankle deep, the grief-stricken mourners marched through it with regular step, paying the last tribute to their illustrious departed comrade-in-arms." The body was later removed to the Soldiers' Home Cemetery, where Mrs. Logan had erected a granite mortuary chapel. He also held membership in Washington Chapter, Chevalier Bayard Commandery, and Oriental Consistory, all of Chicago.

One of the best known members of the Craft in Illinois is Louis Lincoln Emmerson. He was born at Albion, Illinois, on December 27, 1863. In 1886 he located in Mt. Vernon and began his business career. Five years later he organised the Third National Bank, and has since made banking his business.

He has also held several political offices. In 1916 he was elected Secretary of State for Illinois, an office to which he was re-elected twice. Then, in 1928, he resigned to serve as governor, an office he held till 1933. He received the Lodge, Chapter, and Council Degrees at Mt. Vernon, and was Knighted in Cyrene Commandery of Centralia. He has presided over Lodge, Chapter, and Commandery, having been the first Commander of Patton Commandery at Mt. Vernon. In 1913 he was elected Grand High Priest. Then, in 1919, he was made Grand Commander, and in 1927-1928 he served as Grand Master of Masons in Illinois. He is one of the Trustees of the General Grand Chapter and Treasurer of the Grand Encampment of Knights Templar. Since his retirement from Masonic Office, Bro. Emmerson has been Chairman of important Committees in all three Bodies. He is the only Mason who has been governor of the State and Grand Master at one and the same time. He was created a Sovereign Grand Inspector General, 33d Degree, on September 19, 1911, and was crowned an active member of the Supreme Council on September 18, 1928. He is still active in serving the Craft of his State.

Although space will permit the bare mention of several well-known members, the names of a number of other distinguished Illinois Masons should be given. George M. Moulton, Vincent L. Hurlburt, and William L. Sharp have each held the Office of Grand Master of the Grand Encampment of Knights Templar. Joseph E. Dyas and Charles C. Davis have served as General Grand High Priest. The list of Grand Orators of the Grand Lodge contains the names of Adlai E. Stevenson, first assistant post-master general and vice-president of the United States; John M. Palmer, governor, United States senator, and candidate for the Presidency of the United States, on the Gold-Democratic ticket; William E. Mason, James H. Lewis, and Lawrence Y. Sherman, all United States senators; Charles S. Deneen, governor and senator; Richard Yates, governor and congressman-at-large; and Frank O. Lowden, governor, and the only Honorary Member of the Grand Lodge. In addition to these there have been nine congressmen, one Supreme Court justice, three lieutenant-governors, one secretary of State, and one attorney general.

Many have asked what was the attitude of Abraham Lincoln towards the Masonic Fraternity. In answer to them we quote here the following statement, which was printed in the Masonic Trowel, on August 15, 1868: "About 1838 or 1839, Mr. Lincoln and James H. Matheny concluded to 'join the Masons.' Matheny did so and has been Deputy Grand Master and Standing Orator ever since. Before starting for Washington, the matter was broached by Judge Dubois and Grand Master Buck. He (Lincoln) declined them upon the ground that his motives would be liable to misconstruction. Much conversation was had between him and the present Grand Master French, and he was somewhat inclined to Petition, but did not. He was friendly to the Institution." Ira A. W. Buck was Grand Master of Masons of Illinois, in 1858, 1859, and 1860, while Grand Master French lived in Washington, District of Columbia.

FREEMASONRY IN INDIANA

ROBERT ARCHER WOODS

FREEMASONRY came to Indiana by way of the South-gate. After the Grand Lodge of Kentucky was organised, in 1800, it issued Dispensations or Charters for the formation of eight Lodges in Indiana, as follows: Vincennes, August 27, 1807, renewed September 1, 1808, and Chartered October 31, 1809; Madison, by Charter, August 30, 1815; Charlestown, by Charter, April 1816; Lawrenceburg, Corydon, Rising Sun, and Salem, by Charter, August 1817; Vevay, by Charter, September 1818. Brookville Lodge received its Dispensation from Ohio, May 9, 1817. These nine Lodges were represented at the permanent organisation of the Grand Lodge, held at Madison, January 12, 1818.

On January 15, 1818, Vincennes, Madison, Charlestown, Lawrenceburg, and Corydon were given Charters numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5, respectively. Brookville and Salem, for some cause, did not accept Charters, and Vevay and Rising Sun, working under Dispensation, were as yet ineligible. Rising Sun was Chartered September 14, 1818, as No. 6, and Vevay as No. 7, on September 14, 1819.

Alexander Buckner, Charlestown, was the first Grand Master; Alexander A. Meek, Madison, D.G.M.; John Tipton, Corydon, S.G.W.; Marston G. Clark, Salem, J.G.W.; Samuel C. Tate, Charlestown, G.T.; Henry P. Thornton, Madison, G.S.; Jeremiah Sullivan, Madison, G.Orator; Isaac Hawk, Charlestown, S.G.D.; Jonathan Woodbury, Lawrenceburg, J.G.D.; Alexander McCoskey, Madison, G.Stew. and Tyler. Most of these men were prominent in the political and legal arena of the State.

The first Lodge organised in Indiana, a decade earlier, was that of Vincennes. A Petition for a Dispensation was prepared by General W. Johnson, an able lawyer and an orator of no mean ability, a member of Abraham Lodge at Louisville, Kentucky. The Grand Lodge of Kentucky granted Dispensation August 27, 1807, to George Wallace, W.M.; James Adams, S.W. and General W. Johnson, J.W. Organisation failed thereunder and a new Dispensation was granted to the same Officers September 1, 1808. The Lodge was Instituted March 13, 1809; the Master and Senior Warden being absent, William Jones was installed Master and General W. Johnson as Junior Warden; the Office of Senior Warden was left vacant.

Johnson has been heralded as the Father of Masonry in Indiana, and a monument erected in the cemetery at Vincennes by the Grand Lodge to commemorate that event; but the record of Vincennes Lodge and the Grand Lodge does not bear out this claim. His only claim to pre-eminence rests on his preparation of the original Petition for Dispensation and a large number of Masonic orations, which he delivered very extensively.

Gen. John Gibson, secretary of Indiana Territory, Fellow-Craft from a Lodge in Lancaster, Pennsylvania, was raised to the Sublime Degree of Master Mason, March 14, 1809. This was the first degree work done by the Lodge and makes Gibson the first to be "raised" in Indiana. William Prince and Parmenas Beckes presented their Petitions on March 17, 1809, the first meeting at which Petitions were received, and were elected, and the Entered Apprentice, Fellow Craft and Master Mason Degrees were all conferred upon them that same day; these two are therefore the first to have received all three Degrees of Freemasonry in Indiana. Prince was a major on General Harrison's staff at the battle of Tippecanoe, U.S. Indian agent, lawyer, judge, and died a member of Congress. He was a member of the commission that, in 1820, selected Indianapolis as the permanent capital of the State. The town of Princeton was named in his honor.

Elihu Stout, the editor and publisher of the first newspaper, excepting the Cincinnati Gazette, west of the Alleghenies, was the first member of this Lodge to become Grand Master, in 1827; then came John B. Martin, in 1835, and Mason J. Niblack, in 1897. Although General W. Johnson was twice Deputy Grand Master, he failed to become Grand Master, Brethren from the floor being passed over him.

The history of the Grand Lodge of Indiana has been rather uneventful, but it may be said that our ancient Indiana Brethren laid its foundations substantially and satisfactorily, for no Grand Lodge has existed so long with so little friction. Its record for the past century and more is one of which its members may well feel proud.

The most exciting and trying period the Grand Lodge ever passed through was in connection with the remodelling and new construction of Grand Masonic Temple, wherein the Building Committee, authorised to spend $75,000, really expended $115,500. Much bitterness arose, but the problem was solved by Biennial Communications and the raising of dues. During this period, from 1877 to 1885, the membership dropped from 28,101 to 22,548, a net loss of 5553. The present membership, in 555 Lodges, is 113,945.

Alexander Buckner, the first Grand Master, was born in 1785, presumably in Jefferson County, Kentucky. As early as 1812 we find him practicing law at Charlestown, Indiana. Directly after serving as Grand Master in 1818, he removed to Missouri, where he was a member of the State Constitutional Convention in 1820; he served several years as a member of the Missouri Legislature and was elected United States senator, serving from March 4, 1831, until his death at St. Louis, June 15, 1833.

Alexander A. Meek, second Grand Master, was a resident of Madison. He was elected Grand Master September 15, 1818, and served until September 14, 1820. He was born in Ireland, about 1786, from whence he came to America with his parents when quite young. Engaging in the practice of law, he afterwards became one of the most noted practitioners in Indiana. During the war of 1812 he served as lieutenant in the Regular Army of the United States. On the admission of Indiana into the Union in 1816, he became U. S. attorney for the first district, serving as such until his death in 1821.

John Tipton, third Grand Master, was born in Sevier County, Tennessee, August 14, 1786. In 1807 he became a resident of Indiana, and in 1811 served as captain of a company in the battle of Tippecanoe. He then settled at Corydon, which later became capital of the State and, by regular gradation, was promoted to the rank of brigadier-general, and given command of the militia in southern Indiana. He served in the State Legislature and was a member of the commission that, in 1820, selected Indianapolis as the permanent capital of the State. He was elected Grand Master September 14, 1820, while a resident of Corydon; and again November 28, 1828, serving one year each. He was elected United States senator in 1831, to fill a vacancy, and was re-elected in 1833. His latter years were spent at Logansport until his death, April 5, 1839. Tipton Lodge, at Logansport, was named in his honour, as was also the town of Tipton and Tipton County.

John Sheets, fourth Grand Master, of Madison, was elected Grand Master at Corydon, September 12, 1821, and again October 9, 1822.

Jonathan Jennings, fifth Grand Master, of Corydon, and later of Charlestown, the first governor of Indiana after its admission into the Union as a State, was elected Grand Master October 7, 1823; re-elected October 4, 1824; declined a third term, October 1825. He was born in Hunterdon County, New Jersey, in 1784. His father was a Presbyterian minister, and soon after Jonathan's birth removed to Pennsylvania, where the son received a liberal education; studied law, but before being admitted to the Bar he migrated to Indiana Territory. He became clerk of the Territorial Legislature at Vincennes, and while such was elected to Congress; re-elected in 1811, and again in 1813. Early in 1816, he reported a bill to Congress to enable the people of the Territory to take the necessary steps to convert it into a State. He was a member of the convention to form the State Constitution in 1816, was chosen to preside over its deliberations, and, in the election which followed, was elected governor by a good majority; he served six years as such. At the close of his term as governor he was elected representative in Congress and was chosen for four consecutive terms. He died July 26, 1834.

The few brief sketches above mentioned will serve to indicate the character of the foundation stones of Indiana Masonry. Their successors in office maintained the same high standard of intelligence and patriotism. To this we attribute the excellence of Masonic standards and customs in the Hoosier State.

The establishment of a Masonic Home in Indiana was considered by Grand Lodge May 26, 1909, upon receipt of a memorial from the Grand Chapter, Order Eastern Star. Voted, "That this Grand Lodge declare in favor of providing a home for dependent Master Masons, widows and orphans." A special Committee, to formulate and recommend plans, reported in 1910, recommending a tax of twenty-five cents on each of its 53,000 members, to be continued "until funds are sufficient to begin work." The Grand Chapter, Order Eastern Star, made the initial contribution of $25,000. By May 1913 contributions from all sources, Lodges, Chapters, Councils, Commanderies, Scottish Rite, and O. E. S., amounted to $79,750.19. The venture was named "Indiana Masonic Home." It is located at Franklin, twenty miles south of Indianapolis. The Grand Secretary of the Grand Chapter, O. E. S., is a member of the board of directors. To-day, the Home is one of the most complete and best arranged institutions of its kind in the country. Since its inception not one cent of indebtedness has ever been incurred. The Maintenance Fund is now $213,571.12; Endowment Fund, $571,897.09; a gain in the latter in a year of $27,000. The inmates are segregated in buildings of their own, men, women, boys, and girls. A print shop, band, orchestra, and other features for well-rounded development and enjoyment are fostered, besides a full school curriculum, including high school, for the children and youth.

The George Washington National Masonic Memorial early received Grand Lodge support and its contribution, when completed, will be on the basis of one dollar for each of its more than 100,000 members.

GRAND CHAPTER ROYAL ARCH MASONS OF INDIANA

The Grand Chapter of Indiana was organized in the city of Indianapolis, December 25, 1845. Preliminary thereto we find the following historical data:

I. MADISON, MADISON

Organized July 14, 1819, under Dispensation issued April 1, 1819, by D. Gen. Gr. H. P. Thomas Smith Webb; but Webb died without making official report of his action to Gen. Gr. Ch. The Chapter made no returns, believing it working under Charter as independent Body. Hence G.G.C., at its September 1819 meeting, having only hearsay evidence of its existence, took no action and no Charter was granted; but Chapter continued to work U.D. until 1829, when it suspended until July 19, 1842, when it resumed labour. In 1843 its irregularity was brought to G.G.C. attention by D.G.G.H.P. Stapleton, and it ceased labour and petitioned Gen. Gr. Chapter to heal and confirm its doings from September 1819, to date; this was done by G.G.C. September 12, 1844, and a Charter was granted, upon the Chapter healing the members by re-obligating them. This confirmation gives the Chapter an unbroken record since July 14, 1819.

BROOKVILLE, BROOKVILLE

Organized under Dispensation given by D.G.G.H.P. Thomas Smith Webb sometime during 1819, but Webb died before G.C. Chapter met in September 1819, and no official report was made of its formation; upon the hearsay evidence G.G.C. did not act, and no Charter was granted. G.G.C. gives the order of formation as Madison first and Brookville second. Brookville met with Madison and Vincennes, at Madison, May 13, 1823, and organised a Grand Chapter, which never functioned thereafter; and Brookville Chapter passes out of existence, with no records left even of its brief career.

VINCENNES, VINCENNES

Organised June 16, 1820, under Dispensation issued May 13, 1820, by Gen. Gr. King John Snow. September 15, 1826, the Committee on Doings of Gen. Grand Officers reported "that charters have been granted to Vincennes Chapter on May 13, 1820, and the Jennings Mark Lodge at Vevay on May 4, 1821." This Chapter during its early years was very unstable, and aside from taking part in the formation of a Grand Chapter at Madison in May 1823, which went for naught, it suspended functions on four different occasions, viz.: from March 9, 1830, to December 29, 1834; from August 7, 1836, to May 2, 1838; from February 3, 1839, to February 28, 1842; and from November 16, 1842, to May 7, 1845. On this last date it resolved to participate in the approaching meeting at Indianapolis for the purpose of forming a Grand Chapter and, although five Delegates were named, not one was present at the formation. About this time the history of Vincennes Chapter was rather clouded. Whether it was working under Dispensation or Charter is not clear; for on May 22, 1848, Grand Chapter provided that "a charter or dispensation be issued in vacation by the G.H.P. and one other Grand Officer, which, although the Chapter met on June 30, 1848, to receive it, and the G.H.P., at the May 1849, Annual, reports that a Charter has been issued to Vincennes Chapter, No. 7, yet future developments reveal that it was never delivered, and that the Chapter really received a Dispensation granted in 1848, signed by the G.H.P., but not even attested by the G. Sec.," as reported by G.H.P. William Hacker in 1858, and upon Hacker's recommendation a Charter was granted on May 21, 1858.

FIRST GRAND CHAPTER

Madison Chapter, Brookville Chapter, and Vincennes Chapter met at Madison on May 13, 1823, and organised a Grand Chapter. From some cause, it never met afterwards, and was actually and legally dissolved by reason of its failure to comply with its own constitutional requirements to meet and elect Officers at the regular meeting in May 1824. Neither was Gen. Gr. Chapter advised of its existence, except hearsay; said Body therefore on September 12, 1844, declared it to have no legal existence or authority. This paved the way for the present Grand Chapter of December 1845.

2. LOGAN, LOGANSPORT

Organised October 7, 1837, pursuant to Dispensation issued October 7, 1837, by D.G.G.H.P. Poinsett; this Dispensation and Returns miscarried in the mails and failed to reach G.G.C. at its meeting in 1838, and the same thereupon renewed on March 12, 1839, by D.G.G.H.P. Stapleton, and Charter granted by G.G.C. on September 17, 1841. Charter arrested December 11, 1854, and restored May 21, 1856. Logan Chapter and Vincennes Chapter occasionally conferred Degrees upon Sunday; and Logan Chapter and Madison Chapter conferred the Past Master Degree upon Masters-elect of Lodges.

3. LAFAYETTE, LAFAYETTE

Dispensation issued by D.G.G.H.P. Joseph K. Stapleton on August 17, 1843. Reported to G.G.C. at its meeting on September 10, 1844; but no record of granting of Charter. Stapleton organised fourteen Chapters, only one of them being granted a Charter, according to G.G.C. Proceedings. Lafayette Chapter, therefore, must have participated in the formation of the Grand Chapter in 1845, as a Chapter under Dispensation. September 13, 1844, is date of Charter, as claimed by Lafayette Chapter. Probably correct.

4. KING SOLOMON, RICHMOND

The Proceedings of the General Grand Chapter at its Session on September 14, 1838, reads: "The Committee on the Doings of General Grand Officers made a report in which they approved the granting of a Dispensation by M.E. Companion Stapleton for a Chapter at Richmond, Indiana, and recommended the granting of a Charter"; the recommendation was agreed to, and the Charter issued. This Dispensation was doubtless issued near the close of 1837, as the first entry upon King Solomon's Records, January 1, 1838, is a record of its organisation under said Dispensation. The Return of King Solomon gives the date of Charter as "May 21, 1838," which is at variance with the above record of Gen. Gr. Chapter. Their Records also show that on January 2, 1838, Officers were "installed" in pursuance of a letter of Dispensation from Companion Stapleton, General Grand Scribe. Their Minutes further show that the Charter was received on November 3, 1838; hence, we conclude the correct Charter date is September 14, 1838; as six weeks surely is ample time for delivery of mails even at that period, especially so, as G.G. Chapter only met in September of that year, as per its record.

GRAND CHAPTER (1845)

The Grand Chapter of Indiana was organised under a Dispensation granted by Joseph K. Stapleton, D.G.G.H.P., under date of November 18, 1845. The organisation was effected December 25, 1845, by Madison Chapter, No. 1, Logan Chapter, Logansport, as No. 2, Lafayette Chapter as No. 3, and King Solomon Chapter, Richmond, as No. 4.

From the Record it would seem that King Solomon should have ranked at least Logan and Lafayette, and but for Madison's work being "healed" might have ranked that Chapter also. William B. Smith of King Solomon, Richmond, was elected the first Grand High Priest. King Solomon may have sacrificed her right to number one for the honour of office. Perhaps there was a bit of Indiana politics in that early formation.

It is also a matter of history, Proceedings of General Grand Chapter of 1826, that John Snow, G.G.K., on May 4, 1821, granted a Charter to Jennings Mark Lodge at Vevay. The records of Madison Chapter, twenty-five miles away, a few years later show a number of candidates healed in the Mark Degrees, because they had received it "under the old constitution." This doubtless referred to some who had taken the Mark Degree in the Jennings Mark Lodge. No further record of this Mark Lodge is available.

INDIANA COUNCIL OF HIGH PRIESTHOOD

M.E. Companion William Hacker is authority for the statement that the origin of the Order of High Priesthood dates from January 10, 1799, when the General Grand Chapter became its sponsor and retained authority over it until the Triennial Convocation of September 19, 1853.

The Indiana Council was fathered by the Ohio Council, under the supervision of Companion John Snow, a business partner of Companion Thomas Smith Webb.

The first reliable account we have of the Conference of the Order in Indiana is that sometime in the year 1825, Companions James T. Moffett and Thomas Bishop conferred it upon the much celebrated Companion Lorenzo Dow, the High Priest-elect that year of what is now known as Vincennes Chapter, No. 7.

Moffett was a member of Vincennes Chapter, No. 2, in 1820, and the records show was Anointed at the home of David G. Cowan, G.H.P. of Kentucky, on June 16, 1820, the date he was Installed as the first High Priest of Vincennes Chapter, under Dispensation from John Snow, Gen. Gr. King.

Bishop is shown to have been a member of Vincennes Chapter on September 1, 1822, and to have affiliated with Vincennes Lodge, No. 1, on October 6, 1828. Bishop claimed to have been Anointed in Toronto, Canada, in the year 1818, but of this we have no proof.

It is further claimed that Companion Dow, with the proper assistance, subsequently conferred the Order upon others, names unknown. The Degree was conferred upon John Law, May 10, 1842, in Vincennes Chapter, doubtless at the hands of Thomas Bishop.

We have no further Record of the Order in Indiana until May 26, 1848, when a Council was convened in Indianapolis, with Samuel Reed, of Cincinnati, the Lecturer of the Ohio Council, acting as President; Elizur Deming, of Lafayette, Vice-President; Abel C. Pepper, of Rising Sun, Master of Ceremonies, and Isaac Bartlett, of Logansport, Conductor. When Deming, Pepper, and Bartlett got the Order we do not know, possibly from Companion Dow in 1825. At the Conference in 1848, four Companions were Anointed, Caleb Schmidlap of Madison, Alexander C. Downey of Rising Sun, Henry C. Lawrence of Lafayette, and C.S. Ramsay of Indianapolis.

Several Companions, whose names appear on the Roster as Officers of the Indiana Council, are without any record when Anointed or affiliated. One of these, Rev. William H. Raper, served as Chaplain in 1850. He may have been Anointed by the Ohio Council, as he was pastor at Urbana, Ohio, at an early date. The Commanderies of Knights Templar at Urbana and Indianapolis take their names from him.

The Indiana Council was finally organised on May 20, 1853, and since that date the Record is full and complete.

On October 21, 1931, the Constitution was amended with the name and title of the " Council of High Priests of the State of Indiana " changed to that of " Grand Council of High Priesthood of the State of Indiana."

GRAND COUNCIL ROYAL AND SELECT MASTERS OF INDIANA

The Grand Council Royal and Select Masters of Indiana was organised in the city of Indianapolis on December 20, 1855. Many years previous to this Cryptic Masonry was practised in the State. The Council Degrees were first conferred outside of a Royal Arch Chapter of Indiana in the city of Richmond.

August 22, 1838, Companion John Barney, Grand Lecturer of the Grand Council of Ohio, visited Richmond and conferred the Degrees of Royal and Select Master upon Companions Francis King, Lynde Elliott, Benjamin Sayre, J. R. Mendenhall, W. S. Addleman, C. W. Appleton, Rees C. Jones, Thomas K. Peebles, William B. Smith, Samuel Fleming, and B. W. Addleman. On October 16, 1838, a Dispensation was granted to these Companions by the M.P. Grand Master of the Grand Council of Ohio, to organise Richmond Council, the Officers named being Francis King, T. I. Grand Master, Lynde Elliott, D.I. Grand Master, and Benjamin Sayre, P.C.W. This Council held irregular meetings for some three years, the last entry being June 18, 1841. After a lapse of four years, the Companions at Richmond received another Dispensation granted by the Grand Puissant of the State of Ohio, empowering Companion W. B. Smith and eight other Companions to form a Council of Select Masters, which was done on April 12, 1845. There is no evidence that this Council ever held any meeting thereafter. In 1853 the General Grand Chapter passed a resolution that Royal Arch Masonry had no rightful jurisdiction or control over the degrees of Royal and Select Master. This appears to have stopped the further conferring of these degrees by Chapters in Indiana, and soon thereafter the organisation of regular Councils began in this State.

The first Council thus organised in Indiana was Indiana Council, No. 21, at New Albany, under a Dispensation granted by the Grand Puissant of the Grand Council of Kentucky, under date of June 7, 1854, the Officers named being George W. Porter, T.I. Grand Master, George W. Bartlett, D.I. Grand Master, and L. L. Garner, P.C.W. Under that Dispensation New Albany Council held its first Assembly on June 17, 1854, at which time fourteen petitions were received and the petitioners duly elected. They then received the degree of Royal Master and were separately introduced and " exalted " to the degree of Select Master, after which the Council was closed " in silence." Nothing further appears in the Records of New Albany Council except petitions received and degrees conferred until September 3, 1855. Meantime a Charter was issued by the Grand Puissant of the Grand Council of Kentucky to Indiana Council, No. 21, which was dated at Frankfort, Kentucky, on September 4, 1854.

On July 16, 1855, a Dispensation was granted by the Grand Puissant of the Grand Council of Ohio for the formation of Indianapolis Council at Indianapolis, Indiana. It was so organised on July 24, 1855, with Andrew M. Hunt T.I. Grand Master, Francis King, D.I. Grand Master and L. R. Brownell, P.C.W. A Charter was duly issued October 18, 1855, at Mansfield, Ohio, by the Grand Puissant of the Grand Council of Ohio, under which it was constituted November 5, 1855.

On August 10, 1855, a Dispensation was granted by the Grand Puissant of the Grand Council of Ohio to Companion William Hacker, and eight others, to form Shelby Council at Shelbyville, Indiana. The Council was organised under Dispensation August 31, 1855. A Charter was granted by the Grand Council of Ohio under date of October 18, 1855, under which Shelby Council was constituted November 10, 1855, with William Hacker, T.I. Grand Master, Cyrus Wright, D.I. Grand Master, and Eden H. Davis, P.C.W.

From the Records it would seem that William Hacker immediately busied himself with the formation of a Grand Council, as appears from his letters to the several Councils in Indiana urging consideration thereof.

Grand Council was organised at Indianapolis on December 20, 1855, by Representatives of the three Councils then working in the State: New Albany, Indianapolis, and Shelbyville. The following Officers were elected and installed: George W. Porter, Grand Puissant Master, New Albany; William Hacker, Deputy Grand Puissant Master, Shelbyville; Andrew M. Hunt, Thrice Illustrious Grand Master, Indianapolis; L. L. Garner, Grand Principal Conductor, New Albany; Loring R. Brownell, Grand Captain of Guard, Indianapolis; Eden H. Davis, Grand Treasurer, Shelbyville; Francis King, Grand Recorder, Indianapolis; John W. Sullivan, Grand Chaplain, Edinburg, and Henry Colestock, Grand Steward and Sentinel, Indianapolis. Rank was distributed as follows: Indiana Council, No. 1, New Albany; Indianapolis Council, No. 2, Indianapolis, and Shelby Council, No. 3, Shelbyville. These Councils are still active. Between the formation of Grand Council on December 20, 1855, and its next Assembly in May 1856, five new Councils were organised, at Fort Wayne, Lafayette, Connersville, Aurora, and Terre Haute, to which Charters were granted in May 1856.

There is nothing of special interest to note in the annals of this Grand Council, except its rise and progress during the past eighty years. This may perhaps be best shown by a division into decades. In May 1855 there were three Councils with about 50 members. In May 1865 there were 16 Councils with a membership of 500. In May 1875, there were 44 Councils with a membership of 1803. The next decade was not a prosperous one. From 1875 to 1880 there was a loss of three Councils and nearly 500 in membership. This was the time of great dissatisfaction among the Masons of Indiana; because of the condition of affairs of the Grand Lodge in regard to the debt on the Masonic Temple, when the Grand Lodge lost nearly 6000 Master Masons. The tide turned in 1881, and in 1885 Grand Council registered 1801, being a net loss of two in this decade. In 1895 there were 46 Councils with a membership of 2457. In 1905 there were 62 Councils with a membership of 4200. In 1915 there were 72 Councils with 9364 members. In 1925 there were 75 Councils with 19,850 members, second only to the Grand Council of Ohio. The latest figures show 71 Councils with 14,562 members.

During its history seventy-one Grand Masters and six Grand Recorders have served Grand Council. Of the latter, Francis King served from 1855 to 1865, William Hacker from 1865 to 1868, John M. Bramwell from 1868 to 1888, William H. Smythe from 1888 to 1901, Calvin W. Prather from 1901 to 1920, and Robert A. Woods, from 1920 to 1935.

Henry M. Mordhurst, Fort Wayne, was General Grand Recorder of General Grand Council from 1886 to 1929, inclusive, and Robert A. Woods, Princeton, was General Grand Master for the triennial term 1933 to 1936.

The history of Cryptic Masonry in Indiana is worthy of all praise. There has been nothing to detract from its high standing. It is the second largest independent Grand Council in this country. We trust the Companions of Indiana duly recognise its honourable record and their responsibility for its future, that it may pass down to their successors, pure and undefiled, through many generations to come.

GRAND COMMANDERY KNIGHTS TEMPLAR OF INDIANA

The initial steps in Chivalric Masonry in Indiana are due to Raper Commandery No. 1, of Indianapolis, instituted under Dispensation May 17, 1848. Rev. William H. Raper, an eminent Methodist Divine, of Dayton, Ohio, was a motivating agent. He was assisted by Sir Samuel Reed, Grand Lecturer of all the Ohio Bodies. The Dispensation was issued to Sir Knights Abel C. Pepper, James H. Pepper, and James Stirratt of Rising Sun; Isaac Bartlett and Frederick Fabel of Logansport; Richard Sopris and James W. Weaver of Aurora; Benjamin F. Kavanaugh and Francis King of Indianapolis; and Caleb Schmidlap of Madison. The Convention, at which the determination was made to apply for a Dispensation from the Grand Encampment, was held at the residence of Governor Whitcomb, in the city of Indianapolis. Sir Knights William H. Raper and Samuel Reed, of Ohio, were present at the institution.

The Encampment went at once to work, and upon May 20, conferred both Orders upon Governor Whitcomb, who was the first candidate. When the Conclave closed, thirty-one members composed the roll.

October 25, 1848, the Encampment participated in the laying of the cornerstone of Masonic Grand Hall. In 1849 the Orders were conferred upon M.: W.: Bro. Elizur Deming, Grand Master of the Grand Lodge.

September 10, 1853, Raper Encampment requested the General Grand Encampment to organise a Grand Encampment for Indiana, and on May 16, 1854, a Convention for such purpose was held in Indianapolis, and the Warrant duly executed. The first regular Conclave convened at Lafayette, December 27, 1854, when the following Officers were elected: Henry Lawrence, Lafayette, Grand Commander; William Sheets, Indianapolis, Deputy Grand Commander; John S. Scobey, Greensburg, Grand Generalissimo; Solomon D. Bayless, Fort Wayne, Grand Captain General; Andrew Hunt, Grand Treasurer; Francis King, Indianapolis, Grand Recorder; John O. Barton, Lafayette, Grand Prelate; William Hacker, Greensburg, Senior Grand Warden; Henry Rudisill, Fort Wayne, Junior Grand Warden; Charles Case, Fort Wayne, Grand Standard Bearer; J. E. Houser, Greensburg, Grand Sword Bearer; Isaac Bartlett, Lafayette, Grand Warder; Henry Colestock, Indianapolis, Grand Sentinel. The Encampments (Commanderies) participating were: Raper of Indianapolis, Greensburg, Lafayette, Fort Wayne, and New Albany. In 1857 the word Encampment was changed to Commandery.

Raper Commandery of Indianapolis has ever been the outstanding member of the Grand Commandery of Indiana. Raper Drill Corps, under Sir Knight Nicholas R. Ruckle, since June 1875, became known throughout the land and its Asylum began to accumulate the magnificent trophies won in competitive drills at the triennials of Grand Encampment. A Libation service was awarded at Cleveland in 1877; a costly jewelled sword and banner at Chicago in 1880; a mounted knight in bronze at San Francisco in 1883; a bronze lectern at Denver in 1892; a clock at Saratoga in 1907; silver punch bowl and cups at Denver in 1913; watches at New Orleans in 1922; and a knight in armour at Seattle in 1925; and minor awards.

The Boys' Dormitory at the Masonic Home in Franklin, a substantial and elegant building, was the gift of the Templars of Indiana during the administration of R. E. Sir Eugene Vatet, of Muncie, Grand Commander.

The elevation of Past Grand Commander Leonidas Perry Newby, of Knightstown, to the head of the Grand Encampment, as Grand Master, in 1922, is Indiana's important contribution to Templary in the United States. The present Grand Recorder of Grand Encampment, R.E. Sir Adrian Hamersly, is another outstanding gift to Templary in general.

Since organisation in 1854 to date there have been seven Grand Recorders: Francis King from 1854 to 1865; William Hacker 1865 to 1868; John M. Bramwell 1868 to 1888; William H. Smythe 1888 to February 1901; Jacob W. Smith, February 1901 to April 1901; Calvin W. Prather, April 1901 to August 1920; William H. Swintz, August 1920 to 1935.

There are now 60 active Commanderies with a membership of 10,000.

ANCIENT ACCEPTED SCOTTISH RITE IN INDIANA

In May 1863 a number of Brethren in the city of Indianapolis were impressed with the idea of organising a body of the Scottish Rite in that city. Caleb B. Smith, a member of the Bodies at Cincinnati, Ohio, was the only one in possession of any of the Scottish Rite Degrees. On October 7, 1863, Brothers James M. Tomlinson, Edwin A. Davis, William John Wallis, Dr. Phineas G. C. Hunt, John C. New, and Horace W. Smith went to Cincinnati to receive the Degrees in Lodge and Council. Brother Caleb B. Smith accompanied them to assist in the conference. These seven Brethren thus became the Charter members of the first Scottish Rite Bodies in the Valley of Indianapolis.

The period from October 1863 to May 15, 1865, constituted the formative period of the Rite in Indianapolis, and was fraught with great interest and activity among the Brethren.

At the first election of Officers, held October 15, 1863, Caleb B. Smith was chosen as Thrice Potent Master, James M. Tomlinson as Senior Grand Warden, William John Wallis as Junior Grand Warden, John C. New as Grand Treasurer, Horace W. Smith as Grand Secretary, Phineas G. C. Hunt as Grand Master of Ceremonies, and Edwin A. Davis as Grand Captain of the Guard. Sixteen Brethren were elected to receive the Perfection Degrees. The first quarters used was the upper story of the Yohn Block at the corner of Washington and Meridian Streets.

At the meeting held October 19, 1863, it was decided that the name of the Lodge should be Adoniram Grand Lodge of Perfection. Caleb B. Smith died January 7, 1864, and Edwin A. Davis was elected Thrice Potent Master to succeed him.

Both Lodge and Council were a part of the Division of Ohio, of which Bro. Enoch T. Carson, 33°, was Deputy. On April 26, 1864, Bro. Killian H. Van Rensselaer, Sovereign Grand Commander, was present and inspected the Work. During the year 1864, the number Initiated was thirty-nine, making a total membership with the six charter members of forty-five.

At the election of Adoniram Grand Lodge of Perfection on February 3, 1865, John Caven became Thrice Potent Grand Master, and on May 19, 1865, Charters were issued for the four Bodies, Adoniram Grand Lodge of Perfection, Saraiah Council Princes of Jerusalem, Indianapolis Chapter of Rose Croix, and Indiana Consistory.

The year 1866 brought much turmoil to Scottish Rite affairs in Indiana. It was then that the rivalry of the warring Scottish Rite Supreme Councils was carried into Indiana. Under the authority of the New York (Raymond) Supreme Council, a Grand Consistory had been established at Laporte, Indiana, with Ill. E. W. H. Ellis as Grand Commander. Bodies were Instituted at Laporte, Fort Wayne, Logansport, Anderson, Richmond, Cambridge City, New Albany, Terre Haute, and Lafayette; of these, Logansport had only a Lodge and Council, and Laporte, Anderson, and Cambridge City each a Lodge.

Elbridge G. Hamilton of Laporte was designated as District Deputy Inspector-General for Indiana (New York Supreme Council); and E. W. H. Ellis, of Goshen, George S. Seymour, of Laporte, and Thomas R. Austin, of New Albany, were elected to the Honorary Grade of Deputy Grand Inspector General, 33°.

This invasion was met with determined opposition by the Indianapolis Bodies. Besides the Bodies at Indianapolis, the Boston (Van Rensselaer) Supreme Council had a Lodge, Council, Chapter, and Consistory at New Albany, and were contemplating establishing others at Lafayette, Wabash, Kokomo, Greensburg, and Anderson. The Indianapolis Bodies issued this broadside: "It behooves us to be active, impressing upon Masons, not yet added to our numbers, that we have pre-empted this Jurisdiction, that we propose to hold it, and that ours are the only Bodies of the A. A. Scottish Rite having any true existence within the boundaries of the State of Indiana. 'The Grand Consistory of Sublime Princes of the Royal Secret for the State of Indiana,' located by circular at Laporte, lives only in that circular form; but its agents are active in spreading its literature through the mails and a cheaply purchased District Deputy Inspector General is meandering through the State, creating S.P.R.S. in innumerable quantities, with exceedingly little labor." This Ill. Bro., E. G. Hamilton, afterwards (1876 to 1884) served as Deputy of Supreme Council for Indiana, the Indianapolis Bodies being the sole Constituents!

On May 16, 1867, Indiana became a separate District and John Caven became the first Deputy.

On the following day, May 17, now memorable in the history of the Scottish Rite, the Grand Union between the Raymond and Van Rensselaer Supreme Councils was effected. Brothers Caven and Davis were present. Bro. Caven lived until he was one of five survivors of the "Roll of '67."

The New York Supreme Council had among its members many outstanding Masons, such as Josiah H. Drummond, Samuel C. Lawrence, and Henry L. Palmer. The same condition existed in Indiana, where we find such names as Elbridge G. Hamilton, E. W. H. Ellis, Sol D. Bayless, S. B. Richardson, Christian Fetta, E. D. Palmer, Thomas Newby, Thomas R. Austin, Robert Van Valzah, R. J. Chestnutwood, Martin H. Rice, and others. Most of these were in due time received into the Indianapolis Bodies and honoured as Sovereign Grand Inspectors-General, 33°. Shortly thereafter all the subordinate Bodies throughout Indiana, except those at Indianapolis, faded entirely out of the picture, and peace and harmony prevailed.

The Scottish Rite became prosperous through the years that followed in Indiana, and Bodies were formed in the Valley of Fort Wayne: Fort Wayne Lodge of Perfection, September 19, 1888; Darius Council Princes of Jerusalem, September 18, 1890; Emanuel Chapter of Rose Croix, September 20, 1906, and Fort Wayne Consistory, September 22, 1909. In the Valley of Evansville Bodies were formed as follows: Evansville Lodge of Perfection, September 21, 1911; Mordecai Council Princes of Jerusalem, September 18, 1913; Trinity Chapter of Rose Croix, September 23, 1915, and Evansville Consistory, September 19, 1918. In the Valley of South Bend Bodies were formed as follows: South Bend Lodge of Perfection, September 22, 1926; Zerubbabel Council Princes of Jerusalem, and John Hazen White Chapter of Rose Croix, September 21, 1927, and South Bend Consistory, September 18, 1929.

Nicholas R. Ruckle became Thrice Potent Master February 18, 1874, and the quarters of the Rite were moved to the Baldwin Block. From that time the Rite, after several years of comparative inactivity, took on new life, and in 1877 the old Bodies at New Albany and Fort Wayne went out of existence, leaving the field entirely to the Indianapolis Bodies.

In 1905 the Supreme Council held its Annual Session at Indianapolis, and again in 1932, the latter Session being held in the new Cathedral at Meridian and North Streets, one of the finest specimens of Gothic architecture in the country.

Membership in the several Valleys of the Rite in Indiana is as follows: Indianapolis 8443; Fort Wayne 3832; Evansville 2559, and South Bend 1358; a total of 16,192.

The Deputies for the Supreme Council for the District of Indiana are as follows: Enoch T. Carson, of Ohio, October 1863 to May 1867; John Caven, May 1867 to August 1876; Elbridge G. Hamilton, August 1876 to October 1884; Nicholas R. Ruckle, October 1884 to May 1900; Joseph W. Smith, May 1900 to November 1901; William Geake, January 1902 to June 1927; and Gaylard M. Leslie, September 1927 to the present time.

The active members of Supreme Council for Indiana were Crowned as follows: John Caven, May 19, 1866; Elbridge G. Hamilton, April 12, 1867; Thomas R. Austin, May 16, 1867; Nicholas R. Ruckle, September 27, 1883; Phineas G. C. Hunt, September 17, 1885; Joseph W. Smith, September 16, 1896; William Geake, September 18, 1900; Samuel B. Sweet, September 17, 1902; Henry C. Adams, September 20, 1905; Roscoe O. Hawkins, September 21, 1911; Thomas R. Marshall, September 21, 1911; Winfield T. Durbin, September 20, 1917; Gaylard M. Leslie, September 22, 1927; Louis G. Buddenbaum, September 20, 1928; Eugene E. Vatet, September 18, 1930; Alfred M. Glossbrenner, September 28, 1933.

FREEMASONRY IN IOWA

CHARLES C. HUNT

AS is the case elsewhere, the history of Masonry in Iowa is contemporaneous with the history of the State. The Territory of Iowa was organized by authority of an Act of Congress, passed on July 3, 1838. In pursuance of this Act, President Van Buren appointed Robert Lucas, of Ohio, an ex-governor of that State, to serve as Territorial governor of the new Territory. Governor Lucas then appointed T. S. Parvin as his private secretary, and coming at once to the Territory of Iowa, he chose Burlington to be its capital. An election having been held, the first Territorial Legislature then convened on November 1, 1838. Both the new governor and his private secretary were Masons. It is not strange, then, that within two years after locating in their new home, they took an active part in organizing the first Masonic Lodge in Iowa, at Burlington. Bro. Parvin, who was acquainted with the Officers of the Grand Lodge of Missouri, was appointed to make application to that Grand Lodge for a Dispensation. This he did, and it was issued without delay. This Dispensation, though dated November 20, 1840, was not received at Burlington until Sunday, November 29. Immediately upon its arrival, the Brethren were notified to assemble on the following evening. At the Communication then held, the Lodge was organized under the name of Burlington Lodge U. D. A Charter was granted to this Lodge on October 20, 1841, under the name of Des Moines Lodge, No. 41. On the same day a Charter was also granted by the Grand Lodge of Missouri to Iowa Lodge, No. 42, at Bloomington, now Muscatine, Dispensation for which had been issued on February 4, 1841.

Two years later, on October 10, 1843, the Grand Lodge of Missouri granted Charters to Dubuque Lodge, No. 62, at Dubuque, and to Iowa City Lodge, No. 63, at Iowa City. While the two last named Lodges were still under Dispensation, preliminary steps for the formation of the Grand Lodge of Iowa were taken by all the Lodges then existing in the Territory. The first recorded suggestion to this end was made at a meeting of Des Moines Lodge, No. 41, held on October 31, 1842. At this meeting, Bro. Jonathan Nye, Past Grand Master of Vermont (1815-1817) and Past Grand Master of the Grand Encampment, Knights Templar, of the United States (1829-1832), being present, was requested to give his advice in regard to the formation of a Grand Lodge in Iowa. The advice was favorable and a Committee of Five was appointed to communicate with the other Lodges of the Territory. This was done. The Communication received from this Committee by Iowa Lodge, No. 42, at Bloomington, on November 21, 1842, was acted upon in the form of a resolution asking Iowa City Lodge U. D. to name a time and place for holding a Convention to take steps towards organising a Grand Lodge of Iowa. The Lodges in Iowa holding Charters from the Grand Lodge of Illinois, and Far West Lodge, at Galena (Illinois), had also been urging the formation of an Iowa Grand Lodge. These Lodges, however, in difficulties with the Grand Lodge of Illinois, lost their Charters before the organisation of the Grand Lodge of Iowa and never became a part of the latter Grand Lodge.

Iowa City Lodge complied with the request made of it, and as a result a Convention was held at Iowa City on May 10, 1843. At that meeting it was decided that each Lodge should send three Delegates as Representatives to the Grand Lodge of Missouri at its Annual Communication to be held in October, 1843, and that those Representatives should fix the time and place for holding a Convention to complete the proposed organisation of the Iowa Grand Lodge. The Convention so called met at Iowa City on January 2, 1844. It then adopted a Constitution and elected Officers, but Oliver Cock, Grand Master-elect, being absent, the Convention adjourned until January 8, when the Representatives again met, and after completing all preliminary arrangements adjourned sine die. R.: W.: Ansel Humphreys, District Deputy Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Missouri, then Constituted the Grand Lodge of Iowa and Installed its Grand Officers.

Thus the Grand Lodge of Missouri is the mother of the Grand Lodge of Iowa. In brief, the family tree of the Iowa Grand Body is as follows: The Grand Lodge of England (Moderns) Chartered Lodges in North Carolina. A few other Lodges were Chartered in that State by Provincial Grand Masters acting under authority from the Grand Lodge of England. These Lodges organised themselves into the Grand Lodge of North Carolina. At that time North Carolina also included what is now Tennessee. Although Tennessee became a separate State in 1796, the Grand Lodge of North Carolina continued to exercise Jurisdiction over both States, and in 1803 Representatives from Lodges in both States held a Convention and adopted the name "Grand Lodge of North Carolina and Tennessee." However, in 1812, the Lodges in Tennessee requested permission to withdraw and establish a Grand Lodge of Tennessee. Permission was granted, and the proposed Grand Lodge organised in 1813. The Grand Lodge of Tennessee then Chartered three Lodges in Missouri, and in 1821 those three Lodges sent Delegates to a Convention at St. Louis, at which meeting the Grand Lodge of Missouri was organised by the adoption of a Constitution and the election of Grand Officers. The Grand Lodge of Missouri in turn, Chartered four Lodges in Iowa. These then organised themselves into the Grand Lodge of Iowa, as has been stated above.

The four Lodges thus constituting the new Grand Lodge surrendered their Charters from the Grand Lodge of Missouri and took new Charters from the Grand Lodge of Iowa in the order of their seniority in the Grand Lodge of Missouri. Thus, Des Moines Lodge, No. 41, became Des Moines Lodge, No. 1; Iowa Lodge, No. 42, became Iowa Lodge, No. 2; Dubuque Lodge, No. 62, became Dubuque Lodge, No. 3, and Iowa City Lodge, No. 63, became Iowa City Lodge, No. 4. Throughout the history of the Grand Lodge of Iowa, these four Lodges have been very active. At the time of the organisation of the Grand Lodge, their combined membership was 101. It is now nearly 2000. The growth of each of these Lodges during this period is as follows: the membership of Des Moines Lodge, No. 1, has increased from 25 to 366; of Iowa Lodge, No. 2, from 20 to 536; of Dubuque Lodge, No. 3, from 28 to 369, and of Iowa City Lodge, No. 4, from 28 to 684.

The growth of the Grand Lodge since its organisation is well illustrated by the following table which shows the increase in the number of constituent Lodges and in membership:

YEAR	LODGES	GAIN	MEMBERS	GAIN

Four of the twelve Brethren who formed the first Communication of the Grand Lodge, Oliver Cock, T. S. Parvin, Ansel Humphreys, and J. R. Hartsock, afterwards became Grand Masters. Five of the twelve, or 42 per cent of their number, were proxies. At the present time the number of proxies at each Communication of the Grand Lodge is about 23 per cent of the representation.

To meet the expenses of the first Communication, each Lodge was required to pay the sum of ten dollars into the Grand Lodge treasury, which sum was then credited on its first year's dues. The amount of dues was fixed at one dollar per member. Of this sum the amount of twenty-five cents was paid into the Grand Charity Fund. This plan lasted, however, for only a short time, for the paying of twenty-five cents per member into the Charity Fund was abolished for several years. During that time it was ordered that each Lodge should attend to the charity requirements of its own members. When it was found that there were cases which the local Lodges could not care for, provision was again made for a Grand Charity Fund. At the present time the per capita tax for this purpose is the same as it was in the beginning. However, there is now a per capita charge of sixty cents each year to maintain a Masonic Sanitarium.

The administration of the Grand Lodge Charity Fund was at first temporarily placed in the hands of the Grand Master, Deputy Grand Master, Grand Wardens, Grand Treasurer, and Grand Secretary. But at the second Communication, a Committee of five was appointed " to propose and digest a plan for the disposition of the Grand Charity Fund, with the view of hereafter making it available for the purpose of establishing an Orphan School under the Jurisdiction and supervision of this Grand Lodge, and to report thereon at the next Grand Annual Communication." The Report of the Committee thus appointed was favourable to the proposition, and while recognising that the funds of the Grand Lodge and the subordinate Lodges were extremely limited, the Committee members stated that they believed funds could be accumulated to meet every emergency. They proposed " as a means of immediate relief, that every Lodge inquire after and furnish the means necessary for defraying the expenses of tuition, at least, of the orphan children of deceased Brethren residing in its vicinity, and present the bill to this Grand Lodge for payment."

Very few demands were made on this fund, however. In fact, the amount usually asked was about $20 or $25 a year. The largest amount was paid out in 1849, when items aggregating $92 were expended for charity. Probably since so little was required, it was again decided that each Lodge could take care of all demands within its own Jurisdiction, and in 1855 the provision for a Grand Charity Fund was abolished. Nevertheless, the Grand Lodge did not abandon charity work, for in 1864 an appropriation of $100 annually for a period of five years was made to the Iowa State Orphan Asylum. One hundred dollars in 1867 was also donated to the Iowa Soldiers' Orphans' Home. In 1871, $600 was appropriated for charitable purposes, and the proposal to build a Widows' and Orphans' Masonic Home was considered. This matter was referred to a Committee, and for several years the subject recurred, without being definitely acted upon. Then, in 1893, a Committee was appointed with definite instructions to make a thorough investigation of the entire subject and to report at the next Communication of the Grand Lodge. This Committee, after corresponding with every Lodge in the State and with every Grand Lodge in the United States, presented an extended Report in 1894. From the Reports from the various Lodges throughout the State it was ascertained that there were seventeen Master Masons, four widows, and nine orphans who might receive care at such a Home if it were established, and that the amount of money needed to care for those cases in their own homes was about $1700. It was also reported that the actual cost to the Grand Lodge and to the subordinate Lodges during the preceding year had been less than that amount; while the average cost of maintaining an inmate in the Masonic Homes of the United States during the same period was $318.45. It was, therefore, decided by the Grand Lodge that the " wants of our needy Brothers, their widows, and orphans, can be better relieved by their home Lodges, and with much less expense, than in a Masonic Home. In many cases a small amount of money added to what the relatives or friends of a distressed Brother would do for him would be sufficient to relieve his wants at his home, while if sent to a public home his whole support must necessarily be furnished him. We believe, further, that it would be much more satisfactory to a sick or needy Brother to remain among his friends and there receive such support as might be necessary, than to go to a public home where of necessity all the ties of relationship and friendship formed by years of residence must be severed, and he must be compelled to live upon charity received at the hands of strangers."

It was, therefore, decided to provide a Grand Charity Fund and a permanent Board of Trustees to administer it. Provision was made for two funds, one to be permanent, the other temporary. It was further provided that the sum of $1000 should be added to the permanent fund each year by the Grand Lodge from its current funds. To the permanent fund all unexpended amounts in the temporary fund in excess of $1000 also were to be paid each year. The temporary fund was to be composed of the interest on the permanent fund, and 10 per cent of the receipts of the Grand Lodge. It was soon found, however, that the provisions for the temporary fund were insufficient to meet the demands made upon it, so the percentage of the Grand Lodge receipts was raised to 12½ per cent, and later to 25 per cent. In a recent year 317 Masons or their widows were assisted by means of this fund. This number does not tell the whole story, however, for many of those thus assisted had families. At least 132 minor children were supported in the families that were helped in this way, making a total of more than 449 persons supported in private homes at an average cost of $124 each. Of course, some of that number were partially self-supporting, but had they been cared for under the Institutional Home plan, all would have had to live in the Home. As for those assisted, the maintenance of their own self-respect and continued association with their old friends and neighbours is an advantage which cannot be measured in dollars and cents. Thus the amount of good accomplished by the Grand Charity Fund since its creation cannot be accurately estimated.

Iowa Masons, however, have found that some of their dependents need nursing and medical attention which cannot be adequately provided in a private home. To meet this need, they took steps to establish in 1925 a Sanitarium at Bettendorf, where such cases can be properly cared for. This was provided for by the annual payment of one dollar by each member in the State for a period of five years. The annual contribution per member for support of the Sanitarium is sixty cents. The average number of guests is 44. The total maintenance cost is $38,000, or an average of $864 for each guest.

Another great enterprise of the Grand Lodge, which had a small beginning at the time of its organisation in 1844, is the Iowa Masonic Library. In his first address, Grand Master Oliver Cock recommended that a small sum be set aside each year for the purchase of books for the Grand Lodge as the beginning of a Masonic Library. This recommendation was referred to a Committee of Three. Since the Report of this Committee, which was adopted, is of absorbing interest, when we consider the proportions to which the Library thus started has grown, it is given here:

Your Committee feel the subject to be of very great importance to the interest of Masonry, more so perhaps to us in the Far West, where the means of obtaining Masonic information are much more limited than in the older settled countries. We also believe that the only true method of disseminating Masonic Light and Knowledge, and of having the principles of our Order properly appreciated and practised, is to create an interest in the study of the same, as laid down in the Constitutions of Masonry. Your Committee do not believe, however, that the state of the finances of this Grand Lodge will admit of making an appropriation sufficient to produce an extensive collection of Masonic information. Still, we believe something should be done, a commencement should be made, and additions made from time to time as the Grand Lodge shall be able, so that in time we may have a collection of Masonic information that will be an honour to us. In furtherance of this object, your Committee would recommend the adoption of the following Resolution, viz., That an appropriation of Five Dollars would be expended under the direction of the Grand Secretary for procuring such information as he may see proper.

This appropriation was expended for Masonic magazines and books. The following year the Grand Secretary requested that the appropriation be increased to ten dollars, and the request was granted. From this small beginning has grown the present Iowa Masonic Library, which consists of more than 40,000 volumes. Some of these books are so rare that they may not be taken from the building, but most of them may be borrowed by Masons who wish to read them in their own homes.

The Library is housed in a building erected for the purpose in 1884, at Cedar Rapids, and also uses an annex for additional space. The head of the Library is designated by the double title, Grand Secretary and Librarian, and performs the double duty designated by the title. During the more than ninety years of the Library's existence, three men have served in this capacity: Theodore Sutton Parvin, who served from 1884 until his death in 1901; his son Newton Ray Parvin, who served from 1901 until his death in 1925, and Charles Clyde Hunt, who has served from 1925 to the present.

One of the distinctive features of the Library is its system of travelling libraries, which have been in well organised operation since 1911. These consist of selections of books sent to Iowa Lodges for the purpose of being lent to their members. By means of these libraries an attempt is made to place the best Masonic literature within reach of every Mason in the Jurisdiction.

The Grand Lodge Bulletin, which has been issued since 1898, has a wide distribution throughout this country as well as abroad. Its chief purpose, however, is to interest the members of the Craft within the Jurisdiction, by whom it may be had upon request. In addition to material of local interest, the Bulletin contains a variety of material of general Masonic interest.

Another important feature of the Library is an extensive Museum, containing articles of both Masonic and general interest. Educationally it is a valuable supplement to the Library and a source of special interest to all who visit the building. The Library also maintains a Clipping Bureau of over 25,000 clippings taken from duplicate copies of various Masonic magazines. From these clippings it is possible to select articles on nearly every Masonic subject imaginable, which may be loaned to a Mason who wishes to study that particular subject.

In 1859 the Grand Lodge provided a permanent Board of three members, to be known as Custodians of the Work, whose duty it was to procure the "Ancient Webb Work" and provide for its dissemination. After investigation, this Board decided that Samuel Willson, Grand Lecturer of Vermont, had the "Ancient Webb Work" in its purest form, and on their recommendation this Work was adopted by the Grand Lodge of Iowa.

After trying many plans for the dissemination of the Work, the present plan of having District Lecturers was adopted in 1897. By this plan, the Board of Custodians was authorised to divide the State into Districts, in each of which schools of instruction are to be held each year. These schools are in charge of Brethren selected by the Custodians from those who have qualified themselves for the Work by passing a rigid examination in the entire Ritual. Each of those who pass the examination is commissioned as a Masonic Instructor, and if he retains his proficiency for three years and proves himself otherwise qualified in character and fitness he may receive a Certificate as a District Lecturer. It is considered a great honour to obtain one of those Certificates, but to do so requires hard work for a number of years, for the requirements are rigid. A Report of the Custodians lists 598 District Lecturers and 249 Masonic Instructors.

Another agency of the Grand Lodge, working with the Board of Instructors and the Grand Librarian to promote the cause of Masonic education, is the Service Committee. The Grand Lodge Code states that the province of this Committee "shall be to bring about among the Craft a better understanding and appreciation of Masonry and the application of Masonic principles to the life of the individual Mason." This Committee has a large list of speakers who have volunteered to prepare and present addresses to the Lodges on various Masonic subjects. It arranges for such addresses on request of any Lodge, and provides educational programmes for instruction in the meaning of the Ritual as applied to the teachings of Masonry and its practical application to everyday life. It also promotes fellowship and intervisitation among the Lodges.

When we consider the achievements of Masonry in Iowa during the more than ninety years of her history there, we are not surprised to find that the leaders in the Grand Lodge were also leaders in civil and political life. Mention has already been made of the first Territorial governor, Robert Lucas, and his secretary, T. S. Parvin. Governor Lucas took part in the organisation of the first Lodge and in the preliminary steps taken towards the organisation of the Grand Lodge. The work which Bro. Parvin accomplished for Masonry from the time of the organisation of the Grand Lodge in 1844, until his death in 1901, is too well known throughout the entire Masonic world to need any special mention here, but it may be well to remark his activities in other fields. He was private secretary to Governor Lucas from 1838 to 1840, secretary to the Territorial Council in 1840, county judge from 1840-1850, clerk to the United States District Court from 1847-1857, and registrar of the State Land Office in 1857 and 1858. For many years he was a trustee of the State University of Iowa, and for many more years he was connected with that institution as an educator. Bro. T. S. Parvin, in speaking of secret societies in the early days of Iowa, once said: "The Masons, and they alone, permeated all and every rank and position in society; governors, judges, legislators, congressmen, senators, foreign ministers; all the learned professions and the bone and sinew of the State life, the agriculturist—among whom the Masons have been most efficient and distinguished workers."

These words of Bro. Parvin are as true to-day as when they were first uttered in the early days of the Grand Lodge. In fact, it has always been true, as is proved by the following list of a few of the many distinguished Iowa Masons:

Henry Albert (1878-1930), a member of Iowa City Lodge, No. 4, of Iowa City, was head of the department of bacteriology at the State University of Iowa from 1903 to 1922, and a State Health Commissioner from 1926 to 1930. William Boyd Allison (1829-1908), a member of Mosaic Lodge, No. 125, of Dubuque, was United States senator from Iowa from 1872 to 1908. Thomas Arthur (1860-1925), a member of Chrysolite Lodge, No. 420, of Logan, was Grand Master in 1916, and chief justice of the Supreme Court of Iowa from 1920 to 1925. Thomas Hart Benton, Jr. (1816-1879), a member of Iowa City Lodge, No. 4, of Iowa City, and of Bluff City Lodge, No. 71, of Council Bluffs, was Grand Master in 1860, a brigadier-general during the war between the States, and State Superintendent of Public Instruction in Iowa from 1848-1854. William Robert Boyd (1864- —), a member of Mount Hermon Lodge, No. 263, of Cedar Rapids, editor and banker, has for a number of years been chairman of the finance committee of the Iowa State Board of Education. Luther Albertus Brewer (1858-1933), a member of Crescent Lodge, No. 25, of Cedar Rapids, was for many years owner and editor of The Cedar Rapids Republican. His large collection of Leigh Hunt literature made him a well known figure among collectors. George Henry Carter (1874- —), a member of Bluff City Lodge, No. 71, of Council Bluffs, has been public printer of the United States since 1921. Bro. Carter was at one time editor of The Council Bluffs Nonpareil. Edgar Erastus Clark (1856-1930), a member of Mount Hermon Lodge, No. 263, of Cedar Rapids, was at one time a member of the United States Interstate Commerce Commission, and for a while president of the Order of Railway Conductors. Lester Jesse Dickinson (1873- —), a member of Prudence Lodge, No. 205, of Algona, and a well known lawyer, served as congressman from Iowa from 1919 to 1931, since which time he has represented this commonwealth in the United States Senate. He was for a time one of the trustees of Cornell College, at Mount Vernon, Iowa. Jonathan Prentiss Doliver (1858-1910), a member of Ashlar Lodge, No. 111, of Fort Dodge, was another of Iowa's distinguished members of the bar. From 1889 to 1900 he represented Iowa in the United States Congress, and from 1900 to 1910 he was this commonwealth's senator in Washington, District of Columbia. Harry Morehouse Gage (1878- —), formerly a member of Clinton Lodge, No. 15, of Fairfield, now a member of Crescent Lodge, No. 25, of Cedar Rapids, has been president of Coe College, at Cedar Rapids, since 1920. In 1924-1925, Bro. Gage was Grand Chaplain of the Grand Lodge of Iowa. David Bremner Henderson (1840-1906), a member of Mosaic Lodge, No. 125, of Dubuque, was a member of the House of Representatives from 1883 to 1903, and Speaker of that body in the Fifty-sixth and Fifty-seventh Congresses. William S. Kenyon (1869-1933), of Ashlar Lodge, No. 111, at Fort Dodge, represented Iowa in the United States Senate from 1911 to 1922. Thomas Huston MacBride (1848-1934), a member of Iowa City Lodge, No. 4, of Iowa City, was professor of botany at the State University of Iowa from 1884 to 1914, and president of that institution from 1914-1916. Hanford MacNider (1889- —), member of Benevolence Lodge, No. 145, of Mason City, served as Assistant Secretary of War from 1925 to 1928, having already had a military career of distinguished service during the World War, receiving the Croix de Guerre and other military honours. John Hanson Thomas Main (1859-1931), a member of Hermon Lodge, No. 273, of Grinnell, was president of Grinnell College from 1906 to 1931. Anson Marston (1864- —), a member of Arcadia Lodge, No. 249, of Ames, became dean of the Division of Engineering at Iowa State College in 1904, which position he still holds. Edwin Thomas Meredith (1876-1928), a member of Capital Lodge, No. 110, of Des Moines, owner and editor of the well-known journal, Successful Farming, served as Secretary of Agriculture in the cabinet of President Woodrow Wilson. William Edward Miller (1823-1896), a member of Iowa City Lodge, No. 4, of Iowa City, was a member of the Iowa Supreme Court from 1870 to 1875. Ernest R. Moore (1868- —), a member of Mount Hermon Lodge, No. 263, of Cedar Rapids, was lieutenant-governor of Iowa from 1917 to 1921, and Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Iowa in 1924-1925. George Douglas Perkins (1840-1914), a member of Tyrian Lodge, No. 508, of Sioux City, for many years editor and publisher of The Sioux City Journal, was a member of the United States Congress from 1891 to 1899. Charles Burton Robbins (1877- —), a member of Crescent Lodge, No. 25, of Cedar Rapids, was Assistant Secretary of War of the United States in 1928 and 1929. Fred Wesley Sargent (1876- —), was made a Mason in Tyrian Lodge No. 508, of Sioux City. Bro. Sargent, a lawyer by profession, in 1925 became president of the Chicago & Northwestern Railway system. Bohumil Shimek (1861- —), a member of Iowa City Lodge, No. 4, of Iowa City, a distinguished scientist and writer on scientific subjects, was head of the botany department of the State University of Iowa from 1914 to 1919. In the latter year he became a research professor at that institution. Horace Mann Towner (1855- —), a member of Instruction Lodge, No. 275, of Corning, was a member of the United States Congress from 1911 to 1923, and governor of Puerto Rico from 1923 to 1929. Joseph Williams (1801-1871), who was one of the organisers of Iowa Lodge, No. 2, of Muscatine, was for a number of years a member of the Iowa Supreme Court. Lafayette Young (1848-1928), a member of Home Lodge, No. 370, of Des Moines, well known as an orator, politician, and legislator, was editor of The Des Moines Capital from 1890 to 1926. James Wilson (1835-1920), a member of Hesperia Lodge, No. 340, at Traer, served as Secretary of Agriculture from 1897 to 1913, under Presidents McKinley, Theodore Roosevelt, and Taft. Henry Cantwell Wallace (1866-1924), a member of Pioneer Lodge, No. 22, of Des Moines, was United States Secretary of Agriculture in the cabinet of President Harding. His son, Henry A. Wallace (1888- —), a member of Capital Lodge, No. 110, Des Moines, became Secretary of Agriculture under President Franklin D. Roosevelt.

As one may readily surmise, the foregoing list of distinguished Iowa Masons does not by any means exhaust the record of the Craft in this Commonwealth. Though lack of space forbids our mentioning many other Brethren of this Jurisdiction who have achieved distinction in one or more fields of activity, either public or private, we feel it incumbent upon us, nevertheless, to cite here the names of those Iowa Masons who have been governors of the State. First of those was Robert Lucas, a member of Des Moines Lodge, No. 1, of Burlington, and of Iowa City Lodge, No. 4, of Iowa City, who served as Territorial governor from 1838 to 1841. James Clarke, who was appointed Territorial governor in 1845, was also a member of Des Moines Lodge, No. 1, of Burlington. Stephen Hempstead, who served Iowa as governor from 1850 to 1854, was Initiated in Dubuque Lodge on June 21, 1843, while that Lodge was still under Dispensation from the Grand Lodge of Missouri. Samuel J. Kirkwood, governor of Iowa from 1860 to 1864, and again in 1876 to 1877, was a member of Iowa City Lodge, No. 4, of Iowa City. From 1864 to 1868 William M. Stone served the State as governor. He was a member of Oriental Lodge, No. 61, of Knoxville. From 1868-1872, Samuel Merrill was governor of the Commonwealth, being a member of Capital Lodge, No. 110, Des Moines. Cyrus C. Carpenter, a member of Ashlar Lodge, No. 111, of Fort Dodge, served as Iowa's governor from 1872 to 1876. John H. Gear, a member of Des Moines Lodge, No. 1, of Burlington, was governor of Iowa from 1878 to 1882. Buren Robinson Sherman was a member of Vinton Lodge, No. 62, at Vinton. He served Iowa as governor from 1882 until 1886. From 1894 to 1896 Frank D. Jackson served as governor, being a member of Capital Lodge, No. 110, Des Moines. Albert Baird Cummins, also a member of Capital Lodge, No. 110, Des Moines, was governor of Iowa from 1902 to 1908. From 1917 to 1921, William L. Harding was governor. He was a member of Morningside Lodge, No. 615, of Sioux City. The next governor of the State, Nathan E. Kendall, who served in the high office from 1921 to 1925, was a member of Astor Lodge, No. 505, of Albia. John Hammill, a member of Darius Lodge, No. 431, of Britt, was the State's chief executive from 1925 to 1931. Up to the time of writing this sketch of Iowa's Masonic history, the last member of the Craft to serve as governor was Daniel Webster Turner, a member of Instruction Lodge, No. 275, at Corning, the term of his service being from 1931-1933.

Since this is a Masonic history, however, it would not be complete without at least a brief mention of some of the men who are better known for their Masonic activity than for their accomplishments in civil and political life. It is to the unselfish efforts of those men who gave to Masonry unstintingly of their time and talents, often at the sacrifice of their own affairs, that we chiefly owe the progress of the Institution. Among them was Theodore S. Parvin, whose unwearied zeal kept alive the sacred flame upon our Altars during the trying period of birth and adolescence. An educator himself, he inspired the infant Grand Lodge to promote the cause of Masonic education, and under his leadership the Great Masonic Library of the Grand Lodge of Iowa was established. Another who gave whole-heartedly to the cause of Masonry in Iowa was Ansel Humphreys, whose thorough knowledge of Masonic Law and Ritual prevented many a mistake that, through ignorance and prejudice, might otherwise have been made.

Still another member who devoted himself to the Craft was Charles T. Granger, of later years also well skilled in Masonic Law and Ritual, who systematised the heterogeneous laws and decisions hidden away in the various Proceedings, and gave to the Grand Lodge its first systematic Code of Laws. It was under Bro. Granger's direction, and that of Bro. Charles C. Clark, that the present system of instruction in the Ritual was inaugurated and carried on. Bro. Granger's work on earth is finished, and he has passed to the other shore, but Bro. Clark is still with us, carrying on the work as Chairman of the Jurisprudence Committee and a member of the Board of Custodians. Iowa Masons are also proud of Bro. Louis Block, well known throughout the Masonic world as the writer of their Reports on Fraternal Review. Unfortunately the space allotted for this article permits only a mere mention of these famous Masons, and makes it impossible to do more than name such distinguished members of the Craft as Brothers Rothert, Van Saun, Allen, Gamble, Fellows, Ball, the two Deweys, Bowen, Lambert, Eaton, Gardner, Norris, Cleveland, Hunter, Martin, Clements, Craig, Hutchinson, Moses, Arthur, Barry, Westfall, West, Alberson, Glaze, Gabriel, Moore, Wellington, Belt, Tripp, Gannaway, Percival, Hansen and Larson.

To all these Masons, whose love of Masonry has enriched us all, we owe an everlasting debt of gratitude.

While Iowa Masons may well be proud of the growth of the Order during its more than ninety years, from 4 Lodges having 101 members to 556 Lodges having nearly 75,000 members, they may profitably keep in mind the admonition of Bro. Parvin when he said: "The Institution does not rest its value upon the number of Lodges, nor yet upon the number of its members, but upon the strength which they embody within themselves and which they exemplify in their daily walk of life and experience with men. As men, they look upon their Institution and see what manner of men you are, and what are the works of your hands."

FREEMASONRY IN KANSAS

ELMER F. STRAIN

THE tide of immigration across the borders of the Territory destined to become the great State of Kansas brought men of strong conviction and earnest purpose to these broad prairies. They desired to build new homes and to have a part in shaping the governmental policy of this new commonwealth. The hardships of the early days and the associations of other years drew men together regardless of their views on statehood.

Men of Masonic faith longed for the helpful fellowship of organized Fraternity and the Lodge, where those principles so vital to right living are taught. The desire of these sturdy pioneers became a reality under the authority of the M.:W.:Grand Lodge of Missouri. The bane of bitterness and hatred yielded to the benediction and blessing of brotherhood, and the Most Worshipful Grand Lodge of Ancient Free and Accepted Masons of Kansas was born.

Thus it is written. Dispensations from the M.:W.:Grand Lodge of Missouri were issued as follows:

Grove Lodge (now Wyandotte, No. 3) to meet at the house of Matthew Walker with Bro. John M. Chivington as Master, Bro. Matthew R. Walker as Senior Warden and Bro. Cyrus Garrett as Junior Warden, August 4, 1854. This first Lodge in Kansas held its initial meeting in the hall of the Sons of Temperance in Wyandotte, now Kansas City, Kansas, August 11, 1854.

Smithfield Lodge (now Smithton, No. 1) with Bro. John W. Smith as Master, Bro. E. H. Reinheart, Senior Warden, Bro. Daniel Vanderslice, Junior Warden, October 6, 1854. Their first meeting was held on a high hill overlooking the Missouri Valley in the northeast corner of the Territory. The Tyler performed his enlarged duties on horseback.

Leavenworth Lodge (now Leavenworth, No. 2) with Bro. Richard R. Rees, Master; Bro. Archibald Payne, Senior Warden, and Bro. Auley McAuley, Junior Warden, December 30, 1854. W.:Richard R. Rees, the Father of Masonry in Kansas, assembled this small group January 19, 1855, set them to Work with proper instruction. This meeting was probably held in the Master's office, as were many others.

At the meeting of the M.:W.:Grand Lodge of Missouri in May 1855 Charters were granted to these three Lodges, to be known respectively as Kansas Lodge, No. 153; Smithton Lodge, No. 140, and Leavenworth Lodge, No. 150.

Lawrence Lodge (now Lawrence, No. 6) received their Dispensation September 24, 1855, with Bro. James Christian as Master, Bro. Columbus Hornsby as Senior Warden, and Bro. James S. Cowan as Junior Warden. Lawrence Lodge, No. 6, received its Charter from Kansas on the recommendation of the M.:W.:Grand Lodge of Missouri, which received and approved its Report under Dispensation. This Charter and all of the Lodge's property were destroyed Friday, August 21, 1863, by Quantrell and his band of outlaws. Five members of the Lodge were killed in this raid.

Kickapoo Lodge (now Kickapoo, No. 4) received their Dispensation November 5, 1855, with Bro. John H. Sahler, Master; Bro. Pleasant M. Hodges, Senior Warden, and Bro. Charles H. Gover, Junior Warden.

Charters having been issued to three Lodges and their organisation perfected, it was competent for them to organise a Grand Lodge. Action was promptly taken. At the Communication of Leavenworth Lodge, No. 150, September 15, 1855, Bro. Richard R. Rees introduced a resolution calling a Delegate meeting for November 14 next, to organise a Grand Lodge. The Convention of November 14 failed for want of a quorum and adjourned to meet again December 27 next. At the adjourned meeting Kansas Lodge, No. 150, was not represented but organisation was effected subject to the approval of that Lodge. Following the election of Grand Officers and the transaction of necessary business, the Convention adjourned to meet March 17, 1856. The Officers selected were: M.:W.:Richard R. Rees, Grand Master; R.:W.:John W. Smith, Deputy Grand Master; R.:W.:Matthew R. Walker, Senior Grand Warden; R.:W.:Daniel Vanderslice, Junior Grand Warden; R.:W.:Charles T. Harrison, Grand Secretary; R.:W.:Charles Munde, Grand Treasurer.

On March 17, 1856, a small but zealous group of Brethren, representing all the Chartered Lodges in Kansas, met in the city of Leavenworth, unanimously confirmed the action of the Convention of December 27, 1855, formed and opened the M.:W.:Grand Lodge of Kansas. The principal business transacted at this Communication was the adoption of the Constitution and By-Laws, and the selection of a Committee to visit the M.:W.:Grand Lodge of Missouri and present the claim of the new Grand Lodge. Adjournment was taken to July 14, when Grand Master Richard R. Rees reported that his Committee visited the M.:W.:Grand Lodge of Missouri on May 30, 1856, and asked recognition for our infant Grand Lodge. Their request was met "with the magnanimity ever characteristic of true and noble Masons." Recognition was almost unanimously accorded. At this Communication Charters were authorised for Lawrence, Kickapoo, and Washington Lodges. While this doubled the number of Constituent Lodges, the total membership at that time was less than 200. Our Order grew and prospered with the settlement and development of the Territory. Each Annual Communication found progress, the addition of new Lodges, and a gradual increase in membership.

In 1860 and 1861 Dispensations were given to Brethren at Nevada City and Denver City in the Colorado Territory, but these were soon released to the new Grand Lodge of Colorado. The Civil War had its effect upon the Work of Masonry even to preventing and interfering with the regularity of Annual Communications. In all the expressions of its Grand Officers and Acts of the M.:W.:Grand Lodge, consistent loyalty to the government was shown. Our Proceedings reflect our good fortune in having M.:W.:Jacob Saqui as Grand Master for the war period 1861 to 1865 inclusive.

Whatever depression came with the grasshoppers of the early seventies and the frequent crop failures, seems to have been offset by the extension of Lodges into the remotest part of the new State. Growth was steady and sure. Added to the hardships of frontier life, 150 miles or more from trading-posts with wagon transportation only, there were roving bands of Indians to prey upon the settlers. Fortunately, the government had taught these many lessons, and violence was scarce. Insolence was plentiful and food was insistently demanded. With the disappearance of the buffalo in the late seventies, the Indians withdrew to their Reservations and left their pale-faced neighbours to tame the West. Through the eighties and nineties, with their financial ups and downs, Masonry continued to offer the manhood of the West a faithful fellowship and opportunities for service. All of this contributed to soul growth, and the development of well-balanced men. Reviewing fifty years of usefulness, closing with the turn of the new century, we are proud of our contribution to the righteous leadership of the nation and the world.

The early years of the twentieth century have given us the mechanical age and scientific development beyond our fondest dreams. Inventors under pressure of the World War conquered distance, the air and the sea, and man's dominion over the things of the world has been well established. Notwithstanding the War's crystallising influence upon Masonic ambition and the great influx into our Lodges, the years of deflation and the generation's living standards have caused the tide to recede.

In this year (1935) we have 448 Lodges and our membership stands at 65,480, as against the high mark in 1928 of 83,708. Let us assure the reader that the apparent indifference is incident to the speed of the hour and the call upon men's time, and not disloyalty. Beyond question there are more believers in the fundamentals of Masonry and the Church to-day than the world has ever known.

The headquarters of the M.:W.:Grand Lodge of A. F. and A. M. of Kansas is in Topeka, the capital city, located at 320 West 8th Street, facing the State House Grounds and the Capitol Building.

In 1916 the Grand Lodge Office and Library Building was constructed. It is fireproof, two stories and basement, built and equipped particularly for our requirements. It contains suitable and adequate quarters for the M.:W.:Grand Lodge, the M.:E.:Grand Chapter of R. A. M., the M.:Ill.:Grand Council of R. and S. M., and the Grand Commandery Knights Templar. The Library contains a large collection of miscellaneous literature, a considerable store of Masonic books and publications and a valuable collection of rare and old Masonic books. The Museum department contains a large and interesting collection of relics of the Fraternity covering its seventy-nine years of existence, and also many interesting collections of State and national importance and interest.

The Annual Communications of the M.:W.:Grand Lodge are held on the third Wednesday and Thursday of February. For many years, these Communications have been held alternately in the cities of Wichita and Topeka. The following Grand Officers are serving the year, which will be concluded Thursday, February 20, 1936: M.:W.:Otto R. Souders, Grand Master; R.:W.:James H. Wendeorff, Deputy Grand Master; R.:W.:Charley B. Erskine, Grand Senior Warden; R.:W.:Henry S. Buzick, Jr., Grand Junior Warden; M.:W.:John McCullagh, Grand Treasurer; M.:W.:Elmer F. Strain, Grand Secretary; R.:W.:Albert K. Wilson, Grand Secretary Emeritus; Bro. Fred W. Condit, Grand Chaplain; W.:Claud F. Young, Grand Senior Deacon; W.:Benjamin F. Hull, Grand Junior Deacon; W.:William B. Penny, Grand Marshal; W.:Harvey S. McIntosh, Grand Sword Bearer; W.:Paul M. Martin, Grand Senior Steward; W.:Otto H. Rommel, Grand Junior Steward; W.:Homer T. Harden, Grand Pursuivant; W.:Lauren Dale Rigg, Grand Tyler.

Kansas Craftsmen are noted for, and have pride in, our strict adherence to the original plan of Masonry. Innovations of every character have been shunned. Participation in political, religious, or civic affairs has been discountenanced except by individual members in the performance of their duty as citizens. The Institution has busied itself in a sustained effort to strengthen the characters of its votaries, train them in the correct principles of manhood and point them to a just God for the wages due the honest and upright efforts of every life. It has neither repudiated nor encouraged those enthusiasts of later years who have built upon or clung to the structure of Freemasonry to propagate a new idealism. Satisfied with an effort to teach the Cardinal Virtues and those fundamental principles on which all men agree, it has turned neither to the right nor to the left, and finds happiness in the "Faith of our Fathers."

Outside of Masonry's effort to build character into the manhood it touches directly and indirectly and implant a vision of human brotherhood, its greatest effort has been for the orphan and the aged brother and sister.

In the year 1893 our Constitution was amended to permit the establishment of a Masonic Home. The original agitation is credited to the Order of the Eastern Star, and began at their Annual Session in 1881. After years of discussion, Committees from all Masonic Bodies met at Clay Centre on Thanksgiving Day, 1892, and prepared a definite plan of procedure. The first meeting of the Board of Directors was held May 8, 1893, but not until June 10, 1896, were the plans consummated in the purchase of the Robert E. Lawrence residence, and fifteen acres of ground in West Wichita. December 22, 1916, fire destroyed the Home but from the ashes arose plans for larger and better buildings. February 19, 1919, the new fireproof buildings were dedicated.

It was expected that these buildings would house our family for at least a generation. However, in 1928, the M.:W.:Grand Lodge began a five-year programme to raise $450,000 for additional buildings, some of which were needed at once. The additional facilities doubling the capacity of the Home were completed at a cost of $415,000 and dedicated at the Annual Communication in February 1931. The plant is now valued at $1,000,000. At the close of 1934 the family Roll contained 362 names with 318 actually in the Home, about equally divided between men, women and children. Our membership has a genuine pride in this fine plant and the comfort they are thereby able to bring to brothers and sisters who have lost, but their great joy is our children. They come to us in the formative years of childhood and youth, are educated in the city schools and go out equipped to meet the battles of life.

The city of Wichita and its people have been very helpful in the handling of all of the Home problems. Our children are admitted to grade and high schools freely notwithstanding complete tax exemption. A most earnest effort to maintain this place as a Home in the truest sense, not as an Institution, has been very successful. The social atmosphere is therefore as comforting as the fine plant.

The Kansas Masonic Home is a corporation controlled by a Board of Directors. This Board is composed of the four members of the Council of Administration and five others elected by them, four from the Grand Lodge and one from the Order of the Eastern Star. The Grand Master is always President of the Board. The annual expenditure for maintenance is approximately $84,000. Practically all of the benevolences of the M.:W.:Grand Lodge are handled through the Masonic Home Board.

The formation of the M.:W.:Grand Lodge of Kansas gathered a group of faithful Brethren from many of the Grand Jurisdictions east of the Missouri River. Each was trained in the peculiar phraseology of the Ritual of his native State. It was not unusual that the Officers of a Lodge would have three or four versions of the Work. Complication, confusion, and disagreement were common. This situation grew and became more intolerable with the addition of new Lodges and Brethren from new Jurisdictions.

At the Annual Communication of the M.:W.:Grand Lodge in 1866, a Committee designated as the " Board of Custodians " was appointed to report the Webb Work.

At the succeeding Annual Communication the Custodians exemplified the Work: Bro. Owen A. Bassett of Acacia Lodge, No. 9, the First Degree; W.: Edward A. Smith of Rising Sun Lodge, No. 8, the Second Degree, and M.:W.: John H. Brown of King Solomon Lodge, No. 10, the Third Degree. The Work as thus exemplified was approved and adopted.

The task of teaching the correct Kansas Work to the Lodges was a long, laborious process, but in due time was accomplished, and for many years the Brethren of Kansas have taken much pride in the purity of their Work. In the years since this standardisation, there have been many to attack its verbiage, but like the Rock of Gibraltar, it still stands without the change of so much as a punctuation point.

The Board of Custodians continued until 1909 when it was abolished. At the same Annual Communication the Grand Master was authorised to appoint a suitable number of Lecturers to give all instruction. This system has⁶ been continued to the present time. The State was divided into Districts containing three to ten Lodges, and a district meeting or school is held in each at least once each year, with an authorised Lecturer in attendance. The results have been so thoroughly satisfactory in every particular that change is unlikely.

Many of the men who have been influential in the political life of Kansas were active patrons of Masonry. During the trying period from Territorial organisation to admission of Kansas as a State (1854-61) there were ten Territorial governors. Most of these were non-residents when appointed and left no Masonic record in this Grand Jurisdiction. Governor Wilson Shannon alone is shown as a member. No doubt many of the others were Masons, but felt it undesirable to affiliate here.

Of the twenty-five who have served Kansas as governor since its admission, all but nine were Masons.

Eleven of the twenty-three United States senators from Kansas were associated with our Fraternity. The most outstanding member of this group was the late John J. Ingalls, a member of our Washington Lodge, No. 5, Atchison. He was nationally known during his eighteen years as United States senator, and his contribution to the literature of the country insures the perpetuity of his memory. His poetry and prose writings are particularly appealing. Everywhere he was recognised as one of our greatest orators. His ready wit, keen satire, and forceful delivery were known and feared in the Senate. For a quarter of a century he had an important part on the stage of human events in our State and national life, and left a public and private record of which all men and Masons may be proud.

M.:W.:Richard R. Rees (1856-59), our first Grand Master, re-elected for four consecutive terms, was a prominent factor in the early life of the Territory of Kansas, and most worthily directed the laying of the foundation of Masonry in Kansas.

M.:W.:Jacob Saqui (1861-65), Grand Master during the five years of the Civil War, was a true descendant of our traditional first Most Excellent Grand Master. He led with that wisdom which immortalised Israel's great King.

M.:W.:John H. Brown (1868-73), served with distinction in civil and Masonic life. Three years as Grand Master and twenty-three immediately following as Grand Secretary.

M.:W.:Owen A. Bassett (1873-74) served our country and Fraternity with honour. He had much to do with the construction of our law system. He is regularly quoted and the Bassett Notes in our Code are the last words in legal logic and clear-cut expression of the same.

M.:W.:William M. Shaver (1897) is held in loving remembrance for his service as Grand Master and for his labour in compiling the Monitor used in Kansas for many years, and which bears his name. His musical ability, both organ and voice, so cheerfully given and so pleasingly adapted, and his true interpretation of our Work were the inspiration for many of the best workers of to-day.

M.:W.: Charles J. Webb (1900), a good example of deep water moving slowly, served faithfully as Grand Master and at his death a few years since made suitable provision for relatives, and left the residue of his estate, more than $100,000, to the Endowment Fund of the Masonic Home.

M.:W.: Perry M. Hoisington (1901), a Christian gentleman; banker by trade; a trained soldier; fearless and forceful, yet kindly and considerate; a man of broad experience and unquestioned integrity! Through his long service in the National Guard and the United States Army, he has contributed much to the general elevation of standards among our young men. The colonel was an outstanding servant to all branches of Masonry, particularly in the military affairs of the Grand Encampment. He was a Director of the Masonic Home Board from its organisation until his death in 1933.

M.:W.: Bestor G. Brown (1903), nationally and internationally known Mason, contributed much to the general advancement of Masonry in Kansas. With his happy disposition, forceful and pleasing expression, he was naturally a floor leader in Grand Lodge and a man of great influence outside. It was his logic and eloquence that brought about the building of our magnificent Grand Lodge Building. His death was truly untimely.

M.:W.: Thomas G. Fitch (1904), active in all the Grand Bodies for more than a generation; affectionately known as "Colonel Tom"; active head of the A. A. S. R. in Kansas at this time and for many years past. His great service has been as active Vice-President and Secretary of the Masonic Home Board for many, many years without fee or reward.

M.:W.: Ben S. Paulen (1921) served the State as governor for four years, during one of which (1925) he was Grand High Priest of the M.:E.:Grand Chapter R.A.M. He is a regular patron of Masonic meetings and a man of influence in State and Fraternal affairs.

R.:W.: Albert K. Wilson was Grand Secretary for thirty-five years (1894-1928); Reviewer for many years in all Bodies; founder of present system of Records and Accounts; Editor-in-Chief of all our literature. Has just finished writing a history of Masonry in Kansas.

M.:W.: Henry F. Mason (1908) served Masonry with pleasing efficiency and was for many years prior to his death (1927) a member of the Supreme Court of Kansas. He had an analytic mind, abundant, powerful and beautiful language, and could instantly adapt himself to any group or situation.

M.:W.: Wm. Easton Hutchison (1912), pioneer Mason and citizen of the great Southwest. Served his people as district judge for many years. Now a member of the Supreme Court of the State.

To close this sketch without acknowledgment of the value of precept and example in the lives of the great army of members not called to service in official capacity would be an injustice. No Work of any consequence is accomplished without qualified and consecrated leadership. Similarly, no satisfactory results can be attained unless there is an army of devoted followers and Workers. The truly great Mason is he who accepts Masonry as the exact science it is; puts its principles into his daily life and walks before the world according to its teachings, performing the service which comes to his hand, always endeavouring to produce Square Work for the Temple. The responsibility of men and Masons is in proportion to their ability, and the reward to the humblest is equal unto that of the exalted, faithfulness being the only measure.

FREEMASONRY IN KENTUCKY

G. ALLISON HOLLAND

THE Grand Lodge of Kentucky was organised at Lexington on September 8, 1800, by three Representatives from Lexington Lodge, No. 25; three from Paris Lodge, No. 35; two from Georgetown Lodge, No. 46; six from Frankfort-Hiram Lodge, No. 57; and one from Abraham's Lodge U. D., of Shelbyville. John Hawkins was elected Chairman of the original meeting and Thomas Bodley, Clerk. At that time it was decided that each Lodge should have one vote, and the following resolution was adopted: "Resolved, That it is expedient, necessary, and agreeable to the Masonic Constitutions that a Grand Lodge should be established in this State to be composed of the Representatives of such Lodges in the Western country as may find it convenient to attach themselves to its Jurisdiction."

Since the above-named Lodges were members of, and held their Charters under, the Jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of Virginia, a Committee of one from each of these Lodges was, therefore, appointed to draft a respectful address to that Grand Lodge, giving the reasons for the separation of the Lodges from its Jurisdiction. It was also ordered that each Lodge should pay all it owed to the Grand Lodge of Virginia. That was done.

On the following October 16, pursuant to the resolution adopted at the Convention of September 8, 1800, the various Representatives assembled in the Masonic Hall at Lexington. James Morrison, the oldest Past Master present, was requested to take the Chair. The following Delegates were present: From Lexington Lodge, No. 25: A. McGregor, Master; Thomas Bodley, Senior Warden; John Bobbs, Junior Warden; James Morrison, Past Master; Hugh McIlvain, Past Master; and Bro. James Russell, Bro. James Bliss, and Bro. Nathaniel Barker; from Paris Lodge, No. 35: Thomas Hughes, Master; Nathaniel Williams, Junior Warden; Bro. Thomas Phillips and Bro. Joseph Duncan; from Georgetown Lodge, No. 46: William Sutton, Master; Samuel Shepherd, Senior Warden; John Sutton, Junior Warden, and Cary L. Clarke, Past Master; from Hiram Lodge, No. 57: William Murray, Master; Thomas Love, Senior Warden, and Isaac E. Gano, Junior Warden; and from Abraham's Lodge U. D.: Simon Adams, Master, and James Wardlow, Senior Warden.

A Lodge of Master Masons having been opened in due form, the Masters then produced their Charters and Credentials. They were careful to see that everything should be well, regularly, and lawfully done. Grand Officers were then elected: William Murray, of Hiram Lodge, No. 57, now Lodge, No. 4, was elected Grand Master, and immediately Installed. The Grand Master, waiving his right to appoint his Deputy, Alexander MacGregor of Paris Lodge,

No. 25, now Lodge, No. 1, was elected Deputy Grand Master. He also was Installed immediately. Simon Adams, of Abraham's Lodge U. D., now Solomon Lodge, No. 5, was elected Grand Senior Warden, and Cary L. Clarke, of Georgetown Lodge, No. 46, afterwards Lodge No. 3, was elected Grand Junior Warden. Both were at once Installed. Other Officers were then elected as follows: James Russell, of Lexington Lodge, No. 25, now Lodge No. 1, Grand Secretary; John A. Seitz, also of Lexington Lodge, No. 25, now Lodge No. 1, Grand Treasurer; Thomas Hughes of Paris Lodge, No. 35, afterwards Lodge No. 2, Grand Senior Deacon; Nathaniel Williams, also of Paris Lodge, No. 35, afterwards Lodge No. 2, Grand Junior Deacon; Samuel Shepherd, of Georgetown Lodge, No. 46, afterwards Lodge No. 3, Grand Pursuivant; and John Bobbs, of Lexington Lodge No. 25, now Lodge No. 1, Grand Tyler.

After the Installation of those Officers, the Grand Lodge met as a Committee of the Whole to consider matters regarded as being absolutely necessary for the good of the Craft. The Committee was then directed to make its Report to the Grand Lodge at seven o'clock that evening. At the night meeting the action of the Committee of the Whole was considered separately, ratified, and confirmed. A Committee consisting of Simon Adams, William Sutton, and Isaac E. Gano was also appointed to prepare a letter to all other Grand Lodges which gave in detail the reasons and purposes of the Kentucky Lodges in withdrawing from the Grand Lodge of Virginia. At the same meeting the Grand Master was instructed to appoint well-skilled Brethren to visit and inspect the Work of the various subordinate Lodges. It was then agreed that the following should be the order of numbers given to the subordinate Lodges under the Jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of Kentucky: Lexington Lodge, No. 1 (No. 25 on the Virginia Register); Paris Lodge, No. 2 (No. 35 on the Virginia Register); Georgetown Lodge, No. 3 (No. 46 on the Virginia Register); Hiram Lodge, No. 4 (No. 57 on the Virginia Register); and Solomon's Lodge, No. 5 (Abraham's Lodge U. D. on the Virginia Register).

It was also agreed that the Seal of Lexington Lodge, No. 1, should be used as the Grand Lodge Seal until another could be procured, and that the Lodge Charters should be "delivered up" and temporary Charters issued to Lodges No. 1, No. 2, No. 3, and No. 4 at a cost of five pounds each and to Lodge No. 5 for ten pounds. The Lodges were to be credited with those amounts, respectively, on paying the Grand Secretary's fees in advance. It was then ordered that the Grand Secretary should prepare Charters for the Lodges, and that the Charters should be signed "by the Grand Masters," that is, we now suppose, by the Grand Master and the Deputy Grand Master. The Charters were to be attested by the Grand Secretary under Seal, then returned at the next Stated Communication, when others issued in due form would be given in lieu of them. Orders were also made that the Grand Master, the Grand Treasurer, and the Grand Secretary should prepare Regalia, Tools, Jewels, and other necessary equipment, and that the completion of the Seal be left to the Grand Secretary.

A Committee was then appointed to prepare a circular letter to be sent to all the other Grand Lodges. It was to advise them of the establishment and organisation of the Grand Lodge of Kentucky. The letter was then reported and signed by the Chairman, Alexander MacGregor. The Scotsman must have said to himself, "My feet are on my native heath," for he signed his name in big letters, thus: MACGREGOR, Chairman."

The Grand Lodge met again on February 9, 1801, in the Masonic Hall at Lexington, and having been opened it was adjourned again until the next day. At that time a Charter was granted to a Lodge in Bairdstown, to be known as Washington Lodge, No. 6. The name of that Lodge was subsequently changed to Duvall Lodge, No. 6. The name of the town was also changed to Bardstown. It is to-day a centre of great historic interest in Kentucky.

Members of the Grand Lodge of Kentucky were notably represented in the War of 1812. At the very beginning of that struggle, really in 1811, Joseph Hamilton Daviess, Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Kentucky, stopped at Vincennes, Indiana, to visit the Lodge there. It was under the Jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of Kentucky. Daviess was at the time on his way to join Gen. William Henry Harrison, and under him to participate in the battle of Tippecanoe. There he lost his life on a gallant occasion while in command of a body of courageous Kentucky troops. Gen. Harrison said of Maj. Daviess: "The Major's gallantry determined him to execute the order with a smaller force than was sufficient. . . . He joined me as a private volunteer, and on recommendation of the officers of that corps, was appointed to command the three troops of dragoons. His conduct in that capacity justified the choice. Never was there an officer possessed of more ardour and zeal in the discharge of his duties with propriety, and never one who would have encountered greater danger to purchase military fame."

Daviess married Anna Marshall, a sister of Chief Justice John Marshall. He died on November 7, 1811, and on August 27, 1812, a funeral service in memory of him was conducted at Lexington by the Grand Lodge of Kentucky. On that occasion, eleven subordinate Lodges were represented. The coffin was borne by eight Master Masons, all members of Lexington Lodge, No. 1. The funeral sermon was preached by Dr. Caleb W. Cloud, and the Grand Lodge was presided over by Deputy Grand Master John Simpson, who also fought for his country alongside Past Grand Master Allen, as captain of a company in the regiment of which Allen was colonel. Both were killed at the battle of the Raisin.

The early history of the Grand Lodge of Kentucky mentions the names of many men prominent in other fields of endeavour in the State. At that time the Grand Lodge had an Office known as that of Grand Orator, which was filled by various distinguished Masons. Chief among them was Henry Clay, who later, in 1820, became Grand Master. The name of Henry Clay is so well known that it is not necessary to do more than mention it in this connection. Among the other distinguished Masons were: Colonel John Allen, George

M. Bibb, Daniel Bradford, and others whose names are regarded as household words throughout the old Commonwealth.

In later years John Speed Smith, Robert J. Breckinridge, Leslie Combs, Daniel Breck, and Samuel Daviess added luster to the distinguished line of early Kentucky Masons. The last named was a brother of Grand Master Joseph Hamilton Daveiss, mentioned earlier in this article. It might also be well to mention Robert Johnson here. He located claims for land in different sections of what afterwards became Scott and Jefferson Counties. There is now in the Henry County clerk's office a parchment United States Treasury warrant given to him. This warrant established Bro. Johnson's claim and authorised him to make a survey of land in that county, in 1786, when it was still a part of Jefferson County. Bro. Johnson was in command at Bryan Station. His wife, Jemina Suggett Johnson, led the women out of Bryan Station to the nearby spring in full view of the Indians who were being led by the notorious Simon Girty. That spring, near which have been placed names of the women who took part in that heroic event, is now memorialised by a tablet placed there by the Lexington Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

In 1829 James O. Harrison was the Grand Orator of the Grand Lodge. His grandson, James O. H. Simrall, now a prominent citizen of Lexington, has charge of business affairs of the public school system there.

In 1851 an appeal for aid in erecting the Washington Monument having been received, a Committee was appointed to prepare a block of Kentucky marble inscribed with the following words:

BY THE GRAND LODGE OF KENTUCKY TO THE MEMORY OF WASHINGTON
THE CHRISTIAN MASON

The block, now a part of that celebrated memorial, bears the inscription given above.

In 1853 Thomas Todd, of Shelby County, became Grand Master. He was a distinguished Mason in Kentucky. Grand Master Todd's mother was Letitia Shelby Todd, daughter of Isaac Shelby, the first governor of Kentucky. During Bro. Todd's administration as Grand Master twenty-seven Lodges were granted Dispensations. Among those was Eminence Lodge, No. 282, the Charter for which was granted on August 31, 1854.

Robert Morris, a celebrated Masonic writer, Poet Laureate of Kentucky Masonry, was Grand Master of Kentucky in 1858. Bro. Morris wrote a book of Masonic poems and also a large and interesting work entitled Freemasonry in the Holy Land. While gathering information for his books he spent eight years in Palestine. Among his better-known poems are "The Level and the Square," "Our Vows," and "Galilee." The latter, set to music, is often sung in churches.

In 1866 a memorial was presented to the Grand Lodge asking for the establishment of a Masonic Home under the supervision of the Grand Lodge. This was the origin of our present Masonic Widows' and Orphans' Home and Infirmary. The meeting was held, as had been planned, and Articles of Incorporation were properly prepared. Bro. H. B. Grant, who was present at the first meeting, has written a brief statement naming others who were present at that time. Among them were Bro. Sadler, Bro. Richardson, Bro. C. Henry Fink, Bro. Harry Hudson, Bro. Cowling, and Bro. Monsarrat. Bro. Grant gives credit for the establishment of the Home to Dr. A. Given. It was established and built between 1st and 2d Streets in Louisville. It was the first Masonic Widows' and Orphans' Home ever established. To-day, similar Homes are to be found throughout the civilised world and especially throughout the United States.

In 1918 the Grand Lodge of Kentucky authorised the appointment of a Committee to raise $1,000,000 for buying a new site and constructing new buildings for this Institution. It was evident that the site and buildings in use at the time had long since been outgrown and that more land and more buildings were necessary. This matter was discussed at the Annual Communication of the Grand Lodge held in December 1918; then, in January 1919, Grand Master William Carson Black appointed the Committee which was to raise the necessary funds. It consisted of G. Allison Holland, Chairman; George C. Atkinson, Will Ward Duffield, H. M. Grundy, John F. Coldiron, A. R. Kimmerling, Secretary; and William Carson Black, Treasurer. A few months later, Coldiron having resigned, Bro. A. Gordon Sulser was made a member of the Committee. This Committee succeeded in raising the magnificent sum of $1,143,491 for the purpose of providing the Home.

A tract of land consisting of 127 acres was then purchased at St. Matthews, just outside Louisville. On that tract 15 large and commodious fireproof buildings have been constructed for the purpose of taking care of more than 650 widows and orphans of deceased Brethren. After the Committee had raised the sum of money mentioned, an assessment was then made against the various Lodges of Kentucky. Those assessments and subscriptions amounted to about $2,000,000, all of which sum was invested in the new site and buildings. To-day Kentucky has one of the most magnificent Masonic Homes in the world, and there is not a dollar of indebtedness against it. All expenses of maintenance are met by the Masons of Kentucky. Judge James Garnett, Judge of one of the Chancery Divisions of the Circuit Court in Louisville and a man of high standing in the State, is now the President of the Home.

In addition to that Masonic undertaking, the Grand Lodge has also established what is known as the Old Masons' Home, at Shelbyville, Kentucky. It has there about 200 acres of fine bluegrass land, and a splendid three-story fireproof building equipped with all modern conveniences. In that Home, Kentucky Masons are caring for 81 aged Masons who have no home, and, except for the Masonic Fraternity, neither friends nor family to care for them. These two Homes stand as material proof of the thought, the care, and the great-heartedness of Kentucky Masonry. They have been reared by a Fraternity that makes its deeds of love and duty a monument more durable than brass.

Kentucky Masons are proud of their line of Grand Masters. The names of those who have held that high Office from 1800 to the present are given here because memory of them is an indelible part of our history:

Kentucky has been the home of many distinguished men who have been members of the State's Grand Lodge. Among them are J. Proctor Knott, of Duluth fame; James A. McKenzie, who was responsible for the passage in Congress of the bill removing tariff from quinine; James B. McCreary, United States senator and twice governor of Kentucky; and Colonel W. C. P. Breckinridge, one of the ablest and most brilliant orators the Bluegrass State ever produced.

The Grand Chapter of Kentucky, Royal Arch Masons, established on December 4, 1817, celebrated its centennial anniversary at the regular Annual Convocation held in the fall of 1917. The interesting historical sketch given at that time was prepared by Past Grand High Priest George B. Winslow. It was in 1816 that the Grand Lodge authorised the Chapters working under Warrants or Dispensations to establish a Grand Chapter, provided that no Warrant should be issued to a Chapter without the permission of the Grand Lodge. At that time the Grand Lodge claimed Jurisdiction over Capitular Masonry in Kentucky, but since its reorganisation in 1817 that branch of Masonry has gradually grown till it is now a vigorous and splendid organisation of about 18,000 Royal Arch Masons. The first meeting was held at Frankfort in 1817, and the next at Shelbyville in 1818. From 1825 to 1834 meetings were held in Lexington, but in 1835 the meeting place was changed to Louisville. In 1857 the Grand Chapter withdrew as a constituent of the General Grand Chapter, but in 1873 it reunited with it. Kentucky has been honoured by the General Grand Chapter in having the late Bernard G. Witt carried through its lines until he finally became General Grand High Priest. One or two other Kentuckians have also been in line at various times, but in each case the record has been cut short by death. At present Past Grand High Priest G. Allison Holland occupies the position of General Grand Scribe of the General Grand Chapter of the United States of America.

For many years the Cryptic Degrees were under the control of the Grand Chapter, but on December 10, 1827, a Convention of Royal and Select Masters was held in Frankfort, and at that time a Constitution and a Code of Laws and General Regulations were adopted, Officers were elected and installed, and the Grand Council of Royal and Select Masters of the State of Kentucky was regularly established. At that Convention the following six subordinate Councils were represented: Washington Council, No. 1, of Lexington; Warren Council, No. 2, of Hopkinsville; Centre Council, No. 3, of Danville; Louisville Council, No. 4, of Louisville; Frankfort Council, No. 5, of Frankfort; and Versailles Council, No. 6, of Versailles. Although no Record shows just where these Councils obtained their Warrants or Dispensations, Louisville Council, No. 4, has in its archives an old-time Warrant, or Dispensation, from the Supreme Council of the Thirty-third Degree, which authorises its establishment. The Warrant, dated September 26, 1827, was signed by John Barker, Sovereign Grand Inspector General, 33 Degree, General Agent of the Supreme Council of the United States of America. There is also in existence some sort of Record which shows that Lexington Council obtained its Warrant on November 23, 1816, and that Shelbyville Council's Warrant was received on January 15, 1817. When the Grand Council of Kentucky was organised, the Council at Lexington was known as Washington Council, No. 1, but Shelbyville Council was not mentioned. Later, however, in 1870, a Council was established in Shelbyville. New Charters were granted and issued to these Councils in 1852. It seems that for some reason the General Grand Chapter was endeavouring to assert a form of control over the constituent Councils in Kentucky, and that formal objection was made in 1850 by the Grand Council of Kentucky. The result was that the Jurisdiction of Kentucky was that year extended over the States of Tennessee, Illinois, Missouri, Louisiana, Indiana, and Texas. The Jurisdiction terminated, however, with the organisation of Grand Councils in those States. During the 1870's arrangements were made to have the Grand Chapter take care of, and confer, the Degrees of Royal and Select Master, but in 1882 the Grand Council avowed its right to authorise the Grand Chapter to supervise those Degrees. The Grand Chapter then returned the trust, and since that time Councils have been requested to resume Labour and to make Returns, a duty which has since been vigorously performed. Kentucky now has a splendid Grand Council made up of forty-eight constituent Councils, all in good condition and doing real Work.

The Grand Commandery of Kentucky is an active Body of Knights Templar. Its roster includes a brilliant group of Past Grand Commanders. One of their number, W. Larue Thomas, was Grand Master of the Grand Encampment; another, Frank H. Johnson, was for many years Grand Recorder of that Distinguished Body.

Scottish Rite Masonry in Kentucky is more powerful just now than ever before in its history. There are two Consistories, the Grand Consistory of Kentucky, located in the Valley of Louisville, and Indra Consistory, located in the Valley of Covington. A member of the Grand Consistory of Kentucky, John H. Cowles, is the Sovereign Grand Commander of the Supreme Council of the Thirty-third Degree. Although now residing in Washington, District of Columbia, he is a Kentuckian and one of the most distinguished Masons in America. His Deputies in Kentucky are Fred W. Hardwick, of the Grand Consistory of Louisville, and H. G. Hightower, of the Indra Consistory at Covington.

In Kentucky the two Masonic Rites are working together valiantly, progressively, and successfully. Their theories are broad and substantial, their practices uplifting and patriotic, and their system of recondite symbolism inspiring and educational. The student of those Rites must of necessity accumulate historic values and traditional information leading into regions of impalpable azure and to the golden sunlight of intellectual accomplishment.

FREEMASONRY IN LOUISIANA

EDWIN F. GAYLE

AT the beginning, and during the first half century of its existence, Freemasonry in Louisiana was a curious blending of the York Rite; the Modern, or French, Rite, under the Grand Orient of France; and the Scottish, or Scotch, Rite. Sometimes those elements blended harmoniously; sometimes dissensions grew out of the struggle for supremacy of one or the other of the several Rites, which sprang up almost simultaneously in Louisiana.

Masonic historians do not agree on the relative merits of those Rites. Rather they seem to have been somewhat prejudiced in favour of one or the other. For instance, Folger's History is said to have been written in the interest of the Hayes-Atwood Supreme Council of New York and of the Foulhouze Supreme Council of New Orleans, but the Grand Lodge of Louisiana has approved the work of Bro. James B. Scot whose Outline of the Rise and Progress of Freemasonry in Louisiana was adopted by resolution as the true and authentic history of Freemasonry, at the Annual Grand Communication held in February 1911.

The first introduction of Masonry into Louisiana resulted from the insurrection in the French West India Islands in 1791. Several Freemasons, refugees chiefly from the Island of Guadeloupe, residing in New Orleans, met together and organised themselves into a Lodge which they named Parfaite Union (Perfect Union), and applied to the Grand Lodge of South Carolina for a Charter. This was granted, and they were duly Constituted under the York Rite as Loge Parfaite Union, No. 29. The following Officers were installed on March 30, 1794, by Jason Lawrence, deputed for that purpose: Laurent Sigur, Worshipful Master; Laurent Chouriac, Senior Warden; and Andrès Wackernie, Junior Warden.

During the same year, another group of refugees, also residents of New Orleans, of French, or Modern, Rite affiliation, met and formed a Lodge which they called Étoile Polaire (Polar Star), and applied to the Grand Orient of France for a Charter. But since that Grand Orient had suspended its Labours on account of political troubles, they then applied for a Charter to the Provincial Lodge "La Parfaite Sincérité," at Marseilles, France. A provisional Charter, or Dispensation, was granted them in 1796, and Dominique Mayronne was deputed to deliver the Charter and to Constitute the new Lodge. This he did. The following Officers were installed on December 27, 1798: Duprelong Petavin, Worshipful Master; Chev. Désilets, Senior Warden; and F. Marc, Junior Warden.

Subsequently, in 1804, the Grand Orient of France having resumed Labour the year before, it granted a Charter to Polar Star Lodge and deputed Charles Tessier, a great-grandfather of the writer of this history, to deliver the Charter and to heal the Work. Accordingly, the Lodge was re-Constituted under this Charter on November 11, 1804, under the French, or Modern, Rite, as Polar Star Lodge, No. 4263, and the following Officers were installed by A. Pinard and A. Marmillion, deputed for that purpose by the Grand Orient of France: A. D. Chastant, Worshipful Master; A. Marmillion, Senior Warden; and J. Pinard, Junior Warden.

Those two Lodges, one working in the York Rite, the other in the French, or Modern, Rite, coming into existence about the same time and each claiming priority of organisation, became rivals. The rivalry between them became so strong at times that the two Lodges declined to have Masonic intercourse with each other.

It is claimed that even prior to the organisation of Perfect Union Lodge and Polar Star Lodge, a number of former members of Candor Lodge, No. 12, of Charleston, South Carolina, who were then living in Louisiana, had held Masonic meetings, though they did not apply for a Charter until 1801. This was granted on May 18, 1801, by the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, under the name of Candor Lodge, No. 90. The first Officers of that Lodge were N. Definiels, Worshipful Master; Gaspard Debuys, Senior Warden; and Pierre D. Berne, Junior Warden. There is no known record of this Lodge's ever having Worked, and it is believed to have merged eventually with Charity Lodge, No. 93, whose members applied to the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania for a Charter. This was granted on March 1, 1802, but was not delivered until May 13, 1804, when the Lodge was duly Constituted by Eugène Dorsière, deputed for the purpose. The following Officers were installed in the York Rite: Nicholas Definiels, Worshipful Master; D. Baron, Senior Warden; and J. Carrick, Junior Warden.

At this time Masonry was proscribed by the Spanish Government. In consequence, during the Spanish domination of Louisiana, Masonic meetings were held outside the walls of New Orleans, which was then bounded by what are now known as Canal Street, Rampart Street, Esplanade Avenue, and river front.

Another source of early Masonic influence in Louisiana was Santo Domingo. From there came refugees, among whom were a number of Officers and members of "La Réunion Désirée Lodge, No. 3013, holding a Charter under the Grand Orient of France, which was dated April 16, 1783. This Lodge had been domiciled at Port au Prince. On February 15, 1806, a group of those Masons opened Lodge with the following old Officers officiating: Louis Casimir Elizabeth Moreau Lislet, acting as Worshipful Master; Louis Jean Lussion, as Senior Warden; and Jean Zanico as Junior Warden. They resolved to resume their Labours in New Orleans until they could return to their old home in Santo Domingo, and to apply to the Grand Orient of France for a duplicate Charter. A "provisional election" of Officers was held at the same time. This resulted in the election of Moreau Lislet, as Worshipful Master; J. Rice Fitzgerald, as Senior Warden; and Jean Zanico, as Junior Warden. The Grand Orient of France granted the Lodge a duplicate Charter dated February 17, 1806, and registered as No. 3829. This Charter, delivered on July 20, 1807, seems to have been registered in the " Grand Symbolic Lodge " of the Orient of France on March 3, 1807, and in the " General Grand Chapter " of the Grand Orient of France on the following day. From this fact we must conclude that the Lodge had a Chapter of the Rose Croix attached to it. The Lodge worked in the French, or Modern, Rite until November 27, 1808, when it seems to have ceased Labour. It also seems that its members had already applied to the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania for a York Rite Charter, which had been granted them on September 15, 1808, under the name of La Réunion Désirée Lodge, No. 112. It began its Labours with the following Officers: Louis Jean Lusson, Worshipful Master; Jean Zanico, Senior Warden; and Peter Ambrose Couvillier, Junior Warden. This Lodge was dissolved on March 23, 1812. The Records of La Réunion Désirée Lodge are now in possession of Perseverance Lodge, No. 4, which was Chartered by the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania on October 7, 1810, as Perseverance Lodge, No. 118. Moreau Lislet, specially deputed to Constitute Perseverance Lodge, did so and installed the following Officers according to the York Rite on December 23, 1810: Jean Baptiste Pinta, Worshipful Master; Emanuel Gigaud, Senior Warden; and John Francis Giquel, Junior Warden.

There was no considerable influx of English-speaking Masons into Louisiana until several years after the acquisition of Louisiana Territory by the United States. Nevertheless, in 1806, a number of those Masons who had come into Louisiana from the Northern States applied to the Grand Lodge of New York for a Charter, which was granted on September 2, 1807, under the designation of Louisiana Lodge, No. 1. This was the first Lodge in New Orleans that Worked in English, and it is worthy of note that its first Worshipful Master was Edward Livingston, the celebrated jurist, who collaborated with Moreau Lislet in the compilation of the Civil Code of Louisiana.

The Grand Orient of France, upon the application of Polar Star Lodge, No. 4263, granted a Charter to open and hold a Chapter of Rose Croix under the designation of La Vertu Récompensée, No. 5001. This Chapter was regularly Constituted, and its Officers were installed on May 24, 1807. It is claimed that this was the first regularly Constituted Chapter of the Rose Croix in Louisiana. It was attached to Polar Star Lodge, pursuant to a custom of that time which permitted Bodies of the higher Degrees of the York, French, and Scottish Rites to be attached to Symbolic Lodges.

Among other Lodges organised by the refugees from Cuba and Santo Domingo was Concord Lodge, No. 88, originally located at St. Marc, Santo Domingo, and working under a Charter from the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania. The members of this Lodge fled from Santo Domingo to Santiago de Cuba, and on August 6, 1805, they resumed Work under a Charter from the Pennsylvania Provincial Grand Lodge of Santo Domingo, then sitting at Baracoa. This Lodge continued to hold meetings until December 27, 1807.

Another Lodge, called Réunion des Cœurs, Working in the French, or Modern, Rite and holding a Charter from the Grand Orient of France, was Constituted in Santo Domingo on October 2, 1788. The members of this Lodge also fled to Santiago de Cuba. There they were reorganised on November 18, 1805. They continued to hold meetings until May 22, 1808. The members of those two Santo Domingan Lodges subsequently took refuge in New Orleans, where they resumed their Labours in 1809. It being improper to continue their Labours under their old Charters, they applied to the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania for a Charter, which was granted them on October 7, 1810. The new Lodge was Constituted, and the following Officers were installed according to the York Rite on January 27, 1811, by Moreau Lislet, who was specially deputed for that purpose by the Grand Master of Pennsylvania: J. B. Baqué, Worshipful Master; François Lavigne, Senior Warden; ——— Rousselin, Junior Warden. Concord Lodge is still in possession of the Records of its two progenitors. When the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania granted Charters to Concord Lodge and Perseverance Lodge, it also granted Charters for Royal Arch Chapters to be attached to each of them. Those two Chapters were Constituted at about the same time as were the Lodges; to be exact, on April 11, 1811. They were the first regularly organised Bodies of Royal Arch Masonry in Louisiana.

Another English-speaking Lodge Chartered by the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania was Harmony Lodge, No. 122, whose Charter was granted on November 19, 1810. Its first Officers were Maunsel White, Worshipful Master; Christopher Robert Elliot, Senior Warden; and James Hopkins, Junior Warden. Worshipful Master White afterwards became a merchant prince of New Orleans, where he resided until his death in his eighty-eighth year, on December 18, 1863.

From the beginning to the present time, Louisiana Masonry has more or less recognised the cumulation of Rites. Thus, Polar Star Lodge, No. 4263, held its Charter from the beginning under the Jurisdiction of the Grand Orient of France, and in 1811 it applied to the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania for a York Rite Charter. This Charter was granted on June 3, 1911, bearing the name Polar Star Lodge, No. 129. Moreau Lislet Constituted the Lodge and installed the following Officers on October 20, 1811: Jean Pinard, Worshipful Master; Noel Fournier, Senior Warden; and R. Pamar, Junior Warden.

From the Minutes of Polar Star Lodge, No. 4263, we learn that its purpose in applying for a York Rite Charter was to attempt to harmonise the conflicting ideas and prejudices of the York Rite Lodges towards French, or Modern, Rite Masons. Although Polar Star Lodge could Work in either Rite, nevertheless the Minutes show that the Work in the French, or Modern, Rite was indefinitely adjourned.

When Louisiana was admitted to Statehood, on April 30, 1812, conditions were ripe for the formation of a Grand Lodge. One Charter had been granted by the Grand Lodge of South Carolina, one by the Provincial Lodge Sincérité, at Marseilles, France, two by the Grand Orient of France, one by the Grand Lodge of New York, seven by the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, and one, to Bienfaisance Lodge, No. 1, by the Grand Consistory of Jamaica, on June 22, 1811. Bienfaisance Lodge, No. 1, Worked in the Scotch Rite, and later on May 27, 1812, it affiliated with Concord Lodge, No. 117. There were, then, at that time, seven Lodges in full activity, and all working in the York Rite. They were: Perfect Union Lodge, No. 29; Charity Lodge, No. 93; Louisiana Lodge, No. 1; Concord Lodge, No. 117; Perseverance Lodge, No. 118; Harmony Lodge, No. 122; and Polar Star Lodge, No. 129.

Perfect Union Lodge, No. 29, had the honour to initiate the movement for the organisation of a Grand Lodge. In response to a circular issued by P. F. Dubourg, Worshipful Master of that Lodge, a meeting composed of three Delegates from each Lodge was held in Perfect Union Hall at the corner of Camp and Gravier Streets, in what was known as the Suburb St. Mary, on April 18, 1812. The several Lodges were represented by the following Delegates: P. F. Dubourg, P. Pédesclaux, and Thomas Urquhart, of Perfect Union Lodge, No. 29; Dom. Rouquette, J. B. Déjan, and Cyprien Gros, of Charity Lodge, No. 93; J. B. Farrell, J. Watkins, and James Martin, of Louisiana Lodge, No. 1; J. B. B. Baqué, H. Mathieu, and G. Hubert, of Concord Lodge, No. 117; J. B. Pinta, N. Visinier père, and J. B. G. Veron, of Perseverance Lodge, No. 118; Maunsel White, James Hopkins, and David Wright, of Harmony Lodge, No. 122; and J. Pinard, Ch. Roche, and J. B. Modeste Lefebvre, of Polar Star Lodge, No. 129.

These Delegates organised themselves into a "General Masonic Committee of the State of Louisiana to provide for the establishment of a Grand Lodge in the City of New Orleans" and elected P. F. Dubourg, President, and J. B. G. Veron and David Wright, Secretaries. The second meeting of this Committee was held on May 16, 1812. At that time Charity Lodge, No. 93, was not represented, and Louisiana Lodge, No. 1, expressed the opinion that it was not yet expedient to organise a Grand Lodge. At this meeting the following resolution was unanimously adopted: "Resolved, That the W.:Master of the W.:Lodge Perfect Union, No. 29, the senior of the regular Lodges of this State, be requested to issue his summons to the Masters, Past Masters, and Officers of the several ancient and regularly Constituted Lodges in this State to meet in Convention, to take into consideration the interests of the true Craft and to deliberate on the necessity of establishing a Grand Lodge in this State."

Pursuant to the above resolution, the summons was issued, and the "Grand Convention" met on June 13, 1812, with the Masters, Past Masters, and Officers of the following Lodges present: Perfect Lodge, No. 29; Charity Lodge, No. 93; Concord Lodge, No. 117; Perseverance Lodge, No. 118; and Polar Star Lodge, No. 129. The two English-speaking Lodges, Harmony Lodge and Louisiana Lodge, withdrew from the Convention, and A. Guibert was appointed as Secretary to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of David Wright, of Harmony Lodge.

June 20, 1812, was then appointed as the date for the election of Officers. At that time the "Grand Convention of Ancient York Rite Masons" met in Perfect Union Lodge Room and elected the following Officers: P. F. Dubourg, Worshipful Master of Perfect Union Lodge, No. 29, Grand Master; L. C. E. Moreau Lislet, Past Master of Polar Star Lodge, No. 129, Deputy Grand Master;

Jean Blanque, Worshipful Master of Charity Lodge, No. 92, Senior Grand Warden; François Pernot, Worshipful Master of Concord Lodge, No. 117, Junior Grand Warden; J. B. Pinta, Worshipful Master of Perseverance Lodge, No. 118, Grand Treasurer; J. B. Veron, Senior Warden of Perseverance Lodge, No. 118, Grand Secretary; Mathurin Pacaud, Past Master of Polar Star Lodge, No. 129, Grand Orator; Yves Lemonnier, Junior Warden of Charity Lodge, No. 93, Grand Pursuivant; Augustin Macarty, Junior Warden of Perseverance Lodge, No. 118, Grand Steward. The Officers were Installed on July 11, 1812. A Committee was also appointed to draft a Constitution and General Regulations. Each of the participating Lodges subscribed $100 towards the expense. Accordingly, a Constitution and General Regulations were adopted, and Charters were issued to each of the five constituent Lodges.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN

The Grand Lodge of Louisiana, Ancient York Masons, established at New Orleans, in the State of Louisiana, the 20th day of June, in the year of our Lord 1812, and of Masonry 5812, according to the Old Constitutions revived by the Prince EDWIN, at York, in the Kingdom of England, in the year of our Lord 926, and of Masonry 4926, by the style and title of the Grand Lodge of Louisiana, Ancient York Masons, and its Masonic Jurisdiction, invested with full and sole powers and authority over all the Ancient Craft, and the Supreme Court of Appeal in all Masonic cases arising under its Jurisdiction, agreeable to ancient form and usage—Being assembled in Grand Communication in the City of New Orleans and State aforesaid

SEND GREETING:

Know ye, that We, the Grand Lodge of Louisiana, by virtue of the powers and authorities duly vested in us as aforesaid, do hereby authorise and empower our trusty and well-beloved Brethren, Peter Francis Dubourg, Master, Peter Pédesclaux, Senior Warden, and Augustin Macarty, Junior Warden, to open and hold a Lodge, designated by number One, and by the name Parfaite Union, under our Register and Jurisdiction, in New Orleans, in the State of Louisiana, or within three miles of the same; And We do likewise authorise and empower our said Brethren P. F. Dubourg, P. Pédesclaux and Augustin Macarty to admit, make, pass, and raise Freemasons according to the most ancient custom and usage of the Craft, in all ages and nations, throughout the known World, and not otherwise. And we do Further authorise and empower the said P. F. Debourg, Peter Pédesclaux and A. Macarty, and their successors, to hear and determine all and singular matters and things, relative to the Craft within the jurisdiction of the said Lodge number One, And Lastly, We do hereby authorise, empower and direct our said trusty and well-beloved Brethren P. F. Dubourg, P. Pédesclaux and A. Macarty to install their successors, after being duly elected and chosen, to invest them with all the powers and dignities to their offices respectively belonging, and deliver to them this Warrant, and such successors shall, in like manner, from time to time, install their successors, and proceed in the premises as above directed: Such installation to be upon or near the Festival of St. John the Evangelist, during the continuance of the said Lodge forever; Provided Always, that the said above named Brethren, and their successors, do pay due respect and obedience to the Right Worshipful Grand Lodge aforesaid and to the ordinances thereof; otherwise, this Warrant to be of no force or virtue.

(Seal) Given in Open Grand Lodge, under the hands of our Right Worshipful Grand Officers and the seal of our Grand Lodge at New Orleans, this Fifteenth day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twelve, and of Masonry five thousand eight hundred and twelve.

Attest:

VERNON, Grand Secretary

J. B. PINTA, Grand Treasurer

From the preceding short synopsis of the beginning of Masonry in Louisiana, one may see that although some of the Lodges of Louisiana had Worked in the French, or Modern, Rite, and although at least one had Worked in the Scotch, or Scottish, Rite, nevertheless the Grand Lodge was organised and made up of Lodges which had obtained Charters under the York Rite. Consequently, the Grand Lodge of Louisiana was formed as a Grand Lodge of York Rite Masons. Nevertheless, many Louisiana Masons leaned strongly towards the French, or Modern, Rite, and some few advocated the Scotch, or Scottish Rite. To understand the vital influences at work during the development of Masonry in Louisiana, one must not forget that all three elements played an important part.

A Grand Chapter of Royal Arch Masons was formed on March 8, 1813, by Concord Royal Arch Chapter and Perseverance Royal Arch Chapter, Working under Charters from the Grand Chapter of Royal Arch Masons of Pennsylvania. The first Grand Chapter Officers were: P. F. Dubourg, Grand High Priest; Moreau Lislet, Deputy Grand High Priest; J. Soulie, Grand King; and Thomas Urquhart, Grand Scribe. At its first Session, the newly-formed Grand Chapter granted Charters to Perfect Union Chapter, No. 3, and Polar Star Chapter, No. 4.

On April 13, 1813, the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania adopted resolutions extending recognition and fraternal correspondence to the Grand Lodge of Louisiana. This recognition was received with great satisfaction by Louisiana Masons as the first recognition emanating from the mother Grand Lodge of the majority of the Lodges which had formed the Grand Lodge of Louisiana. On June 19, 1813, pursuant to a Charter granted by the Cerneau Grand Consistory of New York, a Grand Consistory for the State of Louisiana was formed, its first Officers being Emanuel Gigaud, Jean Pinard, and Noël Fournier. This fact is mentioned at this point because of its influence upon the growth and development of York Rite Masonry in Louisiana, and because of the Consistory's attempt to assume Jurisdiction over the first three Degrees, thus infringing upon the Jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge. When this question was brought directly before the Grand Lodge on June 27, 1818, the Grand Lodge of Louisiana adopted the following decree: "Resolved, That the Lodges of this Jurisdiction are forbidden to recognise any Grand or private Lodge of a Rite different from that of York, or any other Masonic Body, under whatever denomination it may be." This decree was the result of Communications from a society established at Havana under the title of Grand Consistory of the Havana.

While the Grand Lodge of Louisiana was resisting invasions of its Jurisdiction made by more or less authentic Scottish Rite Bodies, a number of Brethren applied to the Grand Orient of France for a Charter to Work in the French Rite. The Charter was granted, and the Lodge was Constituted at New Orleans on April 21, 1818, under the name of La Triple Bienfaisance, No. 7319. Its first Officers were C. Miltenberger, Worshipful Master; Spire Loquet, Senior Warden, and P. Caillou, Junior Warden. At the same time a Rose Croix Chapter was Chartered under the same name and registered as 7320. This was an invasion of the Jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge, and was one of the causes of the resolution of June 27, 1818, which forbade all intercourse with Lodges other than those of the York Rite. From the date of its organisation to the close of 1818, the Grand Lodge of Louisiana had granted nine Charters, three of which were located in Louisiana, and six elsewhere. The names of the Lodges Chartered during that period are as follows: Friendship Lodge, No. 6, at Mobile, Alabama, September 4, 1813; Réunion Fraternal de Caridad, No. 7, at Havana, Chartered on April 29, 1815; Los Amigos Reunidos, No. 8, at Vera Cruz, Chartered on April 30, 1816; Réunion a La Virtud, No. 9, at Campeachy, Chartered on April 12, 1817; L'Étoile Flamboyante, No. 10, at Baton Rouge, Chartered on August 11, 1817; El Templo de la Divina Pastora, No. 11, at Matanzas, Chartered on February 10, 1818; La Vérité, No. 12, at Donaldsonville, Chartered on February 10, 1818; Union, No. 13, at Natchitoches, Chartered on February 21, 1818; and La Rectitude, No. 14, at Havana, Chartered on May 16, 1818.

Thus there were at the time eight Lodges in Louisiana under the Jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge. Louisiana Lodge, No. 1, which had declined to join in the organisation of the Grand Lodge, had ceased to exist, but Harmony Lodge, No. 22, still holding its Charter under the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, was still active, and Feliciana Lodge, No. 46, holding a Charter under the Grand Lodge of Kentucky, was also in existence at this time. The latter applied to the Grand Lodge of Louisiana on March 9, 1828, asking for a Charter and stating that its Charter from the Grand Lodge of Kentucky had been surrendered. The Grand Lodge of Louisiana then granted a Charter designating the Lodge as Feliciana Lodge, No. 31. The Records of the Grand Lodge of Kentucky show that the original Charter granted by it to Feliciana Lodge, No. 46, was dated August 27, 1817, the Lodge having previously Worked under a Dispensation granted during the recess of 1816-1817 by William H. Richardson, Grand Master of Kentucky. The Records of the Grand Lodge of Kentucky also show that Feliciana Lodge, No. 46, was considered by its Committee on Delinquent Lodges in 1834, and that upon the recommendation of the Committee, it had been discharged from paying its dues and from its allegiance to the Grand Lodge of Kentucky and advised to attach itself to the Grand Lodge of Louisiana. This it had already done, having been under the impression that its Charter had been duly surrendered. Thus, though the Grand Lodge of Louisiana had to contend with an invasion of its Jurisdiction, it was nevertheless maintaining itself in a dignified manner and was enforcing its decree of non-intercourse with Masonic Bodies holding Charters from foreign Jurisdiction.

In 1819 the Grand Lodge of Louisiana granted Charters for the following new Lodges: Columbian Lodge, No. 15, at Alexandria; Eureka Lodge, No. 16, at Blakesly; and Washington Lodge, No. 17, at Baton Rouge, all in Louisiana.

On September 4, 1819, the Grand Lodge adopted a new Constitution, the principal object of which was claimed to be to facilitate the representation of country Lodges, but which was, in fact, to insure the control of the Grand Lodge by New Orleans Masons. This it did by carrying a provision that each country Lodge should designate a member of a New Orleans Lodge to represent it at the meetings of the Grand Lodge. This system resulted in the gradual creation of a Masonic aristocracy in New Orleans which dominated the affairs of the Grand Lodge until its reorganisation in 1850.

At about that time, French influence began to make itself felt in Louisiana Masonry, due to the great influx of French Masons to Louisiana, after the downfall of Napoleon and the restoration of the Bourbons. Those French Masons affiliated with the several Lodges in New Orleans in such numbers as to bring about the reintroduction of the French Rite. Consequently, most Louisiana Lodges applied for Charters from the Grand Orient of France. These received, the Lodges then Worked under the same name, but with different numbers, in both the French Rite and the York Rite. Thus, Polar Star Lodge, No. 5, Worked in the York Rite under its Charter from the Grand Lodge of Louisiana, and Polar Star Lodge No. 4263 Worked in the French Rite under its Charter from the Grand Orient of France. This Lodge went even further, for it was also authorised to Work in the Scotch Rite under Charter No. 7474. Polar Star Lodge cumulated its Rites, and the Minutes of that Lodge for November 20, 1820 show that members of the York Rite Lodge, Polar Star Lodge, No. 5, had the privilege of affiliating with the French Rite Lodge of Polar Star Lodge, No. 4263 and with the Scottish Rite Lodge of Polar Star Lodge, No. 7474. The attitude of the Grand Lodge toward the cumulation of Rites is evidenced by the fact that it granted a Charter on December 24, 1820, to Triple Bienfaisance Lodge, No. 20, which already held a Charter in the French Rite registered as No. 7319. The first Officers of this Lodge were Louis Duhart, Worshipful Master; Joseph Calixte Cougourdan, Senior Warden; and Antoine Lamy Soalmon, Junior Warden. November 20, 1820, really marks the beginning of the cumulation of Rites in Louisiana. Consequently, dual membership in Lodges was necessarily recognised at that early period of Louisiana Masonic history.

Charity Lodge, No. 2, which had assisted in the formation of the Grand Lodge, became extinct in 1821. Its Records cease after July 8 of that year. It is thought that the dissolution of that Lodge was caused by the influence of the French Rite, since none of its members seem to have belonged to that Rite, while Yves Lemonnier, a Past Master of the Lodge, who was Grand Master in 1820, became the Worshipful Master of a French Rite Lodge in December 1821. The French influence had now become so strong that at a special meeting of the Grand Lodge, held on November 16, 1821, resolutions were adopted recognising as regular the three Rites and authorising Lodges under the Jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge to receive as visitors or candidates for affiliation, members of French Rite or Scotch Rite Lodges, and receive deputations from, and appoint deputations to, the Lodges Working in the French and Scotch Rites.

Another example of this peculiar situation is that of the York Rite Lodge Triple Bienfaisance, No. 20, some of the members of which were granted a Charter from the Grand Orient of France on July 16, 1822, under the name of Loge des Amis Réunis, No. 7787. This Charter was received on February 16, 1823, and Officers were Installed on the following March 15, deputations from the Grand Lodge and from the city Lodges being present by invitation. Permission was granted all members of Triple Bienfaisance Lodge, No. 20, to visit once, at which time they could, if they desired, become members of the new Lodge.

Thus the Grand Lodge acquiesced in the cumulation of Rites, for the Grand Lodge was dominated by the New Orleans Lodges and the New Orleans Lodges were dominated by advocates of the French Rite. It was only natural, then, that the French Rite should be encouraged by Grand Lodge influences. In 1823, there were five Lodges in New Orleans Working in the French Rite, while there were seven Lodges in the country parishes, which, with the exception of La Vérité, No. 12, at Donaldsville, and L'Humble Chaumière, No. 19, at St. Landry, were Working in English and in the York Rite. However, the country Lodges were not fully informed regarding the Work of the city Lodges, because the annual Proceedings received by the country Lodges made no reference to French or Scotch Rite, whereas the annual Proceedings published and circulated in the city of New Orleans gave the French and Scotch Rite rank of the various Grand Lodge Officers.

On November 7, 1824, Lafayette Lodge, No. 25, was granted a Charter by the Grand Lodge, and the Charter was issued on the following November 24. The first Officers were: Auguste Douce, Worshipful Master; Vincent Ramos, Senior Warden; and Jean Colson, Junior Warden.

At about this time an incident took place in Louisiana Masonry which resulted in mutual recognition and representation with the Grand Orient of France. On August 14, 1824, Gilbert Motier, Marquis de Lafayette, landed in New Orleans as the guest of the United States. Later, when General Lafayette, in the course of his progress through the States, arrived in New Orleans, the Grand Lodge held a Special Communication on April 14, 1825. Lafayette was admitted to the Grand Lodge with much ceremony, the address of welcome having been delivered by Grand Master John H. Holland. That concluded, General Lafayette, together with a large number of invited guests, adjourned to the banquet hall where a sumptuous repast had been provided.

This visitation of General Lafayette was an important episode in the history of Louisiana Masonry. There was at the time no Lodge in the City of New Orleans Working in English, for Harmony Lodge, No. 122, which had remained under the Jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, had now become extinct. This state of affairs left English-speaking Americans practically without opportunity for Masonic affiliation. To supply this need, Alexander Phillips and several other Brethren, who had been members of Harmony Lodge, No. 122, met together on January 1, 1826, and resolved to apply to the Grand Lodge of Louisiana for a Charter. This was granted to them under the name of Harmony Lodge, No. 26. The new Lodge was then Constituted and the following Officers were Installed by Grand Master John H. Holland on March 4, 1826: Alexander Phillips, Worshipful Master; Eben Fiske, Senior Warden; and Cotton Henry, Junior Warden. The Charter of this Lodge was not issued, however, until July 25, 1826.

The Grand Lodge also granted a Charter to Numantina Lodge, No. 27, on September 25, 1826, with the following as its first Officers: Joseph Baratino, Worshipful Master; Bartholomew Lopez, Senior Warden; Nicholas Bertoli, Junior Warden.

From this time forward, active antagonism seems to have existed between English-speaking Masons and the adherents of the French Rite. The membership of Harmony Lodge, No. 26, was greatly augmented, and as the demand for membership in a Lodge Working in English greatly increased, some of the members of Harmony Lodge, No. 26, applied to the Grand Lodge for another Charter. This was granted on June 28, 1828. The new Lodge was called Louisiana Lodge, No. 32, and had the following Officers: Alexander E. McConnell, Worshipful Master; Eben Fiske, Senior Warden; and John W. Bigney, Junior Warden.

Thus there were then two Lodges in New Orleans Working in English, the members of which were prejudiced against the French Rite. This resulted in an open breach, when on Saint John's Day, June 24, 1828, Harmony Lodge, No. 26, refused to receive a deputation from Triple Bienfaisance Lodge, No. 7319. An effort was made to have the Grand Lodge discipline Harmony Lodge, No. 26, for its action, but to no avail. Then, on December 27, 1829, Harmony Lodge, No. 26, again refused to admit deputations from sister Lodges of the French Rite at the Feast of Saint John the Evangelist. This breach caused some of the Grand Lodge members to seek to force Harmony Lodge, No. 26, to receive visitations from Brethren of the French Rite. The odds were manifestly against Harmony Lodge, and it would certainly have been forced to recognise the French Rite had the Grand Consistory not thrown its influence on the side of Harmony Lodge. This new element wielded the balance of power, and while the Grand Consistory up to this time had not pretended to any Jurisdiction over the three first Degrees, in April, 1831, there were two Scotch Rite Lodges, Les Trinosophes, No. 1, and La Libérale, No. 2. Attached to each of those was a Rose Croix Chapter, Constituted by the Grand Consistory. The source from which the Scotch Rite Lodges received their Charters is not known, but the injection of the Scotch Rite into a field already occupied by two other Rites resulted in the adoption of new Regulations which became effective December 1, 1832. The principal object sought was the establishment of a Grand Lodge government by three Chambers, that is, by (1) the Symbolic Chamber of the Ancient and Accepted York Rite; (2) the Symbolic Chamber of the Ancient Scotch Rite; and (3) the Symbolic Chamber of the French Rite.

The whole purpose of the establishment of the Grand Lodge Government by Chambers was to subvert the system of Masonic government which had existed from the formation of the Grand Lodge. However, there was no clause in these General Regulations which repealed former legislation; therefore the Constitution of 1819, with the Regulations adopted under it, remained in full force. Consequently, controversy and strife continued until 1844, when new General Regulations were adopted.

One phase of this controversy was the episode in Louisiana Masonic history commonly referred to as the "Concordat of 1833." Soon after its organisation, the Symbolic Chamber of the Scotch Rite attempted to have the Consistory recognised as possessing co-ordinate Jurisdiction with the Grand Lodge over the Symbolic Degrees. This was made possible by the strong influence of the Scotch Rite in the Grand Lodge. The so-called "concordat" consists of two letters, one sent to the Grand Consistory by the Grand Lodge through its Grand Secretary, Dissard, which recites that the Grand Lodge has Constituted in its bosom a special Chamber of the Symbolic Degrees of the Scotch Rite, and consequently that it begs the Grand Consistory to divest itself of its right to Constitute Scotch Lodges and to transfer this right to the newly Constituted Chamber, and so on. The other letter is that sent by the Grand Consistory to the Grand Lodge through its Secretary pro tempore, A. W. Pichot, signifying its willingness to have the Scotch Rite Lodges reconstituted by the Scotch Rite Chamber of the Grand Lodge. It was thought by some to be a conspiracy of the Scotch Rite Chamber and the Grand Consistory, which were composed of the same persons, to undermine the sovereignty of the Grand Lodge, a conspiracy in which the Grand Lodge Officers seem to have taken a prominent part.

Things drifted along in this manner until January 28, 1843, when the Grand Lodge appointed a Committee to revise the General Regulations. This Committee reported in April 1844, and the new Code was adopted on April 12 and 18, 1844. These General Regulations seem to have abolished the Symbolic Chambers created by the Code of 1832. However, there was still recognition and authorisation for the conducting of Masonic Work in the York, Scotch and French Rites. These Regulations also permitted the cumulation of Rites, but abolished dual membership. The General Regulations thus adopted were in the nature of a compromise, and were intended to quiet the dissatisfaction of adherents of the Ancient York Rite. This end was not attained, however, for dissatisfaction continued to grow to such an extent that the discontented members of the Craft appealed to the Grand Lodge of Mississippi. The result was that the Grand Lodge of Mississippi determined to invade the Jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of Louisiana, as was expressed in the resolutions adopted at its meeting held at Natchez on February 15, 1847. The resolution was as follows:

Whereas, In the opinion of this Grand Lodge, each distinctive Rite produces different powers which govern it, and is independent of all others; and whereas, no Grand Lodge of Scotch, French, or cumulative Rites, can legally assume Jurisdiction over any Ancient York Lodge:

Therefore, Resolved, That the Grand Lodge of Louisiana, being composed of cumulation of Rites, cannot be recognised by this Grand Lodge, as a Grand Lodge of Ancient York Masons.

Resolved, That this Grand Lodge will grant Dispensations and Charters to any legal number of Ancient York Masons, residing within the State of Louisiana, they making due application for the same.

Pursuant to this resolution, the Grand Lodge of Mississippi granted seven Dispensations for new Lodges in New Orleans and its suburbs. The Grand Lodge of Louisiana met this action by declarations of non-intercourse with the Grand Lodge of Mississippi and all Masons owing it allegiance. Thomas H. Lewis, Past Master of Humble Cottage Lodge, No. 19, and Fisher Rawson, Past Master of Poinsett Lodge, No. 39, and the Officers and members of George Washington Lodge, were then cited to show cause why they should not be expelled for tendering their resignations and accepting Charters from the Grand Lodge of Mississippi. Although this controversy between the Masons of Mississippi and the Masons of Louisiana attracted national attention, most Grand Jurisdictions refrained from entering into the quarrel. The Grand Lodge of New York, however, on September 7, 1847, adopted resolutions recognising the Grand Lodge of Louisiana as the sole, supreme, and legitimate authority for the government of the Symbolic Degrees in the State of Louisiana, and requesting the Grand Lodge of Mississippi to rescind and revoke the Dispensations granted by it to the Louisiana Jurisdiction. Nevertheless, in spite of protest, the Grand Lodge of Mississippi, on February 21, 1848, granted Charters to those six Lodges within the granted Dispensations.

Immediately after those Charters were received and the Lodges had been Constituted, a Convention was held on March 8, 1848, and the Louisiana Grand Lodge of Ancient York Masons was organised. Its Officers were elected and Installed, a Constitution was adopted, and new Charters were issued to the Lodges of which it was composed. This rival Grand Lodge continued in existence for two years, during which time it granted Charters to eighteen additional Lodges. It failed, however, to obtain recognition from any Grand Lodge except that of Mississippi.

To meet the situation thus created, and to supply a need created by the surrender of its Charter by Poinsett Lodge, No. 39, whose extinction left no regular Lodge under the Jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge Working in English in New Orleans, Past Grand Master J. H. Holland, together with seven other Brethren, met on July 24, 1847, formed themselves into a Lodge, elected Officers, and Petitioned the Grand Lodge for a Dispensation. This was granted, and the new Lodge was named Friends of Harmony Lodge, No. 58.

During the period that has just been described, the country Lodges remained faithful to the first Louisiana Grand Lodge. Besides a great many foreign Jurisdictions, including those of Alabama, Connecticut, the District of Columbia, Georgia, New Hampshire, and South Carolina, joined New York in condemning the action of the Grand Lodge of Mississippi. On the other hand, Missouri and Florida declared for non-intercourse with Louisiana, and the Grand Lodge of Maryland was unwilling to say that the Mississippi Grand Lodge had done any wrong.

Meantime, the rival Grand Lodge, known as Louisiana Grand Lodge of Ancient York Masons, became firmly established. In January 1848, however, some prominent Masons who belonged to both the contending Grand Lodges came to realise the evil result of existing dissensions and sought to effect a reconciliation and union of the two Grand Lodges. Those active in restoring peace to the conflicting elements of Louisiana Masonry were Grand Master John Gedge, of the Louisiana Grand Lodge of Ancient York Masons, Bro. Perkins, Bro. Clapp, Bro. Howard, Bro. Claiborne, and Bro. Pierce, who represented the Ancient York Masons, and Grand Master L. Hermann, who was supported by Bro. F. Calonge, Deputy Grand Master; Felix Garcia, Past Grand Master, together with Bro. Foulhouze, Bro. Patten, and Bro. Adams of the Grand Lodge of Louisiana. After a number of Conferences, the following ultimatum was submitted as the basis of a mutual agreement:

1st. Remission of the sentences of expulsion and non-intercourse rendered by the Grand Lodge of the State of Louisiana against the members or subordinates of the Louisiana Grand Lodge of Ancient York Masons.

2d. Amendment of the Constitution so that the Grand Lodge be composed of, and grant Charters to, only one denomination of Masons, namely, Ancient, Free and Accepted Masons.

The movement was inaugurated by the Grand Lodge of Louisiana on January 29, 1849, and was responded to by the Louisiana Grand Lodge of Ancient York Masons on the following February 22.

A potent factor in bringing about this reconciliation was the Report submitted by James Foulhouze on January 29, 1849, upon the subject of the "Cumulation of Rites." Another factor was the Report submitted by Grand Secretary François Verrier, wherein he set out opinions regarding the existing schism that had been expressed by the Grand Lodges of the United States and Europe. Thus, by the end of 1849, the leading exponents of the two rival Grand Lodges were prepared for reconciliation. In order to pave the way to this, the Grand Lodge, on December 20, 1849, suspended for sixty days all edicts of non-intercourse. On January 28, 1850, a Committee appointed for the purpose recommended that when the union should be effected, then the two Bodies " shall form one Supreme Masonic Body for the exclusive government of all the Masons of the first three Degrees of Masonry, in the State of Louisiana, forever, under its incorporated name and style of the Grand Lodge of the State of Louisiana of Ancient, Free and Accepted Masons, and all Charters and Dispensations which shall or may emanate from the said United Body, shall bear the same style and name." The articles contained in this Report were adopted by the Louisiana Grand Lodge of Ancient York Masons, subject to the ratification of the Grand Lodge of Louisiana, upon their being adopted by the Louisiana Grand Lodge. A Committee was then appointed to convey the articles to that Body, which was at that time in Session. On January 29, 1850, the resolution expelling Willis P. Coleman, John Gedge, and other members of Washington Lodge, was " rescinded and annulled " and a resolution was adopted incorporating the following principle into the basic law of the Grand Lodge: " Nor shall any Lodge be created or Constituted by the said United Body, under any other title than that of Ancient, Free and Accepted Masons."

The adoption of these resolutions paved the way for reconciliation. On February 20, 1850, the Louisiana Grand Lodge of Ancient York Masons accepted the proposed Articles of Union and adopted resolutions to carry them into effect. On March 4, 1850, the Grand Lodge ratified the union and declared it to date from that day. Then, on March 29, 1850, a Committee was appointed to draft a new Constitution. This was submitted to the Grand Lodge on April 19, 1850, and was ordered to be printed. On the following April 24, the Grand Lodge called a Convention of all the Constituent Lodges, to be held at Baton Rouge on the first Monday in June, 1850. At that Convention every Lodge in the State was represented, and a new Constitution was unanimously adopted.

The Grand Lodge resisted attempts made by the Supreme Council to assume Jurisdiction over Symbolic Lodges of Scotch Rite Masons, but in the controversy which followed, it was discovered that the New Orleans Supreme Council was itself an irregular Body. It was accordingly dissolved, and the Supreme Council at Charlestown was recognised as Supreme by the Concordat of February 6 and 17, 1855. Other attempts were made to incite Lodges to withdraw from the Jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge, but all failed. Peace and harmony has prevailed in the Grand Jurisdiction of Louisiana from that day forth.

The esoteric Work of Louisiana has been influenced somewhat by the Lodge's origin and history, for Louisiana Masonry sprung into existence out of the union of several diverse elements, as has been explained. Although the Lodge's first Charter was granted by the Grand Lodge of South Carolina, which was Working in the York Rite, its second Charter was granted by the Grand Orient of France, which Worked in the French, or Modern, Rite. Most of Louisiana's early Lodges held Charters under the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, which Worked in the York Rite, but the Work of those Lodges was conducted in French and was largely influenced by a membership whose knowledge of Masonry was chiefly derived from the French Rite. At the time of the organization of the Grand Lodge of Louisiana, there was also one Lodge in Louisiana Working in the Scotch Rite under a Charter from the Grand Consistory of Jamaica. The influence of those several elemental factors may be traced throughout the history of Masonry in Louisiana. The diverging views held by the adherents of the several Rites operating in Louisiana during the early period of the region's history caused strife, dissension, and recrimination. It might well have caused destruction. As a matter of fact, however, as we now view those contending elements in retrospect, we must be convinced that the divergent views entertained, the controversies engendered, and the sharp debates engaged in by the enthusiastic proponents of the several Rites, sharpened the wits, developed the minds, and stimulated the development of philosophic thought among the members of the Craft in Louisiana. Even the schism that was healed in 1850, and the animosity engendered by the unwarranted invasion of the Louisiana Jurisdiction by her sister Jurisdiction of Mississippi, seem in the end to have drawn the conflicting elements closer together in fraternal regard and friendship. It is remarkable that no two Jurisdictions in the United States are closer together in sentiment, in friendship, and in the exchange of expressions of Brotherly love and tender regard, than are those of Louisiana and Mississippi. Past animosities are forgotten, and the two Jurisdictions vie with each other to see which "can best work and best agree."

It is not surprising, however, that even after the adoption of the Constitution of 1850, whose principal article declared that henceforth there should be none other than Ancient, Free and Accepted Masons under the Jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of Louisiana, some of the Lodges adhered to the forms of the Scotch Rite and some to the forms of the French, or Modern, Rite. But all the Lodges, irrespective of the Rite in which they Worked, called themselves and their initiates, Ancient, Free and Accepted Masons, and the York Rite was recognised as the only official Rite.

It is also remarkable that even to-day there are in New Orleans, Lodges that regularly Work in accordance with the forms of the Scotch Rite, and others that regularly Work in accordance with the ancient forms of the French Rite. But friction occasioned by the survival of this ancient practice no longer exists. An evening spent in a New Orleans Lodge Working in either the French Rite or the Scotch Rite is a source of much pleasure and intellectual diversion to visitors from this and other Jurisdictions.

Probably the most important factor in making the Louisiana esoteric Work uniform, was the activity of R. : W. : Dr. John C. Gordy, who was a member of the Committee on Work during the 1870's. The Ritual prepared by him, and approved by the Committee on Work, has practically become the Work of this Grand Jurisdiction; it is known as the "Gordy Work." Doctor Gordy visited thirty-three Lodges in one year. Until 1885, he was retained by the Grand Lodge to teach the Work to Lodges throughout the State. The Masons of Louisiana will always cherish and revere the memory of him who is largely responsible for their beautiful system of esoteric Work.

From the period of its early history, the Masonry of Louisiana has been characterised by its readiness to help in times of sickness and distress. The yellow fever epidemics that formerly visited New Orleans from year to year afforded the Masons of that city an opportunity to exemplify the fundamental principle of the Craft. Masonry thrives on adversity. Thus we find Masons holding their Lodge meetings outside the walls of the City of New Orleans during the period of Spanish domination when the governing authorities were unfriendly to the Fraternity.

In 1820, Harmony Lodge, No. 122, proposed to the city Lodges that they erect a Masonic hospital for the care of Masons from other Jurisdictions. This proposal was cordially accepted by the Grand Lodge, and a Committee was appointed to solicit subscriptions for the purpose. The hospital was not built, so the money that had been collected for that purpose was turned over to an existing charitable institution.

As early as 1854 the distribution of Masonic relief was systematised by the organisation of a unique Masonic institution known as the Louisiana Relief Lodge. This is the only institution of the name and character in the world. It is, in fact, a Relief Committee organised on the plan of a regular Chartered Lodge, and is composed of the Masters and Wardens of all the New Orleans Lodges. It does no Degree Work, nor, in fact, does it do any esoteric Work. Like other Lodges, however, it elects its Master and Wardens, its Secretary, and Treasurer, and other Officers annually, and principally through its Master and Secretary or its Relief Committee it assumes control over relief for Brethren visiting New Orleans from the country Lodges or from other Jurisdictions. All such relief is referred to the Master and Secretary, or to the Relief Committee of the Louisiana Relief Lodge. The Grand Lodge and other Grand Bodies of this Jurisdiction supply this Lodge with funds by appropriating money for the purpose. An annual report of its activity is made to the Grand Lodge, and a monthly report is made to the Board of Grand Lodge Hall Directors. Thus there has never been a lack of funds for the relief of distressed Brethren from foreign Jurisdictions while they were sojourning in Louisiana. As must be apparent, the function of the Louisiana Relief Lodge is similar to that of a Board of Relief in other Jurisdictions.

To a remarkable degree, Louisiana Masons have exemplified the teachings of Masonry by building, or planning to build, a Temple. Soon after the war between the States, the Louisiana Grand Lodge purchased what was then known as the Masonic Temple property. It lay between Carondelet and St. Charles streets, near what was once called Tivoli Circle, but is now known as Lee Circle. After several abortive efforts to erect a Temple on that site, the property was eventually sold in 1890 for the sum of $50,000. The Grand Lodge then determined to build a Temple on its property located at the corner of St. Charles and Perdido streets. The corner-stone of this Temple was laid on March 25, 1891, and the building dedicated on June 24, 1892. For many years the edifice was a landmark of New Orleans. At the time of its erection it was the most beautiful building on St. Charles Street, and one of the handsomest in the city.

In 1925 a movement for a new building was inaugurated by Grand Master Joseph Sinai. The corner-stone of this new Temple, erected on the site of the old one, was laid on January 31, 1926, by Grand Master Haney B. Conner. The new building was dedicated in 1927 during the incumbency of Grand Master J. Paul Haller, but it was not finally completed until the time of Grand Master Edwin F. Gayle. This building, erected at a cost of two and a half million dollars, is eighteen stories high, and besides having a beautiful auditorium in which to hold Grand Lodge meetings, it provides Lodge Rooms for some forty or more New Orleans Lodges, a Chapter Room for the Eastern Star Chapters of New Orleans, and a Royal Arch Chapter Room for the meeting of the city's Chapters and Councils. It also provides an asylum for the New Orleans Commanderies. Besides all this, the building affords commercial rental space sufficient to bring in an annual revenue of $150,000. The revenue from rentals to the various Masonic Bodies aggregates approximately $50,000 a year. This magnificent structure, unequalled in New Orleans for beauty of architecture, is a monument to Masonic endeavour. When this Temple is finally paid for, income from it will then afford a rich source for establishing Masonic charities and foundations.

But Masonic endeavour in Louisiana has not been expressed in the erection of Temples only. For a number of years a fund was accumulated for the erection of a Home for the children of deceased Masons. Established in 1906, the fund was increased by setting aside $10,000 a year, until it reached the aggregate amount of $150,000. Finally, in 1922, during the administration of Grand Master Hollis Bain, a resolution was unanimously adopted providing for funds for the building of the Home as well as for its maintenance.

Past Grand Master L. E. Thomas, Shreveport, was made Chairman of the Board of Trustees, and the first unit of the Masonic Home was erected under his watchful supervision. The Home stands near Alexandria, amidst spacious grounds shaded by beautiful and wide-spreading oaks. The corner-stone was laid on June 24, 1924, during the administration of Grand Master Prentice B. Carter. The edifice was dedicated on June 24, 1925, during the administration of Grand Master Haney B. Conner.

In 1925 the Order of the Eastern Star donated funds for the erection of an infirmary. This institution, which cost approximately $35,000, forms the second unit of buildings constructed at the Masonic Home for Children. The infirmary was dedicated on December 17, 1926. Affording accommodation to a hundred children, the Home has been operating practically to the limit of its capacity ever since its completion. The superintendent is R. A. Longman. Children of the Home who attend the public schools of Alexandria are a credit and an honour to the Craft. Various Lodges and other Masonic organisations are establishing funds for founding scholarships available to inmates of the Home who have successfully completed the course of study in the Alexandria High School. This makes it possible for children of the Home to obtain a college or professional education after leaving the Institution. Caddo Lodge, No. 179, of Shreveport, Louisiana, was one of the first Lodges to undertake the higher education of students of the Home. This Lodge set aside $400 a year for the purpose of caring for the higher education of one student. Its example is being followed by other Lodges and individuals, so that eventually no child of a deceased Mason may lack a higher education.

Relief to sufferers from Mississippi floods, afforded under the auspices of the Grand Lodges of Louisiana, Mississippi, and Arkansas, assisted by the Masonic Service Association of the United States, stands out as one of the most remarkable examples of Masonic service in the history of this State. In 1927, during the administration of Grand Master Edwin F. Gayle, the States of Louisiana, Mississippi, and Arkansas were visited by a devastating flood caused by an overflow of the Mississippi River. The delta lands of the lower Mississippi River have been overflowed many times, but no flood in the history of that mighty stream has ever equalled that which took place in 1927. On April 26, 1927, a Conference composed of Edwin F. Gayle, Grand Master of Louisiana, Andrew L. Randell, Executive Secretary of the Masonic Service Association, Prentice B. Carter, Past Grand Master and Commissioner for Louisiana on the Board of the Masonic Service Association, John A. Davilla, Grand Secretary of Louisiana, George D. Riley, Thomas Q. Ellis, and Marsh Hainer, Past Grand Masters of Mississippi, was held in the office of the Grand Secretary of Louisiana at New Orleans. This Conference resulted in the designation of a Board of Control for Masonic Flood Relief and Rehabilitation, composed as follows: James H. Johnson, Grand Master of Mississippi, Chairman; Edwin F. Gayle, Grand Master of Louisiana, Vice-Chairman; H. D. Bowers, Deputy Grand Master of Arkansas; Prentice B. Carter, Past Grand Master of Louisiana and Executive Commissioner of the Masonic Service Association; Andrew L. Randell, Past Grand Master of Texas and Executive Secretary of the Masonic Service Association, Secretary; and John A. Davilla, Grand Secretary of Louisiana, Treasurer. Ernest E. Sykes, Grand Master of Louisiana in 1931, who was appointed Assistant Secretary, assumed charge of the executive offices of the Relief Board. A fund of $605,603 was collected and distributed at an expense of only 1.18 per cent. Relief was extended to 651 Brethren in Arkansas, 435 in Mississippi, and 1030 in Louisiana. A total of 2116 families in the flooded area of the three States received relief. The average amount of relief afforded to each of those families had a money value of $285.

For many years during the early history of Louisiana, membership in the Masonic Fraternity was confined to a small number. Among the names of the Lodge's founders in this State is that of Moreau Lislet, who was instrumental in organising and constituting the original Lodges, and was a member and Past Master of Polar Star Lodge, No. 129. At the organisation of the Grand Lodge of Louisiana on June 20, 1812, Bro. Lislet was named Deputy Grand Master. Then in 1818 he was elected Grand Master. He collaborated with Robert Livingston, also a Mason, in compiling the Civil Code of Louisiana. In Louisiana, then, the leaders in Masonry have not been second to any in the organisation and development of the State and nation.

One of the most interesting and picturesque incidents in Masonic history was the Marquis de Lafayette's visit to Louisiana and to Louisiana Masons in 1825. The following extracts from Le Courrier de la Louisiana, one of the newspapers published in New Orleans at that time, may be of interest: "The Masonic Society had no sooner ascertained that the General had accepted the invitation made in the name of the city of New Orleans and of the State of Louisiana, than it resolved that a Masonic festival should be prepared to greet his arrival." The following Committee was appointed to direct the ceremonies of the banquet: Grand Master John H. Holland; Grand Senior Warden A. Longer; Grand Junior Warden Charles Maurin; Past Grand Master Y. Lemonnier; Past Grand Master D. F. Burthe; Past Grand Master J. B. M. Lefébre; Past Grand Master J. F. Canonge; Past Grand Treasurer G. W. Morgan; Grand Treasurer C. Miltenberger; and Bro. Denis, Bro. Verrier, and Bro. Miotin. An elegant invitation was extended by Past Grand Master J. F. Canonge, to which General Lafayette responded. From Le Courrier de la Louisiana we learn: "His answer breathed a spirit of Masonic affection, and he fixed the following Thursday, April 14, 1825, as the day on which he could attend."

Accompanying General Lafayette on this visit was his son, George Washington Lafayette. Among the remarks made by General Lafayette in response to the address of welcome, we quote the following: "Among the multiplied testimony of esteem and affection which I have received since my arrival in the United States, few have produced on my mind emotions as pleasing as those which I now experience. When I fought in the cause of independence, Louisiana was a Province of one of the European monarchies. The idea that it would, at a future period, become united to the American confederation, however pleasing to my imagination, did not appear likely to be realised. But it has pleased Heaven to prolong my life long enough to behold a country inhabited by a population composed, in great measure, of the descendants of my compatriots, enjoying the blessing of a free government and showing themselves worthy of the felicity they enjoy. Already has Freedom spread its happy influence over every institution, and we now behold, as one of her effects, the Masonic confederation, by which all our rights and privileges are maintained and preserved."

As in the case of Moreau Lislet and Robert Livingston, in the early history of Louisiana Masonry, so on down through the more than one hundred years of Masonry in this Commonwealth, names that have figured largely in the history of our State and nation have also figured in the Annals of Freemasonry here. When we come down to the present day, for example, we number among the outstanding Masons who are prominent or have been prominent in civil and political life, such men as George W. Bolton, who was Grand Master in 1893.

His life is typical of the lives of many others who have lived as upright men and Masons. He was Speaker of the Louisiana House of Representatives and a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1879 and of 1898. At his death, on August 2, 1931, he was chairman of the board of directors of the Rapids Bank and Trust Company, and had served as president of the Louisiana Bankers Association. While serving in the Confederate Army, he was wounded at the battle of Nashville. He was a lifelong member of the Baptist Church.

Another well-known Louisiana Mason is Past Grand Master Wynn G. Rogers, who has devoted his life largely to fraternal and civic duties. He is at present an associate justice of the State Supreme Court. Other members of the Fraternity who occupy places as judges of the Supreme Court of Louisiana are Justices Winston Overton, Harney F. Brunot, David N. Thompson, and Fred M. Odom. Percy Saint, attorney-general of Louisiana (1932), is also a member of the Craft and Past Master of his Lodge.

While it is not possible to give a complete list of those governors of the State of Louisiana who were also members of the Fraternity, we can say with certainty that the following were members: Bro. Newton C. Blanchard, Bro. Murphy J. Foster, Bro. Jared Y. Sanders, Bro. Henry L. Fuqua, Bro. Oramel H. Simpson, Bro. John M. Parker, and Bro. Luther E. Hall. These public servants have left their mark as statesmen and economists. Their administration of the affairs of the State of Louisiana has been uniformly efficient, honest, and progressive. Former Governor Bro. Murphy J. Foster and former Governor Bro. Newton C. Blanchard also served as United States senators, while the latter was a justice of the Supreme Court of the State besides. Former Governor Jared Y. Sanders, who is still living, was the pioneer roadbuilder of Louisiana. Former Governor John M. Parker, who is also still living, inaugurated the newer State institution which has developed the old Louisiana State University and Mechanical College into a seat of learning whose buildings and other equipment rank well alongside any other in the United States.

Past Grand Master Robert R. Reed, who was born March 12, 1865, was Grand Master in 1901 and 1902. He was elected and installed on the Supreme Bench of Louisiana on January 2, 1923, just before his death, which occurred only twelve days later. Judge Reed left his stamp upon the Masonry of Louisiana, which he so faithfully served for many years. To him is due the credit of introducing the 1906 resolution which created and set aside a fund for the relief of the orphans of Masons of the Louisiana Jurisdiction. The accumulation of this fund finally culminated in the building of the magnificent Orphans' Home, which has already been described.

Former Governor Murphy J. Foster, who was at one time also a United States senator, received his Degrees in Franklin Lodge, No. 57, during 1908. Until his death on November 1, 1922, he was a living exemplification of Masonic ideals. Governor Foster will go down in the history of Louisiana as the political leader who was able to destroy the notorious Lottery Company. Under his leadership the right-thinking citizens of Louisiana fought the great battle of enlightened and honest government against that giant octopus, one of the largest gambling schemes that has ever existed in the United States. It had stretched its tentacles into every part of the State society, and dominated the social and political life of Louisiana by its corrupt practices. Thus we find Louisiana Masons ever fighting on the side of right, and participating in every social and political move that makes for the establishment of human rights and liberties. Always Louisiana Freemasonry has been intent upon the destruction of the blighting influence of ignorance, bigotry, and political and social corruption.

Another figure in Louisiana political and fraternal life was Past Grand Master Charles F. Buck, who at one time served the State as congressman. Among the other Masons who represented Louisiana in the United States Congress were Bro. J. Zack Spearing, Bro. Hall Maloney, Bro. Riley J. Wilson, Bro. J. N. Sandlin, Bro. John H. Overton, Bro. Breazzeale, Bro. Robert F. Broussard, and Bro. James B. Aswell. The latter also for many years was State Superintendent of Public Education, and Bro. Broussard was at one time a United States senator from this State.

Although space is too limited to permit of extended biographical sketches of all Louisiana Masons who have participated in the growth and development of our great State, it is enough to say that wherever duty has called, Masons have responded. For example, Past Grand Master Lee E. Thomas gave the city of Shreveport one of the most progressive, cleanest, and most honest administrations in its history, while he served that municipality as mayor for two terms. Bro. Thomas devoted the greater part of his life to the service of the Masonic Fraternity. The building of the Masonic Home for Children, at Alexandria, was largely due to his untiring efforts. He served as Chairman of the Board of Trustees from the opening of the Home.

Among other Masons who have made outstanding contributions to the Fraternity and to society in general are Colonel Frank P. Stubbs, of Monroe, who led a Louisiana regiment in the recent Great War; Bro. H. White, of Alexandria, who served the State as president of the State Board of Education; Past Grand Master Haney B. Conner, State treasurer and several times a member of the State Legislature; Bro. L. B. Baynard, State auditor; and Past Grand Master Prentice B. Carter, of Franklinton, who has rendered many years of efficient service as district judge of the district in which he resides.

A history of Masonry in Louisiana would not be complete without mention of the name of Past Grand Master Joseph Sinai. The most notable accomplishment of Bro. Sinai was the part he played in the erection of the New Masonic Temple building in New Orleans. Unfortunately, Sinai did not live to see the full accomplishment of his plans. At the time of his death, on February 21, 1925, he had just been elected a member of the Commission Council of the city of New Orleans. Bro. Sinai devoted much of his time and thought to the cause of public education, and was an earnest advocate of a National Department of Education.

One of the picturesque figures of Louisiana Masonry history is Past Grand Master John S. Thibaut, great-grandson of P. François Dubourg, first Grand Master of Masons in Louisiana. Dr. Thibaut was elected Grand Master of the Masons of Louisiana in 1910. He was chosen for that high Office again in 1911 so that he might officiate as Grand Master at the centennial celebration of the Grand Lodge of Louisiana, which was held in February 1912.

The history of the Grand Lodge of Louisiana is so intimately a part of my family history that the uppermost feeling in my heart at this moment is one of deep gratefulness to my Brethren of Louisiana for having gratified and crowned my highest ambition in elevating me to the distinguished Office held by my great-grandfather one hundred years ago to-day. With a family record of nearly three hundred years in America, in these United States for one hundred twenty years, I cannot claim a single drop of Anglo-Saxon blood. To my right is your Deputy Grand Master (E. H. Addington) whose sharp aquiline features are characteristic of his Yankee lineage. The Grand Senior Warden (Emil Sundberry) is a lineal descendant of Eric the Red, Viking discoverer of America. Our Grand Junior Warden (Brittain B. Purser) is Scotch-Irish. Our Grand Secretary (Richard Lambert), a pure unadulterated son of Erin. Our Grand Treasurer (A. G. Ricks) is German. The diversity of race and nationality continues down the line from the Grand Chaplain (Herman C. Duncan), who is Scotch, to the Grand Tyler (John A. Davilla) who claims Portugal as the native land of his fathers. It is this very cosmopolitanism of the Grand Lodge which blasts the way for its future usefulness, which indicates too its mission.

In 1931, E. E. Sykes was Grand Master. His administration was a marked success. Being a business man, the Craft was indeed fortunate in having him at the helm during a financial crisis superinduced by the world-wide depression. His wise administration carried the organisation safely over many obstacles. During his incumbency he visited more Constituent Lodges than any previous Grand Master, and was instrumental in breaking down the barrier between Ordinary Masons and a Grand Lodge Official. This was a real Masonic service that has since borne fruit.

In 1933, the Grand Lodge had its first real young man as Grand Master in the person of William David Haas, Jr. He was only thirty-four years of age when elevated to the high office of Grand Master. A natural born leader who knows no defeat, he was a most valuable asset to the organisation. His administration was the turning-point following the depth of the depression. An outstanding accomplishment of Mr. Haas was the rebuilding of the gas line at State expense for the Home for Children, at Alexandria. This act alone saved the Grand Lodge no less than $6000. His administration is looked upon by Louisiana Masons as one of the best, if not the best, in the history of the Grand Lodge in this State. Due to his fighting qualities, and his determination to win, once he gets behind a proposition, Mr. Haas has been dubbed "Dynamite Dave" by those who know him best. At the time Grand Master Haas held the Chair, he was the youngest Mason holding the position in the world at that time, and one of the youngest Masons ever to hold the high honour.

In 1934 Milton W. Boylan, of New Orleans, was elected Grand Master. His administration was a successful one from many angles, and was the culmination of many things started under the administrations of Sykes and Haas.

FREEMASONRY IN MAINE

CHARLES B. DAVIS

NO authentic record shows when Masonic Light first beamed within the confines of the present State of Maine, but certainly it was some time before 1762. Scattered private diary entries tell of members of the Craft who later became interested Workers, who sat in Lodge meetings in Boston, in Portsmouth, and in other towns of New Hampshire and Massachusetts, but none of these may properly be considered as Masonic Records.

On March 20, 1762, St. John's Provincial Grand Lodge, of Boston, voted to grant a Charter, or "Constitution," as such documents were then called, to Alexander Ross. As Worshipful Master, it empowered him "to congregate with himself eight other Brethren whose names are given in the document and to form those into a regular Lodge of Masons at Falmouth (now Portland), taking special care in choosing two Wardens and other Officers necessary for the due regulation thereof, for one year." But the authority thus conferred on him was never exercised by Bro. Ross, for "his business being great, and his infirmities greater, prevented him opening a Lodge." Bro. Ross's death occurred on November 24, 1768, and no Record was left to show that he ever attempted to assemble his Brethren for the purpose of organisation.

In December, 1768, William Tyng and eleven others Petitioned St. John's Provincial Grand Lodge for a renewal of the Deputation, and on March 16, 1769, their prayer was granted. A Charter was issued, and on May 8, 1769, the first Lodge was opened in Maine. Eleven Brethren whose names are recorded in the early Records of Portland Lodge were present at the organisation meeting, so the Charter was read and accepted. That early Lodge of old Falmouth is to-day Portland Lodge, No. 1. It has kept an unbroken Record of Proceedings ever since its first meetings. The second Lodge within the Province of Maine was organised on September 10, 1778, at Machias, a small seaport town some 200 miles east of Falmouth. The third Lodge was established at Wiscasset, on June 1, 1792, the fourth at Castine, on June 9, 1794, and the fifth at Hallowell, on March 14, 1796. Thus, at the beginning of the nineteenth century, there were in Maine five established Lodges having a total of fewer than 200 members. Between 1800 and the date of the organisation of the Grand Lodge of Maine in 1820 Masonry within the Province was active. During that time twenty-five new Lodges were established. All those Lodges still hold their original Charters, except that the name of Falmouth Lodge, No. 1, was changed to Portland Lodge, No. 1, that of Belfast Lodge, No. 24, to Phoenix Lodge, No. 24.

John Rowe Esq

To all and every Our Right Worshipful, Worshipful and Loving Brethren, Free and Accepted Masons, now Residing, or that may hereafter Reside in Falmouth in the County of Cumberland, within the Province of Massachusetts Bay in New England We John Rowe Esq. Provincial Grand Master of the Antient and Honorable Society of Free and Accepted Masons for all North America, where no other Grand Master is Appointed

Sendeth Greeting

Whereas, Application hath been made unto us by several Brethren, Free and Accepted Masons now Residing at Falmouth aforesaid, setting forth; that a Deputation was Granted by the late Right Worshippful Jeremy Gudley Esq. Grand Master of North America, to the late Alexander Esq. for Congregating all Free and Accepted Masons in Falmouth said, and Form them into a Regular Lodge, But said Deputation never taking Effect, by reason of the many Inconveniences and Infirmities of the said Esq. Therefore Praying that a new Deputation may be Granted by us, to constitute them into a Regular Lodge, and to appoint William Synges to be their first Master.

Now therefore, Know ye, That we of the great Trust, Power and Authority reposed in us by His Grace, the Right Worshippful, Henry Somerset Duke of Beaufort, &c. Grand Master of Masters, have Nominated and Appointed our Right Worshippful and well beloved Brother William Tong Esq. to be the first Master of the Lodge at Falmouth aforesaid, and do hereby empower him to Congregate the Brethren together and form them into a Regular Lodge, he taking special Care that all and every Member thereof, and all transient Persons admitted therein, have taken and be Regular made Masons; and that he appoint two Wardens, and other Officers to a Lodge apprenticeship for the due Regulation thereof, for one Year, at the end of which said Lodge shall have Power to choose and appoint a new Master, who shall nominate the Wardens and other Officers for the ensuing Year, and so Annually: And we do hereby give to said Lodge all the Privileges and Authority of Stated Lodges; Requiring them to observe all and every of the Regulations, contained in the Printed Book of Constitutions, (except such as have been, or may be, Appealed from Quarterly Communication or other general Meeting of the Grand Lodge in London,) to be kept and observed; as also all such other Rules and Instructions, as shall be from Time to Time transmitted to them by us, or our Deputy, or the Grand Master or his Deputy for the Time being. And that they do Annually send an Account in Writing to us, or our Deputy, or either of our Executors, of the Names of the Members of said Lodge, their Place of Birth, with the Days and Place of Meeting, with any other Things they may think proper to Communicate for the benefit of their Lodge. And that they do send three Guineas for their Constitution, to be paid to the Grand Secretary in London, in Order that they may be enrolled in the List of Lodges in the Grand Lodge in London. And further that they do Annually keep the Book of John the Baptist, or of John the Evangelist, or both, and Live together on said Day, or Days, or as near either of them as shall be most convenient; And Lastly, that they do regularly Communicate with the Grand Lodge in London by sending to the Quarterly Communication such Charity as their Lodge shall think fit for the Relief of poor Brethren, with the Names of these that Contributed the Same, that in case any such may come to want Relief, that they may have the preference to others.

Given under our Hand and Seal of Masonry, at Boston this thirtieth Day of March, Anno Domini, One thousand Seven hundred and Sixty Nine, and of Masonry, Five thousand seven hundred and Sixty Nine.
By the Grand Master's Command.
Wm. Tong Esq. Secy.

On August 13, 1819, a circular letter was sent out by Portland Lodge, No. 1, to the Lodges within the Province inviting one or more Delegates from each Lodge to attend a Convention to be held in the Masons' Hall, at Portland, on October 14, 1819. The aim of the proposed meeting was "to consider the advisability of a separation of the Lodges of the District of Maine from the Jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts, and the foundation of a Grand Lodge for the District." On the day appointed the Convention met at Portland. All Lodges of the District, except Eastern Lodge, of Eastport, were represented. Bro. Simeon Greenleaf, afterwards Grand Master, presided. A Committee of five was chosen to submit a plan to be observed in constituting the Grand Lodge of Maine "in the manner most consistent with our duty to the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts, and best calculated to promote the prosperity of the Craft." The Convention was finally adjourned to meet again on October 19, 1819. On that date the Convention met, the Committee reported a method of procedure, and submitted as a part of its Report a memorial to the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts. Another Committee was then appointed to present the memorial to that Grand Lodge. The Convention met as had been planned. At the time a Report of the Convention's acts was made, as also a Report of the action that had been taken by the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts. Full accounts of those meetings appear in the Proceedings of the Grand Lodge of Maine, Vol. I, pp. 8-11. It was voted that the organisation of the Grand Lodge should take place in Portland on June 1, 1820. Then, after voting that the cost of the meetings which had already been held, a total of some $200, should be apportioned among the Lodges, the Convention dissolved.

The good will and fraternal spirit of the Mother Grand Lodge of Massachusetts is well shown by the Record. Not only did it fully approve the new organisation in Maine, but it also voted to appropriate $10,000 from its charity fund to form the nucleus of a permanent charity fund for the Grand Lodge of Maine. It also voted to permit the District Deputies of the Province to pay into the treasury of the Grand Lodge of Maine all moneys for dues from the Lodges that remained in their hands at the time. It must be borne in mind that while plans for organising the Grand Lodge of Maine were progressing, proceedings aimed at separating the District of Maine from Massachusetts and forming a new State were also under way.

On the day designated for organising the Grand Lodge of Maine, all except five of the Subordinate Lodges were represented at the meeting. The Record of the meeting is brief: An opening prayer was followed by the selection of a Chairman for the meeting. A resolution was then proposed and agreed to "that we now proceed to the organisation of the Grand Lodge of Maine, by the election of such Officers, and in such a manner, as is required by the regulations of our late parent Grand Lodge of Massachusetts."

Hon. William King, who three days before had been inaugurated as first governor of the State of Maine, was unanimously elected first Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Maine. A Committee appointed to notify Bro. King of his election, presently reported that he had accepted the election with deep gratitude for the honour shown him, and that he would be present for the Installation on the following evening, June 2. On that day the Installation ceremony took place as had been arranged. As he entered the Lodge Room, Grand Master King was accompanied by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Maine Legislature, both of whom were Masons.

Special Communications were held on June 9 and again on June 23, 1820, and on June 25 the Grand Lodge of Maine was consecrated with an elaborate programme of events. The Grand Lodge of New Hampshire was present for the Consecration of the Grand Lodge and the Installation of its Officers. "At twelve o'clock a procession was formed of the new Grand Lodge and about 300 of the Fraternity which escorted the Grand Lodge of New Hampshire to Parson Payson's Meeting House, where the exercises were held."

Following the organisation of the Grand Lodge, special meetings were frequently held during the whole of 1820 because of the need to prepare the new organisation for business. A Seal was adopted, which the Committee's Report describes as follows:

The form, a circle, surrounded by the words, "Incorporated by the State June 16th, consecrated June 25th, A.L. 5820." Within this circle the words GRAND LODGE OF MAINE, upholding upon its three pillars the Bible, Square, and Compasses, supported on the right by a Scythe, and on the left by an Anchor, (part of the arms of the State,) having within the compasses, REGIT, ("the Bible rules and directs us,") irradiated by the Polar Star (emblem of Maine,) and having above the whole the All-Seeing Eye. "The following are some of the reasons which have led to this form and device. We are incorporated by the State, and by placing the Polar Star, which is the emblem of Maine, upon our seal, casting its rays upon the Bible, Square, and Compasses, which in this represent the Masonic family, we acknowledge our allegiance to the State. By placing the Scythe and Anchor as our supporters, they being also part of the arms of the State, we acknowledge our obligations for the support afforded us, not only by granting us an incorporation without a dissenting vote, but by other public acts expressive of their regard for the Institution. Above the whole we place the All-Seeing Eye, to remind us that all our actions, of a political as well as of a Masonic nature, are under Divine inspection. Those emblems being surrounded with the indented Tessel, resting upon a tessellated pavement, remind us of that variety of blessings with which we are surrounded by Divine Providence while passing through the chequered scenes of life. And as the whole rests upon pillars having their foundation in the Grand Lodge, the device reminds us that the State and Fraternity should always find a steady support in the patriotic and benevolent principles and labours of the Grand Lodge of Maine."

The Grand Lodge was incorporated on June 16, 1820, under the title "The Master, Wardens, and Members of the Grand Lodge of Maine." On January

10, 1822, Bro. Simeon Greenleaf was elected to be the second Grand Master, at the Annual Communication. At that meeting the Grand Treasurer reported as in hand, $912.93, exclusive of the charity fund. In 1824 Bro. William Swan was chosen as third Grand Master. The principal event of his administration was the visit of "our illustrious Brother, General Lafayette." For that occasion the Grand Lodge appointed a Committee of Nine "whose duty it shall be on the arrival of General Lafayette in Portland to present to him an address expressive of the high sense entertained by this Grand Lodge of his great and disinterested services in the cause of humanity, of his pure and elevated character, and the deep feeling of reverence and fraternal affection which this Grand Lodge collectively and individually cherish for him."

The full text of this address, with Bro. Lafayette's reply, appears in the Proceedings of the Grand Lodge of Maine, Vol. I, pp. 121-123.

From 1820 until 1829, Masonry was very active and prosperous in Maine. Until 1831 the Grand Lodge held Quarterly Communications. During the period thirty-six new Lodges were organised, though Lodge Records show no abstract of returns from which we could determine increase in membership. Such abstracts first appear in the Records of 1849.

In 1828 the Grand Lodge adopted a plan of uniform Work and Lectures to be used by Subordinate Lodges. The State was divided into three Districts, and a Grand Lecturer was appointed for each. The Lecturer's duty was "to visit each Lodge in his District and devote three days to instructing the Officers in Ritual." Lecturers received a wage of a dollar and a half a day, and expenses. If more than three days were required, in any one Lodge, then the Lodge itself had to pay the Lecturer's expenses. By vote of the Grand Lodge it was removed from Portland to Augusta in 1831. There it remained until 1844, when it was returned to Portland, where it has since been located. During the next ten years the outlook for Masonry in Maine became ever more unpromising. An assessment of one-eighth of a dollar per member, levied on the Subordinate Lodges, remained unpaid, until at last a Committee said, in a Report, "If Subordinate Lodges consider Masonry to be worth anything, they will not object to paying their proportion of the charges which are necessary in order to keep the Institution in a healthful state. If they are satisfied that Masonry has become useless, and is not deserving the countenance and encouragement of the Brethren, it is time their Charters should be surrendered and the Grand Lodge be relieved from the discharge of its duties to such of the Subordinate Lodges." Nevertheless, the Grand Lodge continued to hold its Annual Communications, although the greater part of them were poorly attended. At not one of them, however, was a single Subordinate Lodge represented by Officers or proxy. Consequently, in 1836, the Grand Lodge ordered the collection of all debts due it. It also ordered that Charters and other property be taken from Lodges that had become inoperative or were disinclined to continue their labours.

At the Annual Communication held in 1838, the Committee on Foreign Correspondence said: "In some sections of the country, Masonry is evidently fast awakening from the slumbers into which it has fallen by the unjust and iniquitous warfare waged against it. Public sentiment has in a great measure become tranquilised, and the demagogue spirit which for a time agitated and distracted one of the most pacific institutions of human origin, breathing 'peace on earth and good will to men' is receiving the reprobation of the virtuous of all parties and denomination. The Committee can but indulge in the hope that the Lodges under the Jurisdiction of this Grand Lodge will be able, before the next Communication, to report that they are one and all in a perfect State of organisation and availing themselves of the benefit to be derived from frequently meeting together in the Lodge Room as in the days of 'auld lang syne.' "

At this meeting, all dues owed by Lodges up to the third Thursday of January 1838 were remitted. Again in 1842 dues owed by Lodges were "remitted until further notice." At the same meeting a circular letter announcing a Convention to be held at Washington, District of Columbia, in March 1842, to consider uniformity of Work, was read. The Grand Lodge decided to send a Delegate to that meeting.

In October 1843, eighty members of the Fraternity, representing thirty-six Lodges, met in Portland and voted to celebrate the anniversary of the Consecration of the Grand Lodge on June 25, 1844. Just before that day, notice was given to other Masonic Bodies which purposed to join in celebrating the festival, that they should march to the Rev. Dr. Nichols's church to hear an oration to be delivered by R.:W.:John H. Sheppard, of Boston. Under the direction of the Marshal, the Grand Lodge headed the procession. It was followed by the Grand Chapter of Maine, by several Subordinate Chapters, by Portland Lodge, by Ancient Land-Mark Lodge, and by many other Brethren. After marching through the principal streets of the town, the procession at last reached the church and there the following service took place.

Organ Voluntary.

Anthem: "Glory Be to God on High."

Prayer by the Reverend Cyrus Cummings.

Scripture Reading by the Reverend William A. Drew.

Ode: "When Darkness Veiled the Hopes of Man."

Oration By R.:W.:Bro. John H. Sheppard, of Boston.

A full account of this service appears in the Proceedings of the Grand Lodge of Maine (Vol. I, pp. 347-384). In that Report it says, "This was truly a warm-hearted, cold-water celebration, and seemed unusually happy."

In 1845 the date for holding the Annual Communication was changed from January to the "twenty-third of June, except when that day comes on the Sabbath, in which case it shall be held on the twenty-fourth of June at 9 A.M." Another quotation from the Proceedings of that year, a Report of the Committee on Foreign Correspondence, says in part as follows: "The implements of our profession are resumed, and the Craft is set at work. It must be the subject of sincere congratulation to every Brother that this martyr-like test of the Masonic integrity of our Fraternity adds another to the many guarantees that the Great Architect of the Universe has us in His Holy Keeping; that He permits no weapons formed against us to prosper; that He will set us to Work, give us proper instruction in our Labour, and perpetuate our glorious and time-honoured Institution to the end of time." On the 26th of July, of this year, the Grand Lodge met in Brunswick at the request of the president of Bowdoin College. There, under the escort of the Boston and Maine encampments of Knights Templar, it laid the corner-stone of King Chapel.

A list of the Subordinate Lodges on the Register of the Grand Lodge for the year 1846 shows an enrollment of fifty-six active Bodies. The Record of that year also shows that the Annual Communication was again changed, and that it was to be held "in Portland on the first Wednesday of May of each year." The Grand Lodge also adopted a resolution which provided that the expense of one Delegate from each Lodge who should attend the Annual Communication of the Grand Lodge was to be paid by the Grand Lodge, and that each Lodge was to pay a tax of one-eighth of a dollar per member to defray that expense. On July 4, 1846, the Grand Lodge took part in the ceremony of breaking ground for the construction of the railroad that was to be built from Portland, Maine, to Montreal, Canada.

At the opening of the Annual Communication in 1848 the M.:W.:Grand Master gave an address, the first to be reported in the Proceedings. In it he mentioned the attempted establishment of a General Grand Lodge, and told about the action taken by the Baltimore Convention of September 23, 1847. This part of the address was referred to a Committee, and after due deliberation it was "Resolved, That this Grand Lodge ratify and approve the Constitution for a Supreme Grand Lodge reported by the Convention holden at Baltimore on the 23rd day of September, 1847." Provision was then made for Delegates to attend that Convention. At this Annual Communication the Committee on Returns reported that the thirty-five Lodges which had made returns enrolled 994 members.

The Proceedings of the year 1850 give a full account of the contention among the New York Brethren, and show that the subject of a General Grand Lodge was being kept alive. At the Annual Communication, the first steps were taken that finally led to the establishment of the Grand Lodge library. The Grand Secretary was authorised to get copies of the Proceedings of other Jurisdictions that had established libraries.

At the Annual Communication of 1851, M.:W.:Bro. Joseph C. Stevens said in his address: "I had the honour of being elected your Delegate (to the General Lodge) and repaired to Washington at the appointed time, but I regret to inform you that no formal meeting took place. The cause of this failure I am unable to explain, unless it may be attributed to a general reluctance on the part of most of the States to form such an organised Body."

Though no definite progress had as yet been made in forwarding the cause of a General Grand Masonic Body of national scope, nevertheless, there had of late been a renewal of Masonic interest in Maine. This was well described by Grand Master Bradford, who said in his annual address of 1854, "Brethren, it is a just cause of congratulation in tracing the progress of Masonry within our Jurisdiction for a few years past, and in comparing it with what it was only eight years ago. Then only eleven Lodges were represented at our Annual Communication. Now, our average representation is more than fourfold that number, and our persevering efforts have presented to us the cheering fact that but few Lodges within our extended Jurisdiction have fallen into irreparable decay." The year 1854 also saw the Institution of a new practice, namely, having some Lodge exemplify the Work of one or more of the Degrees before the Grand Lodge. By regulation this practice has been continued up to the present.

The years 1850 to 1859, inclusive, may well be considered as forming a period during which the Masonry of Maine was largely reconstructed. Lodges that had become dormant were revived. New Lodges were Chartered. At its Annual Communications the Grand Lodge was busied with legislation that arose from the increased interest in the Fraternity, and in constructing laws and regulations for the government of the Craft.

The routine Proceedings of the Grand Lodge held in 1860 vary very little from the Proceedings of Communications held to-day. That year, Josiah H. Drummond, one of the outstanding Masons of the whole country, was elected Grand Master. He wisely guided the course of Maine Masonry throughout the trying period of the War between the States. As the following paragraph shows, his address made in 1861 is very pertinent to present-day conditions: "But the chief source of danger to us is a too rapid increase in our numbers. We fear nothing from without. All our danger is from within. Masonry has withstood the test of ages, and the waves of persecution which have beat against her have only established her on a surer foundation. Her strength and support depend on the character of those who seek admission among us. Our strength depends not on the quantity, but on the quality of our members. One unworthy member casts a blot on the whole Fraternity. One misshapen stone mars the symmetry of the whole building. One defective pillar may cause the ruin of the whole edifice." At this same meeting, however, Reports showed that Masonry was flourishing in Maine. Eighty-eight Lodges (all except five) made Returns showing the total number of members to be 4319. The Grand Treasurer reported $721.88 as cash on hand, and $5800 in the charity fund.

In the year 1862 Bro. Drummond said: "I have granted more Dispensations the past year to receive Petitions at special meetings than I did the year previous. The cases have seemed more urgent in consequence of so many of our young men entering the army. It is very likely I have erred in allowing these cases to form exceptions to the general rule. But in times like these, when a young man has responded to the call of his country, and before he leaves home, if he desires to enroll himself among us, I have been perhaps too easily led to believe that he possesses the qualifications to make a good Mason. It is true, every patriot may not make a good Mason. But it is equally true that every good Mason is a patriot."

Bro. Cyril Pearl, who had for seventeen years been the writer of Foreign Correspondence, died in the year 1865. The Grand Master said of him, in an address: "The present system of Foreign Correspondence, which has become a considerable feature in the policy of our Grand Lodge System, is indebted to him probably far more than to any one else for the present high place it holds in most of the Grand Lodges. He was a graceful and easy writer, and his Reports were looked for with a great deal of interest in other Jurisdictions as well as in our own." After the death of Bro. Pearl, Bro. Drummond took up the work. Since the death of Bro. Drummond, the Maine Correspondence Reports have been written by Past Grand Master Albro E. Chase and Past Grand Master Ashley A. Smith, D.D. As in the past, Maine correspondence continues to hold world-wide attention and to obtain favourable comment.

In 1869 Maine adopted the following Report and so established its position regarding the reimbursement of other Jurisdictions that pay out money for the relief of Maine Brethren: "As we are in the practice of assisting the sojourning Brother who calls on us, whether he is sick or in need, and consider it to be our duty to aid him as he may need, we do not deem it our duty to refund money paid for the relief of a Brother who is in misfortune away from us, and especially we have no knowledge whether he is in good standing among Masons or not. We have never called on any Masonic Body to remunerate us for expenses incurred in taking care of sojourning Brethren, nor do we understand that it is the practice of Lodges in other Jurisdictions."

A hundred fifty-four Lodges having 14,926 members formed the Masonic Body of Maine when the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the Grand Lodge was celebrated, in May 1870.

In 1875 the Constitution of the Grand Lodge was revised, and the revision was then adopted. At the same Annual Communication, a proposal that should lead to the establishment of a "Home for Aged and Indigent Masons was referred to a Committee, which, in the following year, recommended that the proposition be postponed until a more favourable time."

Two years later, in 1877, the Grand Lodge finally adopted The Maine Masonic Text Book.

In 1878 the Grand Lodge voted that the word Compasses be adopted as authorised for use in Work and Lectures, and that the word Compass no longer be used.

Reports presented to the Grand Lodge in 1880 showed that its Register numbered 181 Lodges having a total of 19,303 members. At that time the cash balance was reported as being $4,311.41, and there was $19,345.04 in the charity fund.

The period from 1880 to 1895 was one of steady progress. Only necessary changes were made in the organic Masonic law, and those were only such as were of advantage to the Craft and conducive to harmony. The only debatable matter that arose in sister Jurisdictions during this period, which was of such nature as to excite the attention of the Grand Lodge of Maine, was the action of the Grand Lodge of Washington relative to the recognition of the Negro as a possible Mason. This matter was soon settled, however, and presently the customary usage again prevailed.

The seventy-fifth anniversary of the establishment of the Grand Lodge of Maine was celebrated on the second day of the Annual Communication held in 1895. In the concluding paragraph of the address which he delivered as Orator of the day, Bro. Josiah H. Drummond said: "Some of us have clasped hands in this Grand Lodge for almost a generation. This is the second anniversary in which we have participated. When the next shall come, we shall be but memories. You will have taken our places, and another generation will fill yours. May you be able to say to them then, as we say to you now, 'As you love Masonry, whatever betide, come prosperity or come adversity, adhere with unflinching tenacity to the ancient usages of the Craft.'" And well might the Maine Masons who heard those words, or read them, be proud of the progress of Masonry in the State. For in 1895 the Registry of the Grand Lodge numbered 192 Lodges, and listed 2 others as being under Dispensation. Those Lodges had a total membership of 21,809. The Grand Treasurer reported $13,-242.05 as cash on hand, and $26,093.47 as being in the charity fund.

During the period of twenty years from 1895 to 1915 the Fraternity in Maine moved along in that quiet fashion to be expected when one recalls the firm foundation on which it stood—a foundation built out of trials and disappointments, but also built out of success. During each of those twenty years, some few decisions were required of the Grand Body because at the time some Brethren differed as to the meaning of words, and because they were often unwilling to consult the law for themselves. There were also a few cases in which discipline had to be administered. Now and then a new Lodge was opened. And all the while there was a steady increase of members. Nothing striking occurred, however, until the outbreak of the Great War in 1914. And even the war did not much disturb the Masonry of Maine until 1917, when the United States entered the conflict. At that time questions similar to those that appeared from 1864 to 1870 cropped out. There was the question of establishing Army Lodges, of conferring Degrees by courtesy, of granting Dispensations in order to hasten the Work. At the time the handling of all those matters accorded with actions of the Grand Lodge taken more than fifty years before. And again the action taken was to be followed by the same trying period of reconstruction.

In 1920 the Grand Lodge of Maine celebrated its centenary with a programme of events that occupied the afternoon and evening of the second day of the Annual Communication. The Grand Masters of New Brunswick and of Massachusetts were present, while the Grand Master of Ohio was represented by the Grand Representative of Maine in his Jurisdiction. The address delivered at the time by Past Grand Master Charles F. Johnson has since been designated as one of the present century's gems of Masonic oratory.

In 1931 returns from the 207 Lodges inscribed on the Register of the Grand Lodge that there were 43,885 Masons in the State. This was fewer than had been enrolled the year before. For the first time since 1899 a loss had been sustained.

Since 1820, when the Grand Lodge of Maine was organised with 30 Subordinate Lodges, the number of Chartered Lodges within the State has increased to 216. Of those, 9 have become extinct. Charters of 3 of those Lodges were voluntarily surrendered, 2 Charters were revoked by the Grand Lodge, while the 4 other Lodges gave up their Charters to consolidate. In 1931 the largest Lodge in Maine had 955 members, the smallest Lodge had 36. There were 27 Lodges each of which had a membership of fewer than 100. The average Lodge Roster inscribed 212 names. According to its population, Maine had a larger percentage of Masons than any other State in the Union in 1931.

Ever since the organisation of the Grand Lodge of Maine, the Masonic membership has included some of the most successful business men of the State, some of the most distinguished preachers, some of the most prominent political leaders, and many of those high in the professions. More than half the governors of the State have been members of the Fraternity. More than half the justices of the State Supreme Court and fully a third of those who have represented Maine in the national Congress have been members of the Craft who were guided by its teachings. To-day, the Masonry of Maine is on a more solid and secure foundation than ever before.

FREEMASONRY IN MARYLAND

GUSTAV A. EITEL

THE history of Maryland Freemasonry bears a strong resemblance to that of the State itself. Indeed, the introduction of the Order into the Colony even antedates the time when Baltimore became a metropolis. During the Colonial period Masonry was introduced into Maryland from three sources: From (1) the Grand Lodge (Moderns) of Massachusetts, (2) the Grand Lodge (Moderns) of England, and (3) the Grand Lodge (Ancients) of Pennsylvania. According to tradition, it was also introduced into this region from both Scotland and Germany.

Masonic Calendars published in England show that the Grand Lodge of England (Moderns) appointed two Provincial Grand Masters for Maryland. In the Calendar for the year 1778 appears the name of R. Moleson. This name continues to appear in the Calendar until the year 1783, when Henry Harford is named as "Provincial Grand Master for Maryland." Harford's name is continued in subsequent Calendars until as late as the year 1839. There is not the least evidence that either ever exercised any power as Grand Master in Maryland.

The first Lodge about which we have any trustworthy account was planted during the Colonial days at Annapolis, then the first city of the Province. From Schultz's History we learn that a Warrant was issued to this Lodge on August 12, 1750, by Thomas Oxnard, Grand Master of all North America. How long the Lodge had been in existence prior to the date of that Warrant is conjectural but that it was in successful operation two months before that date is shown by published reports of the celebration of Saint John's Day, June 25. Then the Lodge attended divine service in the church of St. Anne's Parish to hear a sermon delivered by the Rev. Bro. John Gordon, Rector of St. Michael's Parish. At that time the Officers of the Lodge were, Dr. Alexander Hamilton, R.: W.: Master, the Rev. Alexander Malcolm, Senior Warden, and Edward Dorsey, Junior Warden.

On November 21, 1765, a Lodge designated as No. 1 was formed at Joppa, in Baltimore County, under a Charter from Lord Blaney, Grand Master of the Modern Masons of England. The Charter bore the date of August 8, 1765. This Lodge's first Officers were the Rev. Bro. Samuel Howard, Master; Richard Wagstaff, Senior Warden; and John Hammond Dorsey, Junior Warden.

According to tradition there were in Maryland other Lodges besides those mentioned. One, called St. Andrew's Lodge, was at Georgetown, now in the District of Columbia but at that time in Frederick County, Maryland. It had been formed by Scotch settlers some time before 1737. A branch of this Lodge seems to have been established at Joppa as early as 1751. Another Lodge seems to have existed at Talbot Court House, now Easton, before 1763, and it is quite certain that a Lodge existed at or near Newmarket, in Frederick County, before the outbreak of the War for Independence. There are, however, no written Records of any of those Lodges. They were probably not Chartered by any authority, but were instead held on the "Inherent Plan" which continued in vogue for some time after the reorganisation of Freemasonry in England in 1717. At a meeting of the Lodge at Leonardtown in November 1761, the Secretary was ordered to write to Mr. James Mills for the Jewels belonging to the Port Tobacco Lodge. This instruction, of course, indicates that a Lodge had previously existed at Port Tobacco.

Just as Maryland suffered with regard to its extent of territory during Colonial days, because of the absence of the Lord Proprietary and the presence and superior vigilance of our northern neighbour, to use a courteous phrase, so, too, from a Masonic point of view, we were subordinated to Pennsylvania by the fact that her Provincial Grand Master was a resident of Philadelphia while our own remained in England.

In 1766 Charters were granted by Grand Master William Ball, of Pennsylvania, for the formation of two Lodges in Kent County. One was to be at Georgetown, on the Sassafrass River, and the other at Chestertown. They were designated as Lodges No. 6 and No. 7 respectively.

On June 28, 1770, a Warrant for Lodge No. 15, at Fell's Point, Baltimore, was issued by Bro. Ball. Upon the formation of our own Grand Lodge, this Lodge became Washington Lodge, No. 3. It is still in existence and is a large and flourishing Lodge, well known as the oldest in the Jurisdiction.

On September 21, 1770, Lodge No. 16, in Baltimore, was formed. This Lodge did not participate in the formation of the Grand Lodge of Maryland, nor did it come under that Grand Lodge's Jurisdiction until 1795, when it was Chartered as St. John's Lodge, No. 20. It also is still in existence and in flourishing condition. Thus, while Masonry was very slow in making its advent into the metropolis, when it at last did come, it came to stay.

On September 16, 1773, Bro. Ball issued his Warrant for the formation of Lodge No. 17, at Queenstown, Queen Anne's County. He named as the Lodge's first Master, Bro. John Coats, afterwards Deputy Grand Master of Pennsylvania and the first Grand Master of Maryland.

At a session of the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania held on December 23, 1782, a Petition for a Charter was received from a number of Brethren of Somerset County who were recommended by Dodge Lodge, No. 29. This Petition was granted on the same day, for "Lodge No. 27," to be located at "Princess Ann." This Lodge's Officers were Bro. Levin Winder, Worshipful Master, Bro. John Waters, Jr., Senior Warden, and Bro. Francis J. Henry, Junior Warden. This was the ninth and last Lodge to be Chartered in Maryland by the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania.

Fortunately there are preserved among the archives of the Grand Lodge of Maryland, the Books of Proceedings of three old Colonial Lodges. One was located at "Leonardtoun, St. Mary's County," in 1759, another at Joppa, Hartford, then Baltimore County, in 1765, and a third at "Queenstown, Queen Anne's County."

On June 17, 1783, two months after Congress had issued the peace proclamation which concluded the War of American Independence, the Lodges along the "Eastern Shore" of Maryland convened at Talbot Court House for the purpose of organising a Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons for the State of Maryland. Five Lodges were represented by Deputies; this was one Lodge more than had participated in the formation of the Grand Lodge of England in 1717. This Convention had no precedent to guide its proceedings, for just such a condition had never before occurred in the history of Masonry. These Lodges had all been Warranted by the Provincial Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, and so owed allegiance to it. It, in turn, owed allegiance to the Grand Lodge (Ancients) of England. There was present at this Convention, as Deputy from Lodge No. 27, of Chestertown, the Rev. Dr. William Smith, who was at the time Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, although he resided in this State. Bro. Dr. John Coats, Past Deputy Grand Master of Pennsylvania, a member of Lodge No. 3, of Philadelphia, was also present, though he too was then a resident of the Eastern Shore of Maryland.

At this Convention it was unanimously "Resolved, That the several Lodges on the Eastern Shore of Maryland consider it as a matter of right, and that they ought to form a Grand Lodge independent of the Grand Lodge at Philadelphia." When the Convention proposed to hold an election of Officers for a Grand Lodge, Bro. Smith, the Deputy from Lodge No. 7, stated that "he was not authorised to elect such Officers," whereupon the Convention adjourned until July 31, following. It was then determined to Petition the Grand Lodge in Philadelphia for a Warrant for a Grand Lodge to be held on the Eastern Shore of Maryland.

The Convention reassembled at Talbot Court House on July 31, 1783, agreeably to adjournment. The Rev. Dr. Smith being a Grand Officer, he took the Chair. The same Lodges were in attendance as at the former Session, with the exception of Lodge No. 37, of Somerset County. Lodge No. 6, of Georgetown, was represented, however, as were all the other Lodges. The Lodges were represented by their Masters and Wardens, and not by Deputies as had been the case at the former Sessions. The resolution regarding the right to form a Grand Lodge independent of the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, which had been adopted at the previous Session, was unanimously reaffirmed. It was further determined that the Grand Lodge should be a moving Lodge, "that is to say, it shall sit at different places at different times; also, that said Grand Lodge shall have Quarterly Communications." Those present then proceeded to ballot for Grand Officers. Bro. John Coats was elected Grand Master, and Bro. Charles Gardiner, Grand Secretary. Other Officers were also elected. The Convention adjourned to Assemble again at Chestertown on December 18, following.

On that date the Grand Lodge Assembled according to adjournment. The transactions at this meeting were unimportant, and the meeting adjourned to meet at Cambridge on June 17, 1784.

Although the Grand Lodge failed to meet at Cambridge according to agreement, the subordinate Lodges nevertheless maintained their organisation. They doubtless considered their allegiance to the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania as severed, since they were not represented in that Grand Lodge from then on. This condition continued until April 17, 1787. Then, by a "consert of action," the Grand Convention of Deputies from the various Lodges again met at Talbot Court House. No extant Record shows who instituted this meeting or how the meeting was accomplished. The Deputies who assembled at this meeting reviewed the Proceedings of earlier Conventions. Then, in order "to give efficacy to what was heretofore transacted upon the subject, and, still observing the propriety and necessity of so important a measure," they agreed to establish a Grand Lodge and to appoint Grand Officers for that purpose. Bro. John Coats was re-elected Grand Master, Bro. Charles Gardiner was re-elected Grand Secretary, and the following other Grand Officers were elected: Bro. Peregrine Lethr-bury as Deputy Grand Master; Bro. Thomas Bourke as Senior Grand Warden; Bro. John Done as Junior Grand Warden; and Bro. Samuel Earle as Grand Treasurer.

At the time of surrendering their Charters to the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, the existing Lodges received new numbers and were ranked thus: Lodge No. 6 became Lodge No. 1, of Georgetown, Kent County. This Lodge ceased in 1793. Lodge No. 7 became Lodge No. 2, of Chestertown, Kent County. It ceased in 1794. Lodge No. 15 became Lodge No. 3, of Baltimore. It subsequently became Washington Lodge, No. 3 and is still known by that name. Lodge No. 17 became Lodge No. 4. Although this Lodge was originally located at Queenstown, it was later removed to Chester Mill, in Kent County. It ceased about the year 1792. Lodge No. 29 became Lodge No. 5, of Cambridge, Kent County. It also ceased about 1792. Lodge No. 34 became Lodge No. 6, of Talbot Court House. It ceased about 1794. Lodge No. 37 became Lodge No. 7, of Princess Anne, Somerset County. It ceased about 1793.

At the Annual Communication of the Grand Lodge held at Talbot Court House on April 15, 1788, a Warrant was issued to Lodge No. 8, at Elk Town, now Elkton, in Cecil County. The first Officers of this Lodge were these: Bro. Henry Robinson, Worshipful Master; Bro. George Veazay, Senior Warden; and Bro. Samuel Thompson, Junior Warden. This was the first Lodge to be Chartered by the Grand Lodge of Maryland. It was never again represented after the Annual Communication of 1793.

On April 21, 1789, a Warrant was issued to Lodge No. 9, at Georgetown, on the Potomac River. Bro. Frier, whose first name does not appear in the Records, was Installed by the Grand Lodge as Worshipful Master, and Bro. Alexander Grier as Senior Warden. This Lodge ceased about May 1794.

A Warrant for a Lodge in Sussex County, Delaware, was issued on September 18, 1792. Its first Officers were Bro. Jesse Green, Worshipful Master; Bro. Thomas Lawes, Senior Warden; and Bro. Henry Hooper, Junior Warden. This Lodge, subsequently known as St. John's Lodge, is the first to be mentioned with a distinctive title. After 1796 it ceased to be represented in the Grand Lodge.

A Warrant was also granted to a number of Brethren, members of Lodge No. 9, of Georgetown, who had earlier migrated to Port Tobacco, in Charles County, and opened a branch Lodge there. Known as Lodge No. 11, it had as its first Officers these men: Bro. Alexander Grier, Worshipful Master; Bro. Robert Ferguson, Senior Warden; and Bro. Judson M. Clagett, Junior Warden. This Lodge was subsequently known as St. Columbia Lodge, No. 11. After the September Communication of 1798, it was not again represented.

Amanda Lodge, No. 12, located at Annapolis, was granted a Warrant with the following persons as the first Officers: Bro. Joseph Clark, Worshipful Master; Bro. William Pinkney, Senior Warden; and John Kilty, Junior Warden. The Lodge was not again represented in the Grand Lodge after May 1794.

At the Annual Communication held on April 13, 1793, a Warrant was issued to Concordia Lodge, No. 13, of Baltimore. Its Officers were: Bro. Henry Wilmans, Worshipful Master; the Rev. Bro. George Ralph, Senior Warden; and Bro. James Thompson, Junior Warden. At this same Annual Communication of the Grand Lodge, Bro. Henry Wilmans was elected Deputy Grand Master, and at the Grand Communication held a year later, on May 8, 1794, he was elected R.:W.:Grand Master. He filled the latter office one year. Concordia Lodge, the first in Baltimore to be Chartered by the Grand Lodge, has had a continuous existence up to the present. During the trying times of the anti-Masonic excitement from 1828 to 1838, Concordia Lodge, No. 13 maintained its course undismayed. To-day the Lodge is one of the most prosperous in the Jurisdiction.

The Grand Lodge issued a Warrant to Federal Lodge, No. 15, of Washington, District of Columbia, on September 12, 1793. Its Officers were: Bro. James Horan, Worshipful Master; Bro. C. Worthy Stevenson, Senior Warden; and Bro. Andrew Eustace, Junior Warden.

The ceremony of laying the corner-stone of the Federal Capitol, at Washington, District of Columbia, was delegated by the commissioners who had charge of building the edifice to the Masonic Fraternity. Joseph Clark, Master of Lodge No. 12 of Annapolis, Junior Grand Warden of the Grand Lodge of Maryland, acted as Grand Master pro tempore on that occasion. The Grand Marshal pro tempore was Bro. C. Worthy Stevenson, newly appointed Senior Warden of Federal Lodge, No. 15. The ceremony took place on September 18, 1793. General Washington, then President of the United States, who as a Mason joined in the ceremony, was honoured with the chief place in the Masonic procession. He took Square and Gavel in his hands and laid the stone according to the ancient form prescribed by Masonic Rites. A silver plate bearing the following inscription, was ordered to be read by the Commissioners:

This southeast corner of the Capitol of the United States of America, in the City of Washington, was laid on the 18th day of September, 1793, in the thirteenth year of American Independence, in the first year of the second term of the Presidency of George Washington, whose virtues in the civil administration of his country have been as conspicuous and beneficial as his military valor and prudence have been useful in establishing her liberties—and in the year of Masonry 5793, by the President of the United States, in concert with the Grand Lodge of Maryland, several Lodges under its Jurisdiction, and Lodge No. 22, from Alexandria, Virginia.

THOMAS JOHNSON	} Commissioners

DANIEL CARROLL
JOSEPH CLARK, Most Worshipful, Grand Master pro tempore	} Architects
JAMES HOBAN
STEPHEN HALLATE
COLLIN WILLIAMSON, Master

Following the reading of the plate, it was delivered to the President. Then, attended by the Grand Master pro tempore and three Worshipful Masters, he descended to the cavazion trench and deposited it. He laid it on the corner-stone of the Capitol of the United States of America, upon which were also deposited corn, wine, and oil. Then the whole congregation joined in reverent prayer.

No organisation of Federal Lodge, No. 15, seems to have taken place on that momentous occasion. Potomac Lodge, No. 9, of Georgetown, a subordinate of the Grand Lodge of Maryland, and Lodge No. 22, of Alexandria, Virginia, were, however, in attendance with all their Officers. The Lodge from Alexandria came as guests of Potomac Lodge, No. 9 of Georgetown.*

On May 18, 1794, a Warrant was issued to Belle Air Lodge, No. 14, of Harford County. This Lodge is now located in Belair. The Lodge's first Officers were: Bro. Samuel C. Smith, Worshipful Master; Bro. Thomas Gibson, Senior Warden; and Bro. Michael McElkiney, Junior Warden. At the time of issuing the Warrant, it was ordered that Belle Air Lodge, No. 14, have precedence over Federal Lodge, No. 15.

The prosperous condition of Masonry in Maryland after the full and complete organisation of the Grand Lodge at Easton on April 17, 1787, may be judged from the rapid increase in the number of Lodges that were established in various parts of the State. Not fewer than twenty Warrants were issued by the Grand Lodge during the first thirteen years of its existence. It is probable, however, that this increase was too rapid, and that more Lodges were organised than could be properly sustained, since seven of the twenty Lodges became dormant prior to 1800. The removal of the Communications of the Grand Lodge from Easton to Baltimore, in 1794, seems to have sounded a death knell for the Lodges on the Eastern Shore. All the Lodges in that section of the State which had participated in the formation of the Grand Lodge became dormant and ceased to be represented soon after the removal. Naturally, a stimulus was given to Masonry in Baltimore by removing the Communications to that city. Four new Lodges were formed in the same number of years. Lodges were also formed in other parts along the Western Shore and in the District of Columbia.

*On page 4 of the George Washington Bicentennial News (No. 8) is an illustration that depicts the procession which took place on the occasion of laying the corner-stone of the Federal Capitol. An identical woodcut depicting this scene also appears in Schultz's History of Freemasonry in Maryland.

The death of America's most honoured and most distinguished Mason—Bro. George Washington—occurred at Mount Vernon on Saturday, December 14, 1799. Although news did not reach Baltimore until the following Tuesday, December 17, so soon as they heard it members of the Masonic Fraternity there at once took steps to pay proper respect to the memory of their late distinguished Brother. As part of the memorial service that they held, the Brethren assembled in Washington Lodge Room at Fell's Point on Sunday, December 23. From there they proceeded in solemn procession to the Presbyterian Church. An address designed to give hearers a thorough understanding of the virtues of General Washington, their deceased friend and Brother, was delivered by a member of Amicable Lodge, No. 25.

The history of Freemasonry from 1800 to 1820 records a number of events which took place both in this country and in England, whose results have had an important bearing upon the subsequent history of Freemasonry. Most notable among these was the union of the two antagonistic Grand Lodges of England, known respectively as "Moderns" and "Ancients."

Until the year 1800, the Royal Arch Degree and other Degrees now known as the Chapter series were conferred under the sanction of Lodge Warrants. So, too, were several Orders of Knighthood. Just at the opening of the nineteenth century, however, all these Degrees were formulated and Worked under systems known respectively as "Chapter" and "Encampment." Afterwards they were placed under the Jurisdiction of State Grand Bodies which were in turn subject to General Grand Bodies. By the year 1817 the system was fully established in this country just as it now exists. During that short stretch of seventeen years, thirty-eight Lodges were Warranted by the Grand Lodge of Maryland. Of that number only ten were in existence in 1931.

The Grand Lodge of Maryland, attended by a great civic and military procession, laid the corner-stone of the Washington Monument in Baltimore on July 4, 1815. Levin Winder, governor of the State of Maryland, officiated as Grand Master on that occasion, which marked the erection of the first monument to the memory of this country's founder. For nearly fourteen years after this memorable event, work on the monument continued, until at last the structure was completed, a granite shaft towering to a height of 118 feet and surmounted by a colossal statue of Washington.

On October 8, 1824, the Grand Lodge held a special Communication for the purpose of extending fraternal greetings to a Masonic Brother, the Marquis de Lafayette, who was unanimously elected an Honorary Member of the Grand Lodge of Maryland and presented with a Diploma of Membership on that occasion. Lafayette was accompanied by Colonel La Vasseur who acted as his private secretary and by his son, Bro. George Washington Lafayette. At a session of the State Legislature an Act was passed constituting the Marquis de Lafayette and his male heirs citizens of the State of Maryland.

The Grand Lodge convened on July 4, 1828, to participate in the inauguration of the greatest enterprise of the day, the laying of the first stone of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. This was the pioneer railroad of the entire country, and the first in the world for the transportation of passengers. The event caused great interest everywhere. The Grand Masters of the States of Pennsylvania and Virginia, whose legislatures had united with that of Maryland in chartering the enterprise, attended with their suites. Venerable Charles Carroll of Carrollton, last surviving signer of the Declaration of Independence, laid the stone after the three Grand Masters had tested it and found it to be "well formed, true and trusty." The procession on that day included Masonic Lodges, military bodies, and various trade displays. Some 70,000 people witnessed it and some 10,000 were present at the ceremony of laying the stone. On August 8 of the following year, a similar ceremony was performed at the opening of work on the Baltimore and Susquehanna Railroad, later called the Northern Central and incorporated into the Pennsylvania system. The date of this event marked the centenary of the act that incorporated the town of Baltimore.

The growth of Masonry in Maryland from 1820 to 1830 was more rapid than at any former time in the history of the State's Grand Lodge. During this decade eighteen Charters were issued for the organisation of new Lodges or the resuscitation of the dormant ones. At the beginning of the year 1830 there were thirty-six active Lodges in the Jurisdiction. Shortly after that date, however, great apathy was apparent among the membership, and much difficulty was had to get enough members at Lodge meetings to transact routine business. This indifference continued until one Lodge after another was compelled to surrender its Charter or to forfeit it for failing to be represented at the Communications of the Grand Lodge. By the end of the year 1839 there were only thirteen active Lodges in the Jurisdiction, and their membership was greatly diminished.

This great decline in the Masonry of Maryland, not so notable, certainly, as in some other Jurisdictions of the country, was due to what is known as the "Morgan Excitement," an anti-Masonic movement that was the upshot of a series of events which occurred in northern New York. The abduction of William Morgan is alleged to have taken place at Canandaigua, New York, in September 1826, in order to forestall the publication of a book purporting to disclose the secrets of Masonry, of which he was said to be an author. Fanatics and demagogues used the attendant uproar to further their own purposes. They formed a new political organisation known as the anti-Masonic party, which for more than ten years proscribed and persecuted members of the Masonic Fraternity. Only rack and stake were wanting to make the annoying activities of this organisation the equal of those religious persecutions that darken and disgrace the pages of history. The National Convention of this anti-Masonic party was held in Baltimore on September 25, 1831. On the third day, delegates nominated William Wirt, of Maryland, and Amos Ellender, of Pennsylvania, as candidates for President and Vice-President of the United States. Mr. Wirt, an able and distinguished lawyer of Baltimore, was esteemed by all classes of citizens. Consequently, his acceptance of nomination by the anti-Masonic party had a depressing effect upon the Fraternity in Maryland. There were men of ability in the Convention whose addresses, published in the local newspapers, caused many of the weak Brethren to waver in their allegiance to the Fraternity. Some of them finally withdrew altogether. From that time on the defection from Masonry in this State was rapid. At the election held in November 1832, Mr. Wirt received only one electoral vote, that of Vermont. Bro. Andrew Jackson, Past Grand Master of Tennessee, was elected President of the United States.

Not until 1840 did the reaction from the "Morgan Excitement" fairly commence. It was no small matter, however, to reinvigorate and rehabilitate the dormant Lodges of Maryland. Ten years of dormancy had nearly resulted in the extinction of many. The Baltimore Convention of 1843, however, did much to revive Masonry, though it was necessary to exert persistent and zealous efforts in order to stimulate even feeble beginnings. Daniel A. Piper, Grand Lecturer, was a man well suited to the occasion. He applied himself industriously to disseminating the Work throughout the Lodges of the State. He visited them and laboured hard to restore them to activity.

On July 1, 1845, the Grand Lodge of Maryland and its constituent Lodges united to participate in the procession that formed a part of the funeral honours paid to the memory of General Andrew Jackson, late President of the United States and Past Grand Master of the Masons of Tennessee.

At about this same time the war with Mexico began, and again the membership of the Lodges was depleted to recruit the ranks of the army. Nor did the number of members again materially increase until after the close of that war in 1848.

During the decade from 1850 to 1860, Charters were granted for the formation of eighteen Lodges, of which fourteen are still (1931-1934) in existence.

With the outbreak of the war between the States, our Lodges were for a fourth time called upon to recruit the ranks of the army. Being a border State, we were this time required to furnish quotas for both armies of those who carried on the unhappy strife. At no period in the history of the Grand Lodge of Maryland was the truth of the ancient charge more fully realised. Then did Maryland Masons come to know that "Masonry hath always been injured by war, bloodshed, or confusion." In many instances social ties were broken, church relations were severed, lifelong friends were estranged, and even families were painfully divided. To the credit of our Fraternity, however, it may be truthfully recorded that however bitter the partisan spirit came to be among the Brethren as citizens, no contention entered within the portals of the Lodge.

Laying the First Stone of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, America's First Railroad, July 4, 1828, by the Grand Lodge of Maryland; Benjamin C. Howard, Most Worshipful Grand Master.

The man holding the spade, Charles Carroll, was the only survivor of the signers of the Declaration of Independence.

There, at least, animosities were buried and peace prevailed. The teachings of our beloved Institution were invoked at home, as in the field, to assuage the rigour of the conflict. The Work of the Lodges went on as usual. Not so briskly, it is true, for both workmen and candidates were on one or the other tented battlefield. Nevertheless, the stream of charity flowed on unbroken, and all the more freely by reason of increased need for its application. When, at last, the survivors of the conflict returned home, there was no bloody chasm over which to shake the hand of brotherly love and affection, for none such had been permitted to exist during the dark hours of the struggle. Despite the troublous four years of that ghastly conflict, the prosperous times that succeeded the war gave an impetus to Masonry. No fewer than thirty-four Lodges were Chartered by Grand Master Coates during his six terms.

At this juncture of the Grand Lodge's history the Temple on St. Paul Street, which had for some years been inadequate for the needs of the Fraternity in Baltimore, was abandoned in favour of another and newer edifice. The old building was sold and a new Temple was reared elsewhere. In 1865 the Committee reported the purchase of the site of the present Temple on North Charles Street, and on November 20, 1866, the Grand Lodge laid the corner-stone of the new Temple with imposing ceremonies.

Now that peace, with her soothing influences, had at last come to bless a reunited country, the Brethren of contiguous States—Virginia, West Virginia, Pennsylvania, Delaware, New Jersey, and New York—as well as Brethren from more remote Jurisdictions, accepted the earnest invitation of the Grand Lodge of Maryland, “ to meet in the city of Baltimore, on the occasion of laying the corner-stone of a new Masonic Temple, for the renewal of those relations which, though estopped for a time, have never ceased to exist in the hearts of all true Masons.

At the Communication held in November 1797, it was resolved to Petition the General Assembly of the State of Maryland for an Act of incorporation. It is quite remarkable what difficulty attended this and other repeated efforts to procure a Charter. Time and again such endeavours were unavailing, nor was a Charter finally granted until 1822—a quarter of a century after the first application had been made. Forty-four years later—in 1866 an amendment was passed which enlarged the Grand Lodge's property-holding qualification and changed the title of the Grand Lodge from that of “ Free and Accepted Masons ” to that of “ Ancient Free and Accepted Masons.”

At the May Communication of 1869, Grand Master John Coates, Chairman of the Building Committee, reported that the Temple was completed and ready for occupancy. It is fortunate that such a splendid edifice could be made available to the Grand Lodge just then, for in 1870 there were seventy-four active Working Lodges in the Jurisdiction.

In September 1871, the Grand Encampment of Knights Templar and the General Grand Chapter, Royal Arch Masons of the United States, convened in Baltimore. An immense concourse, especially of Knights Templar, was present.

This gathering was the first complete and thorough reunion of Masons throughout the United States since the close of the war.

In 1872 a Charter was granted to Germania Lodge, No. 160, giving it permission to Work in the German language. This is still an active and flourishing Lodge.

The Trustees of the Charity Fund were Constituted as a Lodge under the name of "The Grand Steward's Lodge" in 1799. At first composed of eight Brethren appointed annually and presided over by the Deputy Grand Master, it afterwards included one Past Master from each Lodge in the State. This Lodge held its meetings monthly, or as much more frequently as occasion required. So, too, did this Lodge grow in influence and in power. It gradually became manager of the Grand Lodge's general finances. Jurisdiction was given to it in matters of discipline, and it was Constituted as an intermediate court of appeals. It became a powerful factor in all the affairs of the Grand Lodge. Indeed, it exercised nearly all the Grand Lodge's functions during recesses. It granted Charters, ordered processions of the Craft, framed programmes for the processions, and had the entire management of finances. On one occasion, when the retiring Grand Master had closed the Grand Lodge without Installing his successor, the Grand Steward's Lodge came to the rescue and filled the vacant Chair. After a time, however, the powers of the Grand Steward's Lodge were curtailed and confined solely to the management of finances and the hearing of trials and appeals. Its powers were usually exercised with great discretion and consideration, and in consequence it often relieved the Grand Lodge of many details incident to the latter's business. The Grand Steward's Lodge continued to exist until 1872. Then by an Act of the new Constitution which was adopted that year the management of the Temple and the finances of the Grand Lodge during recess was committed to the Board of Managers. This board, consisting of nine members, is elected by the Grand Lodge. The Grand Master, Grand Secretary, and Grand Treasurer are ex officio members of it. So soon as this change of organisation was effected, the Grand Steward's Lodge was dissolved.

The Centennial of the Grand Lodge of Maryland was celebrated at the Communication which was held on May 10, 11, and 12, 1887. Many prominent Masons from other Grand Jurisdictions were present to participate with Maryland in the ceremonies. On Thursday, May 12, the 77 Lodges of Maryland, together with the 22 Lodges from the District of Columbia and the Delegations from Lodges in Philadelphia, Harrisburg, and Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and from the Lodges in Alexandria, Virginia, formed in procession and paraded through the principal parts of the city. The procession concluded at the Academy of Music, where an historical address was delivered by Past Grand Master John M. Carter. Some 4700 Brethren were in that procession. At the time of this Communication, there were 77 active Working Lodges in the Grand Lodge of Maryland, having a total membership of 5080.

The Grand Lodge met in Special Communication in the Entered Apprentice Degree on May 2, 1889, for the purpose of receiving Bro. Hamilton Murrell,

E. A., of Leeds, England. As captain of the ship Missouri, bound for Baltimore, Bro. Murrell had gone to the rescue of the ship Danmark, which had lately foundered at sea. Every one of the latter's 758 passengers had been saved, due to the heroic efforts of Captain Murrell and his men. It was to present Bro. Murrell with a medal memorialising his gallant act that the Grand Lodge of Maryland held a "Special Communication at this time."

On Christmas Day, 1890, a disastrous fire destroyed the Masonic Temple in Baltimore. On New Year's night following, the Grand Lodge convened in the United States Courthouse which had only recently been abandoned by the government, and there all the Masonic Bodies resumed Labour. They continued to Labour there until the restoration of the Temple, two years and nine months later. Then on September 12, 1893, the restored Temple was dedicated with imposing ceremonies. Again on January 17, 1908, the Masonic Temple in Baltimore was destroyed by fire. When that fire was discovered, almost all the building was ablaze; at daybreak only the four walls remained. Following this disaster, the Grand Lodge resolved to restore the building in such fashion that it could defy henceforth the devouring elements. At the November Communication of 1909, the reconstructed Temple was dedicated with great rejoicing. Thirty Grand Masters and Past Grand Masters from twenty-five different States responded to the invitation and came to participate in the celebration. They literally came from Maine and California and most of the States lying between. At this Communication the second Conference of Grand Masters was held.

To commemorate the one hundred twenty-fifth anniversary of the founding of the Grand Lodge of Maryland, though the celebration really did not take place until a hundred twenty-nine years after the occurrence of that event, a Communication was held on May 14, 1912, at Easton, Maryland, where the State's Grand Lodge of Masons had originally been established. As part of the anniversary ceremonies, some 900 Brethren from all parts of the State proceeded to Spring Hill Cemetery, where the body of Dr. John Coats, first Grand Master of Masons in Maryland, lies buried.

The grave and monument having been decorated by the Brethren of Coats Lodge, No. 102, of Easton, Grand Master Thomas J. Shryock then placed a wreath of flowers upon the grave. Thereupon, Bro. John M. Carter, Past Grand Master, delivered an address on the life of Bro. Coats. Bro. Carter said in part as follows:

We are gathered here today to testify our great respect and veneration to the memory of our first Grand Master. In loving regard and gratitude for his services in behalf of our Craft and his fellow men, we place this wreath upon his grave.

Born in Philadelphia on July 11, 1751, Bro. Coats was reared in luxury. Liberally educated, he was graduated in medicine and had begun the practice of the profession before the Revolution. Upon the breaking out of the war, he enlisted as a soldier, and participated in Arnold's arduous campaign in Canada. He witnessed the death of Montgomery at Quebec in December 1775, and was himself severely wounded. Undaunted and undismayed, upon his recovery he dedicated himself and his entire fortune to the renewal of the struggle, enlisting and equipping a company at his own expense. That his subsequent service was creditable is attested by the fact that at the close of the war he was enrolled among the Society of the Cincinnati.

Bro. Coats was made a Mason in Lodge No. 3, at Philadelphia, upon attaining his majority in 1772, and a year later he organised Lodge No. 17 (Pennsylvania Charter) at Queenstown, Queen Anne's County, Maryland. Six years later he was appointed Deputy Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, and one year later he resigned that Office for the purpose of residing permanently in Maryland. He was the organiser and moving spirit in all the five Lodges on the Eastern Shore that co-operated to form the Grand Lodge of Maryland, at Easton, in July 1783, as also in the completed organisation of four years later.

Upon the organisation of the Grand Lodge of Maryland, Bro. Coats was elected Grand Master. He served until April 1791, and then, after an interval of two years, he was again chosen to serve another year.

An accomplished surgeon and skilful physician, Doctor Coats' later life was spent in Easton in the practice of his profession. Prodigal in his benevolence, he never accumulated a fortune, but died poor on November 30, 1810.

At the close of Bro. Carter's address, the Grand Lodge then proceeded to the town hall, where the Semi-annual Communication was held. At that time Bro. Oswald Tilghman, of Coats Lodge, No. 102, delivered an oration commemorative of the anniversary Communication. The Grand Lodge Roster at this period of its history consisted of 15,000 members in 114 active Working Lodges.

During the first quarter of the century, death took a heavy toll from amongst us. Some of the most distinguished men and Masons in our ranks have been snatched away. In addition, many others of less rank but of no less worth as men and Masons have been called. Of our former Grand Masters, Dr. Charles H. Ohr, Charles Webb, John S. Berry, John H. B. Latrobe, and John S. Tyson have passed away. Those of our Deputy Grand Masters whom death has taken include the following Brethren: John A. Lynch, Woodward Abrahams, George L. McCahan, James H. Anderson, Sylvester Stockbridge, William H. Clark, Jacob E. Krebs, Robert K. Martin, Harry C. Larrabee, and James R. Brewer.

On March 11, 1913, Bro. Edward T. Schultz, widely known as the author of the History of Freemasonry in Maryland, died in his eighty-sixth year. He had been for many years Chairman of the Committee of Correspondence, although for some ten years prior to his death he had been blind and obliged to do his Work by means of an amanuensis.

The Masonry of Maryland experienced a great loss in the death of Bro. John M. Carter, Past Grand Master of the years 1878 and 1879, who passed away on July 3, 1915. Bro. Carter always took a leading part in the Masonic life of this Jurisdiction. His deep learning, sound judgment, and ripe experience were ever at the service of the Craft.

Grand Master, 1885-1917.

Edward T. Schultz, P.: D.: G.: H.: F.:
Masonic historian of Maryland.

Grand Master Thomas J. Shryock died suddenly on February 3, 1918. (Elected 1885.) With the exception of his own family circle, nowhere else did his death leave a greater void than in the ranks of Maryland Masonry. Bro. Shryock was possessed of executive ability to an unusual degree and his knowledge of human nature was deep and broad. His judgment was quick, incisive, keen. He was slow in making friends, but when once given his friendship was sincere, self-sacrificing, unalterable. A man of tireless energy, fearless, and prompt, he was a natural leader of men. For nearly thirty-three years he was the guiding and controlling spirit of Maryland Masonry. When Bro. Shryock began his service as Grand Master in 1885, the finances of the Grand Lodge were in a chaotic condition; financial ruin was imminent. With an unwavering faith in Maryland Masonry, he staked nearly his entire fortune upon its ultimate prosperity, and at the time of his death the Grand Lodge of Maryland owned its magnificent Temple and was practically free from debt. Only a man of Bro. Shryock's unusual executive qualities, of his faith in teachings of Masonry, of his keen judgment of men and of their abilities, could have brought about such a propitious consummation of his labour and zeal. During his Masonic career, Bro. Shryock served as Grand High Priest, Most Illustrious Grand Master, Grand Commander, General Grand Treasurer of the General Grand Chapter, as Active Inspector-General of the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite, and in many other Masonic organisations. Bro. Shryock's tenure of Office as Grand Master of Maryland lasted from 1885 until the day of his death—a period of almost thirty-three years. His marvellously quick and accurate grasp of intricate business problems, combined with unerring judgment and indefatigable energy, caused his service to be sought in city and State affairs and placed him in many prominent positions of honour in national Masonic Bodies.

Prior to the Great War, the Masons of Maryland were well able to care for all cases of suffering and distress either by means of direct cash contributions or through well-conducted Homes and Hospitals to which the Grand Lodge and its members were liberal contributors. After the war, however, conditions changed. The Masons of Maryland have erected a Home for aged Masons, their widows and orphans, and others having a claim on the Fraternity. The Home is located 16 miles from Baltimore on a main highway. It comprises more than 300 acres of rolling land, situated among the foothills of those mountains that contribute so largely to the natural beauty of the western part of the State. The site affords a beautiful view in all directions, and the buildings themselves are stone structures and modern in every regard. The corner-stone was laid October 10, 1931, and the building was dedicated in October 1932. In January of the following year it was opened for guests.

In the one hundred forty-ninth year of the existence of the Grand Lodge of Masons in Maryland, Most Worshipful Grand Master Bro. George R. Gorsuch presided over the destinies of the Craft, thirty-second in the line of Grand Masters who have served it since its inception. Bro. George W. Livingston, thirty-third in line, was elected in 1932. After granting 220 Charters, 123 active Lodges stand upon the Register of the Grand Lodge. These Lodges have a membership of more than 34,000. This is indeed a record of which Masons of the State of Maryland may well be proud.

THE BALTIMORE CONVENTION OF 1843

Pursuant to a recommendation made by the Masonic Convention held at Washington, District of Columbia, in March 1842, accredited Delegates from a majority of the Masonic Grand Lodges in the United States assembled on May 8, 1843, at the Hall of the Masonic Grand Lodge of Maryland, in Baltimore. The following Delegates were present on that occasion: Bro. Thomas Clapham, of Portsmouth, New Hampshire; Right Worshipful Grand Secretary Charles W. Moore, of Boston, Massachusetts; Bro. William Field, of Pawtucket, Rhode Island; Right Worshipful Past Grand Secretary Ebenezer Wadsworth, of West Troy, New York; Grand Lecturer Daniel A. Piper, of Baltimore, Maryland; Grand Lecturer Nathaniel SeEVERS, of Georgetown, District of Columbia; Right Worthy Grand Secretary John Dove, of Richmond, Virginia; Most Worshipful Grand Master John H. Wheeler, of Raleigh, North Carolina; Grand Chaplain Albert Case, of Charleston, South Carolina; Grand Lecturer Lemuel Dwelle, of Augusta, Georgia; Past Grand Master Edward Herndon, of Gainesville, Alabama; Past Deputy Grand Master Thomas Hayward, of Tallahassee, Florida; Grand Lecturer John Delafield, Jr., of Memphis, Tennessee; Grand Lecturer John Barney, of Worthington, Franklin County, Ohio; Past Grand Master S. W. B. Carnegy, of Palmyra, Missouri; and Senior Grand Warden Joseph Foster, of St. Louis, Missouri.

At the outset, the following Officers were elected: President, Bro. John Dove; Secretary, Bro. Albert Case; Chaplain, the Rev. Bro. Dr. Wyatt. As stated by the Chairman, Bro. Delafield, the object of the Convention was twofold: (1) To produce uniformity of Masonic Work, and (2) to recommend such measures as would tend to the elevation of the Order to its due degree of respect throughout the world at large. Bro. Dove, Bro. Moore, Bro. Barney, Bro. Carnegy, and Bro. Wadsworth were appointed the Committee on Work.

As the meeting progressed, resolutions were offered as follows: "Resolved, That the Lecture on the first Degree of Masonry, as reported by the Committee, be by this Convention now adopted as the authorized work in that Degree, to be recommended to the Fraternity throughout the Union." After an animated discussion, the question was taken on the resolution, and it was then adopted by a vote of 14 to 1. The Delegate from New York dissented. The Committee then reported on the opening and closing ceremonies of the first Degree, and the reported Work was adopted. In like manner the Ritual of the second Degree and of the third Degree were presented and adopted. Three full days were consumed in deliberating on the Ritual Work.

This Convention was perhaps the most important Masonic assemblage ever held in America. It was composed of intelligent, earnest, and zealous Masons, who devoted nine days of unremitting labour to the preparation of "a report of a highly valuable character," and to perfecting a uniform Ritual and system of Lectures. This was generally disseminated and was eventually adopted by most of the Jurisdictions of this country. It is now cited as the "Baltimore Work." The Ritual produced by this Convention was a compromise of the various Rituals then in vogue in the United States.

This Convention also took other action worthy of mention here. It adopted a burial service, forms for "constituting a Lodge of Master Masons," and ceremonies for the Installing of Officers, laying of corner-stones, and dedicating of Masons' Halls. It ordered Bro. John Dove to prepare and publish a monitor to be styled The Trestle Board. The Convention also adopted a report endorsing "the establishment of a Grand National Convention possessing limited powers, to meet triennially to decide upon discrepancies in the Work, to provide for uniform certificates or diplomas, and to act as referee between Grand Lodges at variance. Whenever thirteen or more Grand Lodges shall agree to the proposal, the Convention shall be permanently formed." Pursuant to the recommendation of the Convention, Representatives from the Grand Lodges of North Carolina, Virginia, Iowa, Michigan, the District of Columbia, Missouri, and Maryland assembled at Winchester, Virginia, on May 11, 1846. Since only eight Delegates appeared, however, the Convention adjourned without transacting any business.

A Convention to form a Supreme Grand Lodge for the United States was held in Baltimore on September 23, 1847. Representatives from the Grand Lodges of North Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Mississippi, Arkansas, the District of Columbia, and Maryland were present. Letters were read from several Grand Secretaries in reply to the circular that had been sent out by the Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of Maryland. Those who replied stated that their Grand Lodges had approved of the object of the Convention, but they also gave the reasons why it was inconvenient to send Delegates. At this Convention Bro. William P. Mellen, of Mississippi, presided, while Bro. Joseph Robinson, of Maryland, acted as Secretary. A Constitution was adopted, to become effective if and when sixteen Grand Lodges should approve the measure, provided that they signified their approval before January 1, 1849. The Constitution proposed by the Convention failed to receive the approval of any sixteen Grand Lodges, so the project for the formation of a Supreme Grand Lodge failed of accomplishment.

THE MASONIC VETERAN ASSOCIATION OF MARYLAND

Pursuant to a call issued by Bro. George L. McCahan, Past Deputy Grand Master and Past Grand High Priest, twelve Brethren met on July 20, 1892, for the purpose of organising a Masonic Veteran Association of Maryland. At a subsequent meeting held July 27, 1892, rules and regulations were adopted for the government of the proposed Association. It was to be organised for the purpose of cementing and perpetuating the friendships that had resulted from long fraternal associations, and for the purpose of reciting the traditions and preserving the memorials of the Craft. Qualification for membership was to be twenty-one years of good standing as a Master Mason. It was not at all intended that this Association, whose meetings are held on the Semi-annual and Annual Communications of the Grand Lodge, on Washington's Birthday, should be a group having a large membership.

At this organisation meeting of 1892, the following Brethren, prominent in the Fraternity and ardent Workers in the several Bodies of Masonry in Maryland, were present: Bro. George L. McCahan was elected President, and Bro. William M. Isaac, Secretary.

SCHULTZ'S " HISTORY OF FREEMASONRY IN MARYLAND "

In 1849 and again in 1854, a Committee was appointed to employ some suitable person to compile a history of Freemasonry in Maryland. The effort to accomplish this was also renewed from time to time. But the voluntary and paid system alike failed, and if any work was accomplished there is no report of the result of such effort among the Proceedings of the Grand Lodge. It remained for our Bro. Edward T. Schultz, subsequently Senior Grand Warden and for many years Chairman of the Committee on Correspondence, to undertake this task as a private enterprise and as labour of love. Having spent a number of years in preparation, Bro. Schultz in 1884 began the publication of a thorough and complete history of Freemasonry in Maryland. Beginning with the dawn of Masonry in Maryland and continuing through the year 1887, this monumental work, in four volumes and having more than 2800 pages, authoritatively treats of every branch of Masonry in Maryland—including Capitular Masonry, the Council of High Priests, Cryptic Masonry, and the Order of Knights Templar. Bro. Schultz, who died on March 11, 1913, was blind for ten years preceding his death. During all that time he carried on his great undertaking with the aid of a competent amanuensis. The vast extent of Bro. Schultz's task becomes clear from the following statement which appears at the conclusion of the work: " To those unfamiliar with the extent of the investigations required for the work, it may not be uninteresting to state that over 8,000 pages of manuscript and 30,000 pages of printed matter have been examined, and no fewer than 6,000 letters have been written and their answers read and scrutinized."

CAPITULAR DEGREES

The earliest reference to the Royal Arch Degree, in either Jurisdiction—Maryland or the District of Columbia—is in an old document which establishes the fact that a " Lodge of Royal Chapter of Jerusalem or Lodge of Super-Excellent Masons " was attached to Lodge No. 7 (Pennsylvania Warrant), afterwards Lodge No. 2 (Maryland Warrant), at Chestertown, Kent County. Of this Body, Theodore Duplessis was G.:M.:Z.:, Peregrine Lethebury, G.:M.:H.:, and Edward Worrell, Secretary of the Grand Royal Arch, pro tempore. The last two Companions were residents of Chestertown, while Companion Duplessis was a resident and active Mason of Philadelphia. This indicates that the Royal Arch

Maryland Masonic Home, "Bonnie Blink," Cockeyville, Maryland.

System, whatever it may have been at that time, was first introduced into this State from Pennsylvania.

On April 9, 1787, the above-named Companions issued a Dispensation or Warrant to David Stoddard and six others to erect a "Royal Chapter of Jerusalem" which was to be attached to Lodge No. 15, afterwards Washington Lodge, No. 3, at Fell's Point, Baltimore. The Chapter thus formed was subsequently known as Washington Chapter, No. 1. In 1822 that Chapter merged with Concordia Chapter, No. 5. It exists to-day as Concordia Chapter, No. 1.

A "Royal Arch Encampment" was established in the Room of Federal Lodge, No. 15, at Washington, District of Columbia, on December 14, 1795. In the original Records of this Lodge, the fact is recited that a Grand Chapter was about to be formed, and a few months later it is stated that such a Body had been formed.

On May 8, 1797, David Kerr, Grand High Priest, issued a Dispensation to Philip P. Eckel, empowering him to act as High Priest, and under him and by his authority to assemble a sufficient number of Companions within the city of Baltimore, and there to open and hold a Chapter of Royal Arch Masons.

We have no way of knowing how many Chapters existed at that time but it is likely that Royal Arch Chapters were attached to most of the active Lodges in the State. We do know that Hiram Lodge, No. 27, at Port Tobacco, had previously resolved to open a Royal Arch Chapter. There is evidence, too, that more than one Dispensation was granted in 1797. Bro. David Kerr was at that time Grand Master, and by virtue of the power and control over the Royal Arch Degree believed to be inherent in Grand Masters, he issued Dispensation for those several Chapters. In connection with the Chapter attached to Washington Lodge those then formed the Grand Chapter of Royal Arch Masons of Maryland on June 24, 1797. This was the first Independent Grand Chapter in the United States. The Grand Chapter claiming to have been organized in Pennsylvania in 1795 was an appendage to the Grand Lodge of that State. It did not become independent until 1824. This Maryland Grand Chapter formed in 1797 became dormant about 1803, but was revived again in 1807.

Pursuant to a circular letter issued by Concordia Chapter on October 24, 1806, which proposed the formation of a Grand Chapter for the State of Maryland and the District of Columbia, duly accredited Representatives from Washington Chapter, Concordia Chapter, and St. John's Chapter, all of Baltimore, from Federal Chapter and Washington Naval Chapter, of Washington, and from Potomac Chapter, of Georgetown, met in Convention at Washington, District of Columbia, on January 21, 1807, and organized the Grand Chapter as proposed. Companion Dr. John Crawford, Grand Master of Maryland, was chosen Grand High Priest, and Robert Rankin, of Washington, District of Columbia, Grand Secretary. A Constitution that provided for semi-annual meetings, to be held alternately in Baltimore and Washington, was adopted. Three hundred copies of the Constitution were ordered to be printed with the Proceedings of the Convention. A Committee was appointed to procure a Seal bearing an appropriate device, and with that the Grand Chapter closed to meet in Baltimore during the following May. The only known copy of these Proceedings is fortunately in the Maryland archives. It furnishes our only information regarding the Grand Chapter at that time.

By the year 1814 the Grand Chapter was evidently in a languishing condition, however, for on November 9 of that year Delegates from Chapter No. 1 of Washington, District of Columbia, from Chapter No. 2, of Baltimore, and from Chapter No. 3 (Federal), of Washington, District of Columbia, assembled at Baltimore for the purpose "of revising and amending the Constitution of the Grand Royal Arch Chapter." On the following day a revised Constitution was submitted by the Committee and adopted. Companion Philip P. Eckel was elected Grand High Priest, and Eli Simpkins, of Washington, District of Columbia, Grand Secretary. The Grand Officers were then Installed, and the Grand Chapter was closed to meet in Washington on the second Monday in November 1815. From November 9, 1814, we have a full Record of the Grand Chapter, both written and printed. In the Proceedings of the Grand Chapter, dated May 1826, it is recorded that Companion Jesse Green, of Suffolk, State of Delaware, presented a claim for money loaned to the Grand Chapter in 1804. This would, of course, indicate that the Grand Chapter was active at that date.

Some Companions of other Jurisdictions are of the opinion that because the Maryland Grand Chapter cannot show a continuous Record from 1797, or even from 1807, then it must date its organisation from November 9, 1814. If this rule regarding continuity of Records were to be rigidly enforced, many older Masonic Bodies would have to modify the date of their organisation, since there are only a few Lodges a century old that have not had a period of dormancy at some time or other.

The language employed at the meeting of the Maryland Grand Chapter held on November 9, 1814, is too plain to warrant the slightest suggestion that it was held for the purpose of forming a new Body, for the circular explicitly stated that the Representatives of the three Chapters named were to assemble "for the purpose of revising and amending the Constitution of the Grand Royal Arch Chapter." The Constitution which was to be thus amended was the one adopted at a Convention held in Washington on January 21, 1807, and attended by Delegates from six Chapters of the Capitular Jurisdiction of Maryland. This last-named Convention revived a dormant Grand Chapter, not a dead one, a Grand Chapter that had been organised in 1797. It had later enlarged its territorial Jurisdiction so as to include the Chapters of the District of Columbia which had declined to participate in its original formation.

The Companions of Maryland of that date certainly believed that their Grand Chapter had been organised in 1797. This belief was entertained by the General Grand Secretary, Companion John Abbott, for in his list of Grand Chapters drawn up in 1826 he gives the date of the organisation of the Grand Chapter of Maryland as June 24, 1797.

After the reorganization of the Grand Chapter, the old Chapters—Washington Naval Chapter and Concordia Chapter—which participated in the 1807 organisation, received Charters of Recognition. They were then known as Chapter No. 4 and Chapter No. 5, respectively. A little later, Brooke Chapter, of Alexandria, then in the District of Columbia, and Potomac Chapter, of Georgetown, also received Charters of Recognition. They were known as Chapter No. 6 and Chapter No. 8, respectively. Prior to the issuance of the Charter to Potomac Chapter No. 8, an entirely new Chapter—No. 7—was formed and Chartered in Baltimore. The Chapters of the District of Columbia withdrew on January 24, 1824, and formed the Grand Chapter of the District of Columbia. On May 9, 1842, they again reunited, however, and remained under the Jurisdiction of Maryland until March 26, 1867, when they again withdrew and formed the present Grand Chapter of the District of Columbia.

MARK MASTER'S LODGES

It is not positively known when the Mark Degrees were first introduced into Maryland, but that is thought to have taken place some time about the year 1800. The Mark Master Degree was Worked in Mark Lodges attached to the regular Lodges, just as the Royal Arch Degree was Worked in Chapters attached to the Lodges. There are traces of a number of these Mark Lodges that were in this Jurisdiction. They were: Concordia, Amicable, Cassia, Lebanon, Warren, and Phoenix, of Baltimore; Door to Virtue, of Uniontown; Union, of Newmarket; Columbia of Fredericktown; Mount Moriah, of Hagerstown; and Washington Naval and Lebanon, of the District of Columbia. All those except Union, of Newmarket, and Lebanon, of Baltimore, were attached to the Lodges whose names they bore. Many of them were existing before the re-organisation of the Grand Chapter in 1814. After its formation they received Charters of Recognition.

Those Mark Lodges were more or less active until November 1822. Then by a resolution, the Grand Chapter ordered that after January 13, 1824, no Dispensations or Warrants should be granted to establish Mark Lodges other than those connected with a Chapter, and that all Warrants and Charters theretofore issued should be called in.

Due to the diversity of the Work in the subordinate Chapters, Companion George L. McCahan was appointed Chairman of a Committee to revise the Ritual. At the Convocation of the Grand Chapter in 1870, this Committee exemplified the Mark Master, Past Master, Most Excellent Master, and Royal Arch Degrees as arranged by the Committee. This Ritual was adopted by the Grand Chapter, and has since been the Work of the Degrees mentioned.

The observance of the Centennial Anniversary of the Grand Chapter which was held in Baltimore on June 24, 1897, was attended with ceremonies of a most interesting and impressive character. The programme arranged for the occasion was in keeping with the importance of the event. At that time there were 19 constituent Chapters having a membership of 1861 Royal Arch Masons. At the one hundred twenty-fifth Anniversary which was held on June 23, 1922, the Returns of the preceding November showed that there were then 24 Chapters, having a membership of 8230. Plainly, the growth of Royal Arch Masonry in Maryland has kept pace with the increase in population of the State. In the Grand Chapter's existence of one hundred and thirty-four years, it was only during the Morgan anti-Masonic period from 1830 to 1840 that it declined in membership. To-day (1935) the Grand Chapter is composed of 26 Chapters, having a membership of 8046 Royal Arch Masons. Seventy-five Companions have presided over the destinies of the Grand Chapter of Royal Arch Masonry in Maryland. The longest period of service in that station was that of Companion Joseph K. Stapleton, who was Grand High Priest for twenty-four years.

CAPITULAR MASONRY AS A CONSTITUENT OF THE GENERAL GRAND CHAPTER

A letter of November 15, 1815, from Companion Thomas Smith Webb, General High Priest, which solicited a union of the Grand Chapter of Maryland with the General Grand Chapter, was referred to a Committee that subsequently reported as follows: "That in their opinion, no injury can result to this Grand Chapter in appointing a Delegate to meet the General Grand Chapter at their next Convocation." The recommendation of the Committee was adopted, and Companion Philip P. Eckel was appointed to represent the Grand Chapter in the General Grand Body that was to assemble at New York City in September 1816.

On November 11, 1816, Grand High Priest Eckel made a report relative to his "Embassy to the General Grand Chapter." The Committee to which the report was referred thereupon recommended the adoption "of the condition proposed and accepted for its union with the General Grand Chapter; it being considered as not interfering, in any manner whatsoever, with our present mode of Work." The "condition" agreed upon between the General Grand Chapter and the Grand Chapter represented by Companions Eckel and Edes, was as follows: "The Grand Chapter of the State of Maryland and the District of Columbia is willing to support the Constitution of the General Grand Chapter. It will not grant any Warrant out of its District and will discountenance all Chapters formed contrary to the General Grand Constitution, but requests that it shall not be forced to alter its mode of Working, if any difference should exist at present, and to be received on an equal footing with the other Grand Chapters." The "mode of Work" which the Delegates from Maryland insisted the Grand Chapter should not be required to alter, referred, it is supposed, more particularly to its manner of conferring the Select Degree, which was then and for many years thereafter under the auspices of the Chapters. The Grand Chapter of Maryland, which thus in 1816 became a constituent of the General Grand Chapter, has ever continued one of the latter's most loyal adherents.

The Grand Chapter of Maryland has often been signally honoured by having its members elected to Office in the General Grand Chapter. Among those have been the following: Companion Philip P. Eckel was elected General Grand Scribe in 1816 and again in 1819. Companion Joseph K. Stapleton was elected General Grand Scribe in 1829, 1832, and 1835. In 1838, 1841, 1844, 1847, and again in 1850, he was elected Deputy General Grand High Priest. Companion Charles Gilman was elected General Grand Secretary in 1835, 1838, 1841, 1844, and 1847, General Grand King in 1853, and General Grand High Priest in 1856. Companion Benjamin B. French was elected General Grand Secretary in 1850, 1853, and 1856. In 1871, Companion Charles H. Ohr was elected General Grand King. Companion George L. McCahan was elected General Grand High Priest in 1894. Companion John M. Carter was elected General Grand Treasurer in 1900, 1903, 1906, 1909, and 1912. Companion Thomas J. Shryock was elected General Grand Treasurer in 1915. Companion Gustav A. Eitel was elected General Grand Treasurer in 1918, 1921, 1924, 1927, 1930, and 1933.

The Triennial Convocation has been held in Baltimore on the following dates: November 28, 1832, with General Grand High Priest Edward Livingston presiding. On September 19, 1871, with General Grand High Priest James M. Austin presiding. On October 12, 1897, with General Grand High Priest George L. McCahan presiding. On October 2, 1918, with General Grand High Priest George E. Corson presiding.

CHAPTERS ORGANISED AND CHARTERS GRANTED BY THE GRAND CHAPTER

On December 2, 1822, Washington Chapter, No. 1, and Concordia Chapter, No. 5, were consolidated as Concordia Chapter, No. 1. Phoenix Chapter, No. 7, was the first to be regularly organised by the Grand Chapter. That took place on November 10, 1817. This Chapter has had an uninterrupted existence and is to-day in a flourishing condition. Charters subsequently issued were the following: Those still in existence are indicated by an asterisk. *Jerusalem Chapter, No. 9, of Baltimore, November 15, 1820; Enoch Chapter, No. 10, of Fredericktown, November 15, 1820; Mount Moriah Chapter, No. 11, of Hagerstown, January 13, 1824; Wirgman Chapter, No. 12, of Baltimore, May 18, 1825; Union Chapter, No. 13, of Baltimore, May 17, 1826; Livingston Chapter, No. 14, of Cambridge, May 24, 1833; Columbia Chapter, No. 15, of Washington, District of Columbia, May 21, 1840; Washington Chapter, No. 16, of Washington, District of Columbia, November 8, 1847; *Chesapeake Chapter, No. 17, of Salisbury, November 12, 1850; *Salem Chapter, No. 18, of Cumberland, November 9, 1858; *St. John's Chapter, No. 19, of Baltimore, November 12, 1860; Mount Vernon Chapter, No. 20, of Washington, District of Columbia, November 10, 1863; *Adoniram Chapter, No. 21, of Baltimore, November 14, 1865; *Talbot Chapter, No. 22, of Easton, November 14, 1865; *Enoch Chapter, No. 23, of Frederick, November 13, 1866; Somerset Chapter, No. 24, of Princess Anne, November 12, 1867; *Mount Vernon Chapter, No. 25, of Annapolis, November 13, 1871; *Ohr Chapter, No. 26, of Frostburg, November 13, 1871; *Ithiel Chapter, No. 27, of Hagerstown, November 11, 1872; *Druid Chapter, No. 28, of Baltimore, November 12, 1873; *Hayward Chapter, No. 29, of Cambridge, November 14, 1882; *Garfield Chapter, No. 30, of Lonaconing, April 29, 1885; *Carroll Chapter, No. 31, of Westminster, November 8, 1887; *Keystone Chapter, No. 32, of Hyattsville, November 14, 1893; *James F. Allen Chapter, No. 33, of Rockville, November 12, 1895; *Cecil Chapter, No. 34, of Elkton, November 9, 1897; *Zeredathan Chapter, No. 35, of Laurel, November 13, 1900; *Edenton Chapter, No. 36, of Denton, November 12, 1901; Joppa Chapter, No. 37, of Belair, November 3, 1905; *Maryland Chapter, No. 38, of Kensington, November 18, 1909; *Belvidere Chapter, No. 39, of Arlington (Baltimore), November 17, 1910; *Baltimore Chapter, No. 40, of Baltimore, November 17, 1910; *Doric Chapter, No. 41, of Pocomoke City, November 22, 1923, Charter surrendered 1933; *Tuscan Chapter, No. 42, of Govans (Baltimore), December 9, 1924, and *Harford Chapter, No. 43, of Aberdeen, December 9, 1924.

COUNCIL OF HIGH PRIESTS

On April 27, 1824, six Companions met in the Masonic Hall at Baltimore. Joseph K. Stapleton was made Chairman. Ephraim Barker then explained the object of the meeting. A Committee was appointed to carry it into effect and with authority to assemble the High Priests when ready. Pursuant to this plan seventeen Companions assembled and organised this Council on May 7, 1824. The Committee reported Rules and Regulations consisting of nine Articles. Those were adopted. The association was to be known as the "Council of High Priests of Maryland," and the incumbent Grand High Priest was to be ex officio President of the Council. During one hundred six years there have been only a few unimportant amendments to the Articles adopted that day, and the Constitution signed by the newly Anointed High Priests in 1824 is today essentially the same as it was at that time.

Companion Schultz, distinguished historian of Maryland Masonry, always believed that a Council of High Priests existed in this State prior to 1824, and that in that year it was merely reorganised. While there is some reason for this belief, unfortunately no document or other Record can be found to support the theory. We can with absolute certainty declare, however, that Maryland was the first State to commit the Degree to the care of an organised Body. The Maryland Council is undoubtedly the oldest in existence. The Council of Massachusetts, organised in November 1826, was next to be formed. It was followed by that of Ohio in 1828.

Although in all other States the High Priests-elect were recommended to submit themselves to the ceremony of Anointing and Consecration, membership in the Order was theirs by right of election. Rejection by the Council of High Priests did not prevent service in the Chapter. Maryland was for a long time peculiar in that rejection by the Council of High Priests did prevent Installation. This custom is now established in several other States, and its adoption is now being discussed in still others.

Several Companions from other Jurisdictions have been Anointed by the High Priests of Maryland. Of those, the most distinguished was Albert Pike, of Arkansas, who was Anointed in 1853. When the General Grand Chapter met at Little Rock, Arkansas, in 1903, Maryland's Most Excellent President witnessed an exemplification of the Ritual used by the High Priests of Arkansas and known as the "Albert Pike Work." This so closely resembles the Maryland Work as to prove that Companion Pike was impressed with the Order conferred in this Council, and that he had later used it extensively in the Ritual which he introduced into his own State.

Frequent efforts have been made to persuade all Councils to adopt a Work which originated in Ohio and is known as the "Chamberlain Work." When the General Grand Chapter convened in Baltimore in 1897, the Maryland Council was requested to exemplify that Work. This the Maryland Council declined to do, but it did permit Companion Chamberlain and his associates to confer the Order on Past Grand High Priest Henry I. Clark, of North Carolina.

The High Priests of Maryland have steadfastly adhered to the Work conferred in this Council before any other was in existence—Work which is almost sacred to us because so many distinguished Companions whose names will long live in the annals of Maryland Masonry have been associated with it. We hope that those who come after us will carry it on through the years, unchanged in form and breathing that spirit of love and devotion with which it was endowed by its authors.

We may well feel proud of the men whose names appear upon the Roll which our Secretary so carefully guards, for probably no other Masonic Body has ever enrolled so large a proportion of distinguished citizens and devoted Masons. Heading the list is the name of Philip P. Eckel, who presided at the organization of the Council. For more than twenty-five years Companion Eckel was one of the most active Masons in Maryland. He was known throughout the whole country for his zeal and energy. Bro. Eckel, who was an authority on Masonic law and Work, made his home headquarters for the Fraternity. There the Brethren resorted for consultation and instruction. It was not uncommon for distinguished Brethren from this and foreign countries to make his house their home while in Baltimore.

The Chairman of the preliminary meeting which was held in 1824 was Joseph K. Stapleton, a North Point Defender. A man of great ability, Companion Stapleton served as Grand High Priest of the Grand Chapter and as President of the Council for twenty-four years. He was an able second to that brilliant statesman and sturdy soldier General Benjamin C. Howard, who served as Grand Master from 1824 to 1841, and who, by his wisdom, moderation, and fortitude, encouraged the fainthearted, restrained the impetuous, and safely piloted the Fraternity of Maryland through the dark period of persecution due to the "Morgan excitement."

In addition to Companion Eckel and Companion Stapleton the following distinguished Masons were also present in that brilliant assemblage of May 7, 1824: Major George Keyser, who had participated in the battles of Bladensburg and North Point; Christian G. Peters, a defender of North Point and at different times Grand Lecturer and Grand Treasurer of the Grand Lodge; Jacob Small, mayor of Baltimore; Hezekiah Niles, founder of the Niles Register, a writer of great ability, a popular Mason throughout the entire country; Dr. John D. Readell, a learned scholar and brilliant wit, who was Grand Master of Maryland in 1852; Richard Makubbin, Secretary of the Grand Lodge for seven years; and Benjamin Edes, Thomas Phoenix, and Ephraim Barker, all distinguished for activity in every branch of Masonry.

The following eleven Grand Masters have been Anointed in the Council: Charles Gilman, Grand Master from 1842 to 1848, who came to Maryland from New Hampshire, where he had served as Grand Master. He was General Grand High Priest from 1856 to 1859. In 1849 he went to California where he was instrumental in forming the first Masonic Lodge of that State. That Lodge later became the Grand Lodge of California. Charles H. Ohr was Grand Master from 1849 to 1851, Grand High Priest from 1868 to 1870, and General Grand High Scribe in 1871. Companion Ohr ably assisted in restoring the Fraternity to a prosperous condition. In his efforts to resuscitate dormant Bodies, he was at times Worshipful Master of four different Lodges. Charles Webb was Grand Master in 1853, 1854, 1855, and 1857. Bro. Webb was only thirty-three years old when first elected to this high Office. His administrations were harmonious and successful. Charles Goodwin was Grand Master in 1858. Bro. Goodwin served only one term; he declined re-election. He was noted for his profound knowledge of Masonic law and usage. John N. McJilton was Grand Master in 1862, and Grand High Priest the same year. Bro. McJilton was a clergyman of the Protestant Episcopal Church. For a number of years he wrote the reports on correspondence of the Grand Lodge and of the Grand Chapter. John H. B. Latrobe was Grand Master from 1870 to 1877. The name of this distinguished lawyer, orator, author, and inventor is so intimately connected with so many enterprises for the advancement of the civil, social, and industrial life of Baltimore that it has become part of the history of the city. John M. Carter was Grand Master in 1878 and 1879, Grand High Priest in 1884 and 1885, and Treasurer of the General Grand Chapter from 1900 to 1915. The Masons of Maryland bestowed upon him all the honours within their gift. John S. Tyson was Grand Master from 1880 to 1884, Grand High Priest in 1877, and for several years a member of the Committee on Correspondence in the Grand Lodge. Thomas J. Shryock was Grand Master from 1885 until his death in 1918. The increase in membership of our Fraternity and the satisfactory financial condition of the Grand Lodge eloquently bespeak the praises of Bro. Shryock's remarkable ability to govern the Craft. He was Treasurer of the General Grand Chapter from 1915 to 1918. Charles C. Homer, Grand Master in 1919 and 1920 and Grand High Priest in 1919, although president of two banks and connected with other financial institutions, devoted a great deal of his time to the welfare of all the Masonic Grand Bodies. Warren S. Seipp was Grand Master from 1921 to 1930, Grand High Priest in 1927, Past Grand Master of the Grand Council, and General Deputy Grand Master of the General Grand Council. His death occurred on April 11, 1930, during his tenth term as Grand Master.

Since 746 names have been signed to the Roll, it would be impossible to mention all who have been distinguished by their devotion to the Fraternity. We shall, therefore, refer only briefly to a few of those whose names are most familiar.

Among Masons of the earlier years, we shall mention Joseph Robinson, who was captured by the British troops at North Point, Hugh Devallin, and Thomas W. Hall. Those three were part of that colour guard around which the scattered remnants of Masonry rallied in the early days of trial and adversity. Daniel A. Piper, a Grand Lecturer who visited every section of the State, put new life into the Lodges still in existence, resuscitated those that were dormant, formed new Lodges from the scattered remnants of the Fraternity, and inspired all with his zeal and earnestness. In addition to those already mentioned, we may fittingly add the names of Walter Ball, Thomas Hayward, and B. B. French, all of whom were active and prominent in Masonic Labours.

Masons of later years whom we shall mention include George L. McCahan, General High Priest for three years, and Secretary of the Council for twenty-two years. Although he was a strict Ritualist, Bro. McCahan was ever endeavouring to make the Masonic ceremonies more interesting and more impressive. William H. Shryock, Grand High Priest, who laboured zealously to make the rendition of the Ritual uniform in all Chapters. As Treasurer of the Grand Lodge, Bro. Shryock won the gratitude of the Fraternity by his able management of its finances. In addition to those mentioned, we may also fittingly name Robert K. Martin, David C. Avery, William H. Clark, Jacob H. Medairy, Henry C. Larrabee, and Edward T. Schultz, all of whom have laboured zealously for Masonry.

In 1877 it was decided to elect the President of this Council by ballot. Although this plan has been followed ever since that date, only seven Companions have been elected during the fifty-seven years that have elapsed. Companion James W. Bowers, who was elected in 1877, presided continuously from then to his death in 1907. The beauty and sublimity of the Order as conferred by Companion Bowers will never be forgotten by those whom he Anointed. Companion John M. Carter, who was elected in 1908, was re-elected annually until his death in 1915. Companion James F. Allen was elected in 1915, Companion Gustav A. Eitel, in 1919, Companion William B. King, in 1926, Companion Charles W. Zimmermann, in 1929, and Companion Richard W. Worthington in 1932.

THE CRYPTIC RITE

The Royal and Select Masters' Degrees have been so closely allied to Royal Arch Masonry in our Jurisdiction that the history of the one is not complete without reference to that of the other. One of the Degrees of this System, the Select Degree, was known and Worked in Maryland before the formation of the Grand Chapter, indeed, before the organisation of any Chapter independent of Lodge authority.

Although the Royal and Select Masters' Degrees are undoubtedly of European origin, the first mention of them is found in Records having to do with this country. The earliest authentic evidence of conferring of the Royal Master's Degree shows that it took place in Columbian Council, No. 1, of New York City, in 1807.

Bro. Henry Wilmans, Grand Inspector-General in 1792, founded a Lodge of Perfection in Baltimore City. Later in the same year he founded a Grand Council of Select Masters. Bro. Wilmans came from an ancient and prominent family in Bremen, Germany. It is not known when he came to America, but we find that he and his brother, Charles Henry, were engaged in the shipping business on Gay Street, Baltimore, in 1790. Bro. Wilman's Masonic record was like the course of a meteor—brilliant but of short duration. In addition to his positions already mentioned, we find him in 1793 as the Charter Master or First Master of Concordia Lodge, No. 13, as Deputy Grand Master that same year, and in the following year as Grand Master of Masons in Maryland. Bro. Wilmans died in 1795.

“ Documentary evidence establishes the fact that Philip P. Eckel and Hezekiah Niles were by regular succession possessors of all the rights, privileges, immunities, and powers vested in any way whatsoever in the said Grand Council of Select Masons, &c., &c.” Bro. Eckel and Bro. Niles conferred the Select Degree upon Jeremy L. Cross on the occasion of his visit to Baltimore in 1817—and those Companions gave him verbal permission to confer the Degree upon such as he might find worthy and qualified. But—“ under sanction of a Chapter Warrant and without fee.” In 1818, Bro. Jeremy Cross, having previously obtained the Select Degree, in some manner became “ possessed ” of the Royal Degree as well, joined the two together under one government, and out of the plenitude of his own power established a new system which he christened “ Councils of Royal and Select Masters.” Of this he at once became the missionary and apostle. This 1818 is the earliest date at which the title “ Royal and Select Masters ” was used. All reference to any such Degree as having been in existence earlier than 1818 must be regarded as a mistake or a fabrication. “ By virtue of the powers he claimed to have received from Bro. Eckel and Bro. Niles, Jeremy Cross established some thirty-three Councils in various parts of the United States. He also delegated his powers to others, who in like manner issued Warrants for Councils of Royal and Select Masters.”

In 1817 the Grand Chapter of Maryland adopted a resolution permitting all Chapters to open and hold “ Chapters ” of Select Masters, and to confer the Select Master's Degree upon such as they deemed worthy to receive it. From 1824 to 1852, only the Select Master's Degree was Worked in the Chapters of Maryland. After 1852 both Degrees were Worked in Councils specially convened for the purpose. These Degrees were conferred after conferring of the Most Excellent Degree and just before conferring the Royal Arch Degree.

Such were the practice and teachings regarding the Council Degrees in this Jurisdiction until the year 1872. Then, in order to be “ in unison ” with the majority of the other States that had regular Grand Council organisations, the Grand Chapter of Maryland adopted a resolution which prohibited the conferring of any Degrees other than those of Mark Master, Past Master, Most Excellent Master, and Royal Arch. Councils were subsequently formed, and on May 12, 1874, Representatives of five Councils met in the city of Baltimore and organised the Grand Council of Royal and Select Masters of the State of Maryland. Companion George L. McCahan was elected Most Illustrious Grand Master; Companion James W. Powers was elected Deputy Illustrious Grand Master; Companion Stephen C. Bush was elected Grand Principal Conductor of the Work; Companion John T. Gorsuch was elected Grand Recorder; Companion Ferdinand J. S. Gorgas was elected Grand Treasurer; Companion Edwin L. Parker was elected Grand Captain of the Guard; Companion Samuel was elected Grand Conductor of the Council; and Companion Harry H. Flack was elected Grand Steward.

Councils were subsequently Chartered for Westminster, Easton, Cambridge, Frederick, Cumberland, Salisbury, Rockville, Lonaconing, Hagerstown, Frostburg, Hyattsville, and Annapolis. At this time (1935) there are sixteen Councils in existence, having a membership of 4049. The four Councils in Baltimore have a membership of 2546. This is included in the total membership figure given above. Maryland was one of the nine Grand Grand Councils that ratified the Constitution for the formation of the General Grand Council in 1881. Honours in the General Grand Council have been accorded to Companion Henry Clay Larrabee, who was elected General Grand Master in 1906, and to Companion Warren S. Seipp, who was the General Grand Deputy Master when he died on April 11, 1930.

KNIGHTS TEMPLAR IN MARYLAND

The history of Maryland Commandery, No. 1, originally known as Encampment No. 1, is the history of Knight Templarism in Maryland up to the year 1859, since that was the only Body which conferred the Order of Knighthood in this Jurisdiction, at least from the year 1800 until that later date. "By referring to Volume I of Schultz's History of Freemasonry in Maryland, it will be seen that the complete organisation of Encampment No. 1 took place in the year 1790." Schultz's possession of that Diploma proves the existence of Encampment No. 1 in the years 1802 and 1812. Its existence in 1807 is proved by a reference to it in the Baltimore City Directory of that year, and its existence from 1814 to 1824 is established by Records and other documents in the archives of the Grand Commandery of Pennsylvania. Maryland Encampment No. 1 helped to organise the Grand Encampment of that State in 1814, and was a constituent of it until its demise about the year 1824. Then Maryland Encampment No. 1 became dormant. In 1828 Joseph K. Stapleton and others obtained the consent and assistance of Bro. Philip P. Eckel in reviving the Encampment of Templars in Maryland. Since Bro. Eckel had been the last presiding Officer of the Encampment, his consent was necessary for reviving it. After long and faithful service in the interest of the Fraternity, Bro. Eckel had withdrawn from active participation in it. At the solicitation of those Sir Knights, however, he was induced to issue a call for a meeting of the Encampment's former members. This was held, and Officers were elected and Installed on Good Friday, April 4, 1828. Sir Knight Eckel was elected Most Eminent Grand Master (Grand Commander). Following that re-organisation, the Encampment was prosperous for some few years. Meetings eventually became infrequent, however, and finally the Encampment ceased Work altogether in 1838. That was the anti-Masonic period. There is then no record of any other meeting until April 7, 1843. On April 12, 1843, the Encampment was revived a second time. In 1859 the name of Encampment No. 1 was changed to Maryland Commandery No. 1, and the designation of the presiding Officer—Grand Commander—was changed to Eminent Commander. Sir Knight Charles Gilman was the first to bear that designation. Notwithstanding the fact that the membership of Maryland Commandery No. 1 from time to time had been depleted for the purpose of forming new Commanderies—this Commandery is the mother of seven others subsequently formed in this State—Maryland Commandery No. 1 to-day still is in a flourishing condition.

At the request of thirteen members of Maryland Commandery, No. 1 and five members of other Jurisdictions, the Grand Encampment granted a Charter for Baltimore Commandery, No. 2 on September 16, 1859. On September 18, 1868, Charters were granted for Monumental Commandery, No. 3 and for Jacques de Molay Commandery, No. 4, at Frederick. On December 12, 1870, the Representatives and Past Commanders of Maryland Commandery, No. 1, Baltimore Commandery, No. 2, and Monumental Commandery, No. 3 met in convention for the purpose of forming a Grand Commandery for the State of Maryland. After stating the objects of the convention, the Past Commanders retired and the Representatives then elected the following Sir Knights as Officers of the Grand Commandery: Sir Charles H. Mann, Right Eminent Grand Commander; Sir Francis Lincoln, Very Eminent D. Grand Commander; Sir Michael Miller, Eminent Grand Generalissimo; Sir Edward T. Schultz, Eminent Grand Captain-General; Sir John McCron, Eminent Grand Prelate; Sir Charles T. Sisco, Eminent Grand Treasurer; Sir Frank J. Kugler, Eminent Grand Recorder; Sir Byron H. Holmes, Eminent Grand Senior Warden; and Sir Hermon L. Emmons, Jr., Eminent Grand Junior Warden. Those Officers were Installed at a called meeting of the Grand Encampment which was held at Baltimore on January 23, 1871 with Right Eminent Sir J. L. Hutchinson as Acting Most Eminent Grand Master. The Eminent Grand Marshal, Sir Edward Masson, then proclaimed the Grand Commandery of the State of Maryland to be duly Constituted and its Officers to be Installed. The Grand Encampment of the United States was closed.

The next Commandery to be Constituted in Maryland was Crusade Commandery, No. 5. It was established on May 10, 1871.

TRIENNIAL CONCLAVE OF THE GRAND ENCAMPMENT: 1871

At their Session held in St. Louis on September 1868, the Grand Encampment and the General Grand Chapter accepted an invitation to hold their next Session in Baltimore. At once the Commanderies of Baltimore set to work to raise funds and to mature plans for the proper reception and entertainment of the distinguished Brethren who composed those Grand Bodies. Every Grand and subordinate Commandery in the United States and Canada was invited to attend. When one recalls that the Maryland Grand Commandery was at that time only eight months old, and that it had then only five subordinate Commanderies with a total membership of fewer than 500 Sir Knights, it must be admitted that this was a bold undertaking. As the sequel showed, however, the Sir Knights of Baltimore were equal to the occasion. The Templar parade of the Conclave included 12 Divisions. Twenty-five Grand Commanderies and 77 subordinate Commanderies were represented. Thirty-three bands furnished music for the occasion. Some 6000 visiting Sir Knights, together with the local Commanderies, were in the parade. As has been said, this gathering was the first complete and thorough reunion of Masons of the United States that had been held since the close of the war between the States.

From that time on, the career of the Grand Commandery of Maryland has been a successful one. The Grand Commandery has consistently increased the number of subordinate Commanderies, as the following list of those established shows: Antioch Commandery, No. 6, at Cumberland (established January 14, 1873); Palestine Commandery, No. 7, at Annapolis (March 15, 1873); Beauseant Commandery, No. 8, at Baltimore (May 10, 1876); St. Bernard Commandery, No. 9, at Hagerstown (November 27, 1894); Chesapeake Commandery, No. 10, at Easton (April 15, 1895); Thomas J. Shryock Commandery, No. 11, at Salisbury (November 26, 1895); St. Elmo Commandery, No. 12, at Hyattsville (November 26, 1895); Montgomery Commandery, No. 13, at Rockville (November 25, 1902); Cambridge Commandery, No. 14, at Cambridge (December 16, 1921); and Har-Ce Commandery, No. 15, at Havre de Grace (May 14, 1924). At present there are no extinct Commanderies on the Register.

To-day (1935), after sixty-five years of existence, the Maryland Grand Commandery numbers 3804 Sir Knights as members. Since the Constitution of this Grand Body, 62 Grand Commanders, all active in the affairs of the various York Rite Bodies, have presided over its affairs. Without question, their efforts have brought this Grand Body to its present state of excellence.

SCOTTISH RITE MASONRY IN MARYLAND

A Lodge of Perfection was Instituted at Baltimore on December 21, 1792, by Illustrious Bro. Henry Wilmans, Grand Inspector-General of the Rite, who a few years later was Grand Master of Masons of Maryland. As to the source of his powers, nothing can be ascertained. Since the signatures of seventy-six of the most prominent Brethren of our State appear on the Constitution and Laws of the Baltimore Body, the inference is clear that in those days it must have been a very living creation. Unfortunately, no Records or other documents remain. The only reference to this Body that has been discovered is in the Proceedings of Concordia Lodge, under date of 1804. There it is recorded that "the sum of $150 was paid on account of the Sublime Lodge."

At about the time this Lodge of Perfection was formed, another Body of the High Degrees was established in Baltimore: That was Rose Croix Chapter La Vérité, which was brought to Baltimore between 1791 and 1793 by French Brethren who were refugees from San Domingo. The Rite Worked by those Brethren consisted of seven Degrees. The Rose Croix Degree was the highest, it being the Eighteenth Degree of the Rite of Perfection as well as the Eighteenth Degree of the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite. That was called the French or Modern Rite. In the expressive language of the French Brethren, this Body "went to sleep" about the year 1800. In 1919, however, it was aroused by Louis Leloup, Grand Inspector of the Grand Consistory of Chiefs of Exalted Masonry of New York, and revived under the distinctive title, Triple Unity Lodge. In the following year, that Lodge received a Charter from the Grand Consistory of New York. Portions of the Chapter Records, written in French, still exist. From them we learn that on October 19, 1819, John Laborde, Pére Lanney, and Louis Leloup, ancient members of Chapter la Vérité established at Baltimore about 1791, conferred the Degrees upon nine Brethren who then formed a "Chapter Provisionary" and subsequently obtained the Charter referred to above. The Chapter was duly Constituted on September 21, 1820, and the Officers were Installed by Louis Leloup, Deputy Grand Inspector. Regulations for the government of the Chapter consisted of twenty Articles. Degrees from the Fourth Degree to the Eighteenth Degree were divided into six classes, fees for the whole being fifty dollars. Thirty-two signatures are subscribed to the document, among them being those of many prominent members of the Craft.

The Grand Consistory at New York also issued a Charter, consisting of three closely printed pages and bearing the same date as that on the Chapter Charter, to a number of Brethren already mentioned in this article. That Charter empowered them to erect a Grand Council of Princes of the Royal Secret at Baltimore. Records and other documents still in existence are clear evidence that both the Chapter and the Council were active Working Bodies. With the close of the year 1826, however, no further Records seem to have been kept, and in consequence nothing is now known about the activities of either Chapter or Council after that date.

In the summer of 1860, the Rev. William D. Haley—Thirty-third Degree—of Washington, District of Columbia, a member of the Supreme Council for the Southern Jurisdiction of the United States and Deputy Inspector-General for the State of Maryland, visited Baltimore and Communicated the Degrees of this Rite to nine Brethren. Those men then applied for and received letters of Constitution empowering them to form a Grand Consistory for the State of Maryland. Under this Charter, the Grand Consistory of Sublime Princes of the Royal Secret—Thirty-second Degree for the State of Maryland was organised. During the same month a Chapter of Rose Croix was also organised. Sovereign Grand Commander Pike, assisted by Bro. Albert G. Mackey, Bro. B. B. French, Bro. William D. Haley, Bro. A. T. Pearson, and others of the Southern Jurisdiction, together with several Brethren of the Northern Jurisdiction, Constituted and Installed the Officers of both the Grand Consistory and the Chapter of Rose Croix. Shortly after that, the war between the States broke out, and in consequence no Labour of any kind was performed by either Body.

In June 1867, Bro. Thomas A. Cunningham was invested with the Thirty-third Degree, and Constituted as Active Inspector-General for the State of Maryland. At about the same date, Bro. William S. Rockwell, of Georgia, Lieutenant Grand Commander of the Supreme Council, took up his residence in Baltimore. With the assistance of Bro. Cunningham, Bro. Rockwell Communicated the Degrees up to the Thirty-second Degree upon fifteen members between the years 1867 and 1870. Together with the survivors of the old Consistory, these members then reorganised the Grand Consistory on January 6, 1870. Later that year, from May 2 to May 7, the Supreme Council held its Session in the Masonic Temple at Baltimore. Sovereign Grand Commander Pike and members of the Supreme Council from various parts of the Jurisdiction were present at that meeting. During the Session, the Grand Consistory of Maryland was publicly Constituted and the Officers were Installed by the Grand Officers of the Supreme Council. Though Dispensations had been issued for the formation of three Lodges of Perfection, a Council of Princes of Jerusalem, a Chapter of Rose Croix, and a Council of Kadosh, only the two first-named Bodies were organised.

On December 27, 1873, a Charter was granted for the formation of Mizpah Lodge of Perfection, No. 3. This Body was Constituted on January 28, 1874, by Grand Commander Richard H. Snowden. At once it started on a vigorous and prosperous existence. It is doubtful whether or not in the entire Southern Jurisdiction there ever was a Body of the High Degrees that performed the Work more effectively than this Lodge. Bro. Ferdinand J. S. Gorgas was the T.P. Master from the time of the organisation of the Lodge in 1874, to September 24, 1881. On that date the Charter was surrendered to the Grand Consistory.

ORION CHAPTER NO. 1—KNIGHTS ROSE CROIX DE H.:K.:D.:M.:

This Body was Chartered on June 26, 1874. Its first meeting was held on September 21, of that year, and the Chapter was regularly Constituted on the following December 28. Its meetings were held regularly and Degrees from the Sixteenth Degree to the Nineteenth Degree were conferred in full form. With few exceptions, all Brethren who received Degrees in Mizpah Lodge also received those conferred by this Chapter. On September 24, 1881, the Charter was surrendered to the Grand Consistory by resolution.

On May 20, 1876, De Molay Council, No. 1, K.:K.: was Constituted by Grand Commander Edward T. Schultz. Its Charter was surrendered to the Grand Consistory of Maryland on September 24, 1881. On that same date, for reasons which will be explained later, the Grand Consistory also surrendered its Charter to the Supreme Council, from which it had been received in 1861. During its existence of twenty-one years—in only eleven of which it was active—some ninety Brethren received Degrees up to the Thirty-second Degree. From among those, the Supreme Council advanced the following to the dignity of Grand Inspector-General Thirty-third Degree: Thomas A. Cunningham, Gilmor Meredith, Benjamin W. Jenkins, Ferdinand J. S. Gorgas, John H. B. Latrobe, and Charles T. Sisco.

A BIT OF LESS WELL-KNOWN MARYLAND SCOTTISH RITE HISTORY

Since the introduction of the Scottish Rite into the Maryland Jurisdiction, or rather, since the reorganisation of the Scottish Rite there in 1868, the Brethren have never sought a large membership. On the contrary, they have ever desired to confine the Scottish Rite to the more active and zealous Craftsmen. Although those Bodies were not rapidly increasing their membership during the summer of 1881, they were, nevertheless, in a healthy condition and showed every indication not only of leading a useful existence but also of increasing membership. The utmost harmony and good feeling prevailed among the Brethren of both the York Rite and the Scottish Rite throughout the State.

Such was the condition, when on the morning of August 25, 1881, the Brethren of Baltimore received a circular letter from a certain Robert L. Dannenberg, Thirty-second Degree, inviting them to be present at six o'clock at Barnum's Hotel on the evening of the same day. There they were to witness the conferring of the Degrees upon a number of Master Masons, and the organisation of a Lodge of Perfection by two Illustrious Brethren, Albert Pike and William M. Ireland. This was the only notification they had received of Sovereign Grand Commander, Illustrious Bro. Pike's intention to organise a new Lodge of Perfection within the Jurisdiction of the Grand Consistory of Maryland.

The formation of the new Lodge took place in accordance with the terms of the circular. The existing Lodge of Perfection and the members of the Grand Consistory were not consulted nor were they notified in any way other than by means of the circular already mentioned. This naturally excited great interest. There was much unfavourable comment upon the Sovereign Grand Commander's action in thus ignoring the Grand Consistory, to which the new Body would be necessarily subservient. By authorising a stranger who came from the Jurisdiction of South Carolina to act as his Deputy in the organisation of the new Lodge, Bro. Pike had brought down much critical comment upon himself. Under date of September 15, 1881, the Sovereign Grand Commander addressed a lengthy communication to Hermon L. Emmons, Jr., Grand Commander of the Grand Consistory. In it—after officially notifying Bro. Emmons that on the previous Monday evening he had Constituted, Inaugurated, and Installed the Officers of Albert Pike Lodge of Perfection, No. 4, and that the said Lodge immediately upon its Inauguration became a subordinate of the Grand Consistory of Maryland—Bro. Pike arraigned the other Brethren as being guilty of various grave offences. The principal charge urged by the Sovereign Grand Commander was that the Scottish Rite Masons of Maryland had sought to prevent the creation of a Lodge of Perfection among persons who were not Knights Templar; that they were bound by a bargain made with the Knights Templar that no Mason not a Templar should be permitted to receive the Scottish Rite Degrees; and that the agreement would require them to refuse to receive as visitors members of the Scottish Rite who were not Knights Templar. Bro. Pike also charged that their determination had been to exclude Israelites from the benefits of the Rite. Accompanying the communication was a copy of a circular letter which the Sovereign Grand Commander had addressed to the members of the Supreme Council. In it those charges were reiterated.

These communications, together with the address of Grand Commander Emmons in which every charge and allegation made by the Sovereign Grand Commander was denied, were read at an adjourned Session of the Grand Consistory which was held on September 24, 1881. At that Session the address of Grand Commander Emmons was heartily endorsed and approved. It was ordered to be printed and copies of it were distributed among the members of the Supreme Councils and the Grand Consistories of the world.

In general, the Brethren felt that the charges made and published to the world by the Sovereign Grand Commander were most unjust. They regarded many of the expressions used in his circular as wholly unwarranted. They concluded that due regard for their self-respect as men and as Masons necessitated a surrender of the Charters of those Bodies of which they were members. Accordingly, after the adoption of the resolution referred to, the Gavel having been surrendered to the Venerable Master of Mizpah Lodge of Perfection, No. 3, to the Most Wise Master of Orion Chapter, No. 1, and to the Very Eminent Commander of De Molay Council of Kadosh, No. 1, respectively, each Body while in Session in the bosom of the Grand Consistory then adopted resolutions surrendering its Charter, books, and all other properties to the Supreme Council of the Southern Jurisdiction of the United States.

After the surrender of the Charters by those Bodies, the Brethren held a mass meeting on March 3, 1882. At that time it was resolved to form an association to be known as the "Old Guard." Its object was to promote social intercourse among the Brethren, and to discuss the situation in which they were placed as unaffiliated Scottish Rite Masons. It was resolved to hold an annual banquet every Maunday Thursday. To this all Brethren of the Rite who might enroll themselves as members of the association would be welcome. With the exception of a few Brethren, the entire membership of the Scottish Rite Bodies of Baltimore became members of the association at that time or later. At an election of Officers, Hermon L. Emmons, Jr., was elected President, Woodward Abrahams, Vice-President, and Charles T. Sisco, Secretary.

At a meeting of the Old Guard held on March 22, 1883, a Committee was appointed "to prepare a memorial and to present it in person to the Supreme Council of the Northern Jurisdiction, setting forth their grievances and respectfully requesting that Body to grant the proper authority to enable them to form and hold in Baltimore a Lodge of Perfection, a Chapter of Rose Croix, and a Council of Knights of Kadosh, under the Authority of said Supreme Council." Ascertaining by correspondence with prominent Brethren of the Northern Jurisdiction, however, that the comity existing between the Northern and Southern Jurisdiction would prevent the granting of the request, further discussion of the subject was thereupon dropped. At a subsequent time Consistories of the "Supreme Council for the United States of America, Its Territories and Dependencies," generally known as the "Peckham Cerneau Supreme Council," were organized by some of the Brethren at Baltimore, Cumberland, Frederick, and Annapolis. All those Consistories have long since disappeared.

There are at present four Lodges of Perfection, two Chapters, two Councils, and two Consistories in Maryland. All are growing and prosperous Bodies. Since the formation of those Bodies there have been only four Sovereign Grand Inspectors-General in Maryland. They were: Gilmor Meredith, Thirty-third Degree, who died in 1899. Thomas J. Shryock, Thirty-third Degree, who died in 1918. Charles C. Homer, Jr., Thirty-third Degree, died in 1922. The present Sovereign Grand Inspector-General is William Booth Price, Thirty-third Degree, who was raised to that Office in 1923. Of the former Sovereign Grand Inspectors-General of Maryland one figure, that of the late Thomas J. Shryock, Thirty-third Degree, stands out with striking emphasis.

In 1910 the total membership of the Scottish Rite Bodies in the Valley of Baltimore was 115. As a result of the efforts of General Shryock, a revival of Scottish Rite Masonry was begun in that year. That has been carried on successfully by his successors. In 1910 a class of 154 new members received the Degrees of the Rite, and by virtue of earnest and sincere application the total Scottish Rite membership in Maryland is, now, approximately 3500.

FREEMASONRY IN MASSACHUSETTS

MELVIN M. JOHNSON

THE Grand Lodge of Masons in Massachusetts is not only the senior Grand Lodge but, also, the senior Masonic Body of any kind now functioning in the Western Hemisphere. There were earlier Lodges "according to the old Customs" but they have all deceased without succession. It has enjoyed a continuous and unbroken existence since July 30, 1733, when it was founded as a Provincial Grand Lodge by Henry Price under a commission from the Grand Master of Masons in England. The only other American Freemasonry for which existence has ever seriously been claimed before that date, twice gave up the ghost. The second time it permanently went out of existence, and when Masonry in Pennsylvania started again it no longer gave allegiance to the Grand Lodge of the "Moderns," which had been the mother of early Pennsylvania Freemasonry, but instead took a fresh start by authority of the Grand Lodge of the "Antients." Thus it was not a revival, but a brand new birth.

The "Massachusetts" Grand Lodge (Antient) was the first of all Grand Lodges now in existence in the United States formally to declare its independence. When Joseph Warren fell at the battle of Bunker Hill, he was Provincial Grand Master under a commission from the Grand Lodge of Scotland. Joseph Webb, who had been his Deputy, acted as Grand Master until the meeting of the Provincial Grand Lodge on March 8, 1777, when "the Brethren did Assume an Elective Supremacy, & under it Chose a Grand Master & Grand Officers, and Erected a Grand Lodge with Independent Powers and Prerogatives." This Grand Lodge has since enjoyed a continuous and unbroken existence as an independent Grand Lodge.

The "St. John's" Grand Lodge (Modern) never in so many words declared itself independent so far as records disclose, but the official records from January 27, 1775, to February 17, 1787, are missing. When the existing records resume, we find this Grand Lodge functioning as if it were independent for the short time preceding the merger of the St. John's and Massachusetts Grand Lodges, March 5, 1792.

It is demonstrable that there was a Lodge in Philadelphia in 1731, the earliest provable date in America. It is also demonstrable that Masons were "made" in Boston before 1733 although no dates can be now identified. There is something more than tradition that a Lodge met in King's Chapel in Boston in 1720; proof, however, is lacking. The early Colonial newspapers are replete with Masonic items from England and France. Why, unless there were Masons here to be interested?

The first authority granted from England for the exercise of Masonry in America was the Commission dated June 5, 1730, to Colonel Daniel Coxe to be Provincial Grand Master of New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania for a period of two years. On that date, Coxe was in New Jersey, where he had been for more than two months. He left for England a little more than five months thereafter. There is no evidence that he ever exercised his commission, or indeed that he ever received it until after he had returned to England and visited the Grand Lodge in London on January 29, 1731. During the balance of the term of his commission he remained in England.

Hard as it is to prove a negative, there is, nevertheless, evidence that he never did exercise this Commission. A most impressive part of this evidence is furnished by himself. He was ordered by the Commission to make certain reports if and when he exercised it. Exhaustive search fails to show that he made any such reports. No Lodge within his territory is reported on the official lists as constituted during his term of service, which was never extended. He returned to America in 1734, but without Masonic authority. Neither can there be found any trace of his Masonic activity.

The issuance of the Commission to Coxe, however, establishes that the Grand Lodge of England in 1730 claimed Jurisdiction over the Colonies in America. History justifies this claim, for there is no Symbolic Freemasonry in America to-day which has not descended, mediately or immediately, from our Mother Grand Lodge of England.

Coxe and his Commission having been sterile, there issued, in April 1733, a Commission to Henry Price which he first exercised in Boston three months later, founding duly-constituted Masonry in America. This Commission was not limited in time and its virility has brought life and legality to many an American Jurisdiction.

On July 30, 1733, Price organised his Provincial Grand Lodge in Boston and constituted the First Lodge in Boston (now St. John's Lodge). This Lodge has continued uninterruptedly to function down to the present day and is not only the oldest duly-constituted but also the senior Lodge in America.

In August 1734, Provincial Grand Master Price's authority was extended over the whole of North America by the Earl of Crawford, then Grand Master of England. Immediately Price and his Provincial Grand Lodge began their Masonic missionary work.

On February 1, 1734-5, in response to a Petition from Pennsylvania, Price appointed Benjamin Franklin as Provincial Grand Master for Pennsylvania. There followed, from Price and his successors, Lodges in New Hampshire and South Carolina in 1735; in Antigua and Nova Scotia in 1738; in Newfoundland in 1746; in Rhode Island in 1749; in Nova Scotia and Maryland in 1750; in Connecticut in 1752, 1753 and 1754, and also in the Army. chusetts has founded Lodges in Central and South America and even in China. To-day, Massachusetts has three Lodges in Chili and District Grand Lodges in China and the Canal Zone. Indirectly, through Brethren of its making, Massachusetts has participated in the establishment of Freemasonry in many of the United States; in short, the Provincial Grand Masters, the Grand Masters, and the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts have done effective and great Masonic missionary service.

The influence of Massachusetts has also been potent, due to constructive accomplishments, a few of which are so outstanding as to be worthy of notice before we review chronologically the history of the Fraternity in this Commonwealth.

As early as 1806, Grand Lodge determined that "with respect to such candidates for initiation and other degrees, as have conscientious scruples about taking an oath, the act of affirmation is equally valid as swearing in receiving the obligations of Masonry." By somewhat analogous reasoning, it later made a formal pronouncement that a candidate who was a monotheist might take his obligation upon whatever book was to him the Volume of the Sacred Law. These enactments follow the practice of our Mother Grand Lodge, but were first promulgated in the Western world by Massachusetts.

During the first decade of the nineteenth century, Massachusetts put into effect a system of District Deputy Grand Masters. This was an adaptation of the English Provincial and District Grand Lodge system to conditions in the New World. The District Deputy is the appointee and personal representative of the Grand Master to a group of Lodges constituting a District. He is not the representative of the District or even of the Grand Lodge, but of the Grand Master. He keeps a contact between the Most Worshipful and the various Lodges, otherwise impossible. He makes such informal visits as are convenient and advisable but makes to each Lodge one formal visitation each year. This is usually the outstanding meeting of the year with the largest attendance of Brethren. The District Deputy is ceremoniously received, attended by a suite of District Deputy Grand Officers, Past Masters, and often the Wardens of the Lodges in his District. Aided by his District Deputy Grand Officers, he inspects the Charter, by-laws, records and visitors' register and collects the monies due the Grand Lodge. Failure to make payment when called for at the visitation is unknown; consequently there are never delinquent Lodges. This District Deputy Grand Master system has proved most effective and successful in every Jurisdiction where it has been adopted in full, and where they are his appointees and there is no custom hampering the Grand Master in the choice of his Deputies.

Massachusetts has been influential in breaking down the restriction common in the United States, but found almost nowhere else in the world, limiting a Mason's membership to a single Lodge. Slowly but surely, this indefensible limitation is being repealed. It probably would be wiped out everywhere promptly if it were not for the prevailing belief that it is an ancient custom.

The ancient custom was just the opposite except that membership in more than one Lodge in the same municipality was often forbidden.

Massachusetts was one of the earliest Grand Lodges to wake up to the fact that there is no place in Freemasonry for the " Perfect Youth " requirement of operative Masonry. There was reason why the operatives should adopt a rule requiring physical perfection. But present-day Freemasonry looks to internal and not to external qualifications. So long as a candidate can comply with the requirements of the ritual (though even by artificial means and in an awkward manner) there is no reason, sensible or sentimental, why he should be excluded from our speculative Freemasonry, if he is mentally and morally a man fully worthy, because, perchance, he has a hare lip* or has lost a toe. A few American Jurisdictions still insist upon this doctrine of physical perfection. Even those Jurisdictions would take a candidate whose appendix, gall-bladder and kidney had been excised, but would refuse him if he lacked a little finger. April 17, 1732, a blind man was made a Mason in a London Lodge.

The writer, in 1922, proposed an addition to the Constitutions of the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts prescribing the essential requirements which must be found to exist in a foreign Grand Lodge as a prerequisite to recognition. Adopted the same year, this provision, copied, paraphrased, or slightly altered, has been enacted by Grand Lodges all over the world. This has resulted in establishing substantial uniformity and has definitely determined certain Landmarks beyond the possibility of controversy. It is believed that this has continued and will continue to have great influence in promoting unity and crystallising in permanent form the essential character and purposes of Freemasonry. Certainly it is of tremendous value in those parts of the world where Freemasonry is still young or chaotic. Prior to the action here related, there were no uniform standards of recognition; indeed, no single Grand Lodge had any definite basis of recognition, consistently and consecutively applied.

Such are a few of the outstanding claims of Massachusetts to worth-while Masonic achievement, reaching out beyond its jurisdiction. Now let us turn to its more internal affairs.

When did Freemasons first come to Massachusetts? No one knows. Probably no one ever will know. The ship Freemason was in Boston Harbour in January 1718-9, and often thereafter. So also were other vessels similarly named. Is it not likely that a boat with such a name brought members of the Craft to Boston, owners, officers or passengers?

There was one very prominent citizen resident in Boston who had been made a Mason in England in 1704. Jonathan Belcher, one of Boston's chief citizens of that day, began his business career in that city in 1705. He continued a loyal Mason through life. His Masonic membership is certified to us because of letters passing between him and the First Lodge in Boston while Belcher was governor of Massachusetts and New Hampshire, and by his frequent attendance at Grand Lodge. His son, Andrew, who among others had been "made here," was appointed Deputy Grand Master of the Provincial Grand Lodge by Henry Price July 30, 1733. We know of at least nine others who were "made here," i.e., in Boston, before the last-named date. There must therefore have been "occasional" Lodges in Boston before 1733. Unfortunately, they have left us no record. No one knows or perhaps ever will know when such Lodges first met in Massachusetts or, for that matter, in the other colonies. The known facts warrant the deduction that the immigrating Freemasons of those early days soon established Lodges which worked without warrants but "according to the Old Customs." It is unlikely that any of these "occasional" Lodges kept records, for none are known. Neither is it strange, for Freemasonry had not become systematised, there was no Grand Lodge anywhere until 1717, and there was a widespread aversion to the making of any written minutes or notes concerning any phase of the activities of the Fraternity. Even the Grand Lodge of England has no contemporaneous record book for the first six years of its life; neither has the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts for its first seventeen years. When Anderson asked for written manuscripts concerning the earlier days of the craft, prior to the formation of the Grand Lodge at London, many which had been secretly treasured were burned by the scrupulous Brethren who possessed them rather than aid Anderson to publish anything about their esoteric institution. An account book, purchased by the accountant August 2, 1731, is the earliest American Manuscript giving us authoritative information. It contains, among other things, what is apparently the accounting for an "occasional" Lodge in Philadelphia, beginning with June 24, 1731, and continuing for exactly seven years. Beginning, however, with April, 1733, reliable documentary evidence becomes reasonably complete enough for definite history of Freemasonry in America. During that month, in the Grand Mastership of Lord Viscount Montague, a Deputation issued to Henry Price as "Provincial Grand Master of New England and Dominions and Territories thereunto belonging," on the petition of Price and other Brethren then residing in Boston. Price first moved to Boston in 1723. When or how often he made trips across the Atlantic is a mystery. He was a member, in 1730, of Lodge No. 75, meeting at the Rainbow Coffee House in York Gardens, London. When the petition was prepared or presented, we can only guess, but Price received his Deputation personally from the hand of the Deputy Grand Master in London, April 13, 1733. He shortly returned to Boston and formally began the career of duly-constituted Freemasonry in Boston on July 30 of the same year. That day there gathered around him the Freemasons of Boston. Then and there, he organised his Grand Lodge, appointing Andrew Belcher, Esquire, his Deputy Grand Master, and Bros. Thomas Kennelly and John Quane, Grand Wardens pro tempore. His Commission was read. Next, he ordered to be read a petition of eighteen Boston Brethren (ten, at least, of whom had been theretofore made Masons in Boston) praying that they might be constituted into a regular Lodge by virtue of said Deputation. Price granted the petition and "Did then & there in the most Solemn manner, according to Ancient Right & Custom, and the form prescribed in our printed book of Constitutions, Constitute us into a Regular Lodge in Manner & form." The same evening, the Lodge chose Bro. Henry Hope, Esq., Master; he appointed Frederick Hamilton and James Gordon his Wardens; and Price thereupon "installed them in their severall stations by Investing them with the implements of their Offices, giving each his particular Charge." This original petition is a treasured possession of the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts to this day. The original Charter of this Lodge is known to have been in existence as late as December 13, 1826, but was unfortunately destroyed in the disastrous fire of April 6, 1864, when the Masonic Temple in Boston and many invaluable treasures perished.

* This is not a joke. One Grand Master (not of Massachusetts) ruled solemnly once that a candidate " with a double hare lip " was not eligible.

Both the Grand Lodge and the particular Lodge constituted July 30, 1733, in Boston, are alive and healthy to-day after an unbroken existence of practically two centuries. The former is now called "The Most Worshipful Grand Lodge of Ancient Free and Accepted Masons of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts." The latter is known as "St. John's Lodge of Boston." They are the senior, the earliest constituted, the longest lived Masonic Bodies in the Western Hemisphere. This Lodge is, naturally, the first in America to appear on the English official engraved lists of Lodges, being No. 126 on the 1734 list. The first appearance of any other American Lodge is on the 1736 list, No. 139. The Lodge in Boston advanced in subsequent lists from 126 to 110, 65, 54, 42, and 39. It was carried on the English register until the Union of 1813, although it had passed from that jurisdiction when its Provincial Grand Lodge became independent.

Benjamin Franklin, who had become a very enthusiastic and active Mason in the Lodge "according to the Old Customs" in Philadelphia, visited Boston in the autumn of 1733 and made the acquaintance of Henry Price. That they had important Masonic conferences is an irresistible inference from subsequent events. Boston had a printed book of Constitutions; Franklin reprinted the Constitutions in Philadelphia the next May and promptly sent one hundred of them to Boston. Price, shortly after Franklin's visit, applied for the extension of his authority to cover all North America. This was granted him in August, 1734. Franklin was keeping in touch with Price. Doubtless to explain delay in the project under weigh, the Grand Lodge, October 23, 1734, wrote Franklin advising, inter alia, that Price was just recovering from an illness. What else was in the letter, we know not, unless the following letters give us a hint. November 28, 1734, Franklin wrote Price two letters, one official and one personal. Here they are:

Right Worshipful Grand Master and Most Worthy and Dear Brethren:

We acknowledge your favor of the 23d of October past, and rejoice that the Grand Master (whom God bless) hath so happily recovered from his late indisposition: and we now, glass in hand, drink to the establishment of his health, and the prosperity of your whole Lodge.

We have seen in the Boston prints an article of news from London, importing that at a Grand Lodge held there in August last, Mr. Price's deputation and power was extended over all America, which advice we hope is true, and we heartily congratulate him thereupon and though this has not been as yet regularly signified to us by you, yet, giving credit thereto, we think it our duty to lay before your Lodge what we apprehend needful to be done for us, in order to promote and strengthen the interest of Masonry in this Province (which seems to want the sanction of some authority derived from home, to give the proceedings and determinations of our Lodge their due weight) to wit, a Deputation or Charter granted by the Right Worshipful Mr. Price, by virtue of his Commission from Britain, confirming the Brethren of Pennsylvania in the privileges they at present enjoy of holding annually their Grand Lodge, choosing their Grand Master, Wardens and other officers, who may manage all affairs relating to the Brethren here with full power and authority, according to the customs and usages of Masons, the said Grand Master of Pennsylvania only yielding his chair, when the Grand Master of all America shall be in place. This, if it seems good and reasonable to you to grant, will not only be extremely agreeable to us, but will also, we are confident, conduce much to the welfare, establishment, and reputation of Masonry in these parts. We therefore submit it for your consideration, and, as we hope our request will be complied with, we desire that it may be done as soon as possible, and also accompanied with a copy of the R. W. Grand Master's first Deputation, and of the instrument by which it appears to be enlarged as above-mentioned, witnessed by your Wardens, and signed by the Secretary; for which favours this Lodge doubt not of being able to behave as not to be thought ungrateful.

We are, Right Worshipful Grand Master and Most Worthy Brethren,
Your Affectionate Brethren and obliged humble Servts,
Signed at the request of the Lodge,

B. Franklin, G. M.

Philadelphia, Nov. 28, 1734.

Dear Brother Price:—I am glad to hear of your recovery. I hoped to have seen you here this Fall, agreeable to the expectation you were so good as to give me; but since sickness has prevented your coming while the weather was moderate, I have no room to flatter myself with a visit from you before the Spring, when a deputation of the Brethren here will have an opportunity of showing how much they esteem you. I beg leave to recommend their request to you, and to inform you, that some false and rebel Brethren, who are foreigners, being about to set up a distinct Lodge in opposition to the old and true Brethren here, pretending to make Masons for a bowl of punch, and the Craft is like to come into dis-esteem among us unless the true Brethren are countenanced and distinguished by some special authority as herein desired. I entreat, therefore, that whatever you shall think proper to do therein may be sent by the next post, if possible, or the next following.

I am, Your Affectionate Brother & humb Servt

B. Franklin, G. M.
Pennsylvania.

Philadelphia, No. 28, 1734.

P.S.—If more of the Constitutions are wanted among you, please hint it to me.

(Address upon said letters:)

To Mr. Henry Price
At the Brazen Head

In these letters is the clear and definite information that the Brethren in Philadelphia were meeting without authority from Coxe or any other source. It was, of course, being done "according to the Old Customs," although those had been abrogated by the Mother Grand Lodge, June 24, 1721.

On February 21, 1734-5, Price granted the prayer of the Philadelphia Brethren and appointed Benjamin Franklin Provincial Grand Master for Pennsylvania, an office in which the latter immediately began to function. Then "duly-constituted" Freemasonry in Pennsylvania was born.

The days of Sts. John the Baptist and the Evangelist are the principal feast days of Freemasonry. That of St. John the Baptist was at once adopted as the annual meeting of the Grand Lodge and on June 24, 1737, was the occasion of the first known procession in America "in the proper Badges of their Order, some Gold, the rest Silver." That of St. John the Evangelist was first celebrated in Boston, December 28, 1733. It has ever since been a momentous day in Massachusetts Freemasonry, and for the last century has been the occasion of Grand Lodge Installation.

1736 was a notable Masonic year in Boston. Robert Tomlinson and Thomas Oxnard, both to be Provincial Grand Masters, were made Masons in the First Lodge, and a Charter was granted to a Lodge in Portsmouth, New Hampshire.

Tomlinson (or Thomlinson, as his name was sometimes spelled) must have been an outstanding citizen because five months after his making, he was chosen Master of the First Lodge, and the Grand Lodge petitioned the Grand Master of England for his appointment to succeed Price. Obviously, this was Price's desire for, on December 27, 1736, Price appointed Tomlinson his Deputy Grand Master. The latter's commission had issued December 7, but it did not arrive in Boston until April 20, 1736-7.

Tomlinson had the missionary spirit. While on a visit to Antigua, the year of his Commission, he made the "Governor and sundry other gentlemen of distinction" Masons and established a Lodge. Tomlinson's Commission was for New England only, so that Price continued to exercise his North American authority. In March 1737-8, Price appointed Major Erasmus James Phillips, a member of the First Lodge in Boston, to be Provincial Grand Master for Nova Scotia. Phillips made frequent journeys between Annapolis, Boston, Portsmouth, and Providence. While in Annapolis, in 1738, he established a Lodge and became its first Master. In 1750 and 1751, he chartered two Lodges at Halifax, Lord Cornwallis becoming the First Master of the earlier.

The Grand Lodge of Massachusetts treasures in its archives the earliest contemporaneous Lodge record books now known to exist in America. The earliest of all is the record book of the First Lodge in Boston, beginning with December 27, 1738, "being the VI meeting of the Quarter." The next is that of the Masters' Lodge in Boston, whose records begin with its Constitution, December 22, 1738.

Why a Masters' Lodge? The Degree system was then in a formative and fluid condition. For years after the organisation of our Mother Grand Lodge at London in 1717, and after the development of the three Degrees, largely by John Theophilus Desaguliers, the Masters' Degree was conferred, in England, only by Grand Lodge. The earliest American By-laws or Regulations were adopted by the First Lodge in Boston, October 24, 1733, but they make no reference to Degrees. Masons were "made" or "entered," and some were "admitted" to Lodge membership. The Degree of Fellow-craft is first mentioned February 9, 1736-7, though the reference to it shows that it had theretofore been worked. Then a candidate was "made a Mason and raised to "a Fellow-Craft." Not until 1749 do we find a Mason "passed" to a Fellow-Craft. And yet at the second meeting of the Masters' Lodge, with Henry Price in the chair, Bro. George Monerieff was "raised a Master." Before this could be done, the candidate was required to prove, by examination in open Lodge, that he had been "raised a Fellow-Craft." The probable answer is that the Degree worked by the Masters' Lodge was what has been known as the "Chair Degree" or Installation of a Master, absorbed nowadays in the United States by the Royal Arch Chapter and transformed into the degree of "Past Master." Even to-day, the degree of "Past Master" is conferred by authority of the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania upon Brethren who have never been elected to preside over a Lodge. Until nearly the end of the eighteenth century, the Masters' Degree was conferred in Boston by this Masters' Lodge and also, during the last half of that century, by another Masters' Lodge which met under the Charter of the Lodge of St. Andrew. The actual Ritual of these early days in America is an unfathomable mystery, except what we learn by applying our present knowledge gained through generations of instructive tongues, attentive ears, and not too accurate memories, to the few known American facts, and to the studies of the situation in London at the time of the emigration from there of the founders of Masonry here. We do know that there were many clauses in the Fellow-Craft Degree of the middle of the eighteenth century which are now found only in the third Degree. Doubtless the Masters' Lodge was a part of the esoteric mechanism of this period of crystallisation of the Ritual.

On January 31, 1738-9, Tomlinson officially attended the Grand Lodge of England. He made his will in London April 11, 1739, and died in Antigua, July 15 or 16, 1740. Deputy Grand Master Thomas Oxnard presided at Grand Lodge functions until he was commissioned "Provincial Grand Master for North America" September 23, 1743, although the Deputation itself was not received in Boston until March 6, 1743-4. In the exercise of his powers over North America, during the ten years of his Grandmastership, he constituted Lodges not only in and about Boston, but also in Newfoundland, Rhode Island, Maryland, Connecticut and elsewhere.

On January 22, 1745-6, the First Lodge admitted, and on April 4, 1746, the Masters' Lodge raised the greatest artillery officer and military engineer of his generation, Richard Gridley, later to be Deputy Grand Master. First captain of artillery and first bombardier in the first campaign against Louisburg, he succeeded on the third fire in dropping a shell directly into the citadel, which was the immediate cause of the surrender of the city. Returning home, he drew the designs for fortifications on Governor's Island in Boston Harbour. He later erected Fort Halifax on the Kennebec River. In 1755, he was chief engineer of the army. All the fortifications around Lake George, in the expedition against Crown Point, were erected under his supervision. On August 4, 1756, he was selected by General Winslow to attend him in a visit to His Excellency, the Earl of Loudoun, Past Grand Master of Masons in England, then commander-in-chief of his Majesty's forces in America. The same year, Paul Revere, just of age, was commissioned second lieutenant under Gridley's command.

Gridley was also in the second siege of Louisburg and present at the second taking of the city. In 1759, he commanded the Provincial artillery about to besiege Quebec, and stood by the side of General Wolfe when that gallant officer fell victorious.

In 1774, he signed a secret agreement with his intimate friend and Masonic Brother, General Joseph Warren, pledging each other that in the event of hostilities with the Mother Country, they would join the Patriot Army, and they did. He commanded the only artillery regiment in the colonies at the opening of the Revolutionary War, and, on April 24, 1775, was appointed chief engineer of the Patriot forces. He planned the fortification of Bunker Hill. When the Patriot troops marched to Charlestown, June 16, acrimonious discussion arose as to whether Breed's Hill or Bunker Hill was the proper one to fortify. One of the generals agreed with Gridley, but the other was stubborn and determined not to yield. Gridley said to the latter, "Sir, the moments are precious. We must decide at once. Since you will not give up your individual opinion to ours, we will give up to you. Action, and that instantly, only will save us." Although known as the battle of Bunker Hill, the fact is that the fight was staged at the fortifications erected by Gridley (who even worked spade in hand) on Breed's Hill. Military authorities tell us that Gridley's choice would have been better. On the 17th, Gridley was near to Warren when he fell, and almost at the same moment Gridley was struck by a musket ball and incapacitated. Only two days later, however, he took charge of a battery at the Highlands.

On September 20, 1775, the Provincial Congress made him a major general. Washington said of him that there was no one better qualified to serve as chief engineer of the Army, but he was physically unable to carry such a burden and it went to a younger man. Nevertheless, in March of the next year, he so skillfully directed the fortifying of Dorchester Heights that the British dared not attack and, consequently, evacuated Boston. Then, at Washington's request, he directed the demolition of the British intrenchments and laid out and strengthened the fortifications of the city. At such work he continued zealously in spite of the fact that for more than thirteen months he received no pay from the impoverished government. At the age of eighty-five, the year before his death in 1796, he assisted in laying the corner-stone of the State House in Boston with Masonic ceremonies. Gridley is worthy of such extended notice. Many of his fellow Masonic Brethren among the patriots, such as Paul Revere, John Hancock, John and Joseph Warren and James Otis, are better remembered.

Like Price and Oxnard, Jeremy Gridley, who succeeded the latter in 1755, and John Rowe, who succeeded Gridley in 1758, had broad territorial powers. Price and Oxnard were each "Provincial Grand Master for North America," without any qualification. Jeremy Gridley (elder brother of Richard) was appointed "Provincial Grand Master of all Such Provinces & Places in North America & the Territories thereof of which no Provincial Grand Master is at present appointed." Rowe was constituted "Provincial Grand Master for all North America and the Territories thereunto belonging, where no other Provincial Grand Master is in being." After Rowe's death, in 1787, the United States had become independent and there were no more Provincial Grand Masters within its territory.

During their terms of office, except the languishing days of the Revolutionary War, Masonry prospered on these shores. Price wrote, August 6, 1755, "Masonry has had as great Success in America since my Settling here as in any part of the World (except England). Here is not less than Forty Lodges sprung from my First Lodge in Boston." Looking just a few years ahead of our story, we find, near to the close of the century, Grand Master Paul Revere saying in his farewell address at the Feast of St. John the Evangelist in 1797:

Sixty-four years have elapsed since the introduction of Free Masonry into North America by the formation of a Grand Lodge in Boston; a fountain from whence the Streams have been numerous and extensive. Within this period charters have been granted for the Creation of two Lodges in Vermont; five in New Hampshire, one in Pennsylvania, one in Maryland, two in Rhode Island, thirteen in Connecticut, one in New York, one in Virginia, one in North Carolina, one in South Carolina, one in Lower Canada, one in the late American Army, two in Nova Scotia, one in Newfoundland, and four in the West Indies, and fifty-six in Massachusetts. Of these last, forty-three still retain their commissioned authority, and are considered by the present Regulations as within the immediate control of this Grand Lodge; and thirty-two were represented here at our last Quarterly Communication.

These Provincial Grand Masters were men of the highest standing in the community. Price, Tomlinson, Oxnard and Rowe were successful and wealthy merchants and held many public offices. Jeremiah, commonly known as Jeremy Gridley, was first a teacher, then a newspaperman, finally a lawyer and the “ Father of the Boston Bar.” As attorney-general, he argued the celebrated Writs of Assistance case in behalf of the Crown. Opposed were Thatcher and James Otis, both of whom had been law students in his office. Otis was also a Mason and throughout Gridley’s life his devoted friend. At the conclusion of the second argument of the case, upon rehearing, judgment was immediately given in favor of that for which Gridley contended. The decision was legally sound. The real quarrel of the people was with the law which the Crown imposed, not with the interpretation of the law. Gridley but pointed out the proper meaning of the law as it stood. The court but officially applied that law. Bro. Otis’ appeal was not so much a legal argument as an eloquent voicing of the restive spirit of a people who were convinced that the law was but an instrument of oppression. “ Then and there was the first scene of the first act of opposition to the arbitrary claims of Great Britain. Then and there the child Independence, was born.”

At the time of Jeremy Gridley’s death in 1767, he was Grand Master of Masons in North America, Attorney General for the Province of Massachusetts Bay, a member of the Great and General Court of said Province and a “ Justice throughout the same,” colonel of the 1st regiment of militia, president of the Marine Society, selectman and assessor of Brookline and leader of the Boston Bar. Of him, more than any other, it may be said that he elevated the Boston Bar from comparative chaos and ignorance to the dignity of a learned profession. Of his elaborate and Masonic funeral, Rowe, his Deputy and successor, writes an account in his diary, remarking “ such a multitude of Spectators, I never Saw at any time before since I have been in New England.”

The early Records of this Provincial Grand Lodge were probably kept on loose sheets of paper. That was the custom of the early days. Contemporaneous records in a bound volume begin with April 13, 1750, just seventeen years from the date of Price’s commission, when Charles Pelham, Grand Secretary, began with a summary of the preceding seventeen years. From that day to this, the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts has its full and complete file of records with the exception of the few years that the original record book was missing. It had been carried away by Thomas Brown, the Grand Secretary, a Tory, who took refuge in Nova Scotia when the British evacuated Boston. The Grand Lodge continued to function, but what has become of its records during the interim until the book was returned, no one knows. The records of the other Grand Lodge (Antient) then functioning in Boston, later merging with Price’s, begin with 1769 and are complete to the Union of 1792. The Grand Lodge founded by Price in 1733 came to be known about four decades later as the St. John’s Grand Lodge to distinguish it from the later one which appropriated the name of Massachusetts Grand Lodge.

A rival to the Mother Grand Lodge of England came upon the scene around the middle of the eighteenth century. It called itself the “ Antient ” Grand Lodge and dubbed the older one “ Modern.” The full story is told elsewhere in this history. It is mentioned here because it had consequences in Massachusetts.

The Antients, by clever maneuvering, gained affiliation with the Grand Lodges of Ireland and Scotland.

In 1752, a number of Masons in Boston, unaffiliated with the St. John's Grand Lodge, met and worked without any Charter or Warrant, but "according to the Old Customs." They soon realised that this had become illegal and that it left them ostracised. Consequently they applied, after a few years, to the Grand Lodge of Scotland for a Charter. On November 30, 1756, their petition was granted. After many delays, the Charter arrived in Boston in 1760. The Brethren of this Lodge, then known as St. Andrew's Lodge, now as the Lodge of St. Andrew, sought recognition from the Antient Grand Lodge of England and obtained it, but the established Grand Lodge in Boston turned a cold shoulder.

Boston, then a town of about 18,000, was one of the three most important communities in America. So prominent were its troops in the wars with France, that the Canadians were wont to call all Americans "les Bostonais." Hostility towards the Mother Country was growing. To over-awe the citizens of Boston, England sent over several small regiments. Within them were three Army Lodges; in the 14th regiment, Lodge No. 58, of the Antient English Constitution; in the 64th regiment, No. 106, of the Scottish Constitution; in the 29th, No. 322, of the Irish Constitution. These "lobster backs" were personally welcomed as Brethren although regarded by a majority of the populace as military enemies. They joined Masonic forces with St. Andrew's, resulting in an application to Scotland for a Commission which came in due course, appointing "The Most Wpfull Joseph Warren Grand Master of "Ancient Free & accepted Masons in Boston New England & within One hundred Miles of the same." He was installed "in ample form" at the celebration of the Feast of St. John the Evangelist, 1769, his Grand Lodge being composed of officers and Brethren of St. Andrew's and Lodges 58 and 322. On March 3, 1772, he was Commissioned "Grand Master of Masons for the Continent of America." He presided over his Grand Lodge as late as March 3, 1775, and fell at the battle of Bunker Hill the following month.

Bro. Paul Revere became Senior Grand Deacon at Warren's installation, was Master of St. Andrew's and Tyrian Lodges, and appears as Senior Grand Warden when, on December 27, 1776, this Grand Lodge held its first meeting after the blockade of Boston, presided over by Joseph Webb as Deputy Grand Master.

St. Andrew's Lodge, in 1764, bought the Green Dragon Tavern (which property it still owns) and it became known also as Masons Hall. There met St. Andrew's Lodge and the Massachusetts Grand Lodge. There, also, met groups of patriots, members of St. Andrew's active among them. Tradition has it that from its doors, on an evening when Masonic labours were suspended, issued the "Indians" of the Boston Tea Party, December 16, 1773, when Boston Harbour became a cold and salty teapot. On this day, Grand Master Rowe of the St. John's Grand Lodge wrote in his diary, "A number of People Appearing In Indian Dresses went on board the three Ships Hall Bruce & Coffin. they Opin'd the Hatches, hoisted Out the Tea & flung it Overboard, this might I believe have been prevented. I am sincerely Sorry for the Event. Tis said near two thousand People were present at this Affair."

While patriots were to be found in both groups, perhaps the larger number of names which history has made famous are to be found in the Massachusetts, or Scottish list; from such outstanding historical characters as Warren, Revere, and Hancock, to John Pulling who hung the signal for Revere in the tower of the Old North Church.

Fraternal amenities early began to be exchanged between St. John's and Massachusetts Grand Lodges. Rowe, Grand Master of St. John's, and Webb, Deputy Grand Master of Massachusetts, were together at one of the early meetings, in April 1776, of American Union Lodge, a military Lodge Chartered by Rowe. At the separate Grand Lodge celebrations of the Feast of St. John the Evangelist in 1773, each drank a toast to the other. Relations continued through the Grandmasterships of Webb, John Warren, and Webb's second term. Just before the latter's death, in 1787, the Massachusetts Grand Lodge undertook "to perfect a plan of union between the 2 Grand Lodges." This plan, naturally, took some years to bring fulfilment. Under the second administration of John Warren and his successor, Moses Michael Hays, installed in 1788, came its fruition.

A momentous event occurred in 1777 when the independence of American Freemasonry began. For almost two years, Massachusetts Grand Lodge functioned without a Grand Master, being presided over by Joseph Webb as Deputy. Finally the Brethren decided to cut loose from their Mother Grand Lodge and proceeded, after long and careful consideration, to declare independence by the election of a Grand Master of their own choosing. Joseph Webb was elected and assumed the duties of the office. The spirit of the occasion was later formally declared by a resolution passed December 6, 1782, reading in part as follows:

That the Political Head of this Country having destroyed All connection & Correspondence between the Subjects of these States & the Country from which the Grand Lodge originally derived its Commissioned Authority, and the Principles of the Craft inculcating on its professors Submission to the Commands of the Civil Authority of the Country they Reside in, the Brethren did Assume an Elective Supremacy, & under it Chose a Grand Master & Grand Officers, and Erected a Grand Lodge with Independent Powers & Perogatives. . .

Massachusetts Grand Lodge is, in consequence, the first independent Grand Lodge in America and Webb the first Grand Master by election and not by Commission.

At last the spirit of union became pervading. December 5, 1791, the Massachusetts Grand Lodge appointed a Committee, consisting of Grand Master Hays, Past Grand Master Warren, Deputy Grand Master Revere, Grand Wardens Bartlett and Scollay, past Deputy Grand Master John Lowell, and Grand Secretary Laughton, upon the subject of "a Compleat Masonic Union throughout this Commonwealth." This being communicated to St. John's Grand Lodge, a special Communication was called January 18, 1792, Senior Grand Warden John

Cutler in the Chair, which voted to raise a similar committee to promote the union. As a result of the successful negotiations, both Grand Lodges met in their several halls on March 5, 1792. Electors were chosen by both to join in convention and choose Officers for the united Grand Lodge, in accordance with new Constitutions adopted in identical language by both Bodies. Then and there the two Bodies united into one Grand Lodge with the following list of Officers, unanimously chosen:

- M. W. John Cutler, Grand Master (formerly S.G.W. of St. John's).
- R. W. Josiah Bartlett, Senior Grand Warden (formerly S.G.W. of Massachusetts).
- R. W. Mungo Mackay, Junior Grand Warden (P.G.W. of St. John's).
- W. Samuel Parkman, Grand Treasurer (formerly Grand Treasurer of St. John's).
- W. Thomas Farrington, Grand Secretary (formerly Grand Secretary of St. John's).

The perfection of the union occurred on the 19th of March, when P. G. M. John Warren in the Chair installed John Cutler as Grand Master, in ample form. This happy event anticipated the Union in England of the Moderns and the Antients by over twenty years.

St. Andrew's Lodge alone remained outside of the Union, it having retained its affiliation with the Grand Lodge of Scotland when Massachusetts Grand Lodge became independent. In 1809, this Lodge came into the fold, since which time there has been no Masonic schism in the Commonwealth.

The esoteric ritual adopted at the Union was, with few variations, that which had been practised by the St. John's Grand Lodge. To-day, we cannot determine it with exactness.

The Constitutions adopted by both Grand Lodges provided not merely for "a Complete Union of the Grand Lodges aforesaid" and that "all distinctions between the Ancient and Modern Masons shall, as far as possible, be abolished," but also the bases for succeeding revisions.

The younger of the Bodies added nineteen to the roll of Lodges. Immediately, they began to increase in number and the Fraternity entered upon a period of conservative prosperity which lasted until the anti-Masonic agitation.

As the Mississippi, rising close to the Canadian border, when it touches Kentucky is joined by the Ohio and they flow onward to the sea as a single river, the continuation of each, so this Grand Lodge of Massachusetts has continued its beneficent career without further schism, to this day. At its head, from Cutler to Allen, have served loyal Masons and respected citizens such as Paul Revere (manufacturer, goldsmith, engraver, and dramatic patriot); Isaiah Thomas (printer, publisher, and editor); Samuel P. P. Fay (lawyer and judge); Elijah Crane (farmer and soldier); Josiah B. Flint (surgeon and professor); George M. Randall (bishop); Winslow Lewis (physician); William S. Gardner (lawyer, judge of the Superior and Justice of the Supreme Judicial Court); Sereno

D. Nickerson (merchant); and Samuel C. Lawrence (financier). These few are named to illustrate the diversity of activities of the fifty-one Brethren who have occupied the Oriental Chair since the Union. Indeed, the personnel of our Fraternity in public and private life has ever been and is now a matter of pride.

As would be expected from the nature of our Institution, charity was one of the first concerns of our Grand Lodge. It has expanded through the years until to-day Grand Lodge and its particular Lodges in Massachusetts are officially spending more than $1100 a day in benevolence. This figure is limited to what an accountant can certify. Vastly more is, of course, expended by our Brethren unofficially. Conspicuous to the eye are the Masonic Home at Charlton, established because of Blake and dedicated by Flanders, and the Hospital at Shrewsbury, founded by the gift of the widow of R. W. Matthew J. Whittall, a director of our corporation, and dedicated by Simpson. A vast amount of good is, however, done inconspicuously by our Charity and Service Departments of Grand Lodge and the particular Lodges.

Our Grand Lodge has developed an unique system of Masonic education, initiated by Ferrell, Simpson, and Dean, in an endeavour to instil our high principles and purposes into the mind of every Initiate, that each may appreciate its aims and opportunities.

Through the efforts of many, especially the munificence of Lawrence, our library is second to no other Masonic library in the world in equipment and usefulness.

In a very large majority of American Grand Lodges there is a recognised line of advancement in Office, a new Grand Master being elected each year when the line moves up one Station almost automatically. One Grand Master of a sister State remarked some years ago that, in his Jurisdiction, if a Brother was appointed Junior Grand Deacon, lived long enough and kept out of jail, he would be Grand Master in due course. There is with us no line of promotion in Grand Lodge. That a Brother is elected or appointed to any other Office does not make him a prospective Grand Master. Our Grand Masters are chosen from those Brethren regarded by the Fraternity as a whole to be best fitted by ability, character, and attainment to exercise the important duties of the Office. A few of our Grand Masters had not even served as Master of a Lodge, yet made conspicuous successes. That, however, under our present Constitutions, cannot occur again. It is usual for them to serve three years, the constitutional limit. Thus, they have time and opportunity to perfect plans and policies and carry them into execution.

Our Deputy Grand Master is appointed by the Grand Master, not elected by Grand Lodge as is customary elsewhere in this country. Thus there can be called into high service Past Masters whose qualifications are intimately known by the Grand Master himself, although perhaps not generally known to the Brethren at large. This Officer is, with us, really a Deputy of the Grand Master and not a vice or prospective Grand Master. In recent years, the appointed Deputies and the elected Grand Wardens have served for only one year each, but they (as well as Grand Masters) are honoured by life membership in Grand Lodge. This gives us a body of elder Masonic statesmen sitting not in a separate chamber but in Grand Lodge itself. While this permanent membership of selected and experienced Brethren constitutes less than 8 per cent of Grand Lodge voting membership, it has been of tremendous value to Grand Masters, Grand Lodge, and the Fraternity as a whole.

In 1833, at the end of our first century, Freemasonry was at its lowest ebb not only in Massachusetts but in the whole United States in consequence of the anti-Masonic crusade, conceived and propagated for political purposes. Now, at the end of the second century, we are suffering a decrease in Initiates and in membership because of the world-wide financial depression. Except for its effect upon budgets, the net result to Freemasonry is good rather than bad. Some good applications will be lost, of course, but few who are true Masons at heart will become non-affiliated. The loss of those whose interest in the Craft is purely selfish is a gain to the cause and an aid to the accomplishment of our purposes.

Of the Lodges established by our Grand Lodge outside of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, there still remain under our Jurisdiction three in Chile, eight in China, and seven in the Canal Zone. Massachusetts first entered Chile in 1853. Since that time, a regular Grand Lodge of Chile has been organised, but our three Lodges there have never surrendered their Massachusetts Charters. Massachusetts entered China in 1863, and now has three Lodges in Shanghai, one in Peiping, one in Tientsin, and three in Manchukuo, located at Dairen, Moukden and Harbin. These Lodges constitute a District Grand Lodge under the Jurisdiction of a District Grand Master. In 1917, the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts, which already had several Lodges in the Canal Zone, made a treaty with the Grand Lodge of Panama whereby Panama ceded to Massachusetts Masonic Jurisdiction over the Canal Zone, analogous to the cession of civil Jurisdiction over that Zone by the Republic of Panama to the United States. The seven Lodges in the Canal Zone have been erected into a District Grand Lodge under the Jurisdiction of a District Grand Master, and under the terms of the treaty Massachusetts has exclusive Jurisdiction over Symbolic Freemasonry throughout the Canal Zone.

FREEMASONRY IN MICHIGAN

LOU B. WINSOR

THE history of organised Masonry in Michigan dates back 167 years. From 1764 to 1844, the historical material which accumulated around our mystic Temple was kept not in consecutive Records or permanent form, but in fragmentary papers and varying traditions. Consequently, no little research and labour have been required to collect those scattered bits of historic lore and to establish beyond question the exact dates and the true order of Masonic events in Michigan. Nevertheless, the following narrative is not the uncertain offspring of tradition or of plausible conjecture; rather, it is the legitimate child of Records and writings, nearly all Masonic and official, and all authoritative. In each case the facts stated here rest on the Records cited, and the statements regarding even the oldest of the Warrants, or Charters, granted to Masons in Michigan were taken directly from originals or from officially certified copies of them.

It is not to be expected, of course, that any history of our early Masonic activities, no matter how full and accurate it may be, will change in any particular the present Masonic situation. Nevertheless, it must surely gratify the natural and commendable curiosity of Masons to know their beginnings. The man ignorant of his parentage, or of the chain of title by which he holds valuable property, may not be greatly benefited or disturbed by his lack of knowledge regarding those facts, yet who can doubt his feeling the keenest interest in every detail and particular of his genealogy or of his right of possession? In like manner who can doubt that resident Masons will feel an intelligent interest in knowing the exact time when Masonry was first planted on Michigan soil and all the attending circumstances; in studying the source of Masonic authority or title, by and under which the governing Bodies of the Craft have performed their function; and in tracing the peculiar influences which political mutations, military operations, and commercial enterprises constantly exercised on early Masonic developments in this Commonwealth?

Three Grand Lodges have been organised in Michigan, the first of which was established in 1826. It, however, lapsed or was suspended three years later. The second, organised in 1841, was an attempt to revive the first, but by methods so irregular and un-Masonic that it was never recognised. The third, our present Grand Body, was established in 1844.

The eighteenth century is noted for the number of its great men and the great events which occurred during it. During the entire century, Europe was in an almost constant state of turmoil. In 1748, England, France, and Spain—the great maritime powers—held the whole of both American continents, except only that region that was then known as the Russian Possessions and is now called Alaska. The reciprocal national hatreds and jealousies of their people at home were felt and manifested by their colonies here. War in Europe caused war in America. Truce or peace in the mother country often made rivalry and enmity more active and bitter in American colonies.

The colonial policy of Spain sought to accumulate gold and extend the Roman Catholic religion; that of England tended to build up States with which to carry on commerce; while that of France, while incidentally favoring Catholicism, seemed mainly designed to thwart and defeat England. Spain held all South America, as well as Florida and Mexico in North America. France held the basin of the St. Lawrence River and of the Great Lakes; it was in possession of the mouth of the Mississippi River and laid claims to all the lands drained by it. England's colonies lay between those of the other two nations. France and Spain, agreeing in nothing but religion, hoped to make themselves the upper and the nether millstones between which to pulverise American Protestantism at once and forever, and by so much to cripple the Protestant power in England.

To that end, France sought to connect her possessions on the Lakes with those on the Mississippi River by a double cordon of military posts, which would serve her and her forces as a highway of inter-communication, and would at the same time prove to be a barrier that would confine the English colonies to the Atlantic coast, a danger to threaten their safety and a force finally to crowd them out entirely. To the English colonies, this was a great danger—but it was also a great opportunity. As often happens, the great opportunity developed the men needed to meet it. Between 1753 and 1758, the struggles of the British in western Pennsylvania and along the Ohio River to destroy the lower line of French forts, that is, those lying between Lake Erie and the Ohio River, gave name and fame to many, among whom the youthful Washington was the most prominent.

In 1748, at Aix-la-Chapelle, European diplomacy flattered itself that it had invented a European balance of power and had determined, for ages to come, the colonial policy of its maritime states in America. But at that very time, says the historian Bancroft, "the woods of Virginia sheltered the youthful Washington. God had selected, not Kaunitz nor Newcastle, not a monarch of the House of Hapsburg nor of Hanover, but the Virginia stripling, to give a new impulse to human affairs," and, as far as events can depend on an individual, had placed the rights and the destinies of countless millions in the keeping of "The Widow's Son," he who was first among Masons, as he was "first in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen."

The French policy of planting a double line of military posts between the upper lakes and the Mississippi touched Michigan very vitally, for Detroit, Mackinaw, Green Bay, and St. Joseph were four important links in the upper chain. So, too, Michigan and her future inhabitants were deeply interested when, by conquest in 1760 and by a treaty made in 1763, all Canada, all Michigan, and that part of the great Northwest lying east of the Mississippi River became British possessions, and the Frenchman's power to disturb this continent was brought to an end. As time passed, we were all affected again, when the American colonies of Britain, freed from fear of the French on the north and west, began to think of resisting the oppressions and the exactions of the parent government.

At this point in the events of the country on this continent, Masonic history in Michigan begins. So far as Europe was concerned, England was now the owner of all North America north of Florida and east of the Mississippi. Yet she was not the undisputed owner, for the Indians claimed the land and denied England's right to it. To defend her possession and her subjects against the Indians and the possibilities of a French revolt, England sent her troops to Michigan. Those British troops brought with them a Masonic Lodge.

The dates and periods most important in their bearing and influence on the early Masonic history of Michigan are as follows: (1) the period between 1760 and 1764, when Michigan passed from France to England, and the first Masonic Lodge was formed on Michigan soil; (2) the years between 1783 and 1794, that is the period following the close of the War for Independence, after which England held Michigan till 1796 as a dependency or part of Canada, thereby causing a change of Masonic Jurisdiction and relations; (3) the period between 1796 and 1806, when Masonry was closely connected with the fur trade and when Michigan surrendered to the United States, thus causing another change to be made in Masonic Jurisdiction and relations; (4) the years between 1812 and 1820, when the disturbance caused by the second war with England resulted in first the lapse and then the renewal of the only Masonic Charter in the Territory; (5) the period between 1821 and 1840, when four new Lodges were formed, the first Grand Lodge was organized, and the effects of anti-Masonic politics were felt: and (6) the period between 1841 and 1844, which was marked by the circumstances preceding and attending the formation of the unrecognised Grand Lodge of 1841, and those which led to the founding, in 1844, of the present Grand Lodge.

The historical events related in this article will be divided into these six periods, because all or nearly all the important events of Michigan's early Masonic history were largely influenced or wholly shaped by the military, political, and commercial conditions of the times in which they occurred.

Masonry was derived either directly or indirectly from England. Without going into the history of Masonry in England proper, it is enough for the present purpose to say that the initial impulse which made possible the events with which this history deals was given by the Grand Lodge of England as organized in London in 1721, under the so-called Anderson Constitutions, on the basis of Warranted Lodges and of Lodge representation in a Grand Lodge.

In the year 1753, "Honorable John Proby, Baron of Carysford, in the kingdom of Ireland, was Grand Master" of the "Grand Lodge of England." On June 9 of the same year, Grand Master Lord Proby appointed and commissioned "George Harison, Esq., to be Provincial Grand Master of the Province of New York, in North America." This appointment, or "Deputation" as it was then called, was announced by "Brother Francis Geolet, his predecessor in Office," on December 26 of that year. Then, on the next day, it being the festival of Saint John the Evangelist, "Brother Harison was duly installed and proclaimed" as "Provincial Grand Master of the Province of New York," after which "public service was held at Trinity Church." Provincial Grand Master Harison retained his Office and performed its duties for eighteen years, or till the year 1771.

At that time Michigan was a part of Canada, and Detroit was a British military post "far beyond the frontier." All that vast region which is now known as western New York, northern Ohio, and Upper Canada was then a wilderness. According to the best authorities there were at that time some three or four hundred French families, representing from two thousand to twenty-five hundred persons living along the two banks of the Detroit River, while Detroit proper contained about "five hundred souls" who lived in seventy or eighty log houses all closely huddled together and surrounded by a stockade "about twenty feet high and twelve hundred feet in circumference." Four years later the official census of 1768 showed that the post had "five hundred and fourteen cultivated acres," "six hundred horned cattle, and five hundred and sixty-seven hogs." The white people who lived there then were mainly French, although a few of the settlers were Scotchmen and Englishmen who had come down from Canada. Nearly all subsisted by the fur trade. The Ottawa, Pottawatamie, and Wyandotte Indians also lived along the banks of the Detroit River, above and below. They were united, for offence and defence, under the dangerous leadership of the noted and powerful chieftain, Pontiac. It was in such soil and amid such environments that the seeds of Masonry were first planted in Michigan.

In November 1760, after the military capture of Canada by England, and yet nearly three years before peace was formally declared between England and France, British troops, under major Rogers, took possession of Detroit. "A large part of this force," says Judge Campbell's history of Michigan, "consisted of several companies of the 60th, or Royal American Regiment, officered chiefly by American Gentlemen from New York and other eastern colonies." Nearly three years later on February 10, 1763, France and England signed a definite treaty of peace, after which the French made no further objection to the British troops' holding peaceable possession of Detroit, Mackinaw, and other military posts in Michigan. But quiet was brief, for in May of that year the garrisons at Mackinaw and St. Joseph were massacred, and the memorable and bloody siege of Detroit was begun by the Indians under Pontiac. Detroit was closely beleaguered till the late autumn of that year.

War with France having now ceased, and the Indians having been forced to become quiet neighbors, resident Masons, and also those in the 60th Regiment, at Detroit, its officers being, as we have seen, "chiefly American Gentlemen from New York," for a while had leisure in which to cultivate social relations and the arts of peace. It was at this time that they Petitioned Provincial Grand Master Harison of New York for a Warrant to open a Lodge of Master Masons at Detroit. The request was granted, and the Warrant was issued by him on April 27, 1764. Thus began organised Masonry in Michigan, 171 years ago.

Although local historians mention that the 60th or Royal American Regiment, or detachments of it, were present in Detroit from 1760 to 1767—four years before and three years after the Lodge was formed—they do not state how much of it remained stationed there, or whether any of it did so. Judge Campbell's history says that "the officers of the 60th Regiment seem to have been much better qualified to deal with the Indians than some of their associates," that "they were generally well thought of in the Country," and that "Captain Donald Campbell of the 60th Regiment was the first commandant." It should be borne in mind that both the men and the officers who made up the "60th" were Americans. Naturally enough the American troops understood the people better than had the European soldiers that had been stationed there. They had common sympathies and interests, they liked the civilians better, and, for good reasons, they were better liked by them in return. This friendly and fraternal feeling between the "60th" and the people of Detroit was a factor of some importance in the Masonic history of early Michigan.

The circumstances attending the formation of Lodge No. 1 at Detroit seem to indicate that its Warrant was obtained through the influence and agency of the officers of the 60th Regiment. Being "New York Gentlemen" they undoubtedly had Masonic acquaintance and influence in that city. The same circumstances also made us ask whether that first Lodge was a "military" Lodge or a "local" Lodge.

"Military Lodges" were forbidden by English Grand Lodge regulations to admit or make Masons of any persons who were not "military men of rank," that is, soldiers above the rank of private. Residents of stations and others not in the army were excluded. In most cases this was a prudent rule, both in its military and Masonic aspects. Nevertheless, there were cases when its enforcement was not always necessary. This restriction was distinctly expressed in all military Warrants granted by English Grand Masters in those days, but it was not always made in the Warrants issued by their Provincial Deputies. Indeed, there is abundant evidence that some of the Military Lodges among the English troops serving in the American colonies prior to the War for Independence did not obey the rule. The sanction given by the Provincial Deputies to this departure from a rule, rigidly enforced elsewhere, indicates that they were permitted, in this matter as in others, to exercise sound discretion.

The Worshipful Master named in the Detroit Warrant was Lieutenant John Christie of the 60th Regiment, but the Warrant contains no other indication that the Lodge had a military character. Whether "Sampson Fleming, Senior Warden and Hosias Harper, Junior Warden" were soldiers or civilians is not indicated. Since the English regulations permitted none but military men of rank to be members or Officers of a military Lodge, then if this was such a Lodge why was not the rank of the Wardens stated in the Warrant, as well as that of the Worshipful Master? The inference seems to be that the other Lodge Officers were civilians, and not military men. Furthermore, the language of the Warrant gives power "to make Masons as also to do and execute all things lawful in Masonry." Its limits are the limits of Masonry only, unless an exception be found in the clause of the Warrant which enjoined them to "observe and keep the Rules, Orders, Regulations, and Instructions contained in our Constitutions." But we have already seen that the rule excluding civilians was not always observed in those times, even by the Military Lodges whose Warrants expressly commanded its enforcement.

In fact, it seems more probable that that first Lodge was a "local Lodge." As has been previously stated, the 60th Regiment had been stationed at Detroit nearly four years before this Warrant was granted, and friendly relations existed between it and the people. The fur trade, the principal business of the locality, demanded that its agents and managers should be men who could be trusted with large sums of money, and should be men of a high order of intelligence as well as of good character. The history of the times shows that they were such, and that they readily commanded the respect of intelligent and cultivated men. They were both loyal subjects and good Masonic material. It was the policy of the British government to foster the fur trade and to favor its operations. Indeed, that government's troops were mainly located in this region for the very purpose of protecting those vast interests. Why, then, should the men representing those interests be repulsed by American "military men" from Masonic association? Surely, soldiers and civilians huddled closely together in the stockade, compelled to live a common social life, encountering the same hardships and exposed to the same dangers as they were, could not be wholly separated in their Masonic relations. Neither military nor Masonic reasons required it. On the contrary, all reason, good fellowship, and good sense forbade it. A Lodge, once formed in such a locality and commingling such men, would be quite sure to be committed to the care and custody of the civilians who stayed at home while the soldiers came and went on military expeditions. Likewise its interests could also be safeguarded by the civilians who remained behind when the soldiers were ordered away.

Several facts seem to favor the theory that the Lodge was a "local Lodge," and lead us to believe that residents of Detroit in civil life must have shared, perhaps more than equally, with the soldiers in the rights and privileges of the Lodge: In the first place, those resident Masons kept and used the identical old Warrant long after the 60th Regiment had left Detroit. Furthermore, their Masonic right to do so was recognised, and the Masonic Work done under it by them and their successors was accepted by the Grand Lodge of New York. All these facts and theories serve to show that the Lodge originally was local, and if military at the beginning, that it soon became local by its practise and usage. But there is no evidence either direct or inferential to show how long its organisation was maintained or how much or how regularly the Lodge Laboured.

Referring to the copy of the Warrant, we find that the Lodge formed by its authority was "No 1, to be held at Detroit under whatever name " the Brethren might choose. It seems quite clear that "Zion Lodge" was the name chosen, for it was by that name that it was known and registered on the Registry of England of that date, and afterwards known to the Grand Lodges of Canada and of New York. In England it was registered as Lodge No. 448, while in Canada and in New York it was given other numbers.

Three other Military Lodges seem to have existed among the British troops who later served in Michigan. In any case, an English Masonic Register of the period, listing Lodges said to be established by the so-called "Moderns," includes the following: "No. 289, at Detroit, in 1773;" "No. 320, at Detroit, in 1783;" and "St. John's Lodge, No. 373, at Mackinaw, in 1785." It is more probable that those Lodges were regular Military Lodges. The Registry shows that their Warrants came direct from England; that they were issued to Masons in British regiments, and that they moved with their regiments from place to place. The dates of those Lodges also show that Michigan was then an enemy's country to the British soldiers, and that the localities assigned to the Lodges on the Register may have been either the points at which the respective regiments were stationed when the Warrants were granted, or from which the Lodges made their last Report to the Masonic authorities in England.

As has already been shown, the officers and men of the British regiments, unlike those of the 60th Regiment, neither sympathised nor fraternised with the resident civilians. They had neither the love nor the confidence of the people. For many reasons, therefore, their Lodges, unlike those identified with the 60th Regiment, left no trace on the early Masonic history of Michigan. In fact, they all departed with their respective commands in 1796 when England finally surrendered Michigan soil to the United States.

Six generations ago, Masons and Masonic Bodies were not fond of Records. Once they had in hand a legal and proper Warrant for a Lodge, few if any of their activities were recorded so long as they remained at peace among themselves and with supreme Masonic power. For this reason, and because of the difficulty of preserving such Records on the frontier, and for still other reasons yet to be mentioned, it is not strange, however much it is to be regretted, that a gap of thirty years should be here found in the recorded history of Zion Lodge. Subsequent events show, however, that during at least a portion of this long period the Lodge maintained its life and performed Labour.

The surveyor, skilled in woodcraft and in his profession, counts it no very difficult task to recognise, to trace, and to date the hacks and the blaze of his dead and forgotten predecessor. Similarly, the Mason who studies a ruin whose story is unrecorded or forgotten, recognising the "work and the mark of the Craft upon it," will read aright at least some part of its history. The builder was his Brother. Just so it is with written history. If, in the course of time, importance comes to be attached to an unrecorded event, succeeding events, by the backward pointing and illumination inherent in the relations of cause and effect, often make that plain and clear which at first was left in darkness and obscurity.

And so too, it is hoped, will the later events and later records of this history so throw back Masonic light around the events of those unrecorded thirty years as satisfactorily to demonstrate that Zion Lodge lived and Worked 140 years ago.

Before we can adequately depict or fully comprehend the next phase of Zion Lodge's history, we must remember that many important events happened during this long interval of thirty years to disturb and fundamentally to change political conditions and military policies in Michigan, in America, and in Europe. During that time the War for Independence was fought and won; peace was declared between England and America; and the independence of the United States was recognised not only by England but also by the rest of the civilised world. Although Michigan soil was in no sense the theatre of that conflict, still those events made peace there impossible.

Starting now from 1783, the date of the treaty of peace between the United States and England, we find that every political relation between the two governments was seemingly pleasant, excepting only one: England still persisted, as she had from the close of the war in 1781, in holding possession of, and of claiming the title to, the western watershed of the Great Lakes, including what is now the State of Michigan. Alas for Michigan! This one exception caused her to travel a rough and rugged road for thirteen years after the rest of the country was at peace, for this English claim was a bone of diplomatic contention between the two governments for all those years. It was also a cause of irritation and antagonism among the friends and partisans of the two governments who lived and traded side by side within the controversial territory. The antagonisms and jealousies so engendered among Detroit people and the various interests there manifested themselves in many ways, in business and social affairs as well as in political matters. The 60th Regiment, which had occupied Detroit thirty years before and had been very popular with the people there, had long since gone, and the ground was now held by troops officered from England and Canada whose loyalty and devotion to British interests and British domination was not to be doubted. Even among the business men engaged in the fur trade at Detroit were many who preferred English rule, and others practical enough to accept the situation.

Among those business men, and possibly among the troops, were Masons, and it was natural that they should want a Lodge. Whether the Lodge organised in 1764 was Working or not we do not know, but it is possible that it was not. Nevertheless, we may believe that its Warrant was in existence and that it was in possession of Masons then in Detroit. Although we have no documentary evidence to substantiate that belief, subsequent developments seem to show that the Warrant was alive, and that the Masons having the old document in custody participated in the movement for a new Lodge. Since Michigan was then claimed and held by England as an integral part of Upper Canada the Masonic Jurisdiction was therefore nominally in that of the Grand Lodge of Canada, which had already been organised. But the Grand Lodge of New York was also in working order, and the old Warrant, if lapsed, might have been renewed by it had there been no question of Jurisdiction. But policy, as well as feeling, inclined Detroit Masons at the time to acknowledge the Canada Jurisdiction. For seven years of war, and ten more years of quarrelling over possession of the region had quite naturally influenced the residents of Michigan. The loyal subjects of Great Britain, then predominant in Detroit, would not take kindly to New York Jurisdiction. On the other hand, the New York authorities of that day would not care to exercise Masonic Jurisdiction over the loyal subjects of England, even though they lived in territory claimed by the United States but not in its possession.

Much later, however, in the spring of 1806, the Brethren Petitioned the Grand Lodge of New York for a Charter. With that Petition they surrendered to that Grand Lodge their original Warrant of 1764. They did not, however, surrender their Canada Warrant of 1794. The Records of the Grand Lodge of New York show that on September 3, 1806, a Charter was granted by vote of the Grand Lodge and issued to the Brethren of Detroit by authority of DeWitt Clinton, Grand Master at that time, by which Zion Lodge was re-formed and recorded as "Lodge No. 1 at Detroit." This same Record speaks of the Petitioners as having been "at present members of Zion Lodge No. 1." Therefore, the Warrant of 1764 is steadily and consistently recognised by New York authorities as the original organic act of Masonry in Michigan.

From 1821 on, Zion Lodge no longer occupied the field alone, for the Records of the Grand Lodge of New York, of September 5, 1821, contain the following entry: "To John Mullett and others praying for a Warrant to hold a Lodge in the city of Detroit, in the Territory of Michigan, United States of America, by the name of Detroit Lodge, No. 337, recommended by Zion Lodge, No. 3, the prayer of which was granted." To this entry is appended the following note: "This Lodge was instituted and its Officers installed December 26, 1821, by A. G. Whitney, under Dispensation from the Most Worshipful His Excellency, Daniel D. Tompkins, Vice-President of the United States, with a procession and service in Church."

From the same Records of March 7, 1822, also comes the following authority: "To John S. Davis, M., Amasa Bagley, S. W., and Oliver Williams, J. W., to hold a Lodge in the town of Pontiac, in the county of Oakland, in the Territory of Michigan, by the name and style of Oakland Lodge No. 343." This Lodge had been previously organised under a Dispensation. New York Records for September 1, 1824, also carry the following statement: "A Petition from Robert Irwin and others upon which a Dispensation had, on 12th June, been issued by the Grand Master, praying for a Warrant to hold a Lodge in the town of Green Bay, in the County of Brown, in the Territory of Michigan, by the name of Menominee, recommended by Zion Lodge, No. 3, was read and the prayer of the same was granted." This Lodge was made No. 374. It is scarcely necessary to remark that this Lodge is located at Green Bay, Wisconsin, in that part of the State which was at that time part of the Territory of Michigan.

The same Records also under date of December 1, 1824, furnish the following item: " To Seneca Allen and others to hold a Lodge in the town of Monroe, in the County of Monroe, in the Territory of Michigan, by the name of Monroe Lodge, recommended by Zion Lodge, No. 3, and Detroit Lodge, No. 337." Although the Record does not expressly say that the prayer was granted, an examination of the New York Registry of that day, shows " Monroe Lodge, Monroe, Michigan Territory, No. 375," which is conclusive evidence of its organisation.

The next notable Masonic event occurring on Michigan soil was the organisation of a Grand Lodge in 1826. So various and conflicting are the accounts of the organisation and the history of that Grand Body, that it has for years seemed to be almost impossible to obtain exact and reliable data regarding its career. The history of its organisation, brief existence, and peculiar death given here is derived from official documents and from letters and other contemporaneous writings of a semi-official character. The movement which resulted in the formation of the first Grand Lodge of the Territory of Michigan was initiated by Zion Lodge at a regular meeting held on August 1, 1825. Soon afterward a call for a Convention of Masons who were also Officers or legal Representatives of Lodges in the Territory was issued by Zion Lodge, No. 3, and Detroit Lodge, No. 337, through a joint Committee of the two Lodges. A. G. Whitney, of Detroit, was Chairman of that Committee.

The response to this call, given by Menominee Lodge, No. 374, of Green Bay, which bears the date of November 7, 1825, is still preserved. We are informed by subsequent Records and events that all the Lodges then organised in the Territory sent favorable replies to this circular. It is apparent that in those days since travel in Michigan was largely by means of sailing craft, the Convention could conveniently meet neither in the late autumn or winter nor very early in the spring. Nearly a year after the call was issued, the Convention met at Detroit on June 24, 1826. The Lodges represented either by their Officers or their legal Delegates were Zion Lodge, No. 3, Detroit Lodge, No. 337, Menominee Lodge, No. 374, and Monroe Lodge, No. 375, of which all had been Chartered by the Grand Lodge of New York, as has been stated. Although Oakland Lodge, No. 343, at Pontiac, also Chartered by the same power, was not represented at the first meeting, its Representatives appeared later and participated in the Grand Lodge's action. On June 28 a Grand Lodge Constitution was agreed upon and signed and at a meeting held on the following July 31, Grand Officers were elected and the Grand Lodge was fully formed.

Having been cordially recognised by the parent Grand Lodge, the new Grand Lodge of Michigan was welcomed to fellowship by nearly all the other Grand Bodies of the Craft in the United States. By an Act of the Territorial Council of Michigan, approved on April 27, 1827, the Grand Lodge of Michigan was incorporated. During its brief existence it organised four Lodges, Stony Creek Lodge, Western Star Lodge, St. Cloud Lodge, and Fellowship Lodge, making in all nine Lodges under its Jurisdiction. The other business transacted by it was necessarily small and the meager official Records of its Proceedings were never published. But all that it did soon came to naught. The chief importance that now attaches to its business arises from the fact that, after eleven years of Masonic silence, it became the cause of four years of Masonic confusion. The manner of its death was unique. The exact date of that event is not known. Dead, the Grand Lodge did not rest in peace.

The Dispensation, granted on January 9, 1828, by Grand Master Lewis Cass, to organise Stony Creek Lodge is still in existence. To-day the document interests us as a Masonic curiosity, and because the Lodge was the only one in the Grand Jurisdiction to maintain life and activity during the dark days of anti-Masonic movement.

From the date of its formation until June 6, 1827, the constitutional date of its Annual Communication, this Grand Lodge held four special meetings. It seems also to have met on August 8, 1827, then to have adjourned till the next day, when "a quorum not appearing, no business was transacted." Here its Records become silent. Nevertheless, Grand Master Cass evidently thought that the Grand Lodge was still active when he organised Stony Creek Lodge by Dispensation five months later. Contributions to this history are made by a letter, now in the Archives of the Grand Lodge of New York, which was addressed to that Grand Body by "a Committee of the (second) Grand Lodge of Michigan," dated at Detroit on January 10, 1844. This letter is signed by John Mullett, E. Smith Lee, Levi Cook, Jeremiah Moors, and John Farrar. Of those men, the first four served either before or afterwards as Grand Masters, and the last as a Deputy Grand Master. The purpose of the letter was to give to the Grand Lodge of New York an accurate history of the organisation and career of Michigan's first Grand Lodge, that of 1826, its suspension of Labour in 1829, and the steps to revive it taken from 1840 to 1844. The letter states that because of the political bitterness and private animosity of the anti-Masons of that day, "a regular meeting of the Grand Lodge was privately held, in which a Resolution was passed to suspend Labour, for the time being and recommending the subordinate Lodges to do the same." It elsewhere appears that Grand Master Lewis Cass himself offered the resolution and that it passed unanimously. The letter also indicates that this action was taken in 1829, but in what month or what day of the month, it does not state. If, however, the statement of this letter be correct, that this action was taken at a regular meeting of the Grand Lodge, then the meeting must have occurred, according to its Constitution, on the first Wednesday in June, that is, on June 3. From this letter and the brief Record it gives, we now know nothing further about the Proceedings of this first Grand Lodge of Michigan.

The same letter also states that all Subordinate Lodges in the Territory except that at Stony Creek, complied with the advice contained in the resolution of the Grand Lodge. Stony Creek Lodge, therefore, no matter how plucky it was during the anti-Masonic controversy, was to this extent contumacious towards the Grand Lodge. And so it happened that, with the exception of that one Lodge, Masonic silence prevailed in the Grand Jurisdiction of Michigan for eleven years, during the flood of political anti-Masonic activity and the years immediately following. As will soon be shown this period was followed by four years of Masonic Babel.

Before we pass to consideration of the next period of Masonry in Michigan, it will perhaps gratify the Masonic reader to turn back for a moment to consider some peculiar features of an event of both public and Masonic interest which occurred at Detroit on September 22, 1823. This was the laying of the corner-stone of the Territorial capitol, with the Masonic ceremonies. These were performed by what purported to be "The Grand Lodge of the Territory of Michigan"—three years before the organisation of a Grand Lodge! Among other articles deposited at that time in the chamber of the corner-stone was a list of the Officers composing the officiating Grand Lodge. The corner-stone of the present capitol at Lansing was laid on October 2, 1873, and with Masonic ceremonies. Among the many articles deposited in the crypt of the new stone were the same articles which had been deposited in the old stone fifty years before. They had been removed from their original resting place, and preserved.

The gale of the anti-Masonic activity soon spent its fury, but the shattered Temples and broken Altars of Masonry lying in its wake gave proof of Masonry's great though transient power. The effects of the storm, however, were not wholly evil, for the same blast that fell destructively on Masonic Institutions and Charities here and there proved only a winnowing breeze to the Craft itself—a breeze that scattered its time-servers and cowards like chaff.

In most of the eastern States reconstruction followed destruction promptly and boldly, but in the west, where Masons were few and far apart, it advanced but slowly and sometimes timidly. There, too, the work involved greater labour and heavier personal sacrifices than it did in the older States. Besides, as was the case when the Ancient Temple was rebuilt, wherever the Craft was feeble the anti-Masonic samaritans troubled the builders and delayed the work—but not for long.

Michigan became a State in 1837. From 1830 to 1840 the tide of immigration had been unprecedented. When Masonic Labours ceased in 1829, the entire population was only about 30,000; in 1840 it had increased to nearly 250,000. Among those later immigrants, who came mainly from New England and New York, were some Masons, members of Eastern Lodges, and all familiar with anti-Masonic trouble. An effort to resume Masonic Labour, which had then been suspended eleven years, began in 1840. The object was worthy—worthy of wiser measures than were used in its behalf. From the voluminous documentary history of the un-Masonic proceedings that followed, a concise summary of the movement is easily gathered.

A Convention of Masons, called by means of circulars and newspaper notices, was held at Mt. Clemens on November 15, 1840. All in attendance were recent immigrants—"a new race of Masons who had come upon the stage since the dissolution of Masonry in the Territory, and they had no knowledge of, or connection with, the former organisation. Furthermore, no member of the Grand Lodge or of any of the subordinate Lodges was present." In fact, so much caution had been used by the older resident Masons in all their Masonic intercourse that they were not even known to be Masons by the immigrants who were members of that Convention and leaders in that Masonic revival. It is evident from the Proceedings of the meeting that no one present had any knowledge of the former existence within the Territory of a legal and recognised Grand Lodge. But a rumour of it came to their ears while they were thus convened, and a Committee of three was appointed to correspond with the Grand Lodges of other Jurisdictions and to ascertain if possible "as to the existence of any Grand Lodge within the limits of Michigan either heretofore or at present." The Convention then adjourned to meet again at Mt. Clemens on May 5, 1841.

In the interim, this Committee of three learned many things. They became acquainted with the leading Masons among the old residents of Detroit and other places. Then, during the first week of February, 1841, the Committee met at the "New York and Ohio House," in Detroit, and conferred privately with the Masons from Zion, Detroit, Oakland, and Stony Creek Lodges. At this meeting it was disclosed to the Committee, that a Grand Lodge had been formed in 1826; that it had been recognised by other Grand Lodges in 1827 and 1828; that it had been incorporated in 1827; that it had organised Lodges; and that it had in 1829, suspended Labours "for the time being." It was decided by a majority of this Conference to resume Masonic Labour in Michigan. The Committee of three was then increased by six, by adding to the three immigrant Mason members three others from among the old residents. Instead of first procuring a legal reconstruction of their lapsed Lodges, they decided to proceed at once, without Lodges, to revive the defunct Grand Lodge. But how was this to be done? It was decided that it could be accomplished by the exercise of the Grand Master's prerogatives during his absence from the State and country, twelve years after his last recorded election, and eleven years after the last meeting of the Grand Lodge. Ignoring the fact that the Constitution of the old Grand Lodge required Annual Meetings and an annual election of all Grand Officers, and that it made no provision for holding Officers over until their successors were elected and qualified, ignoring also the fact that there was only one "living" Lodge that could send legal Representatives, although the constitutional quorum required that three be sent, the Committee persisted in believing in the miraculous power of a dead Grand Master's scepter to raise the dead!

But even assuming the sufficiency of the power invoked, who was to play the part of magician in this scene of Masonic necromancy? General Cass, the old and only Grand Master, was at the time United States Minister to France. Upon whom else were they to call? Here the disagreeable duty devolves upon the historian to reveal the facts. During the whole of the four years of Masonic controversy occasioned by these proceedings, a vital and important fact was concealed from the Masonic world to which appeals for recognition had been made. During the controversy it was repeatedly asserted or assumed that, General Cass being absent, no one having power to exercise prerogatives of the Grand Master was present in the Jurisdiction except the Grand Junior Warden. And yet there was a Deputy Grand Master! Letters from two prominent Masons are extant, both of whom were present at the private Conference and both say that he there refused to exercise any of his functions for the proposed purpose in the absence of the Grand Master. The Deputy Grand Master was an old member of Zion Lodge who had been a high official under the Territorial and State governments. Guided by him, Zion Lodge held entirely aloof from this alleged Grand Lodge from beginning to end.

Neither checked nor daunted by this state of affairs, the Convention held its adjourned meeting on May 5, 1844, at Mt. Clemens, Michigan. It resolved that it could not "perceive any good reason why the Grand Lodge of Michigan cannot convene itself in a legal and constitutional manner; neither can we see the propriety of organising or attempting measures with the view of organising a new Grand Lodge, while the one already in existence stands unimpeached in that capacity."

Notwithstanding the presence in the Jurisdiction of the Deputy Grand Master, who had refused to act in this matter, the Grand Junior Warden, Martin Davis, of Ann Arbor, was induced to issue his mandate convening the Grand Lodge in Regular Session. The Grand Lodge was to meet at Detroit on the "first Wednesday of June" (June 2), 1841. He created Delegates to the Grand Body by granting Dispensations to Detroit Lodge, Oakland Lodge, and other Lodges to resume their Labours and to elect Officers. By Dispensation he also organised Lebanon Lodge, at Mt. Clemens, "to operate until the next Annual Meeting of the Grand Lodge." By such measures those Lodges were put in motion, and their Representatives, meeting according to summons, reorganised the lapsed Grand Lodge of 1826.

Another fatal defect in their Proceedings, never before brought to light, is this: Upon their own assumption that the Grand Junior Warden was the highest Officer present in the State and was, therefore, authorised to assume and perform the Grand Master's functions during his absence, it is clear that his presence was essential at this first meeting of the Grand Lodge, to organise it and give validity to its proceedings. But the Grand Junior Warden did not attend the meeting! No Record shows him to have been present. Furthermore, an extant letter by him from Ann Arbor on May 31, 1841, only two days before the meeting, to A. C. Smith, the Grand Secretary, says: "Owing to my state of ill health, I shall not be able to meet the Lodge at Detroit on Wednesday. If my presence is absolutely needed, you must adjourn to this place." But the Grand Lodge did not adjourn to Ann Arbor. The Grand Junior Warden's presence was not "absolutely needed," it seems. This self-sufficient Body then proceeded to transact its business. It formally announced itself "by the hand of the Grand Secretary and the seal of the Grand Lodge of Michigan" to the Grand Lodges of the world, and asked their recognition and fellowship. If this was the original Grand Lodge of 1826—if it had never ceased to exist, or if it was the same Grand Lodge recognised in 1827–28 by all the Grand Lodges in the country—why should it now ask them to recognise it again? That they themselves doubted the legality and regularity of their proceeding is betrayed by this act, an act which is entirely inconsistent with their pretensions and the theory on which their action was based—in fact, an act wholly unnecessary, even ridiculous if they were correct in their principles and methods.

As might have been expected, recognition and fellowship were kindly but firmly refused by every Grand Lodge in the United States. The errors of the Lodge's founders were fraternally pointed out. They were plainly told, from all Masonic quarters, that until Lodges had been formed by some living Grand Lodge, and three or more such Lodges had met and organised a Grand Lodge in a legal Masonic manner, no Grand Lodge would be recognised in Michigan.

But strange as it may now seem to well-informed Masons, this irregular Body, with a perseverance worthy of a better cause, persisted in its course for nearly four years, until the "Michigan question" finally became a subject of discussion and a cause of annoyance and trouble in every Grand Lodge in the land. One feature of this protracted controversy is worthy of note. Notwithstanding the many things said and done in Michigan itself, things that were calculated to try one's patience, to irritate, and to provoke, there cannot be found in the many letters, voluminous Reports, and exhaustive discussions emanating from the Grand Officers and Grand Bodies of other Jurisdictions, the slightest evidence of irritated or unfraternal feeling. They were all governed by that "Charity that hopeth all things and believeth all things."

The proceedings of this Body may be briefly recapitulated. Its first meeting as a Grand Lodge was held as required by the old Constitution, at Detroit, on June 2, 1841, and Representatives from Stony Creek Lodge, Pontiac Lodge, and Lebanon Lodge transacted its business. Levi Cook, a member of Detroit Lodge, was elected Grand Master, but was never Installed; his Lodge did not become a part of the Grand Lodge till October 5, 1842. The Lodge met again on June 24, 1841, and on January 5, 1842. On June 1, 1842, it held its Annual Communication, at which Leonard Weed was elected Grand Master. Still another meeting was held on October 5 of the same year. Then, on June 7, 1843, at its Annual Communication, John Mullett was elected Grand Master. A special meeting was held on May 22, 1844, the most important business of which was the adoption of the following sensible declaration: "Resolved, That in view of the difficulties with Grand Lodge of New York in acknowledging the authority of this Grand Lodge, that it be recommended to the members of the old Lodges of this State, holding their Charters from the Grand Lodge of New York, to apply to that Body for a renewal of their Charters for the purpose of immediate reorganisation; and in case the renewal of these Lodges be granted, under the above authority and under the above conditions, this Grand Lodge does hereby take immediate steps for forming a Grand Lodge, and that as soon as said Grand Lodge shall be so organised, this Grand Lodge shall be dissolved." General Cass was then at home again, and although there is no record to show that he had anything to do with carrying out this wise proceeding, intimations are sufficiently made in letters which came from New York at the time that this change of policy was due to his influence and advice.

Two years prior to this action, the Brethren of St. Joseph Valley Lodge at Niles, in Berrien County, tiring of the situation in Michigan, had asked and obtained after some delay, a Charter from the Grand Lodge at New York, dated June 10, 1843. Their Lodge was ranked on the New York Register as Lodge No. 93.

Acting conformably with the previously stated recommendation of the Grand Lodge, Zion Lodge, again coming to the front, Detroit Lodge, and Oakland Lodge applied to the Grand Lodge of New York for Charters. The Records of that Grand Body for June 8, 1844, show that they were granted without charge. Zion Lodge thus became No. 99, Detroit Lodge became No. 100, and Oakland Lodge became No. 101. The New York Grand Lodge's Committee on Warrants, reporting on these Charters, says: "The Committee have read, with much pleasure, the applications from three Lodges in Michigan, who have for many years suspended their Labours, to be again revived under the Jurisdiction of this Grand Lodge, from which they formerly held their respective Warrants. The Committee believe that this course of our Brethren of Michigan will be attended with happy results in cementing that fraternal feeling which should ever exist among Masons and redound to the permanent interest of the Brethren of that State. They accordingly recommend that Charters be furnished to Zion, Detroit, and Oakland Lodges, free of charge."

The legal Representatives of those four Lodges, that is, of St. Joseph Lodge, No. 93, Zion Lodge, No. 99, Detroit Lodge, No. 100, and Oakland Lodge, No. 101, met in Convention at Detroit, adopted a Grand Lodge Constitution, organised the present Grand Lodge of Michigan, and elected its Officers on September 17, 1844. John Mullett, who was elected Grand Master, was Installed by Past Grand Master Lewis Cass at an Emergent Communication. The other Grand Officers were Installed by the new Grand Master.

The illegal Grand Lodge was then dissolved, and its books, Records, Jewels, and implements were transferred to the new Body. Then the Masonic process of healing was extensively but prudently applied by the new authorities, and peace and order soon emerged from the turmoil and confusion which had been caused by the irregular proceedings. At the Annual Communication of the Grand Lodge of New York held on June 4, 1845, the Grand Lodge of Michigan was cordially recognised, and the four Lodges forming it were formally transferred to the care of the new Grand Lodge. Recognitions from the rest of the Masonic world then followed rapidly, and the Grand Lodge of Michigan, as then organised, continues to stand on proper Masonic foundations. For more than ninety years it has grown and prospered in all that gives wisdom, strength, and beauty to Masonic Institutions.

The first Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Michigan was General Lewis Cass, who served in 1826. He was appointed governor of the Territory of Michigan in 1813, and served with distinction in that office for sixteen years. In 1831 he was appointed Secretary of War in President Jackson's Cabinet, then in 1836 he was appointed United States Minister to France. His services there were of great value to his country. In 1845 he was elected to the United States Senate, where he served until 1848, at which time he resigned and accepted the Democratic nomination for the Presidency. After his defeat in the election, he was re-elected to the United States Senate for the remainder of his original term, and was again re-elected for a second term. In 1852 he was again a prominent candidate for the Presidency. In 1857 he was appointed Secretary of State in President Buchanan's Cabinet, but when the President refused to reinforce and reprovision Fort Sumter, Secretary Cass promptly resigned, thus terminating a distinguished and honourable public career of fifty-six years' duration. At the organisation of the first Grand Lodge of Michigan on July 31, 1826, Bro. Cass was elected Grand Master, an Office which he held during the existence of that Body. He has had eighty successors, many of whom have also been distinguished in public life. Four have presided as chief justices of the Supreme Court of Michigan, many have served in the national Congress, while many others have served their country in other distinguished positions.

The first activities in connection with establishing a Masonic Home in Michigan were begun about fifty years ago by Bro. John D. Jennings, of Grand Rapids, who formed an organisation independent of the Grand Lodge or of any constituent Lodge. It was composed of Master Masons who agreed to contribute one dollar a year for the purpose of building and operating a Masonic Home. Bro. Jennings persevered until he had acquired sufficient funds to erect a Masonic Home in Grand Rapids, at a cost of $100,000. The Home, dedicated by the Grand Lodge in 1892, then entered upon its mission. By a strange turn of Fortune's wheel, Bro. John D. Jennings was himself the first person to become registered in the new Home. The Home, which provided for 75 guests, was soon fully occupied. It was completely destroyed by fire in 1910. Later, the Grand Lodge was fortunate in being given a fine group of buildings that had been erected for a sanitarium, at Alma, Michigan, at an expense of $300,000. This was the gift of its owner, A. W. Wright. Then, on March 29, 1912, the sanitarium was dedicated as a new Masonic Home. It provides for 130 guests. It had been successfully operated up to the present time, but the increasing needs for a larger and more modern Home led the Grand Lodge at its Annual Communication held in May, 1930, to vote an appropriation of $750,000 for a new Home at Alma. The construction of this was immediately commenced and the building was dedicated on May 16, 1931. This Home, which provides for 175 guests, is so planned that it can be expanded to meet future needs. Michigan now has one of the best Masonic Homes in America.

In addition to the Masonic Home Fund, the Michigan Grand Lodge has raised a Relief Fund amounting to $60,000, by means of a per capita tax a year.

This fund is used to assist families who for one reason or another may not wisely be placed in the Masonic Home. This fund is also administered by the Masonic Home Board, and the system has been found highly satisfactory. Michigan Masonry is endeavouring to live up to the teachings of its beloved Fraternity, and to do all in its power to make this world a better place to live in.

FREEMASONRY IN MINNESOTA

E. A. MONTGOMERY

FREEMASONRY, always found in the van of advancing civilisation, early took root in Minnesota. The Act of Congress which created the Territory of Minnesota was passed on March 3, 1849. Two months later Alexander Ramsey, first Territorial governor, arrived from Washington, and at St. Paul instituted the territorial government. In his official capacity, he exercised jurisdiction, nominally at least, over that vast region from which was later carved not only the State of Minnesota but also the greater portion of two other extensive northwestern Commonwealths. Except for a few white settlers who, for the most part, lived in rude log cabins standing along the banks of the Mississippi and St. Croix Rivers, the rest of this magnificent region, stretching westward to the Missouri River, and northward to the British possessions, was sparsely peopled by two or three independent tribes of Indians, among whom the writs of Federal and Territorial courts were neither recognised nor honoured. There was as yet no railroad and no telegraph. Over this vast region Masonic darkness prevailed. The light of Freemasonry had not yet shone out.

Then, on July 12, 1849, The Minnesota Chronicle of St. Paul published an invitation to all Masons thereabouts to meet at the American House on the evening of July 16 to consider the organisation of a Masonic Lodge. According to plan the meeting was held, and a Petition was prepared and signed by twelve Master Masons who participated. This was sent to the Grand Master of Ohio. It prayed for a Dispensation enabling the signers to form a Masonic Lodge and to make Masons in St. Paul. Nearly a month later, on August 8, 1849, the Petition was granted by Michael Z. Kreider, Grand Master of Ohio, and a Dispensation was issued to Charles Kilgore Smith and eleven other Masons then living in St. Paul. Smith, at that time Territorial Secretary of Minnesota, was named first Master. This Dispensation was mailed to him, together with the following letter from the Grand Master of Ohio:

Lancaster, Ohio
August 8, 1849

Dear Sir:

Your favor of the 25 ultimo has just come to hand & I hasten to comply with your request by forwarding, as herein enclosed, a Dispensation. . . . I esteem it a special compliment both to myself & our Grand Lodge, to be the medium through which the pure & elevating principles of Masonry are conveyed to your wilderness land. May that wilderness, under its hallowed influences, be made to bud & blossom as the rose. Hoping that this may soon reach you & that before long I may have the satisfaction to learn from your own hand of your prosperity, I remain,

Very truly and fraternally yours,
M. Z. Kreider.

This Dispensation was read at a meeting in the office of Charles K. Smith, which was located in the old Central House, on Bench Street, in St. Paul. In this building, then used as the Territorial Capitol, a Lodge of Freemasons was Instituted on September 8, 1849. This was the first Masonic Lodge to meet in Minnesota. At that meeting the Petition of Charles Peter Scott was received, and nine days later, on September 17, he was Initiated. On October 17, David Burton Loomis was passed, and on October 24, Scott was Raised. To commemorate those three events, September 17, October 17, and October 24 have been made the respective dates of the first exemplification of these Degrees of Ancient Craft Masonry in Minnesota. In that first Lodge of Minnesota $20 was charged for the three Degrees. The dues were twenty-five cents a month.

The meeting place selected for the new Lodge was the attic of the St. Paul Hotel, a two-story log building made to look a little less rude by its weather-board siding. The rafters consisted of tamarack poles from which the bark had not been removed. The logs at the sides and ends of the room formed the rustic wainscoting. The desks of the Officers were empty barrels set on end, while nail kegs served for chairs. The Altar was an empty packing-box, and three old candlesticks, holding half-burned tallow dips, illuminated a well-worn Bible and the Square and Compasses.

For the next three years St. Paul Lodge worked spasmodically. Because of the senseless bickerings of its members, no less than three opportunities to make Returns to the Grand Lodge of Ohio, and to secure a Charter, were neglected. As a result the Charter was not granted until October 22, 1852, and it was not issued until January 24, 1853. The Lodge was thereafter known as St. Paul Lodge, No. 223, of Ohio.

In 1852, while still holding their Charter from the Ohio Grand Lodge, the St. Paul Masons applied for a Dispensation from the Grand Lodge of Wisconsin, and on May 17 of that year the Deputy Grand Master of Wisconsin granted the Dispensation they had sought. At the same time he appointed Daniel F. Brawley to be Master of a Masonic Lodge at St. Paul, the Lodge to be known as Polar Star Lodge U.D. It was evidently the intention of the St. Paul Masons wholly to ignore the relations and obligations to the Grand Master and to the Grand Lodge of Ohio, under whose authority they had been created into a Lodge, and to become subordinate to the Grand Lodge of Wisconsin. Having received a Dispensation from Wisconsin, they then returned their Ohio Dispensation on May 27, 1852, and for eight months held Lodge meetings as Polar Star Lodge U.D. Then on October 19 of that year, at the Communication of the Grand Lodge of Ohio, the Grand Master of Ohio made the following statement:

There was forwarded to me during the past season full returns, with a copy of the minutes of St. Paul Lodge, Minnesota, and with them the warrant of Dispensation under which that Lodge has acted until the 27th of May last, which documents are herewith submitted. Accompanying them is the letter of C. C. Case (Cave), Secretary, expressing the desire of that Lodge to dissolve its connection with this Grand Lodge and for it to remain, as I understand the letter, and for the greater convenience of this Lodge, as a subordinate already formed of the Grand Lodge of Wisconsin.

Three days later the Committee on Charters and Dispensations reported a resolution, adopted by the Grand Lodge of Ohio, "that a Charter be issued to St. Paul Lodge in Minnesota, upon payment to the Grand Secretary of their Grand Lodge dues to May 14, 1852, amounting to thirty-two dollars."

Notwithstanding their changed relations, when notified that a Charter had been granted conditionally by the Grand Lodge of Ohio, the Masons of St. Paul complied with the conditions imposed by that Grand Lodge, settled up their dues in arrears, and accepted and received the Ohio Charter. This was on January 24, 1853. Satisfactory explanation of their status was then made to the Grand Lodge of Wisconsin, and on February 7, 1853, the Lodge was Constituted as St. Paul Lodge, No. 223, of Ohio, and the Brethren who then held Office in Polar Star Lodge U.D. were elected as its Officers. Between the time of its Institution and its Constitution, the Lodge had Raised twenty candidates to the Degree of Master Mason, and had conferred the First Degree or the Second Degree on seven other Petitioners.

Among those Raised in St. Paul Lodge, No. 223, two of the earliest to receive advancement were residents of Stillwater. To those two Masons and several others then residing in the valley of the St. Croix River was issued a Dispensation by William R. Smith, Grand Master of Wisconsin, under date of October 12, 1850, to form a Lodge at Stillwater. This resulted in the organisation of the second Lodge in Minnesota, under the name of St. John's Lodge. It was Chartered June 9, 1852, and was duly constituted October 23, 1852, as St. John's Lodge, No. 39 of Wisconsin. Its first Master was Frederick K. Bartlett. From the time of its organisation to that of its constitution, this Lodge's Records show that it did not confer a Degree. It was not until January 29 of the next year that its first Petitioner, Theodore E. Parker, was elected and Initiated.

The progress of Freemasonry at St. Anthony Falls, now a part of Minneapolis east of the Mississippi River, presents a notable contrast to that at St. Paul and at Stillwater. The founding of a Lodge in that locality was largely due to the efforts of Dr. Alfred E. Ames, who arrived at St. Anthony Falls on October 12, 1851. From the beginning Dr. Ames had definite plans for the formation of a Masonic Lodge at St. Anthony Falls. Fortunately, too, he knew how most expeditiously to transmute his wishes and plans into action. A memorandum in his own handwriting is the authority of the statement that during November 1851, he visited and examined Masonically each prospective member of the proposed Lodge. On or before December 13, 1851, all those Brethren with the exception of Cap. Gardner, afterwards a Major-General of the United States Army, met at Dr. Ames's office and signed a Petition for a Dispensation. Soon thereafter its granting was recommended by St. Paul Lodge, No. 223.

The Petition was then sent to the Grand Master of Illinois and on February 5, 1852, Thomas J. Pickett, incumbent at that time, issued a Dispensation for the formation of a new Masonic Lodge at St. Anthony Falls in Minnesota Territory, to be known as Cataract Lodge, with Dr. Alfred E. Ames serving as Master. Nine days later at the residence of one of its members the Lodge was Instituted. At the first Communication sixteen Petitions were received, and during the nine months which elapsed before the Lodge was Chartered, thirty-five members were Initiated, thirty-one were Passed and thirty were Raised. This Lodge, Chartered on October 5, 1852, was constituted sixteen days later as Cataract Lodge, No. 121 of Illinois, by Past Master Emanuel Case, who served as Constituting Officer. Its Officers were the first ever Installed in a Masonic Lodge in Minnesota.

The first intimation of an intention to organise a Grand Lodge in Minnesota was manifest on the evening of February 7, 1853, when A. T. C. Pierson, acting as proxy for the Grand Master of Ohio, consecrated St. Paul Lodge, No. 223 of Ohio, Installed its Officers, and was himself elected a member of the Lodge. The Constitution of St. Paul Lodge, No. 223, completed the required number of Lodges needed for forming a legal Grand Lodge, St. John's Lodge, No. 39 at Stillwater, and Cataract Lodge, No. 121, at St. Anthony Falls having already been constituted. At this Communication Bro. Pierson moved the following resolutions, which were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, It is the opinion of the members of this Lodge that the interest of Masonry demands that a Grand Lodge in and for the Territory of Minnesota should be organised at as early a date as possible, therefore,

Resolved, That the first three Officers, as those recognised as Past Masters, members of this Lodge, are hereby authorised to meet with Delegates from the other two Lodges in this Territory, and, if deemed expedient, to forthwith organise a Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons for Minnesota.

Resolved, That the secretary be requested to send a certified copy of the preamble and resolutions to Cataract Lodge at St. Anthony Falls and to St. John's Lodge at Stillwater, and request them by their Delegates to meet in St. Paul on Wednesday evening, February 23, to carry the same into effect.

According to the Records, each of the three Lodges then existing in the Territory was represented at the Convention by two or more members who served as Delegates. As a matter of fact, however, St. John's Lodge, No. 39, had no lawfully appointed Delegates at the first Session of the Convention, although Dr. Otis Hoyt and David B. Loomis attended, claiming to have a proxy which permitted them to represent the Master and the Junior Warden respectively. Their claims seem to have been unfounded, however, for Dr. Hoyt, who then resided at Hudson, Wisconsin, had not met with St. John's Lodge, No. 39, for months. Although David B. Loomis, a member of the Territorial Council, resided in St. Paul at the time, neither he nor Dr. Hoyt had been instructed by St. John's Lodge, No. 39 to represent it in the Convention. In fact, they could not lawfully have been so instructed.

It was left for H. N. Setzer, Senior Warden of St. John's Lodge, No. 39, at that time, to state the facts. In an address at the annual Feast of the Masonic Veterans Association, held on January 16, 1895, he made the following statement:

On the first day of the Convention Doctor Hoyt and Bro. Loomis was there, but St. John's Lodge had not authorised any action in regard to the formation of a Grand Lodge; in fact, it had not received any communication in that respect; hence the Lodge was not represented the first day. I, myself, as Senior Warden, was not present the first day, although the report falsely states so. On the evening of February 22 I received a letter, signed by the Masters of Cataract and St. Paul Lodges, attested by the Secretaries, requesting St. John's Lodge to join them in Convention to form a Grand Lodge. I had no time to call a meeting of the Lodge on that evening, but I called a meeting the next day for the evening of February 23. I, myself, as Senior Warden, occupied the East and laid the communication of St. Paul and Cataract Lodges before the Lodge.

There was considerable doubt among the Brethren as to the advisability of forming a Grand Lodge with three Lodges. Bro. Van Vorhes called attention to the fact that the Grand Lodge would be unable to control a subordinate Lodge by arresting its Charter, as thereby it would commit felo-de-se. Bro. Partridge thought we ought to be satisfied with our own Grand Lodge (Wisconsin) and not to try experiment with others.

At last a Resolution passed unanimously authorising the Master and Wardens of St. John's Lodge to meet the other Lodges in Convention, and if they should find it for the benefit of Masonry in general, and not affecting the interests of St. John's Lodge in particular, they were empowered to surrender their Charter and to accept authority from the Grand Lodge of Minnesota when founded.

With this authority I went over (to St. Paul) on February 24 and met in Convention. Suffice it to say, while St. John's Lodge was unrepresented the first day, on the second day the Lodge was represented and the surrender of the Charter was a lawful act. The Grand Lodge was legally formed.

This narrative shows by what a close margin even the second day's proceedings and the entire Work of the Convention escaped becoming a fiasco.

Despite these difficulties the Convention was nevertheless called to order on the evening of February 23, by A. T. C. Pierson of St. Paul Lodge, No. 223. According to the Record those present were: Daniel F. Brawley, Dennis W. C.

A. E. Ames.
The first Grand Master, 1853-1854.

A. T. C. Pierson.
Grand Master, 1856-1863. Grand Secretary, 1876-1889.

The Old Central House, St. Paul, Minnesota, on Bench Street, Now Second.
St. Paul Lodge was organised here September 8, 1849. The first Masonic banquet in Minnesota was held in this house.

Dunwell, Lot Moffet, Aaron Goodrich, and A. T. C. Pierson from St. Paul Lodge, No. 223 of Ohio; Dr. Alfred E. Ames, Daniel N. Coolbaugh, Charles T. Stevens, and Emanuel Case from Cataract Lodge, No. 121 of Illinois; and Dr. Otis Hoyt and David B. Loomis from St. John's Lodge, No. 39 of Wisconsin. The Record further says:

A.T.C. Pierson offered the following Resolution, which was unanimously adopted by the Convention:

Resolved, That it is the deliberate opinion of this Convention that the permanent good of Masonry demands the formation of a Grand Lodge for Minnesota.

Judge Aaron Goodrich of St. Paul offered the following Resolution, which was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we proceed to the preliminaries for the formation of a Grand Lodge, by the appointment of a Committee to draft a Constitution and Regulations for the government thereof, and that said Committee be requested to report to this Convention to-morrow.

The President of the Convention appointed Judge Goodrich of St. Paul Lodge No. 223, the Honourable B.D.Loomis, of St. John's Lodge No. 39, and E.Case of Cataract Lodge No. 121, St. Anthony to act as the Committee.

On motion the Convention then adjourned until to-morrow (Thursday) afternoon at two o'clock.

Whatever may be said about the legality of the proceedings of the first day of the Convention, there can be no doubt about the regularity of what followed when it reassembled on the second day. With authority from his Lodge, H. N. Setzer attended the second Session. The standing of Dr. Hoyt and of David B. Loomis had been confirmed, and Abraham Van Vorhes was present as an additional Delegate from St. John's Lodge. Consequently, when the Lodge was opened on the Third Degree "in due and ancient form" on February 24, at St. Paul, all the legally authorised Delegates were present and empowered to take such action as, in their collective wisdom, should be deemed expedient for the best interests of Masonry in Minnesota.

The first and essential business was the report of the Committee to which had been entrusted the drafting of a Constitution. From internal evidence, and from documentary testimony as well, the Constitution appears to have been largely, if not entirely, the Work of the Chairman, Judge Aaron Goodrich, a former Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the Territory. A masterly production, it consisted of five Articles, each composed of numerous sections. In addition, the Constitution presented nine rules of Order and three standing resolutions. It was brief, concise, easy to comprehend, and broad enough in scope to cover practically every question likely to arise in the government of a Masonic Jurisdiction which then consisted of only a few Lodges.

Following the reading of this report, the Constitution, Regulations, and resolutions were unanimously adopted. The following Officers were then elected: Alfred Elisha Ames, of St. Anthony Falls, as Grand Master; Aaron Goodrich, of St. Paul, as Deputy Grand Master; Daniel Franklin Brawley, of St. Paul, as Senior Grand Warden; Abraham Van Vorhes, of Stillwater, as Junior Grand Warden.

Under the provisions of the new Constitution, the Grand Master-elect appointed the following Officers: Emanuel Case, of St. Anthony Falls, to be Grand Treasurer; John G. Lennon, of St. Anthony Falls, to be Grand Secretary; Dennis W. C. Dunwell, of St. Paul, to be Senior Grand Deacon; David B. Loomis, of Stillwater, to be Junior Grand Deacon; Sylander Partridge, of Stillwater, to be Grand Sword Bearer; A. T. C. Pierson, of St. Paul, to be Grand Marshal; Henry N. Setzer, of Stillwater, to be Grand Pursuivant; the Rev. Jacob S. Chamberlain, of St. Anthony Falls, to be Grand Chaplain; Lot Moffet and Charles W. Borup, of St. Paul, to be Grand Stewards; and William Harshorn, of St. Paul, to be Grand Tyler.

All these matters settled and all Officers having been selected, the Grand Lodge of Minnesota was then opened. Its Officers were Installed by Andrew Jackson Morgan, Past Master of an Ohio Chapter, and the Grand Lodge was proclaimed to be duly and legally authorised, its Officers properly elected and Installed. The three Lodges were given new Charters, without the payment of fees, and were numbered in order according to the priority of the date of their original Charters. Thus, St. John's Lodge became No. 1, Cataract Lodge became No. 2, and St. Paul Lodge became No. 3. Thanks to the protecting care of the Grand Architect of the Universe and to the sense of justice of the Grand Lodge itself, these three Lodges are still active and prosperous, and are yearly growing into a new and greater usefulness under the Warrants that were granted to them more than three-quarters of a century ago.

That the organisation of the Grand Lodge of Minnesota was the result of a sudden impulse rather than the culmination of a long premeditated plan is indicated by the crude appearance of the Charters issued to the three constituent Lodges in 1853. All were written on ordinary blue letter paper. Likewise the Seal was of blue paper, of a somewhat darker shade than the body of the document itself, and imposed upon it were the "All Seeing Eye" and the "Square and Compasses," surrounded by a now uncipherable legend. Before the Annual Communication of 1854, those three Charters had been replaced by others printed on vellum. Then in 1857, those, in turn, were reproduced on parchment. At the time of their issue, the vellum Charters were taken up.

The new Grand Lodge was accorded a hearty welcome by the Grand Lodges of Ohio, of Wisconsin, and of Illinois. On October 3, 1853, Eli B. Ames, Grand Master of Illinois, a brother of the new Grand Master, in his address to the Grand Lodge of Illinois, at Springfield, made the following statement:

Since our last annual Communication our Brethren in Minnesota Territory have held a Convention and organised themselves into a Grand Lodge and are now superintending their own Masonic affairs. Three Lodges constitute their whole number of subordinates. Yet with that small number to begin with, they had precedent to govern them. The Grand Lodge of Rhode Island was organised with but that same number of Lodges, and I have no doubt but that the interests of our Order will be advanced in that quarter of the country by the forming of that Grand Lodge. I am advised that Masonry is prosperous there. They elected for their first Grand Master my brother, Doctor Ames, under whose watchful care and direction we have the strongest assurance that everything will be done which will tend to build up our edifice in that far-off country. In taking leave of Doctor Ames we part with one of our pioneers—one of the sentinels who has stood on the outer walls—he who has built up the waste places. Belvidere, Roscoe, Rockton, and Rockford Lodges are all fruits of his labours. We bid him and his young Grand Lodge godspeed.

The Grand Lodge of Minnesota was incorporated by an Act of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory, approved on March 5, 1853. With the addition of certain amendments in later years, it has had its corporate existence under that Act.

The first two Lodges Chartered under the Grand Lodge were Hennepin Lodge, No. 4, at Minneapolis and Ancient Landmark Lodge, No. 5, at St. Paul. Both received their Charters at the second Annual Communication, held on January 2, 1854. Hennepin Lodge had already been organised under Dispensation, dated June 21, 1853. Although a Charter had been recommended by the Grand Lodge Committee, it had been vigorously opposed by Aaron Goodrich, Deputy Grand Master, and by St. Paul Lodge, No. 3. Their opposition has often been ascribed to their fear that, with the accession of this new Lodge at Minneapolis, then just across the Mississippi River from St. Anthony Falls, Grand Master Ames, with its aid and the aid of his own Lodge, Cataract Lodge, No. 2, would be able to perpetuate himself indefinitely as Grand Master. Such a view is unreasonable, however, for no one was ever less likely to disregard the proprieties than Grand Master Ames.

To counteract the objections raised a Petition was presented to the Grand Lodge on the following day. It was signed by thirteen Master Masons, some of whom were members of St. Paul Lodge, No. 3. The Petition asked permission to organise a new Lodge in St. Paul. As a result, on the second day's Communication Hennepin Lodge, No. 4, was Chartered, and a Charter was also voted direct and delivered at once to Ancient Landmark Lodge, No. 5, at St. Paul.

In an address, delivered in 1856, Grand Master Sherburne ably presented cogent reasons for the formation of a National General Grand Lodge, but he did not approve the Articles of Confederation adopted by a Convention of Masons held in Washington, District of Columbia, in January of that year. The Grand Lodge did, however, express the opinion that "there exists an urgent necessity for the establishment in the United States of a General Grand Body to whom can be referred for adjudication all differences that might arise between Grand Lodges, and such other questions as the good of Masonry demands should be decided by general authority." Then, in 1858 the Grand Lodge declared that it did not favour the formation of a General Grand Lodge of the United States having supreme power, but that it did favour a Masonic Congress of the United States having certain delegated rights. Accordingly, in 1859 the Grand Lodge of Minnesota endorsed the plan which had been proposed by the North American Congress, held in Chicago in September of the previous year.

A. T. C. Pierson was the third Grand Master of Minnesota. His tenure of office extended from January 14, 1856, to October 26, 1864, a period of nearly nine years. One of his outstanding acts, approved by the Grand Lodge in 1857, was to refuse a Dispensation to "an exclusive Lodge of German Brethren, believing that no act should be done or recognised which will effect or tend to produce a caste of country or character among those who, as one common fraternity, should meet on one common Level, act by one common Plumb, and part upon the same Square."

In 1858 Grand Master Pierson was authorised to procure a suitable stone from some quarry in Minnesota, to have it properly squared, numbered, and marked with a suitable device, and to forward it to the Washington Monument Association as a contribution from the Masons of Minnesota.

During the period of the War between the States, so unpropitious were conditions and so unfavourable was the time for the propagation of Freemasonry, that Grand Master Pierson dispensed with the Annual Communication which should have been held in 1862. He aptly stated his reasons for so doing in these words: "Not a company has gone from this State but that some of our Lodges were represented in it; not a regiment, but that at least one half of its Officers were members of our Order; not a Lodge in the State, but that some of its Officers have answered their country's call. In some of our Lodges one year since, all the Officers had gone; in others, a portion of the Officers and members, and in one Lodge but three members were left."

The first laying of corner-stone by the Fraternity in the Northwest was performed by the Grand Lodge of Minnesota on St. John the Baptist's Day, 1857. The proposed building was that of the Minnesota Historical Society, located at the corner of West Tenth and Wabasha Streets in St. Paul. Of this event Grand Master Pierson said: "Having antiquity to sustain me, and believing a public display would be advantageous to the Craft, I summoned them to assist me. Every Lodge was represented, some of the Brethren coming a hundred fifty miles to be present." On that occasion the homemade regalia and tin Jewels previously worn by the Officers of the Grand Lodge were displaced by new ones recently brought from New York.

The Grand Lodge of Minnesota has had two Constitutions, the first having been adopted in 1853. At the Annual Communication in January 1854, a Committee of five Brethren, one from each constituent Lodge, with A. T. C. Pierson acting as Chairman, was appointed to revise this Constitution. A full report was made, and a new Constitution was adopted on January 11, 1856. It included a Trial Code and twenty-five sections of General Regulations. It was based on the Constitution of the Grand Lodge of New York, selected as the best of the thirty-three examined. More than eighty years have elapsed since it was adopted, and although it was revised in 1915, it remains substantially as adopted in 1856.

The Grand Lodge of Minnesota adheres to the old doctrines so far as concerns the powers of the Grand Lodges. In its Constitution, it has declared that it is inalienably invested with supreme and exclusive Jurisdiction over all matters of Ancient Craft Masonry in Minnesota, and that it possesses the inherent power to form a Constitution as its fundamental written law and to prescribe such other regulations and laws for its government and that of its subordinates as it may deem best. All governmental powers, whether executive, legislative, or judicial, not expressly delegated by the Grand Lodge, are declared to be inherent in it and reserved to it as the supreme governing Body of Masonry in Minnesota. It also retains the power to amend its Constitution. Proposed amendments must first be approved by a two-thirds vote of the Grand Lodge at the Annual Communication at which they are presented, and then, after being published in the Proceedings of that Communication, they must be adopted by a two-thirds vote at the next subsequent Annual Communication.

So far as it is known, the first Masonic funeral to be held in Minnesota was that of Joel Whitney, a sojourning Mason from Maine, who died at St. Paul. At the request of the St. Paul Brethren, funeral ceremonies were conducted on March 24, 1852, by Dr. Alfred E. Ames and other Officers of Cataract Lodge, No. 2, of St. Anthony Falls. The Record states that after being opened in a Lodge Room in St. Paul, the "Lodge then proceeded to the residence of the late Bro. Whitney and conveyed his remains to their resting-place and there buried his body Masonically."

Four Lodges outside its Jurisdiction have been Chartered by the Grand Lodge of Minnesota. In 1863, Grand Master Pierson granted a Dispensation to Northern Light Lodge, at Pembina, on the extreme northern boundary of Dakota Territory, but the Lodge was never Chartered there. Later, the Dispensation was removed and established at Fort Garry, and, subsequently, in 1867, the Lodge was Chartered there. In 1871 Grand Master Nash issued a Dispensation to Yellowstone Lodge, at Fort Buford, in Dakota Territory. Although this Lodge was Chartered in 1872, it later surrendered its Charter. In 1872 Grand Master Nash issued a Dispensation to Shiloh Lodge, at Fargo, in Dakota Territory, and a Lodge was Chartered there on January 14, 1874. Then, in 1874 Grand Master Griswold issued a Dispensation for Bismarck Lodge, at Bismarck, also in Dakota Territory. This Lodge was Chartered on January 13, 1875. Later, however, after the Grand Lodge of Dakota was formed, the Lodge at Fargo and that at Bismarck adhered to it.

In 1869 the Webb Work and Lectures, as exemplified by the District Deputies of the Grand Lodge, were adopted as the established Work and Lectures of the Jurisdiction. Supervision of the Work and Lectures is now delegated to a Board of Custodians, which annually conducts a school of instruction held during the two days immediately preceding each Annual Communication of the Grand Lodge and at such other times as the Grand Master directs. To these schools it is the duty of each subordinate Lodge to send at least one of its Grand Lodge Representatives.

In 1871 the Grand Lodge first expressed an opinion on dual membership, declaring itself to disapprove of that policy as "likely to breed disturbance among Lodges." For several years the question was vexatious, but finally in 1881 a section prohibiting membership in more than one Lodge in Minnesota at one and the same time was added to the Constitution. Since then there has been no change in the Grand Lodge's opinion regarding this matter. In 1887 the Grand Lodge also disapproved of the exclusive and perpetual Jurisdiction over rejected candidates.

In 1880 a Widows' and Orphans' Fund was created, for which the sum of $500 was voted as the initial appropriation. Fourteen years later this was made a permanent trust fund, the income from which can be disbursed only for charitable purposes. This fund now amounts to $115,847, and the Emergency Relief Fund amounts to $42,131.

The Grand Lodge of Minnesota recognises as Masonic the following societies or organisations: The General Grand Chapter of Royal Arch Masons of the United States, together with the Grand Chapter of Royal Arch Masons of Minnesota and its constituent Chapters; the General Grand Council of Royal and Select Masters of the United States, together with the Grand Council of Royal and Select Masters of Minnesota and its constituent Councils; the Grand Encampment of Knights Templar of the United States, together with the Grand Commandery of Knights Templar of Minnesota and Commanderies existing under its authority; the Supreme Council of the Thirty-third Degree of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite of Freemasonry for the Southern Jurisdiction of the United States, and its subordinate Bodies. So long as these organisations continue to act as they "have done in the past, without objections from this Grand Lodge, they may continue to adopt the first three Degrees of Masonry, namely, Entered Apprentice, Fellow Craft, and Master Mason, as the base upon which to erect their so-called higher Degrees, and may, within their duly organised Bodies, with the usual Masonic obligations and precautions to preserve the same, use so much of the esoteric ceremonies of said first three Degrees as may be necessary for the purpose." In 1890 the Grand Lodge declined to recognise the Mystic Shrine and the Order of the Eastern Star to be legitimate Masonry. It has declared that any society or organisation not named in the foregoing list, which exercises, or attempts to exercise, any of those rights, or privileges, is irregular.

In 1902 the Grand Lodge took the first steps to found a Masonic Home. At that time a Committee was appointed to consider the advisability of establishing such a Home, but the matter was continued until 1904, at which time it was indefinitely postponed. Then, in 1906 the Grand Master was authorised to appoint a Committee to organise and to perfect a corporation under the laws of the State, having as its object the accumulation of funds and the erection and maintenance of a Masonic Home in Minnesota. The Committee was further instructed not to build such a Home until a sum of at least $100,000 had been secured, one-half of which should be reserved as a permanent endowment fund. The work of procuring funds for this purpose was slow, but finally, in 1917 initial requirements having been fulfilled, the Grand Lodge authorised the Trustees of the Home Organisation to acquire a suitable site, to construct, complete, and furnish the required buildings, and to proceed to operate it. Through a contribution of $50,000 from the Masons of Minneapolis and St. Paul and from the Eastern Star, the magnificent Savage estate consisting of 271 acres was acquired. This beautiful site, with its commanding scenic view from the bluff of the Minnesota River, about twelve miles from Minneapolis, was purchased at less than half of its actual value. This done, a campaign for voluntary subscriptions to pay for the erection of the necessary buildings was inaugurated. Although the campaign met no great success, it was finally decided that that method of raising the necessary funds would not bring the desired results. Consequently, after two years of resistance in the Grand Lodge, it was voted by that Lodge that each Master Mason member in the Jurisdiction be assessed in order to raise the amount required. This plan has been successful, for it has been the means of paying the entire cost of erecting the desired buildings. The property is now free from incumbrance. The new buildings were dedicated on September 3, 1927, by Grand Master Smith. The property and assets of the Home in 1934 were valued at $1,463,723. The Home has accommodated 148 residents in a recent year.

In 1926 the penal code of the Grand Lodge was amended to provide that the tribunal for trials of Masons charged with Masonic offenses shall be a trial commission consisting of three Past Masters who shall be members in good standing in a Lodge other than that in which is located the Lodge in which charges are filed. The State is divided into twenty-five districts, and the Grand Master appoints twenty-five Past Masters as trial commissioners. From this Commission he selects three Past Masters to serve in any given case. This plan has worked very successfully and has given general satisfaction to all concerned.

The Grand Lodge of Minnesota has grown and prospered with the growth and prosperity of the State. It has increased from three Lodges in 1853 to 310 active Chartered Lodges and has on its Rolls 56,084 affiliated members. It has been distinguished for the large number of its members who have been, and are, prominent in both public and professional life, as well as in business affairs.

FREEMASONRY IN MISSISSIPPI

CHARLES COMSTOCK AND L. A. BENOIST

TIS said "The lapse of time, the ruthless hand of ignorance, and the devastations of war, have laid waste and destroyed many valuable monuments of antiquity"; and this is all too true of the Records of the Craft in those pioneer days when the basic structure of our Masonic history was being established. It is indeed too late to preserve for our posterity a comprehensive account of those hardy Craftsmen who came with sword and trowel to lay the foundations of Freemasonry, of Brotherhood, deep and strong, where the vanishing footsteps of the Red Brother had so recently pressed the soil.

The Grand Lodge of Kentucky, dutiful and progressive daughter of Virginia, founded October 16, 1800, by five pioneer Lodges established west of the Alleghanies by the Mother Grand Lodge of the "Old Dominion," assembled in Annual Communication a year later, and on October 16, 1801, authorised a Charter for Harmony Lodge, No. 7, at Natchez, Mississippi Territory.

This is the earliest available account of Freemasonry in the "Bayou State." Who were the early Craftsmen who paved the way for this new Lodge, there on America's western frontier, we cannot tell to-day. It is said, however, that Seth Lewis, a prominent and progressive citizen of those times was the first Master of a Lodge in that Jurisdiction, and evidently presided over this pioneer Kentucky Lodge. He was born in Massachusetts in 1794, served as chief justice of Mississippi Territory in 1800, passing away at Alexandria, Louisiana, in 1848. The Lodge laboured with varying success until the Annual Communication of the Grand Lodge of Kentucky, September 2, 1814, when its Charter was surrendered. This, as in some other instances, was evidently due to a lack of harmony among its members, for the Kentucky Grand Lodge Record shows that a Dispensation was issued August 30, 1815, for a second "Harmony Lodge," No. 33, a Charter therefor being approved August 28, 1816.

The Records of the Grand Lodge of Tennessee disclose that on August 13, 1816, the Grand Master, Robert Searcy, issued a Dispensation for a new Lodge at Natchez, designated as Jackson Lodge, No. 15, for which a Charter was granted October 8 of that year, and the name changed to "Andrew Jackson." At that Annual Communication the Lodge was represented by its Master, Bro. William D. King, who was then duly Installed in a Past Master's Lodge. A year later, on October 6, 1817, a Charter was approved for Washington Lodge, No. 17, at Port Gibson, Mississippi, for which a Dispensation had issued some time previously, by the Grand Master of Tennessee.

GRAND LODGE OF MISSISSIPPI

On July 7, 1818, the following Officers and other Representatives of these three pioneer Lodges assembled at Natchez for the purpose of considering the formation of a Grand Lodge for the Commonwealth of Mississippi:

Harmony Lodge, No. 33: Christopher Rankin, Worshipful Master; Chilion F. Stiles, Senior Warden; Christopher Miller, Junior Warden. Andrew Jackson Lodge, No. 15: Edward Turner, Worshipful Master; George R. Williams, Senior Warden; John Corn, Junior Warden. Washington Lodge, No. 17: Israel Loring, Worshipful Master; Amos Whiring, as Senior Warden; Cornelius Haring, as Junior Warden. Past Masters: Elijah Smith, Henry Postlewaite, George Newman, Joseph Newman, Henry Tooley, Stephen Carter, Lewis Winston, James Lombard, Robert Alexander, Anthony Campbell, David Mathewson.

The sovereign Grand Lodge of Mississippi, daughter of Kentucky and Tennessee, was then duly established with Bro. Elijah Smith, the oldest Past Master present, presiding over the deliberations of the Convention, and with Bro. Chilion F. Stiles as Secretary.

The following Officers were duly elected and Installed: Henry Tooley, Grand Master; Christopher Rankin, Deputy Grand Master (appointed by the Grand Master-Elect); Israel Loring, Senior Grand Warden; Edward Turner, Junior Grand Warden; Henry Postlewaite, Grand Treasurer; Chilion F. Stiles, Grand Secretary.

Christopher Miller was appointed Senior Grand Deacon, and John Corn, Junior Grand Deacon, with Joseph Newman as Grand Steward and Tyler.

The following Brethren, Rankin, Loring, Turner, Postlewaite, and Campbell, to which the Grand Master was added, were selected to frame a Constitution for the Grand Lodge, which was prepared and formally adopted on August 25, 1818, completing the formation of the Grand Lodge of Mississippi, the three pioneer Lodges taking rank as follows: Harmony, as No. 1; Andrew Jackson, as No. 2; Washington, as No. 3.

Thus came into being the twentieth American Grand Lodge, under the combined motherhood of Kentucky and Tennessee, with its lineage extending through the Grand Lodge of North Carolina and its historic predecessor, the "Provincial Grand Lodge of America" to the "Modern Grand Lodge of England," with a strain of Scottish Masonry interblended; while through the Grand Lodge of Virginia comes an interwoven fabric of Modern English and Scotch Craftsmanship, the Grand Lodge of the Old Dominion having been formed by two English and three Scottish Lodges.

The 3 original Lodges which united to form the Grand Lodge of Mississippi, aggregated at that time about 100 Master Masons, sturdy loyal Craftsmen, the result of whose efforts is manifest to-day by 362 Working Lodges, at the head of which proudly stand the original 3, and with an aggregate enumeration of more than 30,000.

Over the Craft of the Bayou State eighty-five Grand Masters have presided, skilled and faithful leaders of our Mystic Brotherhood, who amply merit the confidence manifested in their exaltation. Many of these have been active and prominent in the varied affairs of the Commonwealth, in war as well as in peace, while some have attained distinction in national activities and in the councils of the Republic, faithfully striving to maintain the eternal principles of "Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity," upon which our immortal Washington and his Masonic compeers laid the foundation of our national heritage.

Among these venerated leaders of the Craft, one towers conspicuously above his fellows, and to him we must accord more than a passing thought.

Bro. John Anthony Quitman, of Prussian lineage, son of a devout minister of the Dutch Reformed Church, by whom he was designed for that sacred calling, was born at Rhinebeck, New York, September 1, 1799. Growing to manhood with a liberal education, he chose the legal profession instead of the ministry as his vocation, and in due time was admitted to the bar. After a short sojourn in Ohio, we find him located at Natchez, Mississippi, in 1822, where he speedily attained prominence in public activities as well as among the Craft.

In 1826 he was elected to a seat in the Lower House of the State Legislature, and continued for a second term. He became chancellor of the State in 1828, serving until 1835, and in the meantime participated in the Constitutional Convention of 1832. He was then chosen State senator and was selected to preside over the deliberations of that august body during the years 1836 and 1837. Owing to a vacancy in the executive office, he also functioned as governor of the Commonwealth during the two-year period.

Early in 1836, influenced by an abiding interest in the independence of Texas, he raised a company of volunteers and marched to the support of those hardy frontiersmen in their effort to drive back the Mexican hordes, and arrived on the battle front three days after General Sam Houston had defeated his opponents at the battle of San Jacinto, thus paving the way for the establishment of the "Lone Star Republic," of which he became the first President.

In 1838, Bro. Quitman became justice of the High Court of Errors and Appeals of the Commonwealth of Mississippi. On July 1, 1846, having tendered his services for the Mexican War, he was commissioned brigadier-general of Mississippi's troops, at the head of which he rendered heroic service, and won the highest renown. His war record culminated in the capture of the City of Mexico, over which his division, for he was then a major-general of the regular army, was the first to float the "Stars and Stripes." For this service, in recognition of his valour and devotion, Congress presented him with a sword.

He served as governor of Mississippi in 1850 and 1851. In 1854, he was elected to a seat in the Federal Congress, serving from March 4, 1855, until he passed beyond the Mystic Border, July 17, 1858; thus with less than three-score years to his credit, he had won the highest encomiums as a statesman and a soldier, and had rendered long and valued service to the Craft.

Masonic Temple Which Once Stood at the Corner of Main and Union Streets, Natchez, Mississippi.

Built by the Grand Lodge of Masons of Mississippi in 1827.

Just where he received Initiation, we cannot tell, but it is suggested that the Symbolic Degrees were conferred upon him in Ohio. This we have been unable to verify. He became affiliated with one of the Lodges at Natchez soon after locating in that historic city. He was chosen Grand Master in 1826, serving for twelve successive years; and again in 1845 he was elected to the Grand East for a two-year period, during a part of which he was rendering important military service in the Mexican campaigns, while his Masonic duties were ably discharged by the Deputy Grand Master, Bro. Benjamin Swett Tappan, a veteran Tennessee Mason, who for some years had resided at Vicksburg where he became active in Mississippi Craftsmanship. Bro. Quitman received all regular Masonic Degrees, including the Order of the Temple, and the Active Thirty-third of the Scottish Rite, Sovereign Grand Inspector-General. There have been but two American Craftsmen who have presided in the East of Masonic Grand Bodies longer than he—Maryland's veteran Grand Master, Thomas Jefferson Shryock, with three decades to his credit; and that venerated son of Massachusetts, General Albert Pike, who served for more than thirty years as Grand Commander of the Scottish Rite (Southern Jurisdiction), one of the greatest of Masonic philosophers.

CAPITULAR MASONRY

It is self-evident that the early Lodges in Mississippi, as was the custom prior to the formation of duly Constituted Chapters, assumed the authority under their Symbolic Charters of conferring any of the advanced Degrees of Freemasonry of which they were in possession. In this manner, undoubtedly, members of these pioneer Lodges were frequently exalted to the Royal Arch Degree.

Quoting from the excellent compilation of Companion Charles Arthur Conover, General Grand Secretary, on the "History and Development of the Royal Arch Degree," on page 100H, under Mississippi, the statement is made that a Chapter was formed at Natchez in 1816 which was to continue under sanction of the Warrant of Harmony Lodge, received from the Grand Lodge of Kentucky, according to their usage and laws, until a Warrant or authority was obtained from the Grand Chapter of the United States, or some other competent authority claiming and of right exercising jurisdiction over these Chapters as subordinate thereto.

Under date of September 13, 1822, a Charter was issued to Natchez Chapter, No. 1, by one of the principal Officers of the General Grand Chapter. This document subsequently became lost, and at the Triennial Convocation of the General Grand Chapter at Columbus, Ohio, in 1847, an application was filed for a new Charter, which was granted.

In the meantime, seven additional Chapters had been formed in Mississippi by authority of the General Grand Chapter, or its officials, as follows: Port Gibson Chapter, September 15, 1826; Vicksburg Chapter, September 17, 1841; Columbus Chapter by Dispensation to Charles H. Albert and others, February 7, 1842; Wilson Chapter at Holly Springs, for which a Dispensation issued prior to the next Triennial Convocation; Jackson Chapter to William Wing and others, by Dispensation, August 28, 1843; Carrollton Chapter, December 31, 1845; also Yazoo Chapter in Yazoo County (now located in Yazoo City). The Chapters at Columbus and Jackson were Chartered at the Triennial Convocation of the General Grand Chapter in September 1844.

FORMATION OF THE GRAND CHAPTER

Pursuant to authority issued by Companion Joseph K. Stapleton, Deputy General Grand High Priest, March 13, 1846, and in conformity to a notice of the time and place selected by Companion Thomas J. Harper, Past High Priest of Vicksburg Chapter, No. 3, who had been commissioned to supervise its formation, the following Representatives of four of the original Chapters: Vicksburg Chapter, No. 3: Thomas J. Harper, High Priest; Thomas Rigsby, King; James Trowbridge, Scribe. Columbus Chapter, No. 4: N. E. Goodwin, Representative. Wilson Chapter, No. 5: J. B. Day, Scribe. Jackson Chapter, No. 6: Anderson Hutchinson, High Priest; William Wing, King; Robert Hughes, Proxy for Scribe, assembled in the Hall of Vicksburg Lodge, No. 26, on May 18, 1846, and selected Companion Benjamin Swett Tappan, a Past Grand High Priest of Tennessee, affiliated with Vicksburg Chapter, No. 3, to preside over the preliminary Convention, and with Companion J. H. Campbell as Secretary, proceeded to determine upon the formation of a Grand Royal Arch Chapter for the Commonwealth of Mississippi. The following Officers were then elected: Benjamin Swett Tappan, Grand High Priest; Anderson Hutchinson, Deputy Grand High Priest; Charles H. Abert, Grand King; William F. Stearns, Grand Scribe; Thomas J. Harper, Grand Treasurer; William Wing, Grand Secretary; T. C. Thornton, Grand Chaplain; James Trowbridge, Grand Marshal.

Companions Anderson Hutchinson, N. E. Goodwin and J. B. Day were appointed a Committee to prepare and submit a Constitution for the consideration of the Convention, which was received and duly approved.

The Convention thereupon adjourned, and the first Annual Convention of the Grand Chapter of Mississippi was then convened with Companion Thomas J. Harper acting as Grand High Priest; T. F. Bowen as Grand King; S. W. Ewing as Grand Scribe, and a full corps of temporary Officers; a large number of visiting Companions being also present.

A Royal Arch Chapter was opened in ample form, when Companion Benjamin S. Tappan, Chairman of the Convention, reported its Proceedings, together with the Constitution which had been prepared by the Committee, and approved for the government of the Grand Chapter, all of which was ratified and confirmed by the Grand Chapter. The Grand Officers, with the addition of Companion E. Parker, appointed Grand Tyler, were then Installed in accordance with the usual customs of the Craft.

After disposing of other business incident to the formation of the Grand Chapter, it was closed in ample form, concluding its labours on May 19, 1846.

Benjamin Swett Tappan, the first Grand High Priest of the Grand Royal Arch Chapter of Mississippi, was a unique and striking Masonic character. He was born at Newburyport, Massachusetts, February 25, 1799. He was the son of a sea-faring man, who was drowned on the next voyage after the birth of his son, who was thus early bereft of paternal care. On attaining to years of maturity, Companion Tappan located at Franklin, Tennessee, where he established important business connections, which were highly successful. He was probably made a Mason in Hiram Lodge, No. 7, at Franklin, for he attended the Grand Lodge at Nashville as its Representative in 1822. He was also present as Captain of the Franklin Blues on the memorable occasion when General Lafayette visited Nashville, on May 4 and 5, 1825, and participated in the reception tendered to that distinguished French general of the American Revolution.

He became a regular attendant of the Grand Lodge for some years, and in 1834 and 1835 served as Grand Master of Tennessee. In 1836 and 1837 he presided over the Grand Chapter of Tennessee, and soon afterwards removed to Mississippi where he spent the remainder of his days. His Masonic zeal speedily brought him into prominence and activity in local and Grand Bodies of the "Bayou State." We have noted heretofore that he served as Deputy Grand Master under Mississippi's distinguished veteran, General John A. Quitman. In 1847, he was chosen Grand Master.

Now we find him exalted to the highest station in the new Grand Chapter of Mississippi, which he filled efficiently for two terms.

He was active in the formation of the Grand Commandery of Knights Templar. He was chosen Grand Captain-General at its initial conclave, and in 1858 was elected Grand Treasurer, serving until January 1, 1861, when he became a Grand Commander. As no meetings of the Grand Commandery were held during the war period, his term of service did not close until January 22, 1866, when he presided over the Annual Conclave. On March 1 of that year, the Record of his activities in the flesh was closed by Infinite Decree, and his immortal spirit was advanced to the Limitless Life.

ORDER OF HIGH PRIESTHOOD

Just how or when the Order of Anointed High Priests was first introduced into Mississippi, we cannot tell. It is quite probable that Companion Benjamin Swett Tappan, who was the first Grand High Priest of the "Bayou" Jurisdiction, received it in Tennessee, where he served as Grand High Priest before locating at Vicksburg, and it appears that the Priestly ceremonial was conferred in that Jurisdiction as early as 1829, on Officers of the Grand Chapter. It is not improbable that Companion William Pepperill Mellen may have received it while attending the General Grand Chapter in 1847, as it had been recognised therein for many years prior to that date.

As had been the custom in the earlier experiences of the Royal Craft in various Jurisdictions, the Order was undoubtedly conferred from year to year, probably at the time of the Annual Convocations of the Grand Chapter, on such High Priests as desired to receive it.

FORMATION OF THE GRAND COUNCIL

It was not until the Twenty-fourth Annual Convocation, held at Holly Springs, January 18-19, 1872, that steps were taken to found a permanent Council of Anointed High Priests. A resolution was presented by Companion J. F. Arnold of Rienzi, that an organisation be effected for the government of that select branch of our Ancient Craft, and suggesting that a Committee of three be appointed to consider and submit a plan for the formation of a Grand Council of the Order of High Priesthood. The following Anointed High Priests were appointed for that purpose: James Moorefield Houry, William Cothran, William S. Patton, W. D. Farriss, and James Watts.

The Committee was unable to prepare a definite report at that time, and it was not until the Twenty-sixth Annual Convocation held at Canton, the first week in February, 1874, that a recommendation was submitted that a Grand Council be formed as suggested in the resolution of Companion Arnold, presented in 1872. The report was approved, and at convenient intervals during the Sessions of the Grand Chapter, the Order was conferred upon a number of High Priests. On Saturday, February 7, an assemblage of Anointed High Priests was held in the Masonic Hall. Companion James Moorefield Houry was selected to preside over their deliberations, with Companion Phineas Messenger Savery as Recorder. A resolution was adopted by which the Companions present agreed to form a Council of Anointed High Priesthood, and James Moorefield Houry was elected Most Excellent Grand President (Oxford).

A Committee of three was appointed to prepare a Code of Laws for the government of the Grand Council and report at the next Annual Convention, to be held on the first day of the Annual Meeting of the Grand Royal Arch Chapter, at Meridian, February 7, 1875.

At this first Convention of Anointed High Priests, an aggregate of forty-one names were enrolled as permanent members thereof.

Since its formation, Annual Meetings of the Grand Council have been held regularly.

JAMES MOOREFIELD HOURY

To the venerated Craftsman who first presided over the Anointed High Priests of Mississippi, this brief tribute is tendered:

Born among the historic hills of East Tennessee, he grew to manhood amid their peaceful environments, after the Red Brother had moved on toward the sunset. He was made a Mason in the autumn of 1825, in Overton Lodge, No. 5, at Rogersville, one of the eight pioneer Lodges which formed the Grand Lodge of Tennessee in 1813. Where and when he received the Capitular, Cryptic, and Chivalric Degrees, we know not. In 1827, he attended the Annual Communication of the Grand Lodge at Nashville, as the Representative of his Mother Lodge, and was appointed Junior Grand Deacon. In 1831, he was elected to the same position, and continued to visit the governing body for some years afterward. Just when he removed to Mississippi we are not informed, but we find his name enrolled as a Representative from Wilson Chapter, No. 5, of Holly Springs, on January 10, 1848, at the Annual Convocation of the Grand Chapter.

Companion Houry was chosen Grand Master of Symbolic Masons in 1852; Grand High Priest in 1857; Most Illustrious Grand Master in 1867, and in conjunction with Companion Harvey W. Walter, represented the Grand Council of Mississippi at the last preliminary Convention held in New York City, August 20, 1877, prior to the formation of the General Grand Council.

He served as Chairman of the Committee appointed in 1872 to consider the formation of a Grand Council of Anointed High Priests, and when established, February 7, 1874, was chosen to preside over its deliberations as the first Most Excellent Grand President.

He had then given to the exalted cause of Mystic Craftsmanship almost a half century, and when a few years later he was advanced through the Last Arch, and entered upon the Quest Eternal, his soul was glorified with the "Happy reflection consequent upon a well spent life" among the children of earth.

In 1873 Companion Houry attained an unusual distinction as an American Mason, when he became a Charter member of Royal Solomon Lodge, No. 293, formed at Jerusalem, in the Holy Land, under authority of the Grand Lodge of Canada, issued February 17, that year, with Robert Morris, Past Grand Master of Kentucky, and founder of the Order of the Eastern Star, as its first Master; and with the following associates: John Sheville, as Senior Warden; Rolla Lloyd as Junior Warden, also Andrew Jackson Wheeler, Past Grand Master of Tennessee, Albert Gallatin Mackey, Past Grand Master of South Carolina, and Robert Macoy, Grand Recorder, K. T. of New York, and others.

CRYPTIC RITE

It is evident that Bro. John Barker, Itinerate Agent of the Supreme Council, Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite for the Southern Jurisdiction of the United States, then located at Charleston, South Carolina, was largely responsible for the introduction of Cryptic Masonry into Mississippi, as well as other Southern Jurisdictions.

The earliest available information is to the effect that a Council of Princes of Jerusalem was Instituted at Natchez, Mississippi, in 1829. This was evidently in connection with a Consistory for which Letters of Constitution were granted by Bro. Perez Snell, Thirty-third Degree, Deputy Inspector-General of the Supreme Council, to be located at Natchez, whose presiding Officer was Bro. John Anthony Quitman, then serving as Grand Master of Symbolic Masonry. It is reported that several Councils of Royal and Select Masters were Instituted, probably by Bro. Barker, and were placed under the supervision of the Council of Princes of Jerusalem.

The first Grand Council of the Cryptic Rite was formed by the Representatives of three subordinate Councils who assembled in the Masonic Hall at Jackson, on the tenth day of January 1854. A resolution to form a Grand Council of Royal and Select Masters for the State of Mississippi was adopted and a Constitution for its government was presented and approved, to which the following names were appended: Jacob F. Foute, Past Thrice Illustrious Master, of Jackson Council; William F. Stearns, Past Principal Conductor of the Work, of Holy Springs Council; A. V. Rowe, Past Thrice Illustrious Master, of Lexington Council; also twenty-six Royal and Select Masters.

The following Officers were duly elected and Installed: T. C. Tucker, Thrice Illustrious Grand Master; W. Brooke, Illustrious Deputy Grand Master; William R. Cannon, Illustrious Grand Principal Conductor of the Work; W. H. McCargo, Grand Captain of the Guard; Burton Yandell, Grand Treasurer; L. V. Dixon, Grand Recorder; G. W. Johnson, Grand Sentinel.

A second meeting was held at Jackson, January 10, 1855, with the following Councils represented; Nos. 1, 3, 4, 5, 7, and 8. The Grand Recorder reported that Dispensations had been issued to form six additional Councils, the last being No. 9 at Holly Springs.

On November 22, 1854, the Grand Council of Princes of Jerusalem issued an address to all Royal and Select Masters and Royal Arch Masons of the State of Mississippi in which it was stated that the Jackson meetings were without a shadow of authority, and that its participants were fully advised that there was a Grand Council of Princes of Jerusalem in the State of Mississippi which had exercised Jurisdiction over those Degrees for a quarter of a century, and under whose authority nearly all the Royal and Select Masters in the State had received the Degrees.

A Ritual of the Degrees was found in the "Strong Box" of the Princes bearing date of February 10, 1829, which certified that the "Detached Degrees" called Royal and Select Master were given by the Grand Lodge of Perfection, No. 2 in the United States of America, established by J. DeCosta, Deputy Inspector-General, in Charleston, in February, 1783; and further, that at the establishment of the Grand Council of Princes of Jerusalem, February 20, 1788, in Charleston, by the Illustrious Deputy Inspector-General Joseph Myers, a certified copy of the Royal and Select Masters' Degrees emanating from Berlin, was deposited, to be under the government and protection of said Council of Princes of Jerusalem. This certificate was signed "Moses Holbrook, M.D., Sovereign Grand Inspector General," etc., and endorsed, "The property of Perez Snell"; and it was under the authority of this Ritual that the Cryptic Degrees were disseminated by the Grand Council of Princes of Jerusalem at Natchez, Mississippi.

These Records and Certificates are more fully set forth in a historic sketch published in the Proceedings of the Grand Council of Mississippi for 1931, pages 38 to 43, inclusive. From the proceedings of the Convention which formed the present Grand Council of Royal and Select Masters, it appears that in June 1855, the Grand Council of Princes of Jerusalem called a Convention of Councils to meet at Natchez on November 12 following. On account of a prevailing epidemic, this Convention was deferred until January 2, 1856, when the Representatives of Natchez Council, No. 1, Vicksburg Council, No. 2, Cayuga Council, No. 8, and Lexington Council, No. 16, assembled and organized with Benjamin Springer as Chairman, and William Pepperill Mellen as Secretary. After due consideration of the various interests affecting the formation of a Grand Council, the Convention adjourned until the next evening when a Constitution was adopted, and was referred to the Grand Council of Princes of Jerusalem for its approval, which was given without delay, when the Constitution passed on its final adoption and became the fundamental law of the Grand Council of Royal and Select Masters for the State of Mississippi.

The Convention then adjourned to meet in Vicksburg on January 18, 1856, where it assembled and adjourned until the following day when Representatives from Gallatin Council, No. 15 and Liberty Council, No. 17, were present in addition to the four Councils formerly represented. Officers were elected with Companion Benjamin Springer as Most Illustrious Grand Master, and William Pepperill Mellen as Grand Recorder, and were duly Installed. A deferred meeting was held on January 26, 1856 when a conveyance of the Degrees from the Grand Council of Princes of Jerusalem was received, and placed on Record. At that time authority was given to Companions James M. Houry, William F. Stearnes, Harvey W. Walter, and others, to form a new Council at Oxford, Mississippi, to be designated by the name of " Benjamin Springer Council."

Although no Record is available, it may be inferred that the members of the former Grand Council known as the Jackson Body, assembled on the second Monday in January 1856, and that said Jackson Grand Council was then dissolved.

The Grand Council formed in 1856 continued its operation until 1877. In the meantime, a Convention was held in New York City, June 11, 1873, under call issued by Josiah H. Drummond of Maine, which was made in conformity to a suggestion from the Grand Council of Massachusetts, looking to the formation of a General Grand Council for the United States. Mississippi was represented in this Convention by Companion Phineas M. Savery. After some preliminary progress, and pending the consideration of important suggestions, this Convention adjourned to re-assemble at the same place on November 31, 1874, when Companion Savery again represented the Grand Jurisdiction of Mississippi.

Another Convention was held at Buffalo, New York, August 20, 1877, in which Mississippi was represented by Past Most Illustrious Grand Masters Harvey W. Walter, and James Moorefield Houry. Not yet, however, were conditions ripe for the formation of the General Grand Council. This event occurred in Detroit, Michigan, on August 23 to 25, 1880, when the General Grand Council became an established fact. Mississippi, however, was not represented on that occasion.

The Record shows that at its annual meeting in 1877, the Grand Council of Mississippi adopted what is known to Cryptic history as the Mississippi Plan. The Grand Council by resolution placed itself in a state of inactivity and provided that the Work of Cryptic Masonry should be carried on under the auspices of the Grand Royal Arch Chapter, the subordinate Chapters of its obedience being instructed to confer the Degrees of Royal and Select Master without fee, upon all Royal Arch Masons who should apply therefor, also upon future applicants for the Degrees of Capitular Masonry.

This situation was continued until February 1888. At the Triennial Assembly of the General Grand Council held at Atlanta, Georgia, November 19, 1889, the report of the General Grand Master contained a reference to certain correspondence with Companion Phineas M. Savery, Past Most Illustrious Grand Master, regarding the re-organisation of the Grand Council of Mississippi. Replying to the suggestion of the General Grand Master, Companion Savery advised that the Grand Council of Mississippi had never ceased to exist, but had been held in abeyance from 1877 to February 1888 when the Representatives of fourteen subordinate Councils were assembled in an informal Convention and proceeded to consider a revival of Work under the Grand Council. He reported the following Officers selected to preside over its affairs: Companion William Gallatin Paxton, of Vicksburg, as Most Illustrious Grand Master; Companion R. B. Brannin, of Aberdeen, as Right Illustrious Deputy Grand Master; Companion John Logan Power, of Jackson, as Grand Recorder. It was provided that the first annual meeting of the re-awakened Grand Council should be held at Meridian in connection with the other Masonic Grand Bodies during the second week in February 1899.

Resolution, adopted by the Grand Royal Arch Chapter of Mississippi, at its annual Convocation in February 1888:

Resolved that the Grand Royal Arch Chapter hereby releases control of the Cryptic Degrees, and recommends that the Grand Council of Royal and Select Masters resume its former jurisdiction thereof.

That Chapters are hereby prohibited from communicating and conferring the Cryptic Degrees, recognising the authority of the Grand Council, in all matters pertaining to said Degrees.

The Work of the Grand Council of Mississippi has been carried forward continuously since the above date, but for twenty years it operated as an independent Grand Council. At the Annual Meeting in 1909, a resolution was adopted authorising the Grand Master and his Associate Officers to enter into correspondence with the General Grand Council with a view to becoming a constituent of the National Body. This was duly arranged, and at the Triennial Assembly at Savannah, Georgia, November 9 and 10, 1909, the Grand Council of Mississippi was enrolled as a constituent Grand Council under the Jurisdiction of the General Grand Council of Royal and Select Masters of the United States of America. At that time, the Most Illustrious Grand Master of Missis-

Mississippi was Companion Oliver Lee McKay, who presided over its deliberations from 1908 to 1912, inclusive. Companion McKay was one of the five distinguished Craftsmen who presided over all the Grand Bodies of the American Rite in Mississippi.

T. C. TUPPER

The Grand Master of that brief organisation known to Cryptic history as the Jackson Body was born in Vermont in March 1809, and closed his Record as a Builder upon the Temple of Time, August 14, 1866, at Canton, Mississippi. We have little information regarding his personal and Masonic record, and cannot tell when he left the Green Mountain State and located in that historic Commonwealth which bears the name of the great "Father of Waters." He was a Past Master of Canton Lodge, No. 28, and also held membership in Canton Chapter, No. 10, and Carthage Council, No. 34, of that location. His selection to preside over the Grand Council of 1854 is ample evidence that he was a Craftsman of recognised standing and possessed of an ardent devotion to Masonic undertakings.

BENJAMIN SPRINGER

When the permanent Grand Council of Mississippi was formed in 1856, Benjamin Springer, a Past Master of Vicksburg Lodge, No. 26, in which he was Initiated in 1837, also a Past High Priest of Vicksburg Chapter, No. 3, where he was made a Royal Arch Mason in 1843, and a Past Thrice Illustrious Master of Vicksburg Council, No. 2, in which he was greeted in 1844, was chosen to preside over its destinies during the first year of its activities.

Companion Springer was born at Litchfield, Maine, January 6, 1796. He came to Vicksburg in 1824, and was prominently active as a county and city official for many years, winning an enduring reputation for his efficient and faithful discharge of every duty which opportunity brought to his door. He was present and assisted at the formation of the Grand Royal Arch Chapter in 1846. He received the Order of High Priesthood in 1852, more than twenty years before the formation of the Grand Council of Mississippi, and in 1855, was created a Knight of the Order of the Red Cross, of the Temple, and of Malta, in Magnolia Commandery, No. 2. He was also a Master of the Royal Secret, the Thirty-second Degree of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite. For more than thirty years no Masonic gathering in Vicksburg was complete without Bro. Springer as its leading figure, and during much of that time, he presided as Master of Vicksburg Council, No. 2.

In 1849 he was chosen Senior Grand Warden of the Grand Lodge of Mississippi, becoming its Deputy Grand Master in 1867, and his distinguished service to the Craft was honoured in 1874 by creating him a Life Member of the Grand Lodge. In the Grand Royal Arch Chapter, he served as Grand King in 1853, and as Deputy Grand High Priest in 1854. While he did not attain the summit of executive honour in the Grand Lodge or Grand Chapter, it was not for want of devotion to the cause, or ability to preside over the Craft.

The record of his activities in the flesh was closed by Infinite Decree on January 21, 1878.

CHIVALRIC MASONRY

The origin of the Orders of Christian Knighthood in Mississippi, as well as in other Jurisdictions, was comparatively similar to that of the intervening Masonic Degrees upon which they are based. Owing to lack of authentic Records, we are uninformed as to who may have first received the knightly accolade, or when or where this ancient ceremony may have been performed in the Bayou State. The first account of an organised Body of Knights Templar is found in the Records of the Grand Encampment of the United States, when a Dispensation was issued July 5, 1844, for the formation of Mississippi Encampment, No. 1 at Jackson, and for which a Charter was approved, by the Grand Encampment, on September 12 of that year.

Magnolia Encampment, No. 2, at Vicksburg was formed under Dispensation, and a Charter therefor was granted September 19, 1853.

The third organisation established in Mississippi was Lexington Commandery, No. 3, Chartered by the Grand Encampment, September 11, 1856, and located at Lexington.

The word "Commandery" was substituted as applying to State and local Bodies of the Chivalric Rite, in place of "Encampment," at the Triennial Conclave in September 1856, since which time only the national organisation has been designated as an "Encampment."

FORMATION OF THE GRAND COMMANDERY

On January 21, 1857, the following Commanderies assembled by their Representatives at Vicksburg, Mississippi: Mississippi Commandery, No. 1, of Jackson: Sir Thomas Palmer, Eminent Commander; Sir E. P. Russell, proxy for Sir J. J. Doty, Generalissimo; Sir Thomas W. Caskey, Captain-General. Magnolia Commandery, No. 2, of Vicksburg: Sir George P. Crump, Eminent Commander; Sir Benjamin S. Tappan, Generalissimo; Sir Christopher A. Manlove, Captain General. Lexington Commandery, No. 3: Sir William H. Dyson, Eminent Commander; Sir William A. McMillion, proxy for Sir J. Hickman, Generalissimo; Sir Abner V. Rowe, proxy for Sir Ro. W. T. Daniel, Captain General.

Under authority issued December 22, 1856, by Sir William Blackstone Hubbard, Grand Master of the Grand Encampment, those pioneer Commanderies proceeded to establish a Grand Commandery of Knights Templar.

A Committee having been appointed for the purpose, prepared and presented to the assembled Sir Knights a Constitution for the government of the new Chivalric Body, which after being duly considered, was adopted on January 22, 1857.

nent Grand Generalissimo; Sir Benjamin S. Tappan, Right Eminent Grand Captain-General; — — —, Treasurer; Sir Abner V. Rowe, Grand Recorder.

In this manner, the Grand Commandery of Knights Templar for the Grand Jurisdiction of Mississippi was launched upon its course, which has never wavered until the present day, although during the war period of the sixties, with Sir Benjamin Swett Tappan, Grand Commander, no Annual Conclaves were held between 1861 and January 1866, owing to military conditions in the Southland.

By the latest available Reports, Mississippi now has 25 active Commanderies, with an aggregate membership of 2998 Sir Knights enrolled.

ANCIENT ACCEPTED SCOTTISH RITE

The introduction of Scottish Rite Masonry into Mississippi occurred more than a century past as evidenced by letters of Constitution granted by Bro. Perez Snell, Thirty-third Degree, Deputy Inspector General of the Supreme Council, Southern Jurisdiction, for the formation of a Consistory at Natchez, with Bro. John Anthony Quitman, Grand Master of Symbolic Masons, as its executive officer.

For some time the Work of the Rite in Mississippi was inactive, but for many of the more recent years has been strongly progressive in its labours.

Prior to the formation of the Grand Council of Royal and Select Masters, in 1855, a number of subordinate Councils were formed under authority of the Supreme Council and placed under the supervision of the Princes of Jerusalem, Natchez Council, which afterwards relinquished its claim in favour of the Grand Council.

ACTIVE BODIES OF THE RITE

The following Consistories and their subordinate Bodies are now actively Working in Mississippi: Delta Consistory, Greenville, membership, 1150; Gulfport Consistory, Gulfport, membership, 374; Hattiesburg Consistory, Hattiesburg, membership, 507; Albert Pike Consistory, Jackson, membership, 1065; Mississippi Consistory, Meridian, membership, 956. Aggregate membership, last report, 4052.

The following Past Grand Masters of Symbolic Masonry have been prominent in the Scottish Rite: Masters of the Royal Secret (Thirty-second Degree): Israel Loring, Grand Master, 1822-1825; Robert Stewart, Grand Master, 1841; Benjamin V. White, Grand Master, 1900; Oliver Lee McKay, 1901; Harry T. Howard, 1902; Emmet N. Thomas, 1903; Thomas U. Sisson, 1904 (member of Congress); Charles H. Blum, 1906; Edwin J. Martin, 1908; John Silas Brooks, 1911; Joshua Rice Williams, 1913; Edward Lee Faucette, 1920; John Henry Johnson, 1921; Paul H. Murphy, 1922; George D. Riley, 1924; John R. Tally, 1926; James Henry Johnson, 1927; Thomas Edward Pegram, 1928; William T. Denman, 1930. Knights Commanders, Court of Honour: W. Laurence Wilson, Grand Master, 1918; Louis Armand Benoist, Grand Master, 1919; Marsh Hainer, Grand Master, 1923; William Harrison Carter, Grand Master, 1929. Sovereign Inspectors-General (Thirty-third Degree): John Anthony Quitman, Active, Grand Master, 1826 to 1837, 1840, 1846; Charles Scott, Active, Grand Minister of State, 1859; Grand Master, 1848, 1850; Giles Mumford Hillyer, Active, Grand Minister of State, Grand Master, 1855, 1856; William Cothran, Honorary, Grand Master, 1858; Frederick Speed, Honorary, Grand Master, 1882; Robert A. Carson, Honorary, 1914; George B. Power, Honorary, 1916.

Thus, all too briefly have we reviewed the record of Masonic undertakings in the Bayou Commonwealth; too brief to be comprehensive. We trust some future historian may do ample justice to this important undertaking.

It is more than thirteen decades since the first Masonic Lodge, Harmony, No. 7, of Kentucky, was established at Natchez in Mississippi Territory, and with the exception of a single year when the old Charter was surrendered in 1814, until a new Dispensation was issued in 1815, the Labours of the Craft have been unflinching maintained. While it is true that owing to the unsettled condition of the war period, few meetings of the American Rite Grand Bodies were held from 1861 to 1865, there is no doubt that their constituents were actively at work. Craftsmen who wore the blue and the gray met from time to time on the level of Brotherhood within the tyled precincts of Lodge, Chapter, Council and Commandery, ere they again faced each other in battle array.

The Records of to-day disclose the results of the Mystic Builders Art in Mississippi. The three pioneer Lodges which united to form the Grand Lodge in 1818, still active and vigorous, have developed and expanded until the latest Returns show 362 Lodges with an aggregate membership of 30,507 Master Masons. The constituent Bodies of the other branches of Freemasonry have also multiplied during the passing years until the present reports disclose 62 Chapters with 5720 Royal Arch Masons; 43 Councils having a membership of 3328 Select Masters, and 25 Commanderies to which 2998 Sir Knights hold allegiance. Since the Grand Bodies were established, 85 Grand Masters have presided over the Symbolic Craft; 76 Grand High Priests have ruled the Capitular Rite; 40 Grand Masters have successfully guided the Labours of the Cryptic Craftsmen; while 70 Grand Commanders have led the Christian Knights upon the crusade of "Peace on earth, good will to men."

Volumes might be written regarding the Masonic accomplishment of the Bayou Jurisdiction, but for the limitation of time and space. The crowning pride and glory of its zealous and devoted Craftsmen is represented by the Masonic Homes, one for girls, at Meridian, founded in 1907, and which has sheltered and educated, even to a college course in some instances, an aggregate of several hundred wards of the Craft, the latest report showing ninety-one inmates; also one at Columbus for boys, established in 1918, which provides adequate care and training to a similar extent as for girls, and which has a present enrollment of seventy-four. In this, the Order of the Eastern Star is a generous participant. Long may these manifestations of Masonic beneficence continue to expand and beautify the pathway of progress in the Bayou Commonwealth.

FREEMASONRY IN MISSOURI

RALPH VAUGHAN DENSLOW

ON March 10, 1804, France ceded to the United States a great tract of land known as the Louisiana Territory, often referred to as the Louisiana Purchase. The acquisition of that large region was the pet project of President Thomas Jefferson. Although there were many so unkind and so shortsighted that they referred to it as "Jefferson's Folly," time has proved the wisdom of the early statesman's vision. To-day, millions of Americans are living within that very territory, which comprises the larger part of the United States west of the Mississippi River.

As was to be expected, the official entry of the United States Government into the newly purchased region brought with it a number of Freemasons. Undoubtedly, the most distinguished among those who came at that time was the celebrated Captain Meriwether Lewis, private secretary to Thomas Jefferson, then President of the United States. Like his distinguished chief, Lewis was inspired by the glory of the Great West. He had dreamed the same dreams as Jefferson; he was peculiarly fitted, both financially and educationally, for the great adventure—the discovery of a route through the Rockies to the Pacific.

The first Masonic Lodge in the Mississippi Valley was that located in the town of Kaskaskia, then a part of Indian Territory and later the first capital of the State of Illinois. Kaskaskia was located almost opposite the present site of Ste. Genevieve, Missouri, where, at a later date, was Chartered the first Missouri Lodge. As might be expected, then, it was in the Lodge at Kaskaskia, known as Western Star Lodge, No. 107, that many pioneer Missourians first received Masonic Light. Since most of the original petitioners for that first Missouri Lodge were Masons from Pennsylvania, it was natural for them to petition their Mother Lodge for a Dispensation, or Warrant, to Work in the new Territory. Their Petition was prepared on March 9, 1805, and signed by Robert McMahan, William Arundel, James Edgar, Michael Jones, James Gilbreath, Rufus Easton, and Robert Robinson. On the following September 24, Grand Master Israel issued them Dispensation, and the first Lodge meeting was held on December 14, 1806. At that time James Edgar was named Master, and Rufus Easton and Michael Jones were named Wardens. The first petitioners were Andrew Henry, Walter Fenwick, and George Bullitt, all residents of Ste. Genevieve, on the Missouri side of the Mississippi River. Later Initiates from Missouri were Charles Querey, J. Finney, James Dunlap, John Hays, John Hay, Benjamin Young, François Valle, Thomas Oliver, Henry Dodge, Louis Lassous Moreau, George Foster, and James Moore.

Among the distinguished visitors to the Lodge at Kaskaskia was Thomas F. Riddick, who later became first Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Missouri. An occasional visitor to the Lodge was Captain Otho Shrader, of Ste. Genevieve, who registered from Lodge No. 84, Somerset County, Pennsylvania. Later when a Lodge was established at Ste. Genevieve, Bro. Shrader became its first Master.

Since crossing the Mississippi River was at all times perilous for the Brethren living in Ste. Genevieve, it is not surprising that they eventually applied for a Lodge of their own. Consequently, on December 27, 1806, an application was filed with the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania for a Warrant authorising the formation of a Lodge in the Territory of Louisiana, to be known as Louisiana Lodge, No. 109. The application was signed by Aaron Elliott and Otho Shrader as Past Masters together with Andrew Henry, George Bullitt, Robert Terry, John Hepburn, Thomas F. Riddick, Louis Lassous Moreau, and François Valle, Master Masons, and Henry Dodge and Thomas Oliver, both Entered Apprentices. The necessary waiver of Jurisdiction was granted by Western Star Lodge on December 27, 1806, and Dr. Aaron Elliott was recommended as Master, Andrew Henry as Senior Warden, and George Bullitt as Junior Warden.

On July 17 of the next year, the Warrant for which the Ste. Genevieve Masons had applied was granted at a Grand Extra Communication of the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania. It was signed by James Milnor, Grand Master, and George A. Baker, Grand Secretary. It named Bro. James Edgar, of Western Star Lodge, as a Past Master Mason authorised to Institute the new Lodge. This he accomplished on November 14, 1807.

The Returns of Louisiana Lodge, No. 109, show the following Charter members: George Bullitt, Henry Dodge, Aaron Elliott, Andrew Henry, William Hickman, Louis Lassous Moreau, Josiah Millard, Thomas Oliver, John Scott, Otho Shrader, Robert Terry, François Valle, and John Smith "T" (Fellowcraft). During the first year, 1808, Degrees were conferred upon the following persons on the dates indicated: First Degree: Joseph Kimball (May 9), William Searcy (June 24), Ezekiel Fenwick (September 12), Azariah C. Dunn (September 12). Second Degree: Joseph Kimball (May 11), William Searcy (July 11), Ezekiel Fenwick (October 18), Azariah C. Dunn (October 18). Third Degree: John Smith "T" (May 11), "admitted as a member of the Lodge on November 14, being a Fellowcraft of Lodge No. in the State of Tennessee." Joseph Kimball (June 11), William Searcy (August 8), Ezekiel Fenwick (November 14), Azariah C. Dunn (November 14). By the addition of these Brethren and of Bro. William Cabbeen by affiliation, the Lodge showed a total membership of eighteen when it made its Annual Return in 1808. The Masters of Louisiana Lodge, No. 109, during the years between 1808 and 1815 were as follows: (1808) Aaron Elliott, (1809, 1810, 1811) Otho Shrader, (1812, 1813, 1814) Henry Dodge, (1815) John Scott.

The membership of the new Lodge at Ste. Genevieve comprised the most intelligent, progressive, and educated people of the Territory. The first Master was the pioneer physician of the Territory; his successor was Captain Otho Shrader, one of the first Territorial judges and a former soldier in the army of the Archduke Charles. Henry Dodge, another of the Past Masters, the first United States Marshal of Missouri, later became governor of Wisconsin Territory. He was active in the civic, military, and political affairs of his time.

On August 2, 1808, Brethren living in St. Louis prepared a Petition to the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, "praying for a Warrant of Constitution empowering them to assemble as a legal Lodge in the town of St. Louis, in the Territory of Louisiana, to be known as St. Louis Lodge, No. 111." Signers of the Petition were Meriwether Lewis, Thomas F. Riddick, J. V. Garnier, Joseph Kimball, Rufus Easton, J. Bruff, John Coons, John Hay, John Hays, Michael Immell, and B. Wilkinson. Wilkinson signed as an Apprentice, while Bruff signed as a Royal Arch Mason. Incidentally, this was the first reference to Royal Arch Masonry in Missouri. This Petition was approved by the Lodge at Ste. Genevieve, and was signed by Aaron Elliott, John Scott, and George Bullitt. On September 10, 1808, the Grand Master of Pennsylvania wrote to the Grand Secretary, stating among other things, the following:

I enclose you an application for a warrant which I received in a letter this day from our worthy and indefatigable Brother, Judge Otho Shrader. You will observe that his Excellency, Governor Lewis, is the proposed Master, and I understand the Brethren united with him are respectable. Mr. Shrader mentions that Governor Lewis leaves St. Louis early in November on a journey to the Atlantic States: so that I fear, considering the distance and the time it may take them, after receiving the warrant, to complete the organization of the Lodge, our adjourned meeting will be rather late for the business. If, therefore, you perceive no material impediment in the way of an extra Grand Lodge, I would, therefore, thank you to issue notices for the same on the first vacant night.

Accordingly, on September 16, 1808, the Dispensation was issued to Past Master Otho Shrader, authorising him to Institute the Lodge in the town of St. Louis. On the following November 8, that was accomplished and was certified by Bro. Shrader. Notices in the local newspapers of the time show that the usual observances of the Feast of St. John the Evangelist were held. One such notice, which appeared in the Louisiana Gazette on June 11, 1811, was signed by Alexander McNair, Missouri's first governor.

As time went on, the Mother Grand Lodge proved to be too far distant to be satisfactory to the Brethren of the Lodges at Ste. Genevieve and at St. Louis. For one thing transmitting annual dues to the Grand Secretary was attended with both difficulty and probable loss. Too, the distance was so great that Brethren were usually unable to attend the various Communications of the Mother Grand Lodge. It was only natural, then, that they should begin to look towards the newly formed Grand Lodge of Tennessee as a more convenient foster mother. Their desire to associate themselves with that Grand Lodge was realised when the Grand Lodge of Tennessee granted Charters to Lodges at St. Louis, St. Charles, and Herculaneum. Since the Brethren at Ste. Genevieve had become involved with the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania over the payment of per capita tax and their failure to make annual returns, the actual separation of those two was nevertheless not accomplished until several years after the formation of the Grand Lodge of Missouri.

Some mention should be made of the Charters granted by the Grand Lodge of Tennessee. On October 3, 1815, a Dispensation was issued to Bro. Joshua Norvell, Bro. Joshua Pilcher, and Bro. Thomas Brady to open a Lodge in the town of St. Louis, in Missouri Territory, to be called Missouri Lodge, No. 12. A study of the membership of that Lodge shows that it consisted largely of former members of old St. Louis Lodge, No. 111 and that the names on its Rolls were those of distinguished men, many of whom were responsible for the planning and creation of the State of Missouri. The Lodge at Herculaneum was Chartered as Joachim Lodge, No. 25 and that at St. Charles as St. Charles Lodge, No. 28. The Chartering of those Lodges was followed by the granting of a Dispensation to a Lodge at Jackson, Missouri, Chartered by the Grand Lodge of Indiana, and known as Unity Lodge, No. 6. Later, the Grand Lodge of Kentucky also Chartered Potosi Lodge, No. 39, at Potosi, and a number of Brethren located at Louisiana, Missouri, Petitioned the Grand Lodge of Tennessee for Harmony Lodge, No. 4.

During the years between 1820 and 1831, the attention of the citizens of Missouri Territory was directed towards the formation of a State. This was accomplished on August 20, 1821. Naturally, the Masons of the region were not unmindful of those discussions, for they at once undertook the formation of a Grand Lodge for the State of Missouri. In fact, the formation of the Grand Lodge antedated the establishment of Missouri's statehood, a Masonic Convention having assembled in St. Louis on February 22, 1821, and the Grand Lodge itself having come into existence on the following April 23.

On February 22, 1821, there assembled in the Lodge Hall of Missouri Lodge, No. 12, on Elm Street, between Main and Second Streets, in St. Louis, Representatives from three Missouri Lodges who had been called into a Preliminary Convention by Missouri Lodge. At that meeting Edward Bates, later Attorney-General in the Cabinet of President Lincoln, presided. By reason of his legal training and wide political acquaintance, Bates, the most prominent member of the community at the time, was especially well fitted to act as a presiding officer. Edward Bates, Bro. Simonds, and William Bates were named a Committee to draft a Constitution, and the resolutions providing for it were then referred to each of the Lodges participating. The substance of the resolutions adopted was to the effect that it was expedient and necessary to the interest of the Craft that a Grand Lodge should be established, and that it should be invested with the powers and privileges usually enjoyed by all older Grand Lodges. Provision was made for a meeting of Representatives to be held on April 23, 1821, with a view to forming such a Grand Lodge and selecting the necessary Officers, provided such action should be approved by the Lodges represented.

The official designation of the Grand Lodge was The Grand Lodge of Missouri, of Ancient, Free and Accepted Masons. Annual, semi-annual, and emergent Communications were provided for. The first election resulted in the selection of the following Officers: Thomas Fiveash Riddick, Grand Master; James Kennerly, Senior Grand Warden; William Bates, Junior Grand Warden; Archibald Gamble, Grand Treasurer; and William Renshaw, Grand Secretary. This done, an adjournment was had until May 4, 1821. At that time the newly elected Officers assembled at the Lodge Hall, formed in procession, and proceeded to the Baptist Church, where the ceremonies of Installation were carried out in accordance with the landmarks and customs. Missouri Charters to replace those previously granted by the Grand Lodge of Tennessee were then issued to the Lodges making up the Grand Lodge of Missouri. Thus, Missouri Lodge, No. 12, became Missouri Lodge, No. 1; Joachim Lodge, No. 25, became Joachim Lodge, No. 2; and St. Charles Lodge, No. 28, became Hiram Lodge, No. 3. The first Dispensation granted by the new Grand Lodge was to Harmony Lodge, No. 4, at Louisiana, Missouri.

The story of Missouri Masonry would not be complete without some mention of its first Grand Master, Thomas Fiveash Riddick. History records that he was a member of Solomon Lodge, No. 30, of Suffolk, Virginia, and that he visited the Lodges at Kaskaskia and at Ste. Genevieve. Although he was never a member of the Lodge at Ste. Genevieve, he was, nevertheless, one of the signers of the Petition for a Dispensation for that Lodge. It is probable, however, that he signed only for the purpose of securing the Dispensation. His name follows that of Meriwether Lewis in the application for Dispensation of St. Louis Lodge, No. 111, and he was recommended to be the first Senior Warden of that Lodge. In September 1809, he helped to confer the Degrees on General William Clark of the Lewis and Clark Expedition. He had a Record of having been a Charter Member of the first three Lodges in Missouri: St. Louis Lodge, No. 111, Missouri Lodge, No. 12, and Missouri Lodge, No. 1, all of which Worked under separate Jurisdictions. Born on June 5, 1771, at Suffolk, Virginia, Riddick appeared in the Louisiana Territory at about the time when it was transferred to the United States. He served as assessor of rates and levies for the district of St. Louis, as clerk of the court of common pleas, as justice of the peace, as recorder of land titles, as director of the territorial bank of Missouri, and finally as president of that bank. It was while filling that position that he became Grand Master. Later, he was clerk pro tempore of the Territorial Legislature of 1812, and a representative from St. Louis in the fourth and last Territorial Legislature of 1818. In 1814 he made an unsuccessful race for a seat in Congress. During the Black Hawk War he served as a major in the First Battalion. He was one of the first and most active of the Episcopalians in the entire Territory, and, as such, assisted in the establishment of Christ Church in St. Louis, the third Protestant organisation to be formed in that city. He assisted in laying the corner-stone of the first Presbyterian Church erected west of the Mississippi River. His services to his State and to the public school system can not easily be fully estimated. Indeed, historians of his day credit him with having been the founder of the public school system in Missouri. Such is, in brief, the character and standing of this pioneer Mason, first of a long line of Grand Masters in Missouri. And all this he accomplished during his short life of forty-nine years. For Bro. Riddick passed away at Sulphur Springs, in Jefferson County, Missouri, on January 15, 1830.

The period from 1821 to 1830 was a critical one in the history of Missouri Masonry. During that time it was necessary to construct and place in operation all the machinery necessary for organising a Grand Lodge. Organising a Grand Lodge and carrying on its activities were new to the Missouri membership at that time. So far as is known none of the members had ever participated in the affairs of any Grand Lodge. Furthermore, the State had only recently come into being, and settlements existed only along the banks of the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers. Transportation was confined almost solely to travel by water, and even then it was attended with difficulty and privation. Little opportunity was afforded those who were interested in Masonic matters to perfect themselves in the Constitutions and Rituals of the Fraternity. Indeed, few books were available to guide them in so important an undertaking. Nevertheless, the Fraternity did boast of gifted men, men of unquestionable ideals, of undoubted intelligence, in short, men endowed with all the Masonic virtues.

During this period Charters were issued to a number of Lodges, not only in Missouri Territory but also in the adjoining State of Illinois. Although a Grand Lodge had been organised in Illinois, it had been short lived and had not survived the anti-Masonic agitation. In fact, it was not until the second Grand Lodge was organised that Masonry in Illinois became permanent. During the respective interims, the Illinois Lodges looked to Missouri for their Charters and for support. These were granted without reserve.

Grand Masters of the period were outstanding men. Besides Thomas F. Riddick, whose unusual history has already been given, they were Nathaniel B. Tucker, one of the most distinguished jurists of Missouri, who served for four years; the celebrated Edward Bates, and Hardage Lane, each of whom served for a period of three years.

This epoch of Missouri Masonry was marked by its conservatism, by the development of a small group of Lodges, and by the beginning of the anti-Masonic excitement, which will be more fully described below. Although the disappearance of William Morgan took place in 1826, it was not until 1830 that the full effect of the antagonism to the Fraternity began to be felt in the Missouri Jurisdiction.

The next ten years, from 1831 to 1841, mark the darkest period in the history of Missouri Freemasonry. Most Masons are familiar with the story of William Morgan, whose disappearance from Batavia, New York, in 1826, brought about a period of fanaticism which has seldom been exceeded. So disrupting was its effect in Missouri that on October 18, 1831, the Grand Lodge submitted to its subordinate Lodges a proposal to dissolve all Masonic Lodges within the State, including even the Grand Lodge. Missouri Lodge, No. 1, furnishes a striking example of the conditions that existed at that time. On December 12, 1832, that Lodge adopted the following resolution:

Whereas, Under existing circumstances, and in view of the high excitement which unhappily prevails in many parts of the United States on the subject of Freemasonry, many good and virtuous persons having been led to doubt whether the beneficent effects resulting from the exercise of our rules do more than counterbalance the evils inflicted upon society by the passions and prejudices brought into action by our continuing to act in an organized form; and while we feel an undiminished reverence for the excellent principles inculcated by the Order, and an unshaken belief in the many and great services it has rendered mankind; nevertheless Be it resolved, That immediately after the close of this evening this Lodge shall cease to act as an organized Body, and that its Charter be surrendered and returned to the Grand Lodge.

A contemporary account of this resolution continues by saying that "many of the members, becoming dissatisfied with the course of the mover of this Resolution during the preceding months, had already dimitted, and on October 5, 1833, the Lodge surrendered its Charter to the Grand Lodge, and ceased its Labors for the time. Having nearly six hundred dollars, a large sum then, in the treasury, the Lodge made the following disposition of its surplus funds: To the Sisters of Charity, who had then but recently erected their hospital building at Fourth and Spruce streets, two hundred dollars; to the St. Louis Library Association, then just set on foot, two hundred fifty dollars. The balance, one hundred twenty-eight dollars, was applied to the payment of rent, Grand Lodge dues, and other incidentals." The climax of this unfortunate controversy was reached during the years between 1833 and 1836. In 1833 and 1834 the Grand Lodge, which had previously met in St. Louis, was forced to hold its Annual Communications in Columbia, Missouri, and in 1835 it was unable to meet at all. So bitter was the criticism that the loyal group of members who constituted the Fraternity during those trying years were subjected to the fiercest persecution. They were socially ostracised, and in some instances those who were serving as ministers of churches were forbidden to occupy their pulpits. Although mobs in other States broke into Masonic Lodge Rooms, sacking and destroying Lodge property, there is no evidence that the fanaticism in the Missouri Jurisdiction went to such lengths. It is a striking fact that while the bitterest opponents of Masonry were adherents of the Roman Catholic Church, a great and broad spirit of tolerance was shown by Missouri Lodge, No. 1, when it gave part of its funds to a Roman Catholic organisation known as the Sisters of Charity.

During those difficult times, Lodges on the Register were Chartered from No. 16 to No. 34, the majority having been Chartered during the latter part of the trying period. By 1840 the Grand Lodge again began to assume its place as an active organisation, showing nineteen Lodges on its Roll. Only one of those was a St. Louis Lodge, the others being located in other Missouri towns and in Illinois.

The next twenty years, from 1841 to 1861, were marked by three outstanding events. The first, and the one of most interest, was undoubtedly the attempt to organise and establish a Masonic college. The second was the part played by Missouri Masons in the Mexican War. The third was the part played by the Fraternity in attempting to stabilise conditions and to prevent civil war.

At that time the Brethren felt the need of some established institution of learning for the purpose of affording education to those who had acquired only its rudiments. Their plans for such an institution culminated on April 1, 1843, when M.:W.:Bro. Stephen W. B. Carnegy appeared before the Grand Lodge, and urged the purchase of the property of Marion College, located near Palmyra, Missouri. He claims to have initiated the plan and presented the original resolution to the Grand Lodge. At any rate, the resolution was adopted, and the Grand Lodge of Missouri entered actively into the field of higher education. For many reasons the college was later removed to Lexington, Missouri, where it was much more centrally located. As a further inducement, the town of Lexington offered the Grand Lodge a bonus if it would bring the college there. Soon, the enterprise proved to be expensive. It took from the general funds of the Grand Lodge and its subordinates that money which should have been spent for private charities and for carrying on more closely related Masonic activities. In order to secure the support of city Brethren, there had been combined with the resolution establishing the college another resolution providing for the erection of a Grand Masonic Hall in St. Louis. The Grand Lodge itself met in Lexington on the occasion of the dedication of the college, and a great deal of nation-wide publicity was given to the venture. From the outset, however, the plan for the college was doomed to failure. The Lodges had not yet fully recovered from the effects of the anti-Masonic agitation, and the college project did not meet with the hearty approval of a large part of the Fraternity. It was, in fact, the work of a few interested individuals, and did not take into account the formation at a later date of State supported colleges and universities.

The history of the attempt to establish a college stands as proof to the Masons of Missouri that the work of the Fraternity is properly along other lines, and that no matter how good a project may be, or how philanthropic, the mission of Masonry can only be served by refusing to participate in projects that savour of commercialism and by refusing to undertake any activity at the expense of such charitable activities as are the essential duties of our Fraternity.

In short, the Grand Lodge discovered that the conduct of a college requires special training, and that a college is not at all suited for government by a Grand Lodge. Time which should have been spent in discussing the plans and needs of the Freemasonry was given to the discussion of such matters as college courses, the construction of barns and outbuildings for the school, and the methods of financing an undertaking which was becoming more and more burdensome. In fact, the college at all times conducted at a loss, the deficit mounting higher and higher each year. In view of such unsatisfactory conditions, it is not surprising then, that the membership came to look upon the college as a tremendous handicap. Finally, in June 1859, the college closed its doors. Later the property was transferred to the State of Missouri with a proviso that it be used for school purposes. But with the coming of the Civil War and the troublous years that followed, the property was reconveyed to the Grand Lodge in 1871. Since the Grand Lodge had already had all the experience it cared for in operating an institution of higher learning, it then donated the college property to the Central College for Women, a school conducted by a religious denomination. When that institution became defunct in 1925, the property was then conveyed to the municipality of Lexington. The property is a historic one, for on the college grounds was fought the battle of Lexington, one of the first battles of the Civil War, and within its main building were housed those gallant defenders who fought so valiantly to defend themselves from the intrepid Confederate, General Sterling Price.

As has been said, another important event during the period between 1841 and 1861 was the part played by Missouri Masons during the Mexican War. When the call came for volunteers to join an expedition into Mexico, a large number of troops were recruited in Missouri and Illinois. At that time the Grand Master of Masons in Missouri was Colonel John Ralls, and he, like a number of his Brethren, accepted the call and accompanied the army into Mexico. His regiment was mobilised at Independence, Missouri, an important station on the Santa Fé Trail. Masonic Brethren, assembling at the tent of Colonel Ralls, agreed that a travelling military Masonic Lodge was a desirable adjunct to their military activities. To provide for such a Lodge, Colonel Ralls issued a Dispensation and the Lodge was established. The story of the travels of its members and of the meetings they held is one of peculiar interest to the members of the Fraternity in Missouri even at this day. The Proceedings of the Lodge at its First Communication carry the following account of its founding:

A Charter having been granted by John Ralls, Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Missouri, to James J. Clarkson, Jeremiah B. Vardeman, Joseph L. Gould, and six others, for a Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons under the title and designation of Missouri Military Lodge No. 86, to convene as Masons and as a regular traveling Lodge at such times and places as may be suitable for the transaction of business in Masonry, in the regiment of volunteers organised at Independence under the requisition of the War Department of the United States on the State of Missouri of March 31, 1847, the above named Brethren assembled at Independence, in the State of Missouri, on the fifteenth day of June, and the M.:W.: John Ralls, Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Missouri, publicly installed the following named Brethren as Officers, viz:

James J. Clarkson, W. M.; Jeremiah B. Vardeman, S.W.; Joseph L. Gould,

J.W.; Marshall M. Turley, Treasurer; Richard Samuel, Secretary; Robert W. Lyon, S.D.; Anselm Clarkson, J.D.; Washington Cotner, Tyler.

Missouri Military Lodge No. 86 was opened in the Third Degree in Masonry in ancient form, present all the proper Officers in their Stations and closed to stand closed until called to Labor by the W.M.

Following the Installation of Officers in Independence, no other meeting was held until the expedition had reached Santa Fé, New Mexico. Since the date of their first meeting, the members had travelled overland a distance of 900 miles, having made the march in only fifty days. During the course of its existence, many regular, special and emergent Communications were held by the Lodge, and its last entry in the Records was made at Vera Cruz, Mexico, at the conclusion of the war. Although a large part of the regiment had proceeded immediately into Old Mexico, some few members remained in Santa Fé. Desiring to continue their Masonic connection, those men besought the Grand Master for a Dispensation to carry on the Work among themselves. This request was willingly granted by the Grand Master, who issued a Dispensation to form another Lodge, this one to be known as Hardin Military Lodge, No. 87. Since the Grand Master failed to report to his Grand Lodge an account of this Dispensation or of the Lodge's actions, it may be said that Hardin Military Lodge, No. 87 was one of our "lost Lodges."

Although it would seem that the Missouri Grand Lodge should have been satisfied with its experience with the two Lodges which existed under its supervision during the Mexican War, such was not the case. On the contrary, on March 6, 1859, the Grand Master granted a Dispensation for the organisation of Rocky Mountain Lodge, No. 205, which was also virtually a military Lodge, since it was made up largely of members in the military service of the United States located at Camp Floyd, in Utah Territory. Utah was then in course of being settled by Brigham Young and his Mormon co-religionists. Many events of an unflattering nature had combined to fix public attention upon Utah and to stir the United States Government into action. Outstanding among the events which attracted wide attention were the official and public proclamation of the doctrine of polygamy, a long series of brutal murders and other crimes that culminated in the horrors of the Mountain Meadow Massacre, and the repeated clashes between territorial and federal officials. To assist in restoring and maintaining order, troops were sent into the Territory. This was the situation which existed when Rocky Mountain Lodge, No. 205 began its activities. The Lodge consisted of approximately forty Masons over whom Lieutenant John C. Robinson served as Master. The Records of this Lodge are few. Final reference to it, however, appears in the Grand Lodge Proceedings of 1862. In that account the Grand Master stated that the Lodge had ceased to Work and that its property and money had been forwarded to the Grand Secretary. When the army was recalled to Washington, the members of the Lodge dispersed, most of them accompanying the troops.

The years antedating the Civil War were momentous ones to the Fraternity. As we all know, the war was not a great movement coming upon us suddenly, but a gradual development of sectional feeling brought about primarily over the question of slavery and the rights of States. The following statement, made by Grand Master L. S. Cornwall before the Grand Lodge in 1856, gives a clear picture of the conditions which confronted Missouri Masons at the beginning of the war:

This is a year of universal political excitement. Our whole country seems to be convulsed to its very centre. Questions of policy are agitated that seem to tend directly and speedily to a dissolution of the union of these States. The Constitution and laws are frequently set at defiance and trampled under foot, parties are being formed of every political cast, and our country filled with secret political and benevolent societies. Demagogues, through religious fanaticism, are endeavouring to elevate themselves to honour and distinction by the agitation of questions that should rarely ever be discussed. They expect to ride upon the whirlwind and guide the storm that will place them in a position they are frequently poorly qualified to fill. The great trouble will be that the storm may not only carry them, but also the innocent, into civil war, anarchy, and confusion.

It will be well, my Brethren, for us to look at the great mission of Masonry and learn our duty. Masonry requires of its devotees "that they be peaceable and quiet subjects of the country in which they reside; never to be concerned in plots and conspiracies against the government, but to conform cheerfully to its laws." They are also "bound by their tenure to obey the moral law." Where, then, is the Mason that will disregard these wholesome tenets of our institutions?

Where is the Mason who will suffer himself to be drawn into those angry discussions that may cause his blood to mingle with that of his Brothers?

Where is the Mason who will so far disregard the great moral taught him from the use of one of the great Lights of Masonry first presented to his vision in a Masonic Lodge, as to "let his passions or prejudices betray him beyond due bounds?" If we have any such within our Jurisdiction, let me say to my Brother, "Reflect, return, and again place your feet upon a basis that makes all men honourable who conform to its precepts."

The great mania for secret societies, if indulged in by Masons, must work an injury to the Fraternity. History attests how often Masonry was caused to bleed from its supposed connection with secret political, as also from secret benevolent or ecclesiastical, organisations. Itself being a secret society, having obligations immutable, would it not be well for its members to reflect seriously before affiliating with any other secret institution, whether his duties might not conflict, as Masonry is unlike every other organisation upon earth?

Is our glorious confederacy under which we have flourished threatened with dissolution? Let Masons but do their duty, and all the powers of earth, together with all the machinations of evil men, cannot cause this noble edifice to shake. Look what a bond of union, extending from Maine to Florida, from Massachusetts to Oregon, all "bound by their tenure to obey the moral law, and to be obedient subjects to the constitution and laws of the land in which they reside." Where is the Mason who does not regard the perpetuity of our Union as a paramount question? Who would not shed his blood, if necessary, to uphold and sustain its Constitution?

These things being true, who doubts the perpetuity of our government? Is there a Mason hailing from the land of the Puritans who so far forgets his duty as to set law at defiance and attempt to propagate his political creed by force of arms, although advised in that course by degenerate sons who are desecrating the sacred desk of their Puritan fathers? Or is there a Mason hailing from the sunny South, proverbial for honour, generosity, and benevolence, that is willing to sacrifice this temple of freedom upon the altar of ambition? No! Rather, let all Masons who enter upon the political arena carry emblazoned on their banners the wreath of lily work, speaking peace, and the emblem of right hand joined, denoting fidelity to our common country. Let us not, my Brethren, indulge in harsh epithets towards each other, although we may be found connected with all political parties. Let our truly Masonic virtues never be lost sight of. Let no motive cause us to swerve from our duty, violate our vows, or betray our trust.

The years between 1861 and 1875 mark the period of the Civil War, its termination, and the readjustments which followed. As Missouri was one of the border States, its people were divided in their allegiance. Both sides regarded the State as one of strategic importance. Located near St. Louis was Jefferson Barracks, a military post which had been established only a few years after the acquisition of the Territory. No sooner had war broken out than this post and the city of St. Louis became places of great interest to both Confederate and Federal soldiers. Active on both sides of the struggle were influential men and Masons. Sterling Price, one of the most celebrated of Confederate generals, was a member of the Craft, while Hamilton R. Gamble, provisional governor of the State, was one of our Past Grand Masters. Despite the conflicting opinions of Masons throughout the State, the Grand Lodge was fortunately able to hold its Annual Communications regularly during the troublous period, and much of Masonic interest was maintained through the actions of the Lodges in St. Louis. Nevertheless, almost all the Lodges which existed south of the Missouri River, and many of those north of the river, were destroyed by invading forces. Although nothing appeared to be safe in those days, many are the stories of Masonic fellowship which existed between soldiers of both armies during the conflict.

During the struggle Missouri recognised no military Lodges and did not permit their formation. There existed within the confines of the State, however, a military travelling Lodge which had been Chartered by the Grand Lodge of Nebraska. Although the presence of that Lodge in Missouri was plainly a violation of territorial Jurisdiction, the Grand Lodge of Missouri maintained its composure, made no remonstrance and even permitted the Lodge to meet within its Halls.

The addresses of Grand Masters, the reports of Committees, and other documentary evidence of the war period prove that the Fraternity exerted its influence towards the promotion of harmony and the restoration of friendship between those estranged. Indeed, when the war was finally concluded, Missouri Masonry was a vital factor in the promotion of good fellowship throughout the State. To reduce the possibility of friction, the Grand Lodge insisted that no discussion of political matters should be permitted in any Lodge Room. In fact, it even went so far as to declare that the Charter would be taken away from Lodges that failed to observe that ruling. It is gratifying to know that there are no cases on record where insult was offered to any returning soldier whose opinions or connection with the military forces were not in harmony with those of his Brethren.

By 1865, conditions were again stabilised, many new Lodges were Chartered, large numbers of candidates were being Initiated, and added interest was being taken in the work of the various Lodges. As usual the war was followed by a period of depression, from which the country did not recover until 1875.

At this point it is well to take note of a movement which was the subject of much discussion and the cause of no little ill feeling, that is, the Conservator movement. The Masonic Conservators were a group of active members of the Fraternity assembled under a Chief Conservator, Robert Morris, a Past Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Kentucky. Their object was to secure uniformity of Ritual throughout the United States by means of a printed Cipher Ritual containing the Work of the Three Degrees of Ancient Craft Masonry. Morris attempted to secure influential leaders in each State. In many instances he succeeded, but jealousy on the part of those not selected and the controversy over the war were among the many reasons which prevented the movement from becoming a success. In Missouri the controversy which it aroused became so bitter that letters were exchanged between the Chief Conservator and the Grand Lodge which resulted in each Missouri Mason's being compelled to subscribe to a renunciation oath. This oath was also required of all visitors to Missouri Lodges and was not withdrawn until many years later.

Since no particular action or event characterises the period between 1875 and 1900, it may be regarded as an era of development. Lodges, the State, and individuals had recovered from the evil effects of the war, and there began at last a period of rapid recovery, industrial development, and material advancement. As the State developed industrially, the hitherto unsettled regions were settled, farm lands began to be cultivated, and Missouri began its career as an agricultural and industrial State. With this development came not only growth in the number of Lodges, but also a large increase in the membership of all the Lodges of the State.

This was also a period of spiritual growth. The war had brought with it many evils which are always incident to wars and revolutions, among them profanity, intemperance, and over-indulgence of many sorts. To counteract this, the Fraternity was quick to set up its standards of moral perfection, and the Grand Lodge, being presided over by men of great moral courage, began to advocate standards which were in advance of the time. Rigid rules were enacted, and charges were preferred against all who, in any manner, violated their moral obligations. Profanity was deplored, Lodges were encouraged to make their Lodge Rooms places for the meeting of those high-minded persons in the community who were striving for better conditions. Most Lodges were quick to rid themselves of drunkards and other intemperate members, and by the close of the century the Grand Lodge was prohibiting its members from engaging in the sale or other disposition of intoxicating liquor. In this matter it even went so far as to forbid its membership from signing petitions for saloons.

With the consequent improvement in moral conditions which rewarded these efforts, came a demand on the part of the membership to do something big in a material way. As a result, there came into being, after considerable discussion, the Masonic Home of Missouri. Colonel John Ralls, Grand Master of the Grand Lodge in 1847, was undoubtedly the originator of this movement, which culminated in 1886. On October 12, 1875, this venerable Past Grand Master offered a resolution authorising a select Committee to inquire into the expediency and necessity of making provision for the erection of a home for indigent widows and minor orphans of worthy deceased Master Masons. It was a fortunate coincidence that, with the very year that official action was taken upon the establishment of such a home, the Grand Encampment of Knights Templar held their Triennial Encampment in St. Louis.

As the result of a Charity Day programme held on the grounds of the proposed home, a sum of more than $35,000 was added to the endowment fund of the institution. This amount formed the first and most important of the many contributions which have since gone to increase the endowment fund to approximately $1,000,000. The Home was officially incorporated on July 12, 1886.

One of the principal developments noted in the history of the Grand Lodge of Missouri is that relating to Ritual, Constitution, and methods of procedure. The growth of the Fraternity, the increased membership, and complex living conditions required additions to the existing laws. Out of this need came a definite and regular form of legal procedure necessary in the trial and disposal of those members who transgress civil or Masonic law. The work of the Jurisprudence Committee and of the Appeal and Grievance Committee became more than a perfunctory matter, and by the close of the period there came into being a distinct Masonic Jurisprudence, developed by the most active and best trained of the legal minds in the Fraternity.

Ritualistic matters, which in an early day had been given only slight attention, soon became standardised. At that time the teaching of the Ritual was not confined to a Grand Lecturer, but the official Ritual of the Grand Lodge of Missouri might also be promulgated through and by a large number of District Deputy Grand Masters. Where once there had existed itinerant lecturers and irresponsible teachers there now exists one single source of official Masonic Ritual—the Grand Lecturer.

Although many interesting events occurred during this period of development, only the outstanding features can be discussed here. Perhaps it is enough to say that the Masonic leadership was safe and sane, wise and conservative, and that the result was a unified, strong organisation prepared for the period which was to follow.

The most noteworthy features of the years between 1900 and 1920 were the Great War and the rapid growth of the Fraternity to almost twice its former size. Whether or not the growth was for the best interests of the Order, and whether or not the Fraternity was improved by this rapid influx of Initiates, are not matters for discussion here. Masonry's part in the Great War was to see that spiritual principles were not overlooked in the heat of a patriotic fervour which developed in this country at that time.

While deploring the war and the attitude of those nations which endeavoured to force America into the world conflict, Missouri Masonry did not set itself up as arbiter of the right and justice of the cause. Rather, it tried to afford relief to those depressed by the war, and charity towards those left dependent, and to render what assistance it might through such agencies as the Red Cross, the Salvation Army, and other relief organisations. The Grand Lodge even sent a mission to Europe empowered with authority to expend a large sum of money which it had accumulated for the purpose. In various ways, a considerable sum was spent for relief during the course of the war, and for more than ten years after its conclusion the Grand Lodge contributed through a special Committee to the support and protection of French orphans.

The Initiates who affiliated themselves with Freemasonry at this time brought with them attendant problems and perplexities. The Craft which had theretofore normally absorbed only a moderate number of Initiates now found itself burdened with thousands of new members, many of whom had been admitted hurriedly and with little opportunity for instruction. In many instances where Degrees had been conferred by other Jurisdictions, the statutory time had not been allowed to intervene. How impossible it was for those Brethren to absorb the true spirit of Freemasonry and become true and faithful Brothers among us! Out of this condition grew an attempt on the part of the Masonic Service Association of Missouri to educate those who had come into the Lodge without thorough preparation, but the time for such action was not propitious. Many joined because they had been unduly influenced by their compulsory service in the Great War, believing that membership in Freemasonry offered some talisman whereby their lives might be spared. This situation was distinctly a problem during the period of the war and the years immediately following.

To-day, in many of the Lodges of Missouri, one may see bronze plaques or other memorials that testify to the loyalty and devotion of those who fought or gave up their lives in pursuit of victory. And during the war period itself, many little service flags had prominent places on the walls of Masonic Lodge Rooms of the Jurisdiction. Further to testify to the regard with which the fallen Brethren are held by the Masonic Fraternity of Missouri, a bronze commemorative plaque was several years ago placed in the office of the Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge.

It is interesting to know that two of the chief leaders of the military and naval forces of the United States during the Great War were Missourians and members of the Fraternity. Of these, General John J. Pershing was a son of a member of the Fraternity residing at Laclede, Missouri. Although not a member of a Missouri Lodge himself, Bro. Pershing was a Missourian by birth. He held his membership, however, in a Nebraska Lodge. Likewise, Admiral R. E. Coontz, though a member of a Lodge in Washington, was born in Missouri, at Hannibal.

Throughout its history the Fraternity of Missouri has been noted for its benevolence and charities. During its earlier years funds of the Grand Lodge were necessarily limited, and consequently its charities were limited. But in recent years the income of the Grand Lodge has increased to such a point that a large fund is available for charitable activities. To-day the Grand Lodge collects a sum of $2.10 from each member in the Jurisdiction, and of this amount, $1.50 goes immediately to the support of its greatest charity, the Masonic Home of Missouri. In addition to this amount, the Grand Lodge also contributes annually to other charities which are not connected with the Masonic Home. In 1935 the amount contributed for such purposes had reached a total of $10,000.

At the present time, the Masonic Home property comprises a large tract of ground on Delmar Boulevard in St. Louis. The original building standing on the property at the time of its purchase, almost half a century ago, has long since been remodelled into a large and commodious structure. From time to time additions have been made, so that to-day the property represents an investment of probably $2,000,000. This Home now accommodates 401 persons, of whom 137 are men, 132 women, and 132 children. As computed by Home authorities the average annual cost of upkeep, not including the investment, is approximately $457 per person. During the year 1931, the Home property was increased by the donation of a tract of 80 acres lying at the edge of Kirkwood, Missouri, a suburb of St. Louis. Present plans call for a continuous development of the new property so that ultimately all guests will be housed in buildings erected on the new grounds.

The Home Board consists of thirteen Directors, annually elected in groups, and for a period of three years. The Superintendent of the Home is under the supervision of the Board of Directors, but no other connection exists between the Grand Lodge and the Home except of electing Directors for it and supplying necessary funds for its maintenance.

By means of contributions, each of the 645 Lodges of the Jurisdiction also carries on its own charitable enterprises, relieving those in distress and giving free legal advice and medical treatment. If the charges ever become too burdensome to a Lodge, it may appeal to a special Committee of the Grand Lodge, known as the Welfare Committee. From this source monthly amounts are taken to assist in the care of the poor and the unfortunate.

Not directly connected with the Grand Lodge, yet supported by those who are members of the Fraternity, is the Home for Crippled Children, established by members of the Mystic Shrine, on Kingshighway, in St. Louis. This Institution is doing a wonderfully constructive work for children, irrespective of race or religion. It may be listed as one of the most notable charities of the day.

Another benevolence carried on by an organisation not under the direct supervision of the Grand Lodge is the Educational Foundation of the Grand Commandery of Knights Templar of the State of Missouri. This is distinctly a Missouri fund, which, in 1935, totalled approximately $150,000. From this fund, money for educational purposes is lent to any deserving student, irrespective of Masonic connection. For the use of this money no interest is exacted until after the borrower has completed his school course, and even then only a nominal amount of interest is asked. That this fund is popular, is shown by the fact that it is usually exhausted. The organisation which controls it also contributes to scholarships for students who are members of the Masonic Home family.

In recent years an attempt has been made to educate the Craft Masonically by sending speakers into each of the Lodges and by publishing pamphlets, magazines, and books, through the medium of the Masonic Service Association of the Grand Lodge. In some of the districts the organisation functions with a high degree of efficiency. This is especially true in the case of St. Louis, where for many years the annual observance of Flag Day has been carried out under the organisation's direction. The Grand Lodge also maintains a circulating library from which books may be obtained without cost. Further, the Grand Lodge has at various times published a number of publications for the use of Brethren in Missouri. Chief among the works published during recent years are the Centennial History of Missouri Masonry, The Missouri Frontier Lodge, Missouri Masonic College, The Civil War and Masonry in Missouri, and The Masonic Conservator. Reprints of the Proceedings, covering the period from 1821 to 1865, have also been printed and distributed. At each of the Annual Communications of the Grand Lodge, Grand Orators speak upon subjects of interest to the Craft. Grand Lodge Officers and others visiting the subordinate Lodges are carrying this message of education into each of the Lodges so far as is possible, and while the task is a comparatively slow one it is believed that eventually it will result in great good to the Fraternity.

Freemasonry of Missouri is represented in every walk of life—civil, political, fraternal, educational, religious, and social. With few exceptions, the governors of the State of Missouri have been members of the Fraternity. In fact, since 1870, no man not a member of the Craft, has been elected to serve as governor of the State. The first Missouri governor, Alexander McNair, was a member of St. Louis Lodge, No. 1111. Most of the Territorial governors also held membership in some Masonic Lodge, and the men who constituted the first Constitutional Convention, as well as other Constitutional Conventions of the State, were nearly all members of Missouri Lodges.

Among the most distinguished of Missouri Masons were Captain Meriwether Lewis and his associate, General William Clark, leaders of the famous historic Lewis and Clark Expedition into the Far West. In 1808, after their return from one of their successful exploring expeditions, Captain Lewis, a member of Widow's Son Lodge, in Virginia, was one of the Petitioners for one of the first Masonic Lodges to be established in Louisiana Territory, that at St. Louis. Afterwards he became the Lodge's first Master, an Office which he held continuously until his untimely death, which occurred while he was crossing the Natchez Trail while on his way from St. Louis to Washington, District of Columbia. Like Bro. Lewis, General Clark was also deeply interested in the Freemasonry of Missouri. Upon his death in 1838, he was buried by St. Louis Lodge, No. 20. To-day, the memorial shaft which marks his grave carries on its face the familiar Square and Compasses. In the military field we may refer to the patriotic fervour of Colonel John Ralls during the Mexican War, to the services of Henry Dodge during the Indian Wars and the War of 1812, and to many other leaders and commanders who served during the Civil War and the Spanish American War, as well as to those who saw service during the recent World War.

From the beginning, the Freemasons of Missouri have encouraged and promoted educational work. From the time of Thomas F. Riddick, first Grand Master and the man most responsible for the institution of a large school fund, our State superintendents of schools, our governors, members of our Constitutional Conventions and of our legislative assemblies have been active in the support and spread of Missouri's magnificent school system. Indeed, few are our State superintendents of schools who have not held membership in the Fraternity. So, too, it is with the presidents of our State university and of our State normal schools. Even in our private school systems we find many active Masons among the faculties and officers.

Furthermore, the two largest cities in the State now claim as their executive head members of our Fraternity. Missouri also rejoices in the membership of Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh, made a Mason in Keystone Lodge, in St. Louis, prior to his epochal flight. In fact, the Roster of the 113,000 Masons of the Jurisdiction contains the names of hundreds who have helped to make the State better politically, religiously, socially, and educationally.

Missouri Masons have received many honours from various national organisations. For example, the celebrated Dr. William F. Kuhn served the General Grand Chapter of the United States as General Grand High Priest; Bert S. Lee, of Springfield, Missouri, gave three years of service to the General Grand Council; and early in the history of the General Grand Council we find the name of the distinguished William H. Mayo. At a recent Conference of Grand Masters held in Washington, District of Columbia, Byrne E. Bigger, Past Grand Master of Missouri, was selected as the Presiding Officer. At different times Missouri Masons have been given positions in the Grand Encampment, in the General Grand Chapter, and in the General Grand Council. Many eminent divines have also been officially connected with the Order, probably the most distinguished of whom was the late Bishop Enoch M. Marvin, who at one time served the Grand Lodge as Grand Chaplain. These and similar honours testify to the standing of the Jurisdiction among the other Jurisdictions of the United States.

FREEMASONRY IN MONTANA

J. EDWARD ALLEN

THE Grand Lodge of Montana, A. F. & A. M., was organised on January 24, 1866, by the Representatives of Virginia City Lodge, No. 43, Kansas Constitution; Montana Lodge, No. 9, Colorado Constitution; and Helena Lodge, No. 10, also of the Colorado Constitution, further details concerning which Lodges will appear later in this story.

On August 31, 1916, were held the Semi-Centennial Exercises, this date being chosen because the climate would not warrant observing the exact date of January 24, since it was desired to hold a part of the exercises at Virginia City, where the first organisation occurred. The Grand Lodge met at Helena for the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary and there were notable addresses, M.:W.:Bro. H. S. Hepner, who had been the Grand Master in 1903, presiding. The principal address of this occasion was delivered by M.:W.:Bro. Lew L. Calloway, who had been Grand Master in 1904. This address gave the most interesting account of the early history, and the most satisfactory sketches of outstanding Montana Masonic leaders, that we have found. Obviously the most satisfying historical account of early Montana Freemasonry for the present purposes would be this address without any changes, and we are therefore presenting this for its inherent interest to Masons everywhere, making only such omissions as are necessary to keep within the space allotted to this article. After a short exordium, Bro. Calloway begins as follows:

HISTORICAL ADDRESS BY BROTHER CALLOWAY

. . . While we have the inclination we have not the time to recount the early history of this commonwealth. This short address is to deal with the history of Masonry in Montana. In order better to understand, however, what I shall say, it seems useful to call to mind something of the conditions obtaining here at the beginnings of permanent civilisation in this region.

THE FIRST SETTLERS

In 1841 those real pioneers, the Jesuits, established a mission at what is now Stevensville,—the first settlement in what is now Montana—and in 1846 Fort Benton was built. These were simply beacon lights dimly glimmering out in the wilderness beckoning to the conquerors still far in the distance. . . . In the winter of 1857-58, James and Granville Stuart lived on the Big Hole River near what is now Browne's Bridge and there were probably twenty other white men within a radius of twenty-five miles. I speak of James Stuart particularly. He was a Virginian by birth, a natural leader, bold, brilliant, and amicable; educated as a physician and surgeon, he was also of a scholarly disposition.

He was the first Mason within our borders of whom I know and some time before his untimely death, at the age of forty, was Junior Grand Deacon of our Grand Lodge.

DISCOVERY OF GOLD

. . . The beginning of civilisation in Montana really is based upon the discovery of gold. Had it not been for that, the history of this region would have been commonplace and no more to be spoken of than that of any of our neighbouring states. . . .

It was an expedition leaving Bannack under the leadership of James Stuart in the early part of the year 1862, that led to the discovery of Alder Gulch. Six men, William Fairweather, Barney Hughes, Harry Sweeney, Henry Edgar, Harry Rodgers, and Thomas Cover, intended to join the Stuart party which had gone on ahead, but were turned back by hostile Indians and forced to go into the Madison Valley. In crossing from the Madison Valley to the Ruby, then called the Stinkingwater, they descended into Alder Gulch about a quarter of a mile above where Virginia City now stands and there made the great discovery, the discovery which virtually brought the territory of Montana into being, the date being May 26th, 1863, and the first rush of gold seekers thereto being in the first week of June following.

THE COMING OF THE ROAD AGENTS

The two incidents which stand out in bold relief above all others in the history of the territory, and which have served to stamp their imprint upon its subsequent history, were the organisation of the Road Agents and, but a little later, of the Vigilantes. Doubtless it is known to you how in those days that parasite, the outlaw, finding the society of mankind at the scene of his crimes uncongenial, hied himself to the new El Dorado where he could practise his particular villainy without restraint. When the discovery of gold in great quantities in the region which is now Montana was bruited throughout the mining camps of Idaho, Colorado and California, as well as along the frontier far to the east, those bold spirits who had in them the love of conquest came hither in great numbers. Came too the malevolent and the vicious. Foremost among the evil elements there arrived in 1862 Henry Plummer, fascinating gentleman, cunning villain, cold blooded murderer, according to his moods. Nature made him chief of his kind; he was "by merit raised to that bad eminence." Came too, Boone Helm, the beast, George Ives, multi-murderer, Buck Stinson, Ned Ray, Frank Parish, Bill Hunter, Jack Gallagher, Johnny Cooper, Alex Carter, and at least several score more of their ilk. They were cruel, fearless and desperate characters. Henry Plummer, who had a genius for organisation, brought practically all of these outlaws under his sway within a very short time; and the other outcasts of society then in this region, though not members of his organisation, gave it their active sympathy. It was a real organisation having a presiding officer, secretary, corresponding secretary, treasurer, and other subordinate officers, the title of which we do not know.

In that part of Idaho in which was the settlement of Bannack, there was no civil organisation, but the law-abiding people who were living on the Grasshopper thought it desirable to have at least a semblance of government, for the genius of Anglo-Saxon civilisation looks always to regularity in its conduct. It became necessary to appoint judges and of course to have a sheriff. The only organisation then existing in the territory was Plummer's Road Agent Band. They brought about the election of Plummer as sheriff. After the discovery of gold in Alder Gulch, as above noted, there was a great influx of people thereto. As early as September there was a considerable settlement in Alder Gulch. Five towns along its course came into being immediately: Virginia City, Center, Nevada, Adobetown and Junction. . . .

Men began to make fortunes out of the sands of the gulch and started for home somewhere "back in the States"—all of the United States east of and including Minnesota, Iowa, and Missouri being generally known as "the States." Stage lines commenced to serve the people between Virginia City and Salt Lake. At once the Road Agents began to waylay and murder those who returned by private means or by public conveyances, in considerable numbers. Many men left Alder Gulch with a "take" and never were heard of again. In the short space of time between the first of June, 1863, and January 1st, 1864, at least one hundred persons were robbed and murdered by Plummer's Road Agent Band and how many more were robbed but permitted to go upon their way we have no way of determining. It became a common thing for the deputy sheriffs serving under Plummer to place cabalistic marks upon stage coaches, private conveyances, and even upon individuals, leaving Alder Gulch, the marking indicating whether robbery should be done; murder if necessary, of course. . . .

The Masons were locating each other and were beginning to hold meetings socially. By the middle of December, 1863, they had applied for three dispensations to form lodges, as we shall see. They were naturally outraged and indignant over the conditions obtaining and were discussing ways and means to bring about the establishment of law and order. They were young men with the first lessons of Masonry fresh in their minds. . . . They had resolved to act and act with strength at the first opportunity. This came as a result of the murder of Nicholas Tbolt, a German boy, by George Ives, one of the most conspicuous of Plummer's Band. Passing over the remarkably courageous actions of the twenty-four men under the leadership of James Williams who took Ives and two others of Plummer's Band out of an armed camp of the Road Agents, the escape of Ives and his recapture on the way from Wisconsin Creek to Nevada, we arrive at the time of the trial.

TRIAL AND EXECUTION OF GEORGE IVES

The miners were thoroughly aroused. Some ruling spirit arranged that the trial should be before Judge Byam and twenty-four jurors. The trial was held in Nevada commencing on the 19th day of December, 1863. It was in the open air, the Court officials being kept warm by fires built about on the ground while the trial scene was surrounded by hundreds of men. There appeared for the prosecution Col. Wilbur F. Sanders, the dominant heroic figure of Montana's early days, the first Grand Secretary and third Grand Master of Masons of Montana, and Montana's first United States Senator; and Major Charles S. Bagg, also a Craftsman. The defendant was represented by five lawyers, one of whom was Alexander Davis, but it appears that he took little part if any in the trial.

A young man by the name of William Y. Pemberton was the Court Reporter. He was a Brother Mason and was destined to become one of the ablest prosecutors of the new territory, a district judge of the State to be and its second Chief Justice. The trial lasted three days. The outlaws were desperate and said that no matter what the result of the jury's verdict might be, Ives should not be hurt; "they should not touch a hair of his head."

When the jury, after hearing the evidence, retired to consider their verdict, twenty-three voted guilty while one man refused to vote. This he did from motives of expediency, but his fellow jurors considered it nearly enough unanimous and reported Ives guilty, whereupon Col. Sanders arose and moved that the punishment be fixed at death. The motion carried. Then the Colonel moved that George Ives be forthwith hanged by the neck until he is dead. The motion carried. Whereupon Ives remonstrated and asked until the next morning to arrange his affairs. This might have seemed a reasonable request but while the Colonel was debating the form in which he proposed to deny it—apparently he was completely dominating the situation—J. X. Beidler, also a Brother Mason by the way, who was one of the numerous armed guard and who was perched upon a house nearby, sang out "Ask him how long he gave the Dutchman?" This settled the matter; Ives was given an hour to prepare for his doom. . . .

FORMATION OF THE VIGILANTES

The decent people having discovered their power, needed but a leader to bring them into an organisation which would result in government. On the evening following the execution of Ives twelve men, all of them being Masons excepting James Williams, who had so distinguished himself in the capture, trial and execution, met in what was known as Fox's Blue House, where the Masonic Temple in which we will meet to-morrow now stands, in Virginia City and organised the Vigilantes. Among those present on that occasion were Wilbur F. Sanders, Paris Pfouts, Adriel B. Davis, Charles S. Bagg, John S. Lott and J. W. Fox.

. . . Paris S. Pfouts was made president, James Williams, executive officer and John S. Lott, treasurer. It was determined to enroll members with vigour, and within ten days it is said that no less than 2,500 men were enrolled as Vigilantes. They consisted of pretty nearly all the good citizens residing in that region. I think it is not true that any member of the Road Agents became a member of the Vigilantes.

The trials were always in secret and the man on trial wasn't there. There was no rule of reasonable doubt, as the lawyers phrase it. The committee had to be absolutely certain. When it was absolutely certain the punishment of death was imposed and the Road Agent forthwith paid the penalty or if he was not in custody he paid it as soon as they got him. The Committee proceeded with great expedition. On January 4th, 1864, Erastus Yager, known as "Red," Road Agent and Messenger, and G. W. Brown, Corresponding Secretary of the Road Agents, were hanged near Laurin. On January 10, 1864, Henry Plummer, Chief, and Ned Ray and Buck Stinson, his principal subordinates, were hanged at Bannack by the Vigilantes under the leadership of Brother John S. Lott. On January 14th, Frank Parish, Haze Lyons, Jack Gallagher, Boone Helm and George Lane (Club Foot George) were hanged from one beam in Virginia City under the leadership of Williams. In sixty days practically the work of the Vigilantes was done. After that a man could leave his bag of gold dust lying exposed within his cabin and go out leaving the windows up and the doors open and it would be safe. Such conditions continued for a considerable time after the application of Vigilante law.

I have told you that eleven of the twelve men who were original Vigilantes were Masons. This fact is significant to this extent only: the Masons knew they could trust each other and consequently they took counsel of each other and acted in conjunction. James Williams, the executive officer and the virtual commander-in-chief of all the operations conducted by the Vigilantes, was never a member of any secret society, to my knowledge. In looking over the sums of money contributed by those in Alder Gulch it seems to me that our Jewish brethren were the most liberal contributors. I do not think it occurred to any one at that time that anybody was active in the work because he was or because he was not a Mason.

On November 17th, 1863, the Grand Master of Nebraska granted a dispensation to sixteen brethren to open Idaho Lodge U. D. at Nevada City and this Lodge actually met on January 9th, 1864, and in the course of its existence raised five or six brothers, the first of whom was Jeremiah G. Smith, long time a resident of Boulder, the county seat of Jefferson county. This Lodge ceased to exist June 23, 1864, though it was actually voted a charter by the Grand Lodge of Nebraska as Idaho No. 10, but it never worked under its charter. On December 7th, 1863, the Grand Master of Kansas granted a dispensation to Paris S. Pfouts, our Brother who was president of the Vigilantes, and "the requisite number of Brethren to open a Lodge" at Virginia City. This was the actual beginning of Masonry in Montana. A charter was voted to Virginia City Lodge by the Grand Lodge of Kansas on December 20th, 1864, as Virginia City Lodge No. 43. Its first officers were Paris S. Pfouts, W. M., J. M. Fox, S. W., Henry Mitnacht, J. W., and Alexander Davis, who was the magistrate who issued the warrant for the arrest of the notorious Slade, which resulted in the execution of that remarkable character. The returns of Virginia City Lodge for the first year showed 49 members. John J. Hull was Senior Deacon and W. F. Sanders, Chaplain.

A dispensation was granted for Montana Lodge U. D. at Virginia City by Deputy Grand Master O. B. Brown of Colorado on April 29th, 1865, to H. L. Hosmer, W. M., L. W. Frary, S. W., and William Gray, J. W. It was chartered by the Grand Lodge of Colorado as Montana Lodge No. 9 on November 7th, 1865.

The Helena brethren also secured dispensation from Colorado and were chartered as Helena City No. 10 on November 7th, 1865.

The territory of Montana was created by Act of Congress on May 26th, 1864—one year from the date of the discovery of gold in Alder Gulch. After the charters were issued to Montana No. 9 and Helena City No. 10, as above mentioned, the Brethren of the territory of Montana realising that they were in a position to found a Grand Lodge of their own, immediately took steps to that end. Virginia City No. 1 and Montana No. 2 were both located in Virginia City. The Helena Brethren resided one hundred and twenty miles distant. Stages ran in those days between Virginia City and Helena practically continuously. . . . Fifty years ago on January 24 last, the Brethren from Helena Lodge arrived in Virginia City and a convention of Ancient Free and Accepted Masons assembled in Masonic Hall in Virginia City at twelve o'clock noon. How far it seems in the past! It was ten years and more before the brilliant Custer and his brave men fell victims at Little Big Horn, eleven years and more before the gallant Logan, Bradley and their companions fell at the Battle of the Big Hole.

Among the Brethren representing Virginia City Lodge No. 43, were John J. Hull, Wilbur F. Sanders, Sol Sar, Nat J. Davis and F. C. Deimling. Montana Lodge was represented by the following brethren: Leander W. Frary, Luther C. Lee, Hugh Duncan, and Samuel Work. Helena Lodge No. 10 was represented by Cornelius Hedges, R. P. Sealy, C. W. Mather, H. M. Fee and John Potter. It is worthy of remark that among the number of those assembled there were present seven future Grand Masters and one Deputy Grand Master. On motion of Brother Frary it was resolved "that the several lodges of Ancient Masons in the territory of Montana, here represented, consider it as a matter of right and for the general benefit of Masonry that they ought to form a Grand Lodge within said territory, and at once proceed to form and organise themselves into a Grand Lodge accordingly, to be known and distinguished by the name of Grand Lodge of Montana." The convention then adjourned until three o'clock and when it convened there appeared in addition to those theretofore present, Brothers Boyce and Langford, thus adding to those present two additional Grand Masters to be. The resolution was adopted and thereupon the Grand Lodge proceeded to adopt the constitution and by-laws for its government. The Grand Lodge was then called from labour to refreshment until January 26th, at 9 o'clock in the morning. At that time the Grand Lodge was called from refreshment to labour and proceeded to elect the following officers: M. W. Grand Master, John J. Hull; R. W. Deputy Grand Master, L. W. Frary; R. W. Senior Grand Warden, Cornelius Hedges; R. W. Junior Grand Warden Robert P. Eealy; R. W. Grand Treasurer, Luther C. Lee; R. W. Grand Secretary, Wilbur F. Sanders. The Grand Lodge proceeded to confer the three degrees in Masonry upon C. M. Davis, the Grand officers officiating in their proper places. On the morning of January 29th a charter was granted to Nevada Lodge as No. 4.

After the account of the origins, Bro. Calloway gives us several very interesting biographical sketches, three of which are as follows:

WILLIAM A. CLARK

About 1863, I am told, there appeared at Bannack a small red-whiskered man roughly clad, one of his principal garments being a red flannel shirt. He seems to have had a genius for striking pay dirt and was generally thifty, but at the same time generous. The same year he appeared at Virginia City. His name appears upon the roster of Virginia City Lodge No. 1 as W. A. Clark. Some time after that he went to Butte and became generally interested in the mines there, and later in banking. Indeed, it might be said that to him more than to any other one man Butte owes its early development. He was our Grand Master in 1877. He is one of the great multi-millionaires of the world. His history, veritably, is much stranger than fiction. He lives in a palace in New York which is one of the wonders of the metropolis. He is the owner of copper mines, banks, foundries, railroads, and the Lord knows what all. He probably doesn't know himself. In the short space of fifty years he has accomplished all of these things. His is one of the most wonderful stories that America has written. . . .

CORNELIUS HEDGES

The name of Cornelius Hedges is one of benediction. From the time that Helena Lodge No. 3 was granted a dispensation until his death he was our best beloved and most distinguished Craftsman. When the Grand Lodge opened he acted as Right Worshipful Senior Grand Warden and was elected to that position before the close of the session. He was our fifth Grand Master and on the removal of Judge Hosmer to California, was appointed Grand Secretary, this being in June 1872; he was regularly elected in October of that year; and he held this distinguished position until his death which occurred in 1907. He celebrated his golden wedding anniversary, his wife being at that time Past Grand Matron of the Order of the Eastern Star. One of his sons is the Hon. Wyllis A. Hedges of Fergus County, an ardent Mason; another is Cornelius Hedges, who succeeded his father as Grand Secretary, and so Cornelius Hedges is still Grand Secretary.*

The elder Cornelius Hedges was a true pioneer. Both he and his wife sprang from the colonial stock of New England. Brother Hedges was the virtual father of the idea creating the Yellowstone National Park. He was a member of the famous Washburn Expedition of 1870 and his article upon his experiences in that region of wonder excited general interest throughout the United States. Brother Hedges was once superintendent of public instruction in the Territory of Montana. He was a member of the Legislature from Lewis and Clark County at various times and was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1884.

GREEN CLAY SMITH

During the third session of the Grand Lodge at Virginia City, at which place all of the early sessions were held, a unique character appeared on the floor of the Grand Lodge and delivered an address. This was Worshipful Brother Green Clay Smith, Governor of Montana, and who in the Republican National Convention of 1864 lost the Presidency of the United States by a half vote. In other words, Andrew Johnson was nominated for vice-president by one half a vote over Green Clay Smith. Had Green Clay Smith been nominated, it is very likely that much of the calamity of so called reconstruction days would not have befallen the nation. Green Clay Smith was a brilliant soldier, a good Governor, a powerful orator, and during his declining years turned to the ministry and became a celebrated evangelistic preacher throughout Kentucky and Tennessee.

Then the orator resumed the historical sketch, and we quote further:

HISTORY OF EARLY LODGES FORMED AFTER GRAND LODGE ORGANISATION

During the year 1866 Grand Master Hull granted dispensations to Gallatin, Morning Star and Diamond City Lodges. These were chartered as Morning Star No. 5, Gallatin No. 6, and Diamond City No. 7. Gallatin Lodge was at Bozeman City, Morning Star at Helena City and Diamond No. 7 at Diamond City. All the settlements in those days had the suffix " city " and this continued to be a part of our history until latter territorial days. Gallatin Lodge No. 6 was at Bozeman and Diamond City Lodge in Confederate Gulch in Meagher County. In after years when the great gulch in which it was located had yielded up its golden treasure and Diamond City had passed into the story of yesterday, Diamond City Lodge No. 7 was moved to White Sulphur Springs where it is now located.

* Luther T. Hauberg succeeded to the office of Grand Secretary upon the death of Cornelius Hedges, Jr.

In 1867 Grand Master Hull granted a dispensation to Wasatch Lodge at Salt Lake City, and at that session Brothers Hugh Duncan, W. B. Dance and James Stuart asked for a charter for the establishment of a Lodge at Phillipsburgh to be known as Flint Creek Lodge. At the session held in October, 1867, these lodges were chartered as Wasatch No. 8, King Solomon's No. 9, Summit No. 10, Flint Creek No. 11, and Red Mountain No. 12. Summit was a thriving town at the head of Alder Gulch and Red Mountain City was a bustling mining camp in the Highland Mining District located under the big Red Mountain northerly from Butte.

The session of 1868 was held at Virginia City on October 5th. The first real temple erected by Masons in Montana had been completed. . . .

Grand Master Frary reported to the Grand Lodge that he had given a dispensation for one lodge to be known as Missoula No. 13 located at Missoula Mills. Brother Wilbur F. Sanders was elected to succeed Brother Frary and during his incumbency no dispensations for new lodges were granted but the Grand Lodge granted a charter to Deer Lodge No. 14 upon the application of Brother James Stuart signed by thirty Master Masons.

During the Grand Mastership of Brother Cornelius Hedges charters were granted to Bannack Lodge No. 16 and Silver Star Lodge No. 17. In 1872 charters were granted to Bozeman Lodge No. 18 at Bozeman and Washington Lodge No. 19 at Gallatin City. With the granting of the charter to Washington Lodge No. 19 the real early days of Masonry in Montana may be said to have passed. Summit No. 10, Red Mountain No. 12, Jefferson No. 15, Silver Star No. 17 and Washington No. 19 passed away with the transitory conditions which gave them birth. Masonry in Montana has ever been in the vanguard of civilisation. It appeared, as we have noted, in the early mining camps and we can trace the founding of Masonic Lodges contemporaneously with the approach of civilisation. The year that the Utah and Northern Railroad, the first to reach Montana, entered its borders, a Lodge was chartered at Dillon. The founding of Lodges up the Yellowstone but shortly post-dates the building of the Northern Pacific. Lodges sprang up along the Great Northern at appropriate places shortly after it was built. It is well to remember that civilisation in Montana for a time following the first great rush of the Eldorado days seemed to recede. For instance, there were 50,000 people within our borders in the summer of 1864, whereas the census of 1870 gave us but 20,000 and we had but 39,000 in 1880.

Butte Lodge No. 22, the first at the metropolis of the State, was chartered in 1876. 1876 is the year that Butte began its wonderful growth. Then for the first time the greatest ore deposits upon the face of the earth began to reveal their apparently exhaustless treasures.

From the three original lodges there have emanated 107 more. In the lapse of fifty years nine lodges have been lost by surrendered charters, the withdrawal of Wasatch Lodge No. 8 and the consolidation of six lodges into three. There are now 95 chartered lodges with a membership of over nine thousand. . . .
